Beatrice: "Hear me, I suppose? An isolated space, of power worthy of Betty, separated from the cloisters of time. This is Beatrice's Forbidden Archive, in fact. Regardless of whatever threatens the outside, that threat will never reach Betty's Archive. Your fears are needless, in fact."

Subaru: "Nope, they're needed. Your Archive's randomness does mean it's strongly advantageous when it comes to fleeing, true… but, it has a fatal flaw. And the enemy knows what it is."

Beatrice: "A fatal, flaw?"

Beatrice furrows her brows, indeed unable to let the comment pass. But Subaru just responds to her harsh gaze with a nod, and gestures to the door behind him.

Subaru: "Your power which randomly connects to some door in the mansion is strong. But…it only works on the mansion's CLOSED DOORS. So if you leave the mansion's doors open, you're certain to reach the Archive eventually, since you'll be losing doors until only the Archive's is left."

Beatrice: "—Hic."

Subaru: "It's such a stupid thing. I bet you didn't notice it either. I was wondering why I hadn't realized it until practically I witnessed it myself."

Subaru remembers when Elsa, having noticed the loophole in Gate Crossing, found the Archive. If Garfiel wasn't around to impede her, Elsa would unmistakably come here while using that exact same method. And likely take Beatrice's life.

Subaru: “Though of course, it’s not like I’m underestimating you, or saying that her showing up here means you’re going down easy. It’s just that her strangeness is some of the most extreme I’ve ever experienced. If we can do this without facing her, there’s nothing better.”

If they can defeat Elsa then he would like to do that, but it’s not an essential requirement for clearing this loop series. If Roswaal is the one hiring her, then so long as Subaru crosses the time limit for the issues in the Sanctuary, Roswaal should stop having any reason to keep hiring Elsa. The whole insignia affair in the Capital proves that this would make Elsa withdraw. Either way, right now they need to survive through the attack on the mansion and—

Subaru: “Beatrice. This place isn’t safe. If you’re not here, she won’t disturb the library. So just for now…”

Beatrice: “Why does that woman know how to break Betty’s Gate Crossing, I suppose?”

Subaru: “…”

Subaru spits out the suitable bargaining chips to convince Beatrice to leave.

But Beatrice, perhaps listening to Subaru’s statements or perhaps not, whispers a whisper differing from what Subaru’s looking for.

Subaru shuts his mouth. Beatrice remains upon the stepladder.

Beatrice: “It’s inconceivable that she would abruptly conceive of how to break Betty’s Gate Crossing on her first encounter with it, in fact. Whoever taught her those methods knows me, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Beatrice. This isn’t the time for that conversa—”

Beatrice: “—It’s Roswaal, in fact.”

Subaru can’t divert her.

Her swift thinking makes Subaru swallow his breath.

Seeing his reaction, Beatrice understands everything. Roswaal hired Elsa, and his goal is to kill Beatrice. Which means—

Beatrice: “It is written in Roswaal’s gospel that I be killed, I suppose.” Giving no heed to either Subaru’s affirmations or denials, Beatrice sighs.

It’s unlikely that the relief Subaru perceives in that sigh is just his imagination. Unable to overlook the comment, Subaru puts pressure on Beatrice.

Subaru: “Want to tell me what that sigh was? And why the hell you look like you’re agreeing?!”

Beatrice: “It’s what it looks like, I’m agreeing, in fact. If Roswaal’s gospel has ordered him to do this, then that means my fate is decided, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Fuck is that…Roswaal’s book is Roswaal’s book, and your book is your book! Your book really says to go get killed by Roswaal, does it?!”

Jabbing out his finger, Subaru glares at the gospel in Beatrice’s arms.

If nothing has changed from the previous loops, then for four hundred years, that book has written just blank white paper.

Beatrice’s expression turns gloomy and she opens to a page of the gospel. She spreads the book open and presents it so that Subaru can see it—showing a book of only empty pages.

Beatrice: “Nothing is written, in fact. Identical as ever, only blank pages, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Then there’s no reason for you to get killed like Roswaal’s book says! It’s same as ever, you’re who decides what you do!”

Beatrice: “…The same as ever, I’m the one deciding?”

Subaru: “Yes! Nothing being written means you must’ve faced choices during all this time. Small things to big things, you’re the one who decided every path you took! So there's no reason for you to dance along to someone else's choices this time, eith—"

Beatrice: "What in my life have I ever decided?" The doleful question crushes Subaru's momentum.

Beatrice tilts her head as she gazes at Subaru, her eyes melancholy. She flips through the blank pages

Beatrice: "All the time Betty spent in Roswaal's mansion, protecting the Archive that Mother entrusted to her, endlessly, endlessly… when during that did I ever have time belonging to myself? When did Betty, having lived empty centuries without writ, ever leave her footsteps anywhere in the world? What did Beatrice ever do, and who is she?"

Subaru: "Bea, trice…"

Beatrice: "Betty's life, Betty's four hundred years, are as blank as this gospel, in fact. A void, in fact. What I chose by myself, what I gained by myself, what can attest of myself…all non-existent."

Beatrice claps the gospel shut and sets it on her lap. She strokes its nameless cover as she quietly speaks,

Beatrice: "I'm identical to an empty book. Losing me here simply means losing a blank, letterless text. Never anything to anybody, merely a book shoved in a bookcase—it'd be laudable for it to be gone, in fact."

Subaru: "What if there's people who don't want that blank book gone?"

Beatrice feels to be verging on abandoning her four centuries and her future. Subaru manages to get words out in an attempt to connect to her heart.

Subaru has not yet found his reply to Beatrice's tearful scream from back then.

But even so, should he fail to speak here, she will give up on herself.

Subaru: “You called it nothing, a void. But there assuredly is a book wedged inside that bookcase. There are people who know that book exists. And maybe there’s people who’ll want to pick up that book someday, you think they’d stand the thing going off and destroying itself?”

Beatrice: “The book has neither name nor author, I suppose. Supposing for argument that this benevolent someone exists, opening that book and seeing the inside would only disappoint them, in fact. The blank book doesn’t want to watch the disappointment unfurl across that person’s face either, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Then! Then what is that book doing in that place!”

Beatrice: “…”

Beatrice gazes emotionlessly at Subaru.

It feels like a retort, saying this whole dialogue lacks any apparent meaning. Subaru raises his head regardless, continuously reaching out to Beatrice’s distant heart.

Subaru: “If someone who picks it up’s just going to be disappointed…then for what sake is that book there? Wasn’t the book made because it had meaning?”

Beatrice: “…The book’s author crafted that book for the sake of a person, in fact. The book is made to appear empty to everyone except for that SOMEONE, I suppose. If we assume there’s to be meaning, then the very instant the book reaches the SOMEONE comprises the meaning of that book’s creation.”

Subaru: “And so then—”

Beatrice: “The book mustn’t be disposed of until it reaches the SOMEONE, you’re saying, I suppose.”

Subaru swallows his breath.

He notices an instant before can voice it what a cruel breed of hope he is arguing for. Beatrice sees Subaru’s expression, and a horribly pained smile arises on her face.

Beatrice: “Exactly. If Betty truly were just a book…then she’d be happy to wait for that day, in fact.”

Beatrice would have waited there for that day when the SOMEONE’s fingers flipped through her pages. If she were a book.

—But Beatrice isn’t a book. She’s a little girl, shivering from prolonged isolation.

Beatrice: “If I were a soulless, mindless book…then I could have faultlessly believed in Mother’s instructions forever. I could have been Mother’s lovely Beatrice forever, I suppose.”

If she were an entity like a doll, lacking a heart and comprised only of ornamentation, she would have never deliberated.

If she were an entity like a book, unshaken by the constant passing of time, she would have never lamented.

Beatrice was not that thing.

Beatrice: “But I have a heart. Should time pass I do think about things, at least enough to lose faith in what I believed in, in fact. I agonize and deliberate, I suppose. There were countless nights where I scrambled to salvage my memories, because I’d forgotten what Mother’s face, what her smile looked like!”

Subaru: “…”

Beatrice: “There were times I couldn’t bear being alone, and I yearned to touch someone! But everyone leaves me behind! They’ll say whatever they’ll say, state it’s for the sake of something more important than me, assert their rationale, and desert me! Mother did! Roswaal did! —Even Ryuzu did!!”

Beatrice shouts, her face scrunched up and near to tears.

Hearing the name Ryuzu makes Subaru remember what he heard in the Sanctuary about Beatrice’s past. And the root of all the present Ryuzu’s, Ryuzu Meyer.

She and Beatrice had only known each other for a fleeting instant, but their story still told of a definite bond. —Still left a persistent scar on Beatrice's heart.

Beatrice: "—Just, enough, in fact."

Beatrice loses her momentum. The tone of her voice plummets.

Her expression, twisted with emotion, returns to its usual apathy as she hugs the book on her lap close.

Beatrice: "Betty's gospel will not outline Betty's future. …I've known it for a very long time, in fact. Even Mother forsook Betty's fate far and long ago."

The lack of writ about the future means that the gospel's owner has fallen into a dead end. While judging off Subaru's possession of Petelgeuse's gospel, that was how Beatrice appraised books with frozen writ. Appraised that the same thing was happening to herself.

Beatrice: "If Betty's fate has been outlined in Roswaal's gospel… how sardonic, I suppose. But that does ease me, in fact. It's inconceivable that Roswaal would take half-measures, I suppose."

Subaru: "An old friend of yours might kill you…how is that relaxing?"

Beatrice: "It's obvious, in fact."

Beatrice nods.

A fleeting, affectionate smile arises on her face.

Beatrice: "If Roswaal's gospel has written about me…then it means that Mother has certainly not forgotten about me, I suppose."

—Warped.

Beatrice's smiling visage makes Subaru notice that he is seconds from drowning beneath an emotional torrent.

It's warped. Beatrice's visage as she rejoices in her contact with her mother's love is so warped it's unbearable. Subaru could stand that this thing, that this happening, was a mother's love—as fucking if.

Beatrice: "…What are you thinking to do, in fact?"

Subaru bites his lip and endures the sensations welling up in him as he steps forward.

Caution cloaks Beatrice's expression as she perceives the alarming vibe emanating from Subaru.

Subaru: "…"

Beatrice: "I asked you a question, I suppose. What are you thinking to do, in fact? If you try anything, I'll show no mercy, I suppose. I've already accepted my fate, in fact."

Subaru: "Accepted goddamn what. So you're no different from Roswaal. No, he's at least self-aware, you're multitudes more awful. Utterly hopeless, let it get fucking worse."

Anger surges from inside him.

It's an emotion that Subaru has constantly combated since all these events in the Sanctuary.

Anger at himself while challenging the Trial, anger at the witches for toying with him, anger at Garfiel for underestimating himself out of childish stubbornness, anger at Roswaal for obeying the writ to try and affirm the fragility of feelings, anger at Emilia for not believing in herself or Subaru's love—

—and now anger at Beatrice, and everyone who cornered her into this.

Subaru: "You're stupid. Say whatever about your fate, say whatever about your Mother's orders, anyone looking from aside's gonna think it's sad. You have a heart? You can't be a book? Of course you goddamn can't, stupid. Did staying holed in this moldy room make you incapable of recognizing that?"

Beatrice: "Stu…!"

Beatrice's eyes shoot open, and after a look of surprise—indignation.

She gets to her feet on the stepladder, her skirt swaying as she points at Subaru.

Beatrice: "You! Who do you think you are referring to with that comment, I suppose! I'm stupid, I'm stupid? How do you dare say this, in fact…and especially by you! What do you think you could possibly know about Betty, I suppose!"

Subaru: "I know you're stupid, and you don't realize you're stupid, so I'd say I know you better than you do! Stupid! Stupid! Stupid! Stuuuupid!!"

Beatrice: "Y-Y-You…!!'

Subaru flips the bird as he curses, turning Beatrice's face crimson and blocking off her words. Her rage is too incredible for her to come up with any retort. Barging into openings like that happens to be Subaru's forte.

Subaru: "A four-hundred year void? Drop the affectations! You hugged your knees crying for four hundred years is what you did! You had all that time to think, why the hell are you clinging to this single answer forever! The book's not telling you anything so you think that means I DIDN'T DO ANYTHING? Are you stupid?!"

Beatrice: "O-Of course I thought about things, in fact! As I plainly would, I suppose! Can you conceive how many things I tested to see if the gospel's writ would change! But no matter what I did, no matter how I waited, it didn't! So!"

Subaru: "That's what I'm saying is stupid! The book's got nothing in it so you work to try and make letters appear, the hell is this, invisible ink on a New Year's card? No one does that any more! If none of that was working, start thinking of other possibilities!"

Beatrice: "O-Other, possibilities…"

Subaru: "Straight-out. The possibility your mom's book was wrong."

Beatrice falls utterly speechless.

But she immediately snaps at him, determining his reply as moronic.

Beatrice: “You hold your tongue, in fact! Mother would never pull such an idiotic stunt, I suppose! You…you could not possibly comprehend Mother’s vast thoughts, in fact!”

Subaru: “Nope, don’t know’em at all, stupid. Like I care anything about what your mom thinks. What we’re talking about is you. And you said it, didn’t you. You said that she’d never pull something that idiotic. Really? Can you assert it? You’ve never doubted your mother even once?”

Beatrice: “What, are…”

Subaru: “Four hundred years! Gone with a self- writing book sitting absolutely blank! The person you’re waiting for never came either! You spent all of that time alone, had so much room to think it’s ridiculous, and you never thought of it even once? You seriously never thought that this was strange?!”

Four centuries spent believing in someone.

Perhaps it sounds like a sterling way of being. But in truth it is crooked. Especially when spent only ever thinking about the person, and only ever about their words.

Especially when you’re Beatrice, who does not think her wish will come true, and has nigh given up.

Beatrice: “I-It is inconceivable that Mother would bring about anything incorrect, I suppose! O-Of course she wouldn’t, in fact. She is Mother, I suppose! Do you think it possible to doubt the words of your own mother?!”

Subaru: “Of course I do! I think the stuff my mom says is overwhelmingly lacking in credibility! That time when she misheard news that ‘a satellite fell into the atmosphere’ as ‘a satellite fell into Aichi prefecture’ and I went zooming out with the big scoop without verifying it is when I stopped trusting her! That was in third year primary!”

He would never forget the day that he sincerely accepted that, spread the rumour, and turned into a schoolyard laughingstock.

Subaru never trusted anything his parents said ever again. And he had already deemed his father’s statements as unreliable prior to that.

Subaru: “Four hundred years, and you never doubted her for even a second?! I’m not even twenty years old, and I’d run out of fingers before I could count the number of fistfights I’ve had with my dad. And that’s with twenty years. You had twenty times that, and you never felt that way even once, huh?”

Beatrice: “You…what are you wishing to make me say, I suppose?! I utterly cannot discern it, in fact! Your aims, the point of your remarks, are utterly arcane to Betty! Arcane!”

Subaru: “Then I’ll say it loud and clear! So that your stupid self and your stupid mother can hear it!”

Beatrice is about ready to clutch her head in frustration when Subaru approaches, and takes her hands.

Beatrice looks up. Subaru draws his face close, into breathing range, and asserts to the teary girl:

Subaru: “Stop getting thrown around by a blank book and a four-hundred-year-old promise. —Be the one who chooses what you want to do, Beatrice.”

Beatrice: “…”

Subaru: “It’s four hundred years. Plenty long enough for at least one rebellious phase to hit.”

Beatrice has admirably been trying to obey her parent’s instructions.

Her stubborn volition to keep that promise has spawned her solitude and a timespan of emptiness.

Her mother, Echidna, seems to find even that time spent in agony as something sweet, but from Subaru's perspective it's profane immorality.

She's forgotten how to cry and the feeling of wanting to cry, the fuck about this is 'sterling way of being'. Don't make him puke.

With her hands still in Subaru's grip and atop the stepladder, Beatrice looks away from Subaru.

Her height as she sits on the top step is practically equal with Subaru's eye level. She eventually tilts her head down, lets her lips move,

Beatrice: "Th, en…this is, what you're attempting to say, I suppose. Betty, disobey Mother's orders."

Subaru says nothing.

Beatrice: "Abandon everything you believed in over these centuries and be free…that is what you are so easily saying to me, I suppose."

Her shaking voice gradually regains its composure.

It begins to fill with something that is not shock, and Subaru feels his hair standing on end. Ever since coming to this world, this sensation alone is one he has undeniably honed. That being, the sensation of a direly hazardous entity.

Beatrice: "—Demanding that I, Beatrice! Violate a Contract! Speaking as if you know anything!"

Subaru: "—Aguh?!"

As if stricken by a galeforce, Subaru goes flying backwards.

His back strikes the archive floor, still encircled by a wind which slams him into the wall. His breathing stalls. His bones creak all across his body and his vision strobes as he raises his head.

Beatrice remains atop the stepladder, but her expression is one of fury as she looks down at Subaru.

Beatrice: “Contracts are absolute! Absolute, in fact! And especially so for Contracts made between a spirit and a witch. You demand that it be annulled unilaterally, and by the spirit? You understand nothing, I suppose! Such a thing would never be forgiven! Not anyone! Not anything! And not even I myself would permit it, in fact!”

Subaru: “—From someone searching for backdoors in that Contract and thinking if they can’t violate it better try and get killed, that’s rich.”

Beatrice: “—!”

Subaru sighs to force the pain out of him as he sluggishly uprights himself.

Beatrice’s rage is not faltering, and her adorable expression remains thick with malice. Subaru raises his head and laughs venomously.

Subaru: “You’re an incoherent mess, Beatrice. You haven’t realized how inconsistent you’re being? Of course you’ve realized it, haven’t you. You’re a smart person.”

Beatrice: “Be silent, I suppose.”

Subaru: “No, I won’t. Annul the Contract? Sounds perfect. When you hate keeping the promise so much that you literally want to die, just stop. No one’ll fault you.”

Beatrice: “I will fault me! Why is it you don’t understand that, in fact?! Contracts are absolute, and keeping them is…”

Subaru: “Why don’t you understand it? If keeping the Contract kills you, you need to violate the Contract and live. Is it really so strange that I’m opting for this?”

Subaru easily discards these Contracts Beatrice is so fixated on. Beatrice has no words. Subaru might presently look like an incomprehensible, monstrous creature to her. Subaru finds it far more mystifying that he’s being recipient to that opinion.

Keeping promises is important, of course.

Emilia has criticized him multiple times for breaking promises, and he has gone through multiple painful experience because he broke them. And so even Subaru knows that keeping promises is very important.

Even so, he feels no hesitation about making Beatrice violate her Contract.

And his reasoning for it is exactly what he just told her.

If anyone demands that Beatrice keep the promise and die, Subaru's flipping the guy the bird and telling him this: He will make her violate the Contract, and make sure Beatrice lives. It's not even something to think twice about.

Beatrice: "Th-That is unrelenting, incorrigibly insidious of you, in fact…"

Subaru: "I know it's unrelenting, and I am sorry for saying it. But it's important so I'm not surrendering this."

Subaru's stance was decided from the very beginning. From the very beginning, the whole issue depended on Beatrice's feelings.

Beatrice cannot hide her panic and confusion at Subaru's disparagement of Contracts. And of course she can't. Contracts are that important a thing for spirits.

Having witnessed the relationship between a spirit and a spiritualist, Subaru knows they are firm, weighty, utterly unshakable things.

He knows, and he's saying it:

You are more important than it.

Beatrice: "I-If, you…were THEY…"

Subaru's response to Contracts is overwhelmingly overwhelming.

Frailty creeps onto Beatrice's expression, which borders on breakdown.

Her lips speak of the insubstantial someone that Beatrice has waited for over these four centuries.

The fictional entity that Echidna cruelly invented so that she could know WHO BEATRICE WOULD CHOOSE.

Beatrice wants to be saved.

The way that Subaru's words shake her heart and bring her to tears proves it better than anything.

Beatrice: "Will…"

Beatrice's teary eyes focus on Subaru.

Her lips tremble, and, practically clinging,

Beatrice: "…you be Betty's THEY?"

This question could be the full stop on what has gone on for four centuries.

And might be exactly what Echidna ordered her, making it what the witch wants to hear. Who would Beatrice determine as being this insubstantial THEY?

The witch used her daughter to satisfy her own curiosity, letting her spend four hundred years in solitude.

The payoff for all that time rested in that question.

Beatrice swallows her breath. Subaru looks her in the eye, and declares:

Subaru: "Are you stupid? —Of course I wouldn't be this weird mysterious THEY of yours."

2

After the ferocious shockwave gusts through the Archive, Beatrice takes the books thrown about by the wind and returns them to their bookcases.

While they did fall to the floor, none of the books look to have separated from their bindings, fortunately.

Beatrice reflects remorsefully on her use of force while inside the Archive, relieved that only very minor damages occurred.

They are her comrades, who passed four hundred years of solitude alongside her.

Beatrice had not been lying about her wish to be a book. She had fantasized many times about being like these texts, something which could wait for such a long time without it rocking her heart at all. She now thought it hope born from a stupid idea.

Beatrice: “Conceivably, it is laughable, I suppose.”

This is the wretchedness into which she has been cornered.

She mocks herself for it. But inside her small chest, self-deprecation falls subordinate to wrath.

Beatrice: “That guy…that guy…truly, what is wrong with him, I suppose!”

Just thinking about him aggravates her, brings her close to stomping the ground.

She’d like to vent these pent-up emotions on something, but everything in this place which her Mother instructed her to protect is precious.

Unable to find anything to take her tantrum out on, all Beatrice can do is wait for her bloated emotions to wither.

She returns the final book to its shelf and sighs as she smooths out her appearance. Then she seats herself back on the stepladder, reaches to cradle the black tome—and stops.

A blank book. Just throw the thing away! He had said so easily, so many times.

Then at the vital moment, he rejected the option which would have allowed Beatrice to discard the thing. Absolutely, entirely, so incomprehensible it infuriates her.

Beatrice: “I’m exhausted, in fact…”

But her fury will not last forever.

Beatrice stops puffing out her cheeks, takes that book she had hesitated to hold, and puts it to her heart.

Ultimately, to the end of the end, leaning on this thing is the only way to protect her mind.

Just as Roswaal’s gospel has writ, Beatrice’s end will arrive soon.

What emotion should she feel as she waits for it to come?

It’s finally ending. Wouldn’t that be a good enough sentiment?

It’s the one she’s supposed to be feeling, but now that it’s actually happening, she’s lost.

—You are stupid. For some reason those words remain, sitting heavily in her heart.

3

Blown away by the shockwave, Subaru tumbles down the corridor until he slams back-first into a wall. His side strikes directly against a column, leading him to shriek and writhe.

Subaru: “Ghhah! Hhgahghh…I-Impossible! Halfway through the conversation, and that idiot just…!”

The door in front of him slams shut. Subaru reaches out for the door, his expression hateful, but naturally the sight he sees after cracking the thing open is not the Forbidden Archive—merely a guest room.

Gate Crossing has activated, and Subaru has been expelled from the Archive.

Subaru: “I pissed her off so much she threw me out…fuck, messed up with my word choice!”

What he was trying to say wasn’t incorrect, but there was contradiction between how he was telling it and showing it.

Resulting in Subaru being thrown out of the Archive, and distanced from success.

Subaru: “Anyway, can’t stay here. Have to find Beako through another door and…!” ???: “N-Mr. Natsuki?”

Subaru turns around, thinking to conquer the doors via utterly random selection, when a voice addresses him. The familiarity of it, and the fact it’s calling him lead him Subaru to stumble and for his eyes to shoot open.

His gaze lands on Otto, peeking out from a neighboring room, when he’s supposed to be somewhere else. And peeking out from under Otto is Petra, also peering at Subaru.

Subaru: “Y-You guys? Why’re you still in the mansion? I thought I told you that just one wing’s fine and to run away after opening the doors?”

Otto: “Unfortunately, the situation outside has changed rather dramatically…” Otto shakes his head, his face pale as Subaru approaches

It’s inconceivable that Otto would be joking in this situation. Otto has aborted his escape, and there must be something happening which warrants that.

Subaru: “What happened? Short version please.”

Otto: “Witchbeasts did. Hordes of witchbeasts are encircling the mansion, and we cannot move.”

Subaru: “Witchbeasts?!”

Subaru’s eyes shoot open wide at the unexpected word and he looks to Petra for confirmation. She nods several times in response.

Petra: “Erm, there’s lots of witchbeasts which aren’t the dogs…like snakes with two heads, or like possums, lots of them.”

Subaru: “Do these guys live in the nearby forest?”

Petra: “They do, but…the barrier should be keeping them out.”

Subaru: “This barrier again…”

During the previous witchbeast debacle, they confirmed that the barrier between Earlham Village and the woods surrounding the mansion had been repaired. Afterwards they put top priority on looking out for weaknesses in the barrier, so it’s inconceivable that a mistake could’ve happened after such a short timeframe.

And most importantly, the beasts are surrounding the mansion for some reason.

Subaru: “It’s like with those mutts, some weird volition is operating on them…? What about Earlham’s people? Are they okay?”

Otto: “I couldn’t locate any witchbeasts when I instructed them to evacuate, and since they’ve used the carriages from the Duchess to flee, they should be safe. Patrasche is guiding them too.”

Subaru: “Okay. That’s a relief.”

It’s more trustworthy that the clever dragon be tasked with escorting them than some random guy. While praying for Patrasche to pull it off, Subaru grits his teeth. The situation is unfolding down a track unknown to him yet again.

This witchbeast attack has never happened before.

Naturally, considering the timing, it has to be related to Elsa’s attack.

Subaru: “What about Frederica and Rem?”

Petra: “We haven’t run into Big Sis Frederica or Miss Rem…Erm, I-I don’t really think they can break through them and get away.”

Subaru: “Which means they’re also still in the mansion. We’ll be thankful the beasts’re still staying outside, but how much can Garfiel do?”

Subaru strokes Petra’s head, praising her strong heart for remaining composed during this extreme situation. If it were Subaru when he was her age, it wouldn’t be weird for him to piss himself crying. But circumstances prohibit them from staying here.

Subaru: “Where are we right now? Which wing of the mansion?”

Otto: “The eastern. Garfiel should still be battling in the western wing, so I’d suggest avoiding that area to circumvent damages…”

Subaru: “And so the possible escape routes are…”

Of course Subaru needs to collect Beatrice, but it’s also indispensable that Otto and Petra escape. Subaru descends into thought, thinking to scrutinize his mental map of the mansion for any possible escape routes. However, a voice drowns out Subaru’s contemplations:

???: “—Oh my? You were all gathered here, waiting for me?”

A petrifying feeling, like a blade stroked against the back of their necks, leads all of them to freeze rigid.

Subaru promptly pulls Petra’s arm and hugs her close as he timidly glances behind him.

Further down the hallway, lit with bars of moonlight, out peal someone’s approaching footsteps. Their shape soon enters recognizably into the light,

Subaru: “What the hell is Garfiel doing?!”

???: “I’ll unveil pretty guts from all three of you—”

Kicking off the floor before the shrieking Subaru, the Bowel Hunter’s black shadow darts as she bounds near.

Chapter 125A:
The Roswaal Manor Battle

???: “—DONAA!!”

The only one who manages to immediately react to the oncoming threat is Otto.

He holds his hands out in front of him, influencing the world with a canto—the torrent of mana breaks through the mansion floor as up surges a wall of earth, which blocks the whole of the wide hallway and impedes the shadow’s advance.

However,

Elsa: “Nuisance.”

Subaru: “Just one hit?!”

One short statement, and two swings of a kukri.

The slash tears through the wall like paper, and with one kick to the bisected blockade, the whole thing crumbles instantly.

Scattered particles of mana alongside the collapsed wall’s remains. An archetypically sadistic smile alongside the silver gleam of a knife.

Elsa: “First is to slit your throats and silence you, or I suspect you won’t be cooperative.”

Subaru: “Stop saying this terrifying stuff!”

Using the momentary opening Otto created, Subaru holds Petra close and tumbles into a neighboring room. Otto follows a second behind, shutting the door before immediately maneuvering behind the bed.

A slash cleaves through the door. The dangling lower portion of the door plummets, kicked, into the room.

Subaru: “Take this I guess!”

Elsa swoops into the room, for Subaru to attack her with a wooden clothes-hanger. She dodges by tilting backward and slices the thing in two with a flourish of her blade, aiming for Subaru’s throat with the backswing. But thanks to Petra jumping in and pushing Subaru out of the way, the contact ends with only a graze.

Elsa: “Goodness. Bad girl.”

Subaru: “She’s our pride and a good girl, moron!”

Blood seeps from Subaru’s neck. He presses down on the wound pulls Petra close, retreating.

A ghastly grin arises on Elsa’s face as she prepares to pursue them.

However,

Otto: “Then how about this!”

Otto tosses a magic stone, aiming for Elsa’s face.

This glowing red thing, packed with fire mana, behaves much like a shotgun bullet. It’s Otto’s trump card, even more pure than the one he used against Garfiel.

Otto’s hidden ace shoots straight for the defenseless Elsa—detonates.

The magic stone bursts apart in crimson halfway between Otto and Elsa.

Noise and light whip through the room, a heated wind fanning Subaru as he watches:

His eyes focused so intensely that time feels to lag, Subaru sees how Elsa doesn’t even bother to turn around as she throws her knife and curbs Otto’s magic stone.

The stone detonates at an unintended point in space, burning Otto’s eyes. He screams as he pitches back.

Elsa drives her foot into Otto’s exposed stomach, sending him shooting away to crash into a wall. She does not even glance at the crumpled Otto as she instead turns toward Subaru, who swallows his breath. Elsa’s brows hitch up.

Elsa: “Oh? You’re…I think I know you from the Capital.”

Subaru: “I-I’m honored you remember me. So with that relationship in mind, would you mind overlooking us?”

Elsa: “I make a point to, no matter how long it takes, witness any guts I previously failed to behold.”

Subaru: “She’s a collector!”

Subaru can feel Petra clutch tighter at his sleeve. His thoughts solder white.

He keenly senses that his gate is dead. He can pray or set his soul ablaze, but neither his mana nor his gate are giving the slightest murmur of response. It’s impossible for him to use Shamak here, and more importantly it would be a fool’s work should he immobilize himself again. Which leaves him with only one method —Invisible Providence.

Subaru: “…”

The instant he decides to use it, a dark, alien thing slithers through Subaru’s body.

It had been still, but began asserting its presence the moment it realized that Subaru was calling it, eager to display its power and cheering.

A foreboding feeling strikes him, as if he is feeding a repugnant monster.

While consciously ignoring the feeling, Subaru issues orders to the dark power shrieking its birthing cry, and determines to cut open a pathway from his inside to the outside.

He could cry blood with this agony, and he is aversive to using this power.

Regardless. He clings onto what he can, utilizes what he can, and lives while capitalizing on whatever he can.

All to save everyone he wishes to be saved.

Elsa: “Ahh…what a thrilling expression you have.”

Subaru: “I’ll show you something better.”

Elsa: “How excited I am.”

Taking aim at Elsa’s core as she brandishes her two blades, Subaru pulls the trigger taut.

Now he just needs to release, and her slender form will be shredded mauled and perforated.

Subaru: “—○○○.”

A squirming thing flows into his bloodstream, courses through his whole.

It almost feels like the air he breathes is chromatic, like he is cloaked in blazing heat, as the dark alien nails extend, Elsa’s bisection conceivable and anticipated. Just like this, offer up everything, and—

???: “Subaru!”

A grieving cry, and the dull pain of a pinch at his side.

Subaru scrunches his face in surprise, the repugnant emotions inside him dispersing immediately.

What remains are the faint dregs of dark taint, and unchanged emanations of black murder.

Elsa has begun swooping near, and Subaru as he panickedly tries to repair his aim will not manage it in time—when,

Elsa: “—Close.”

???: “—Evaded?!”

It takes Elsa a microsecond to ascertain the gust closing in from behind, and dodge.

She aborts her attack on Subaru and twists away, dancing out from under the claws which gouge her back.

Flipping backwards, she drives a kick into Frederica’s flank and rides the momentum to jab her elbow into Subaru, sending both of them flying as she somersaults backwards—escaping from between them to calmly land on the room’s bed.

Elsa puts her hand to her back, looks at the blood on her palm. She looks to be in ecstasy.

She then looks at Frederica, kneeling on the floor, and tilts her head cheerfully.

Elsa: “Yet another…no, two more people to receive me. Truly a wonderful mansion.”

Frederica: “That ambush did not even work…those are not the reflexes of a human.”

Frederica groans in frustration, unable to hide her shivering.

The blow to his chest leads Subaru to cough as he crawls over to Frederica.

Subaru: “Frederica, my bad, thank you. And, Petra too.”

After addressing Frederica, Subaru thanks Petra, her hand in his. Petra shakes her head with her eyes teary.

Petra: “N-No, I’m who should say sorry. But, Subaru…your eyes looked so scary, and…”

Subaru: “Honestly, I think I was on the border of getting swallowed. That might’ve turned out bad if I wasn’t pulled out of it. Guess I can’t be careless about using Invisible Providence…”

Petra: “Inv…what?”

It doesn’t even merit any surprise from Subaru that his ace is a double-edged sword.

The problem here is how its uses are now limited further—all he can do is pray that this current backfire resulted from using it in quick succession.

He at least can anticipate that counting on Invisible Providence for this fight will mean losing far too much in exchange.

Petra: “Big Sis Frederica…”

Frederica: “It must have been frightening for you, Petra. You did well to not cry.”

Petra still clutches Subaru’s sleeve when Frederica calls her. Frederica gives that appraisal of her precious faux-sister’s efforts while turning to face Subaru, her expression stern.

Frederica: “Sir Subaru, my apologies. I recognize that you desired for me to take Lady Rem and flee the mansion…I’ve failed my task.”

Subaru: “No, it’s hopeless it in this situation. And the outside’s even worse than here…where’s Rem?”

Frederica: “I have her.”

Frederica holds nothing in her hands, both equipped with clawed cestus.

Subaru is anxious about Rem’s apparent absence, when Frederica turns her back to face him. Firmly secured there with ropes, carried on Frederica’s back, is Rem.

She’s bound securely, but that still makes way to an overwhelmingly surreal scene.

Subaru: “I know we’re in an emergency, but it looks like Rem’s neck’ll snap if she’s moved around too much it’s terrifying!”

Frederica: “Fortunately, would be a word I’d hesitate to use, but Rem- sama has been separated from the regular flow of time. Being so, I find nothing apparently affecting her even despite some somewhat rough treatment…”

Subaru: “E-Even so try to treat her carefully as possible okay?” It’s the result of Frederica thinking to do the best she can.

Subaru doesn’t want to complain about it when he doesn’t have any alternative plans to offer. He will have to have Rem endure through an uncomfortable experience for a little while. But either way,

Subaru: “None of us can fight except Frederica. Me and Petra aren’t battlers. Rem’s asleep. Otto fought his best, but for all his struggle he fruitlessly wound up…”

Otto: “Except I’m not dead?! Could you please not spin these terrifying tales while people are dizzied from hitting their head?!”

Subaru looks down solemnly, which resuscitates Otto who lies tumbled on the floor in a corner of the room.

He shakes his head and crawls over to the group, and trembles at the bisected door and clothes hanger.

Otto: “Who would’ve thought that the magic stone would be shot down like that…it worked fine on Garfiel.”

Subaru: “They’ve got different experience when it comes to fighting, and their brains are probably made different. Don’t compare them. It’s sad.”

Frederica: “Garf…then he truly has been raised in the manner which he appears to have been. I was not watching over him…”

Subaru puts a stop to Otto’s cruel comparisons.

It seems like even Frederica has some thoughts about Garfiel after their ten-year reunion. She might feel guilty that her eyes strayed from him and he grew up into a sort of a punk.

Leaving all that business aside and their fostering of brother-sister relations as something to do later,

Subaru: “Gotta do something to solve the problems at hand.”

Elsa: “Can I assume that you’re about done with your pleasant chat?”

Subaru: “Sorry for making you wait. And how about you? Are you mentally ready for a five-versus-one beatdown?”

Elsa: “I’m afraid you’re including three, or perhaps four stray children in your calculations?” Elsa smiles faintly as she accurately counts the number of non-combatants.

The kukri in each of Elsa’s hands sway as she easily hops off the bed. Watching this, Subaru realizes:

—No blood is dripping from Elsa’s back any more.

Subaru: “But it looked like it’d been pretty deep?”

Elsa: “You mean my wound? Don’t worry, it’s fine. Look at what’s happened already.”

With that, Elsa does a turn on the spot.

And just like Subaru suspected, the wound Frederica inflicted on Elsa’s back is perfectly gone. The clawmarks still remain gaping open on her clothes, so it wasn’t that he’d imagined it.

Frederica is the first as everyone except Subaru swallows their breath, faces tense.

Conversely, Subaru just gives a deep sigh and curses his bad premonition for being correct.

Subaru: “I mean I knew killing you won’t make you stay dead…but are you kidding, your wounds heal too? You’re basically just a monster.”

Elsa: “I don’t remember ever discarding my humanity, and I have to have some contentions about how you’re saying this to a woman.

Besides that, where could you have learned about my characteristics?"

Subaru: "Anyone'd think something was up the second you weren't split in two by Reinhard."

Elsa: "I don't go through experiences like that one often. I almost did get split in half. —I wonder what a hero's guts are like. It's extremely fascinating."

Although having borne witness to such incredible combat strength, it doesn't seem Elsa has learned her lesson.

It'd be fine for her to go around hounding Reinhard, who feels like he wouldn't die even if you killed him, so why is she so focused on constantly causing problems for Subaru's team?

He has too many bitter complaints and grievances with Roswaal than he can ever hope to voice.

Frederica: "Sir Subaru…her being present here would mean, Garf is…?"

Asks Frederica timidly, her expression stiff.

Having witnessed the abnormality of Elsa's constitution, she is anxious about her brother's absence.

But Subaru has no answer which can dispel Frederica's unease.

If there's anything he can tell her, it's,

Subaru: "Unfortunately, I can't explain why she's here either. But I seriously doubt Garfiel's been beaten down in such a short timeframe."

Frederica: "From what I witnessed, their strength seemed on even par…Garf had looked to hold a slight advantage."

Subaru: "That's how I see it too, but in the end we don't…"

…know, Subaru means to say as he glances toward Elsa, when his breathing freezes.

Following Subaru’s gaze, Frederica looks over there as well and also holds her breath.

Elsa’s brows furrow, perplexed, as she also looks at that same spot above her head.

It looks like the room’s ceiling is sinking in—falling—and,

???: “Th’fuckin’ cheek!!”

???: “Ee, eep?!”

Subaru: “That moron!!”

The instant they hear the ceiling breaking, Subaru and the others rush to the door.

Right after the five of them flood out the door, the ceiling collapses to crush the entirety of that room, furniture groaning and wood snapping apart thunderously.

The explosive noise and the gale gust out the room, the aftermath of the destruction flowing down the corridor.

Up billow plumes of white smoke. Subaru spits the gritty dust from his mouth as he tumbles down the hallway to escape the scene. It seems that everyone has manage to avoid getting caught in the collapse.

And from beyond the smoke,

???: “Don’t yer pull none’v th’s stupid crap! Now out’n’front we go!”

A familiar, uncouth voice shouts with fervour.

The battering of metal on metal and the noise of a blow follow the voice, until a silhouette cuts through the smoke and tumbles into the hallway.

Subaru: “Uh, wha?!”

Seeing that tumbling silhouette, Subaru finds himself yelping in surprise.

Well of course. This figure is not the one he anticipated, and is instead a clawed furry quadrupedal beast—with spotty fur, which looks much like a hyena.

But it is not the size of a hyena. It's huge, twice as big as Subaru.

Subaru does shudder for a moment at the arrival of the giant beast, but immediately notices that the hyena's eyes are devoid of life, and the animal is dead. He looks to find that its neck bones are broken, and may be bent into angles opposite of what they're meant to be.

Something possessing incredible power had obviously snapped the thing's neck.

And if we're to say that there's anyone in this mansion who could probably do that to the beast, it'd be—

Garfiel: "Hey, Captain. Th'hell, y'were still inside?"

—Garfiel, who kicks the smoke away and coolly appears in the hall.

He notices Subaru and the others staring in astonishment at the dead hyena, and guffaws.

Garfiel: "Yer don't need t'freak out, 's all good. My amazin' self killed it."

Subaru: "Right, thank you …or not! You stopped paying attention to her! And so I thought I was gonna die! I was terrified! I thought I was dead!"

Garfiel: "Yeah yeah my bad, but my amazin' self wasn't thinkin' t'let her go fer an instant. Sh'ran off while I was tangled up with th'pest."

Subaru: "Pest which means?"

Garfiel's face twists bitterly as he clicks his fangs.

This pest he's talking about probably means the hyena. Going off the previous conversation, it definitely has to be some kind of witchbeast but—and that's when:

???: "Geez! I can't believe this! Elsa! Elsa! Dooo somethingggg!"

Elsa: "I'd love to, but I'm sure you're the one who said 'leave this to me, go do something about the others'. Though I'm happy to have more bellies to gut."

Two female voices, one loud, one calm.

Instantly, the room that Garfiel crushed bursts once again, and again silhouettes cut through the smoke to appear in the corridor.

Weighty footsteps, and light footsteps—with a size disparity so large you'd hesitate to call them only two pairs.

Otto: "…What is that thing?"

Unable to keep silent any longer, Otto points at it and asks Subaru for an answer.

Subaru feels the cold, damp sweat oozing down his body.

Subaru: "From what I'm seeing, a biggish hippo."

Otto: "Bigg-ish'?"

Subaru: "Yeah. 'Cause hippos are big anyway."

If you took a hippo and tripled its size, it might manage to be this creature.

SETOWI

Black flesh, with a thick rocky hide. Its round eyes host a red gleam, wicked and hostile. Its mouth is so large that it could probably eat Old Man Rom in one bite, with flat teeth like mortar stones. It resembles a hippo at a glance, and is probably what you'd get if you tripled a hippo's wickedness and ferocity.

???: "Spotty Rex's deaddd! He's deeeaaadd! Poor boy! It's awfuulll! Awfuulll!" High-pitched sobs wail out from atop the giant hippo in mourning of the hyena's death.

The person riding the hippo, legs flailing everywhere, is a small girl. Her brown hair hangs in a braid, and her features are rustically simple.

Her face is familiar to Subaru.

Subaru: "…From the witchbeast forest."

Back when Subaru got caught up in the loop series at the mansion.

She's from when Subaru went into the deepest reaches of the forest to save the children from Earlham Village. And she's the main reason that the children were lured into entering the forest. Subaru had heard from Roswaal that she vanished after the whole affair was over, but,

Petra: "She's from back then!"

It seems that Petra has reached the same conclusion.

If Subaru had been the only one to notice it, then he might have discarded it as some kind of misunderstanding on his part. But if Petra's memories are telling her the same thing, he has to accept it.

This girl was involved with the witchbeast debacle.

With the current situation considered, that means that even that debacle was—

Subaru: "Roswaal's, plans!"

She's working with Elsa. So Roswaal was behind the witchbeast affair too?

Which means that the events in the Capital, the events in the mansion, all of everything was in Roswaal's hands. All of Subaru's efforts had been in accord with a future dictated by a dark book of prophecies.

Subaru: "Like I can accept something so stupid!"

Fate being fixed is a real no thanks.

At very least, it will start changing from now on. All this means is that he's put the witchbeast debacle aside as another thing to interrogate Roswaal about, and that he has yet another reason to smack that clown in the face.

Subaru blazes with rage and rebellion. The girl atop the hippo finally notices his gaze.

She blinks her round eyes and waves at Subaru.

Girl: "Oh, you're the guy from before. And Petra's here too. It's been aaageeees."

Subaru: "Y-You're sure not discouraged from talking. You do realize what this situation is?"

Subaru can't hide how the girl's unconcerned attitude catches him off.

She tilts her head at Subaru's blatant caution.

Girl: "I realize, I'm wooorkiiing. Mama'll scold me if I don't do my work. But then Elsa's there off doing whatever she wants."

Elsa: "Taking the rear post is tediously boring, it was a mistake to appoint me there. My methods are far more vivid and fresh for enjoying life, compared to being made animal feed. Being killed by me is the better choice for the victim too, correct?"

Elsa starts walking over to the hippo's side as she directs the conversation onto Subaru.

Subaru sighs, then raises his finger.

Subaru: “Okay, then I’ll give you the coolest proposition ever. You take that knife you’re holding and flip it around. And then you plunge the thing into your stomach. After that you roll around on the floor. Guts everywhere, I’m happy, you’re happy. It’s the seppuku challenge. Isn’t it cool?”

Girl: “Pff! Ahahahaha! That’s awesome! Come on, Elsa, wanna try it? Elsa, you like guts. It’ll be fun! I’m excited!”

Elsa: “Sorry, but I’ve already done that so many times after getting this constitution that I’m bored of it.”

After learning that his super cool proposition has already been practised in reality, a super cool shudder rushes down Subaru’s spine.

Regardless, this doesn’t change that they have two predicaments sitting in front of them.

Subaru: “I don’t know how it works, but is it safe for me to think she’s controlling the witchbeasts?”

Garfiel: “Doubt yer wrong. S’th’same f’th’ones outside, n’same f’that mutt, allv’m’re doin’ whatever sh’says no fuckin’ fuss at all. — What’s the plan, Captain?”

Honestly, the situation has changed immensely from the initial plan. It’s not just Elsa, they have another foe—and it’s someone who commands massive witchbeasts.

So long as there are beasts outside, it’s going to be nigh impossible to escape the mansion peacefully. And most importantly, Subaru’s team has not yet assembled all of the people they need to save.

Even if they take Frederica, Petra, and Rem to the village, it’s not enough.

Subaru: “Garfiel…can I ask you to do something crazy?”

Garfiel: “Try me, Captain.”

Subaru: “I want you to stall Elsa and the girl simultaneously.”

Garfiel: “…”

Subaru knows that he’s asking for something unreasonable.

Just Elsa alone is a foe who presents unparalleled difficulty. While Garfiel is keeping her put, he also needs to keep the attention of the massive witchbeast.

Subaru has, since coming to this world, learned the threat witchbeasts present to a painful extent. And so,

Garfiel: “No problem. Just leave it t’me. Gotten fired up now.”

Subaru: “—?! S-Seriously? No kidding? You can do it?”

Garfiel: “‘S what’m here for. Been talkin’ some massive talk. Too late fer me t’start whinin’ over th’enemies bein’ strong’r havin’ numbers. ‘S a THE MEEDAN WHO SHOULDERS THE MOUNTAIN LOSES ANYWHERE TO RUN.”

With that, Garfiel clatters his shields together.

Even Subaru can tell that it’s bravado, and not supported by any real self-confidence.

Regardless, Garfiel is the only one he can rely on for this.

Subaru: “Garfiel. I know I already said this countless times in the carriage, but…”

Garfiel: “I hear ya. My amazin’ self got no ideas’v dyin’ in this place either.”

Garfiel interrupts Subaru and eases him by pushing him forward with his shoulder.

He is indicating that there is no need to say anything else.

Repeating it would be inconsiderate toward Garfiel’s resolve. So Subaru swallows his words and returns a push to Garfiel’s shoulder.

By that alone, he presses a dicey form of trust on Garfiel.

Garfiel: “Now get goin’. I ain’t able t’get serious ‘f yer gettin’ in th’way.”

Garfiel bares his fangs as he speaks to the others.

Hearing it, Otto, Petra, and Frederica look at each other.

Otto: “Garfiel, don’t die. I don’t want to be zipping around cleaning Mr. Natsuki’s messes by myself.”

Frederica: “We truly have not spoken enough. But very well. We’ll speak another time, with Grandmother alongside us.”

Petra: “Y-You can do it, scary-looking man.”

Garfiel smiles wryly while nodding to the three.

Subaru feels like they just loaded a pile of death flags on him, but actually with how huge the pile is it flips into a comforting life flag, is how Subaru rationalizes things in a bid to cling to hope.

Garfiel: “N’ so, yer opponent from now on’s my amazin’ self. This time I ain’t gettin’ distracted and I ain’t lettin’ yer flirt around. My claws n’ fangs n’ shield’s’re gonna beat yer into tears!”

Roars Garfiel as he sharply turns around.

Bathed directly in his aggression, Elsa smiles while the girl’s mount give a low growl.

Elsa: “Meili. Don’t interfere this time.”

Meili: “But you’re the one interfering, Elsa! I’m just doing what Mama saaaiiid tooo!”

While having their disagreement, Elsa and the girl attack Garfiel.

Garfiel braces himself as he catches the heavy blow on one shield and the sharp blow on the other, sparks flying as Subaru runs away as fast as he can.

Subaru: “Otto! Frederica! Situation’s changed! Since we can’t leave the mansion out anywhere proper, we’ll escape from a different route so we don’t get eaten by witchbeasts!”

Otto: “You say ‘a different route’, but I’m sure we’ll be faced with the same outcome even should we take a backdoor. If we can’t have Garfiel supporting us for combat, what should we do?”

Subaru: “What if you do frantic witchbeast negotiations with your Divine Protection of Soul Language, and depending how the bargaining goes they surrender the path and we escape? Here’s your chance to be the lead role.”

Otto: “Witchbeasts generally just say ME EAT YOU WHOLE, so it isn’t really a conversation!”

It was a faint hope to begin with, and Otto looks miserable as he responds to it, running alongside Subaru.

Yes, there exist people who you can speak with, but not communicate with. It seems that principle works for both humans and animals. Elsa makes good proof of it.

Which means that there’s only one escape path Subaru can think of left—

Frederica: “Sir Subaru. I have an idea for an escape route.”

Subaru: “I know, Frederica. It’s probably the same place as what I’m gonna suggest. But…”

There’s a problem with that route.

Just as Subaru goes to point out what it is, he dashes out the hallway and swallows his breath.

Subaru: “No matter where we run they just can’t make it easy for us, fuck!”

—Before them, two hyenas notice their presence and come rushing to attack.

Though the cast of the Roswaal Mansion Battle has changed, the fight remains heated.

Chapter 126A:
Attack of Guiltilaw, Ebony King of the Woodlands!

1

—Sparks of steel-on-steel shriek and shriek in succession.

Garfiel: "Ghaaaaaaaahgr!"

Elsa: "Ahahaha! Wonderful, wonderful, wonderful!"

Her body dances through the air. Her blades elect for no fixed course as they slash for Garfiel's vitals.

Who knows how she is capable of these moves. Every single casual-looking strike closes in with deadly force and accuracy to imminently gouge into Garfiel.

Her crooked blade shreds through the air, transcending sound as it flies at sonic speed.

Garfiel redirects the blow upwards with his shields, defending himself by letting the strike slide away rather than block it directly.

The force of the woman's slash remains lethal as she shifts merely the trajectory of her swing, her body flowing adeptly aside. Cutting into that opening, Garfiel takes aim at the woman's open stomach and swings up his leg.

Garfiel's kick is mighty as a cannonball, easily capable of demolishing walls of stone.

If it hits someone at full force, their fleshy human body will offer absolutely no defense as its overwhelming strength exhibits destruction on their innards.

And Garfiel has, in fact, succeed in landing such blows to pulverize the woman's flesh and bone more than a couple times now.

However,

Elsa: “I’ve seen this before.”

Garfiel: “Fuckin’ fuck off!!”

The woman twists her open side and back away from the kick’s trajectory. Garfiel’s foot strokes across the woman’s back, merely grazing her, before tangling in her black cloak. It’s an instantaneous, but conceivably fatal lag for both the woman and Garfiel.

Elsa: “Hah—”

With a quick exhales, the woman reaches her arm around to her back, entangling the cape further over Garfiel’ legs. Her other hand darts up from behind, herself halfway through a backflip, racing for Garfiel.

The swing will slice Garfiel’s right thigh in two—before he can think, Garfiel hops with his free left foot and jabs it directly beneath his entangled right.

Garfiel’s left foot slams into the flat of the ascending blade.

Metal and wrist snap as the woman cries out sensually, dropping her knife. She does retreat, but being that his leg remains entangled and he falls back to the floor, Garfiel cannot pursue her. He uses the momentum from his kick and puts his hands to the ground to backflip away, opening distance between them before disentangling his foot.

Garfiel: “Got yer wrist n’ yer knife, haha.”

Elsa: “That’s fine. I have spare knives, and my hand will be moving again before long. And my cloak…it’s practically just an impediment while fighting you.”

Garfiel: “Yer can keep yer bravado ter yerself.”

Elsa: “We’ll check on your guts whether this is bravado.”

Garfiel uses the stolen cloak to wipe off his sweat and dumps it on the side of the hallway.

Elsa pays no mind to her cloak as she lightly touches her crooked left hand with her right, and calls out to the massive silhouette behind her.

Elsa: “Meili. Don’t just watch, give me another knife.”

Meili: “Geez, just doing whatever you want, Elsa. I’m not your luggage girl or knife caddie. And you keep fighting so Boulderpork can’t cut in.”

The girl riding the massive witchbeast puffs out her cheeks in reply as she flings something to Elsa. It’s a holder for the knives Elsa uses. She draw two fresh kukri out of it, holding both of them in one had as she feels out their grip. She looks up at the girl.

Elsa: “It’s a blight on your own cuteness that you brought that giant witchbeast along. Though I’m glad to dance with him without any nuisances involving themselves.”

Meili: “But it’s gonna be ridiculous if you get caught up in that and let the mark get away. If mama knew what you did, she’d totally scold you. I’m gonna tell her you were naughty, Elsa.”

Elsa: “If I were scared of scoldings, then I wouldn’t start without you or steal your food. It’s enough for you and the others to be the good children. I personally don’t mind being troublesome.”

While she speaks, Elsa tosses the two knives in the air and begins juggling with them one-handed. The size and speed of the blades as they spin means that Elsa could lose an arm if she made a mistake, but Elsa’s risky maneuvers end with one knife in her right hand, and one knife in her left.

Elsa: “My apologies for making you wait. It seemed like waiting would be enough to fix my hand.”

Garfiel: “Don’t worry yerself ‘bout it. My amazin’ self’s also lookin’ t’buy time, and I ain’t crass enough t’butt into a talk b’tween sisters. Family talks’re damn important.”

Elsa: “Goodness. Why do you believe that she and I are sisters?”

Garfiel: "'Cause yer callin' th'same goddamn lady yer mom? It don't matter that yer hair n'eye colors're different. 'M talkin'bout bein' family nevermindin' yer blood."

Hearing Garfiel's reasoning, Elsa's eyes shoot open for a second in surprise. She puts her hand to her mouth, and slips a very cheery laugh.

Garfiel: "Eh?"

Elsa: "Huhu…ah, no, forgive me. I wasn't expecting that response, so I went just a little bit funny. …You truly do seem like a good boy."

Garfiel: "Stop treatin' me like a kid. My amazin' self's n' amazin' man."

Elsa: "Indeed? Although, it doesn't feel to me that you're fully a man or an adult."

Elsa replies to the dissatisfied Garfiel with her cheeks still relaxed.

Garfiel's brows furrow in puzzlement, making Elsa's smile even more cheerful.

Meili: "Elsa Elsa. Don't you get the feeling this scary-looking guy's actually really precious?"

Elsa: "Yes, Meili. I am beginning to get that feeling. I may have sighted for the first time in a long while somebody who I'd rather keep alive after pulling out their guts."

Garfiel: "Stop runnin' yer damn mouths. Yer both gonna be takin' a nap after eatin' my amazin' fists."

Garfiel sharply turns his wrists as he speaks.

He doesn't really understand Elsa and Meili's conversation, but he can definitely tell that they're slighting his determination.

Should Garfiel understand that, then he has no kind words to offer.

Unless they apologize in tears as they beg for forgiveness, Garfiel will pulverise them immobile, and give them the punishment they deserve. —Such is Garfiel's duty.

Garfiel: "Bring it on already. Yer even buyin' even more damn time f'th'Captain'n'th'others t'get away. And my amazin' self ain't hopin' t'be gettin' a gold star fer runnin' away. M'beatin' yer t'yer last inch, teachin' yer a lesson. That my amazin' self's the strongest shield inside or outside the Sanctuary."

With that, Garfiel batters his shields together.

A screech rings down the hallway as Garfiel lobs his determination at the two enemies in the moonlit corridor.

Meili: "—Pffhahaa! Elsa, did you hear that? He's the strongest shield! Strongest shield…pff. Pffhaha! He is precious!"

However! The situation turns that Meili laughs, of all things, and Elsa's smile also intensifies! They do not seem to be threatened.

Garfiel: "Fuck're you laughin' at, huh?"

Meili: "Ahh, it's so funny. So funny I just laugh. You're funny too with how you think you're oh so strong, but it's the group that ran who're also just so so funny."

Garfiel: "Th'Captain's group's funny?"

Meili: "They so are. Aren't they? My pets are surrounding the mansion, so there's only one place to go to escape. That's actually meant to be Elsa's post, but she went off acting on her own, so I put a replacement there."

Elsa: "…"

Meili shots Elsa a criticizing gaze. Elsa unabashedly pays it no heed.

Her murderous eyes stare at Garfiel, observing his every action, making it extraordinarily difficult for him to move. And he also has to pay attention to Meili's comment.

Meili thumps the back of the witchbeast she's riding while Garfiel's gaze grows sharper.

Meili: "Except for Boulderpork, I brought one more huge pet with me today. He's blocking the path. So when you buy time, it actually does the opposite of what you want."

Garfiel goes silent.

Meili: "You think when you're done with me and Elsa, you're gonna catch up to the others and save them but, you're really actually not. So when I see you doing your best to buy time without even realizing that, everything's just soo funny."

Unable to keep herself from smiling, Meili laughs at Garfiel's silliness.

Faced with her juvenile malice, Garfiel gives a deep sigh.

Indeed, there are many unstable requirements piling up on them. Meili is correct, they are definitely facing a situation which exceeded their plans. However,

Garfiel: "Ha. Stupid bullshit."

Meili: "…Huh?"

Garfiel: "Yer th'ones who ain't gettin' it. You got more monsters around? We're th'ones gettin' pinned? As fuckin' if me or th'Captain'd let that fly."

Enjoying the way that Meili's smile disappears, Garfiel steps forwards.

He watches as Elsa reacts, stooping herself slightly forward, as he says:

Garfiel: "Th'Captain n' them beat th'shit outta me. —They're gonna snort laughin' so hard they blast yer dumb obstacle right outta here!"

Subaru: “We’re doomed we’re doomed we’re doomed we’re doomed we’re doomed we’re so doomed, what is even happening anymore?!”

Utterly out of breath, Subaru whines as he dumps himself to the floor.

On the third floor of Roswaal Mansion’s main wing, on the platform leading to the staircase to the top floor, are assembled Subaru’s group—Subaru, Otto, Frederica, Petra, and Rem, all holding their breath as they stay put.

The fatigue is blatant on all of them as they sit there, with deepish wounds present on the whole party.

But especially,

Subaru: “Are you alright, Frederica?”

Frederica: “…I am, this is merely trivial, it is not anything serious. Sir Subaru, I apologize to you for demonstrating such fecklessness.”

Subaru: “We’d be getting nowhere without you. The pathetic ones here are us guys, me and Otto. I’m sorry. We’re weak.”

Otto: “Th-This time alone…I lack any margin to refute your ribbing, Mr. Natsuki.” Otto gives a frustrated sigh. Subaru spits the blood out from his mouth.

While ignoring the hideous pain across his whole body, Subaru readjusts Rem’s position on his back. —He has switched roles with Frederica, and is now tasked with carrying Rem.

Otto guides Petra by the hand while Subaru is shoulders Rem. Their only fighter, Frederica, stands at the frontlines while opening a path—such has been the optimal plan for these five.

Right after parting with Garfiel, Subaru’s group were attacked by two hyena witchbeasts. Between Otto’s magic stones and Frederica’s fighting, they barely managed to repel the hyenas, but they soon discovered many more witchbeasts placed throughout the mansion to torment them.

Batlike Blackwing Mice lurking in the hallway between the main and separate wing. Hyenalike Spotted Rex wandering throughout the mansion, attacking whenever they could. Possums that cast a net over the team after they entered a room, and swooped down the second they let their guard down.

They had a particularly painful battle when dealing with a two-headed snake thick as Subaru's arm.

They managed to drive the Blackwings away with smoke, Frederica's claws bested the Rex, they fled from the possums while having their rear ends chewed, Otto's frantic negotiations managed to stall the snake, and Subaru took the opening to grapple the thing and have Frederica decapitate it twofold—and now, they're here.

Subaru: "We're just, utterly…we lost because we had to split up with Garfiel…"

Otto: "Don't be so faint of heart. Now is about when Garfiel would be confidently shouting that we'll succeed, so let's hold expectations at least equivalent to the ones that he's placed on us."

Subaru: "With how dutiful you are, you really don't feel suited to being a merchant…"

Otto is looking the least dire of all of them, stamina-wise. Subaru gives him a wry smile, psyches himself up, and gets to his feet.

The Rem on his back is, honestly, so light it's saddening. Subaru had heard that unconscious or sleeping people were heavy to shoulder, but Rem alone isn't exhibiting that.

He can barely feel her weight or her warmth. Her very presence is dim. Her faint heartbeat and respiration alone prove that she is alive as Subaru firmly corrects her position.

As if terrified that, even though this will surely not happen, he'll drop her and not notice. Petra: "Big Sis Frederica…"

Frederica: "Do not worry, Petra. There's no need to look so anxious…we will reach our destination very shortly."

Frederica responds to Petra's nervous gaze with a hearty smile.

But Frederica's situation is not as optimistic as she is making it out to be. A hyena mauled her arm during a fight, she is unable to lift her bleeding left arm, and her movements lack their usual luster. They cannot hope for her to fight at full strength, and need somewhere to immediately heal and rest.

Subaru: "Though yeah, we really are close to our destination." Mutters Subaru as he looks up the staircase—at the uppermost floor.

The team is trying to reach Roswaal's office. Of course they're aiming for the escape route there, the bad road that Elsa had welcomed Elsa's invasion in all the loops previous.

When Subaru first lost his plan to flee outside mansion, he had bordered on discarding this route as well—but after a conversation with Frederica, changed his mind.

It happened right after they left Garfiel and repelled the two hyenas.

Frederica: "There is a concealed passage in the Master's office which leads to the outside. Though it, we may capably escape the mansion and flee to a cabin in the forest. Should we use it…"

Subaru: "Sorry, Frederica. It's not gonna be that easy. There's reserves posted in the hidden passage. Since that's the path that woman got in here through."

Frederica: "…"

Aware that he the situation is nigh hopeless, Subaru nonetheless reports this information. Subaru has run into Elsa before while trying to check the hidden passage. Leaving aside whether she entered through the route this loop, she at the very least does know the passage exists.

Subaru: "Going off what Elsa and that girl said…it sounds like they have other allies. Leaving aside whether this 'mama' is actually their mother, considering how they look nothing alike…if they're gonna post a rear guard, then they're gonna post someone at that passage."

Of course they're going to block the path.

Witchbeasts are surrounding the mansion, and there's an enemy in the escape route too. They're utterly trapped, and Subaru forces his brain to fire.

Things are desperate.

It's wretched that, in a situation where their escape route is ineffective, they can't use Beatrice's help.

They wouldn't have to be agonizing about this if Subaru had succeeded in convincing Beatrice. With her Gate Crossing, escaping this place would be so simple that they wouldn't even need to think about it.

Subaru: "…I'm so selfish."

Subaru knows about Beatrice's anguish and the reason behind it, and he's still trying to cling to her aid.

He can't get her help here because he failed to bring her outside, and that in itself proves that he wasn't seeing her properly.

It's natural that she hate and eject him from the room.

Otto: "Mr. Natsuki."

Petra: "Subaru."

Perhaps thinking something about Subaru's expression as he broods, a tap come to his shoulder and a tug comes to his arm.

He looks to find that the tap is from Otto on his right, and the tug is from Petra on his left. The two each use their methods to bring Subaru back to reality, then realize that they did the same thing, and scrunch up their faces.

Looking at the two of them, Subaru sighs, feeling saved.

Frederica: “Sir Subaru. I believe that we ought to choose that path nonetheless.”

Subaru raises his head. Frederica raises her finger.

Frederica: “As you have stated, it presently appears that we are trapped in a deadlock. Ferocious witchbeasts are encircling the mansion, and the enemy is aware of our sole route of escape. Ordinary thought would have it that we will be killed unavoidably…”

Subaru: “Yes, right. I think the same, so I’ve been wondering about whether we could at least find a weak spot in the perimeter of witchbeasts, but…”

Frederica: “Incidentally, Sir Subaru. Where have you previously met that assailant woman?”

Interrupted by Frederica’s low-voiced question, Subaru quietly holds his breath.

Unable to read her intentions in asking it, Subaru nods.

Subaru: “Yeah.”

Subaru: “She targeted Emilia in the Capital before. The Sword Saint just happened to show up there and owing to that everyone got out fine. Though it’d be way too convenient to expect that hottie to burst into the scene here, definitely.”

Frederica: “I, see. Your last encounter involved the present Sword Saint. No, regardless, that does not matter. I do not wish to know the methods used previously to repel the woman, I would rather like to know her personality.”

Subaru: “Her personality?”

Subaru tilts his head at Frederica’s rather nebulous question.

Subaru: “I mean, her personality is she’s the same weird fetishist that she looks like. She’s the GUTHUNTER, loves cutting open people's stomachs and checking out the insides. She's up there in the worldwide rankings for danger."

Frederica: "And judging by how she appeared to enjoy her confrontation with Garf, she would be particularly fixated on doing the deed by her own hands…correct?"

Subaru: "Not like I know her, but yeah she's probably that kind of character. …I don't see where you're going with this?"

Frederica: "It is simple, Sir Subaru. —Unexpected events in this attack are occurring for the enemy as well."

A powerful assertion.

Subaru's eyes widen in surprise.

Frederica: "Witchbeasts presently encircle the mansion. The young girl who was also present is likely a manipulator of witchbeasts… we shall perhaps call her a witchbeastmaster. The enemy's true designs had been to assault the mansion whilst the witchbeast perimeter was in place, and attack those of us inside, would be what it appears."

Subaru: "What makes you think that?"

Frederica: "—The timing between the attacks from the beastmaster and the Bowel Hunter are not synchronized."

For a moment, Subaru furrows his brows in thought. But he immediately realizes what Frederica is trying to say, and hits his fist to his palm.

Subaru: "That's it, so that's it! Fuck, why didn't I notice it? Yes, Frederica's got it right! With that weirdo's personality, of course this'd happen!"

Otto: "Wh-What is it? I don't quite see how everything connects…"

Subaru kicks the floor in frustration and excitement. Otto looks somewhat nervous, but Subaru just gives him a nod.

Subaru: “It’s real simple, Otto. The witchbeast attack’s actually meant to corner everyone in the mansion. And when we’re cornered, we can’t run away like normal. So we head for the hidden passage. —Is the natural course of events. Right?”

Otto: “That would be exactly the course we have followed, correct? But weren’t we saying that the enemy knows of the secret passage, and so we cannot use it?”

Subaru: “Exactly. The correct course of the attack is, we’re cornered and run into the hidden escape path, and that’s where we all get killed by a waiting Elsa. That’s their plan. …But it’s gone astray. Elsa isn’t in the passage right now.”

Otto: “…”

Why isn’t she?

Considering Elsa’s disposition, the answer’s obvious.

Subaru: “Elsa didn’t want to miss out on prey so she started moving on her fucking own. That’s why she’s out of sync with the beastmaster. And it means she’s not at the spot that she’s meant to be blocking. —So there’s no one at the hidden passage!”

Frederica: “The original plans had been for the woman to lie in ambush in the passage. Consequently, being that events are diverging from their plans, it is extraordinary unlikely that a rear guard is presently occupying the passage. The enemy shall surely realize that the situation is divergent from their plans should they be given time. Likelihood is steadily increasing that they may send another individual into the passage.”

Petra: “So we gotta race there while no one’s around!”

Following on from Subaru and Frederica’s theories, Petra practically leaps as she gives the answer.

Subaru laughs as she puts her hand on Petra’s head, and pats her auburn hair vigorously.

Subaru: “Full marks.”

Subaru: “With the information we have, this’s what’s most likely. Either way, it’s a more hopeful idea than breaking through the witchbeast perimeter outside. And worst case, we can at least check what’s happening with the office. …Let’s do it. This is the only way we’re all getting out safe!”

—Ready for that plan, the team arrived to this sight outside the office.

Everyone is both physically and mentally exhausted. Regardless, the hope of reaching their goal filled them with enough energy to move their incredibly wounded selves. And now, that flicker of hope is—

Subaru: “…You have to be kidding.”

Mutters Subaru reflexively after reaching the top of the staircase and peeking into the hallway. Otto pokes his head out above him, as does Petra below him, and all seeing the same thing, they agree with Subaru in dumbstruck shock.

Frederica: “What has happened? Is the Master’s office…?”

Frederica sits on the stairs behind them as she asks this of the three scouts. But going by their reactions, she likely has surmised that the situation is looking bad.

Subaru stifles his footsteps as he turns around and says, rather anxiously,

Subaru: “There’s a real nasty-looking one camping outside the fucking room.” —To Subaru, it looks like the monster CHIMERA.

A lion-esque feline head, with the skinny body of a horse or a goat. Its long tail whips about like a snake, and although it is smaller than the beastmaster’s hippo mount, it’s more than stupidly huge enough to block the mansion’s expansive hallway. A strange entity which looks to have burst out of myth—with easily surmised prowess in combat.

Otto: “That…is the witchbeast GUILTILAW. I-It lives deep in woodlands thick with miasma, something of the king of beasts…and now, in a human village…it isn’t meant to be the kind of witchbeast that you could possibly bring with you to a mansion…"

Subaru: "What're chances that we're misestimating, and it's actually a wimp? Like, it looks like that but actually its personality's gentle and you just feed it katsuobushi and it's happy, or something…"

Otto: "I wouldn't know what katsuobushi is, but are you saying to approach it with food? It will probably end in the beast chomping you in half."

Otto's statement leads Subaru to think of how huge Guiltilaw's head is.

Indeed. With a mouth that big, Subaru is a two-bite meal.

Subaru: "No but transformed Garfiel's even bigger. Okay, let's go get him and compare sizes. If our guy's bigger then that guy'll slink away dejected."

Otto: "If we go back to summon him, then that woman will carve us to bits. You can stop being funny, Mr. Natsuki. …Have you thought of any ideas?"

Otto entertains Subaru's joking, but his gaze is expectant.

It's like he's expected Subaru to have come up with some idea over the span of that little exchange. Thinking Otto the placer of quite ridiculous expectations, Subaru glances back to Frederica and Petra,

Petra: "Subaru."

Frederica: "Sir Subaru."

And they're gazing at him with expectation too.

Subaru: "—Seriously, just what expectations are you putting on me?"

Giving a deep sigh, Subaru shivers at the weight of the huge expectations. He adjusts Rem's position on his back, and closes his eyes.

What, presently, are their possible combat forces?

Frederica is injured and Otto has basically no magic. Neither Petra or Subaru are fighters, and they are on the third floor of the mansion's main wing. There is no way they can call Garfiel up here, and even thinking of getting Beatrice's help is a bust.

But that said, fighting while using everything available is the only technique Subaru's ever had.

Everyone's abilities, their capabilities, materials present, the opponent's situation, the requirements, Subaru thinks of them all, considers them all, mulls over them all—and sighs.

Subaru: "When neither martial or magic forces're looking like they'll work…time to stake it all on my unmatched knowledge from the 21st-century."

3

MASTER's orders.

The first thing to catch Guiltilaw's attention is a sound.

Guiltilaw: "…"

Having heard the peal of something hard tapping and tapping and tapping against the floor, Guiltilaw raises his snout.

Silent King of the Woodlands. Some localities indeed refer to Guiltilaw as such, and unlike other witchbeasts, he does not favor needless roars and pointless noise.

Contrary to his great frame and queer appearance, he soars deftly though the wastes, making not the slightest sound in approaching his prey before landing a single fatal strike and slaying the creature. Such sneaky and assassination-eqsue hunts are his greatest forte.

Thus, although his MASTER may have ordered it, Guiltilaw cannot see the hunt of lying in ambush in one spot as anything but foolish utilization of his prowess.

Although naturally, he has not the slightest intention to be an ingrate and defy his

Because the breaking of his HORN allowed Guiltilaw to escape from his curse.

Guiltilaw: “…”

Guiltilaw casts his snout around, searching for the source of the sound while ruminating on his MASTER’s orders.

Remain in place outside this door, and hunt any enemies what may approach—such is the duty that Guiltilaw has been ordered, and his MASTER’s desire.

Tap tap tap. Those nigh defenseless sounds clearly are footsteps.

Many two-legged creatures, such as his master, make this sound when they walk. Among their number are the truly strong, who do not even make such noise as footsteps, but the lord of these footfalls is not that.

They are undefended, uncalculated, unintentional, unheeding—possessing not a speck of grace.

Guiltilaw finds them irritating to mangle even for a meal with how utterly weak they are.

Guiltilaw: “…”

Silently, Guiltilaw glides away from the door.

The footsteps are coming from the western staircase, the direction from which he has heard intermittent sounds of battle for some time now.

Guiltilaw knows that his MASTER has brought in accompaniment with other witchbeasts. While instructing many beasts inferior to him in strength and size to surround the mansion, his MASTER tasked Guiltilaw with defending the door, mounted herself upon a large and dimwitted beast, and went hunting.

It did dissatisfy Guiltilaw that she chose that merely-size beast for her hunt and left him behind to guard the rear. But should the foes he face here at least be powerful ones, then he can both agree with his reason for being brought here, and preserve his honour.

Thus, Guiltilaw did not do anything so foolish as leave his post to attack the enemies, no matter what beasts they faced, until they managed to reach this very spot.

A weakling who could not even reach Guiltilaw's location did not merit battle.

A weakling butchered by beasts weaker than himself did not merit the hunt.

However. They prey has overcome the other witchbeasts, and arrived at this spot. The second that Guiltilaw sensed their presence, he felt secretly thrilled.

—And this is what he has been waiting for?

Something fragile, ignorant of what it is to even hide footsteps, with such weak lust for battle.

One swing of his claws, one flourish of his fangs, would scatter this fleeting, inferior being to bits.

Guiltilaw: "…"

What surges inside him is rage. Only rage.

His fangs will ravage the prey, and without a single lump of their flesh going down his gullet, he will leave them strewn about the floor.

That is the only thing that will assuage this burning feeling of insult.

Pursuing the footsteps, Guiltilaw moves without casting any shadow over the moonlight. Should there be anyone to witness him as his great frame glides silently in motion, they would surely think themselves observing a nightmare.

The ebony assassin approaches the footsteps, finding that the prey seems to have stopped at the next bend—Guiltlaw draws his claws to bisect the prey from behind.

Guiltilaw: “—!”

With not the slightest sound, Guiltilaw stretches out his neck and bounds for the prey’s back—however.

Guiltilaw: “—?”

The prey that he caught, and sensed had been within mauling range, is nowhere to be seen. Unsure of where to swing his upraised paw, Guiltilaw stalls for a millisecond, feeling something awry. He sniffs as he turns his head.

Where has the foolish, frail, flimsy prey gone?

Guiltilaw: “—!”

Once again, the noise of footfalls strikes Guiltilaw’s ears.

He lowers his head and looks toward the noise, to find that it seems to be echoing from the stairway.

The noise of the prey’s footsteps, descending, running down the staircase.

It appears they they have noticed his presence and somewhat accelerated to avoid him. But should Guiltilaw learn of such a thing, then he shall never allow the prey to flee.

Guiltilaw turns his head. Looks at the door that his MASTER ordered him to protect.

He may be distancing himself from his post, but this prey is surely the exact prey that his MASTER ordered him for. Should he slaughter the prey, that is tantamount to observing his MASTER’s orders.

With that decision, Guiltilaw pursues the gracelessly fleeing prey.

He is effectively teaching the prey that the moment they turned their back on him—nevermind that they were within range of his strikes—they lost any means of resistance.

For Guiltilaw, who dashed over mountains and reigned over the woodlands as King, the hunt of fleeing prey was an everyday act of amusement.

The only prey worthy of being absorbed into this flesh were the truly strong.

Prey that turned their backs and lost their fangs to resist him merely existed so that he would not forget the feeling of blood and gore on his claws and fangs—and they ought to learn this too.

Guiltilaw descends the staircase, following the footsteps.

He kicks off the wall at the stairway landing, dancing through the air to the floor below. He reaches the second floor, then the first floor in pursuit of his prey, and now stands in the lowest floor of the building.

He perceives the distant signs of fighting.

The scent of his MASTER, and the stench of the annoying dimwitted beast accompanying her. The remaining scents are blood and steel, the aroma of the strong.

Guiltilaw: "…"

Were it possible for him, he would prefer to venture in that direction, and participate in the fight. He wishes to brandish his claws and fangs in presence of his MASTER, ripping the strong fighter to pieces and drowning them in a sea of blood, supping upon the taste of victory. However. He must not desire such a thing right now. He has orders to uphold.

—Should he swiftly hunt this prey down, perhaps his participation shall be permitted.

Guiltilaw: "—)."

Guiltilaw feels the burning in his fangs ever more keenly, his body shuddering.

Again he hears the footsteps, and pursues them to hear a door shut further down the dark hallway before looking at the door, freshly closed.

Darting over, standing silently before the door, Guiltilaw uses his long tail to dexterously open the portal.

This is not his first time invading the dwelling of the two-legged creatures and brandishing his fangs.

He understands the framework of these ‘doors’, squeezing his massive frame through the doorway as he sneaks into the room. He had been expecting the prey to be waiting here at this very moment, but he cannot find the slightest glimpse of them, and yet again Guiltilaw suffers utter surprise. But his disappointment this time does not hide far away.

Guiltilaw: “…”

Turning his head, Guiltilaw’s gaze lands on a corner of the room—on the wardrobe. Sticking out from the crack between the wardrobe’s two doors is fabric from the prey’s overgarments. They swooped inside in a panic, and their clothes were caught there. The shallowness of this prey, believing that they are hiding from Guiltilaw while failing to realize that, is humourous.

Guiltilaw silences his footsteps. Creeps near the wardrobe.

He raises his tail, sharpens its tip, and hesitates for not even a second.

Guiltilaw: “—!”

His tail pistons, pierces easily through the wardrobe like a spear.

It leaves a round hole as if made by a drill—and many more of them, coin-sized holes stabbing one after another into the wardrobe, skewering the pathetic prey what cowers inside.

When more than twenty holes litter the wardrobe, Guiltilaw ceases attacking with his tail.

He reaches out his front paw and yanks the wardrobe door so that he may observe the pathetic, dead prey. The perforated door opens easily, and the prey inside—

Guiltilaw: "—Grawh?!"

The instant Guiltilaw goes to confirm the corpse's presence, a burning shock to his nose makes him recoil.

A terribly intense stench shoots through his nostrils, the sensation so painful he could wail. He promptly looks back at the wardrobe, to find a transparent bottle, broken and overflowing with colourless liquid.

The stench is coming from this substance. And the prey is not inside the wardrobe.

The protruding cloth had merely been clothes protruding from the wardrobe.

Guiltilaw: "—!"

Once again hearing footsteps peal from the hall outside the room, Guiltilaw turns around.

His nose is not working, but his eyes and ears are fine. He spots a shadow dash down the corridor, and while lamenting the insult of his disabled nose, pursues the shadow. Guiltilaw has never faced such humiliation in his life.

This is not a bold and honest confrontation against Guiltilaw, who has overwhelmed all enemies he has ever faced, nor is it him easily sinking his fangs into fleeing prey. This is an entity scrambling so horrendously for life of a wretched likes Guiltilaw has never seen before.

Assuredly, kill them. Slay them. Maul them, splay them over the dirt, trample them. Guiltilaw: "…"

Forgetting to even silence his footsteps, Guiltilaw's massive frame soars into the room where the footfalls fled.

He easily blasts through the twin doors. What welcomes him is a room remarkably larger than the others he has seen.

A large table stands in the middle of the room, and in the back of the room is a hearth. Candlesticks sit lit upon the table's white tablecloth. In a room with the moon as the only source of light, the flames flicker bewitchingly.

Guiltilaw: "…"

Fire is an irritating thing for Guiltilaw.

Even during day, when the great globe of white fire remains in the skies overhead, Guiltilaw detests fire being near him. After all, the forest that Guiltilaw lived him was engulfed in flames, and he lost his peaceful home. His horn was broken and he began obeying his MASTER during that affair as well, so fire prompts memories of both liberation and humiliation for Guiltilaw.

Guiltilaw: "…"

He hears no footsteps. But he does hear something else.

Opposite the door he just came through is yet another door, on the other end of the large room.

From that likely-cramped space beyond the door, he senses something.

Guiltilaw sniffs, but his sense of smell has not returned yet.

He cannot smell the aroma of the prey wetting itself in terror. When he mauls the prey, he likely will be unable to smell or taste its blood either, which is a disappointment.

But he can put those sensations off for another time, so long as he succeeds in slaughtering the prey. Right now, only erasing this sense of humiliation blazing in his chest, and making the prey who disgraced him shriek its death wail, will offer Guiltilaw any solace.

Guiltilaw: “…”

Guiltilaw steps forth, heading straight for the room.

Then he stabs his sharp tail into the room’s door. It fills with holes just like the wardrobe did, and Guiltilaw pulls the door open before taking a breath and leaping inside.

Guiltilaw: “—σσσ!!”

He soars into the room, roaring.

His bellow intimidates the prey, scares the weakling so that it may compensate him with his claws and fangs into its flesh.

He whips his tail about, spreading destruction throughout the room, when dust erupts from shredded bags and boxes sitting on the cupboards. His forepaw slams down on the floor, shattering it and shredding through the cloth draped across the ground for dust to erupt yet again, from below—but no. These plumes of dust thick enough to block out Guiltilaw’s vision are only growing thicker.

Guiltilaw: “—?!”

Guiltilaw’s vision drowns in white, which invades his windpipe the second he takes a breath, making him cough. Some kind of, massive quantity of flour is dancing through the air. Enough flour to rob him of his vision, and even rob him of the breath needed to roar.

???: “Got him!”

Someone, some creature, speaks.

Guiltilaw hears their voice not from inside this room, but the previous one,

???: “Eat this, the soul of science—flour explosion!!”

With a sound, something is hurled into the white-choked room.

The bright, flickering thing is one of the candlesticks from the table in the previous room.

The candlestick strikes the wall, its flickering flame falling the floor and blooming larger for an instant.

Guiltilaw: “…”

???: “H-Huh…?”

But that’s all.

The candlestick remains fallen to the floor, doing nothing in particular. The speaker sounds to have misunderstood something, and Guiltilaw knows that they are standing petrified outside the room.

Guiltilaw: “—ッ!”

Guiltilaw’s instincts tell him that he is never getting this opportunity again.

Some breed of insufficiency has happened for the enemy. And if that insufficiency had not happened, Guiltilaw would have been in danger.

Comprehending this, Guiltilaw twists his body, electing to escape from this room.

If he can exit to a spacious room, a place where he can swing his paws and his tail freely, no plans the prey come up with will present any issue. He’ll use the overwhelming disparity in strength to force them to submit, and wrest victory.

There’s no need to do anything more than that—.

???: “Yes, didn’t I tell you? That instead of doing that nonsense thing!”

???: “It’s quicker to just do this!”

The instant that Guiltilaw thinks to soar out of the room, he hears two more prey speak.

A low voice, and a high voice. The moment that he realizes these are prey of different sexes, Guiltilaw senses that the shelf behind him is collapsing toward him.

The string drawn across the entryway is connected to the leg of the shelf.

Forcefully tugged, the shelf collapses onto Guiltilaw's back. But its size only allows it to hit Guiltilaw's massive behind.

The force the blow carries inflicts damage on Guiltilaw equivalent to zero.

Calmly taking the blow, Guiltilaw severs the string with his claws.

And when he prepares to definitely leap out of the room—

Guiltilaw: "—?"

The cupboard opens, and the liquid overflowing from it streams all over Guiltilaw's body.

It feels slimy, unlike water. Its color is slightly yellow, and having it slathered over his prided black coat is hideously unpleasant for Guiltilaw. But that discomfort disappears instantly.

Guiltilaw: "—?!"

???: "Here is Otto Suwen's personal investment of trading oil—take as much as you want!"

The prey's voice calls from outside the room.

But Guiltilaw has no leeway to mind the weak prey's voice in that moment.

—The oil he is covered in catches on fire, and detested flame burns his body whole. Guiltilaw: "—ッ!!"

The King of Beasts, descended from the plains and forever obsessed about his throne in the woodland skies, without ever knowing what bested him, combusts in flames as hot as his humiliation.

Chapter 127A:
The Final Day of Roswaal Manor

1

Subaru: “Otto, you mentioned this, right. Something about using wind and water magic to make footsteps peal from far away.”

Otto: “…Actually I believe that we did talk about that before, but it impresses me that you remembered. Magic that simple isn’t impossible for me even with my currently impoverished mana, but…how would I use it? The only time I ever use it is when I want someone to turn around for a moment.”

Subaru: “We’ll be using it exactly how you said. You make footsteps peal, pull their attention, and guide them into a trap. —Then I blast them away with the soul of science.”

Otto: “You sound absurdly confident about this, though what exactly is this ‘soul of science’…?”

Subaru: “Simple, strong, certain death: a dust explosion. The methods and materials are simple as hey presto. All you need’s some fire and flour. If it’s powerful as I know it is, it’s gonna be more than enough to blast away just one single monster.”

2

Otto: “…Is what you said, then I believed you and assisted you in it, and this is what happens!”

Subaru: “Shut up! Scientific advancement always comes with sacrifices! Why didn’t it work?! There wasn’t enough flour, or not enough fire, or…are the laws of physics just different in this world? So that’s why the dust explosion didn’t…”

Petra: “Auughh! None of that even matters, focus on getting it out! Ahh, oh no! Oh no!”

Petra butts in, screaming, into Subaru and Otto's yelling match.

The three of them are in the kitchen on the first floor, lit by the glow of blazing flame. Because,

Subaru: "You used too much oil! How're we gonna put this out?! It's spreading!"

Otto: "Do you think it's possible to shirk on oil when hunting such a ludicrously huge monster?! And if we couldn't bring the flammables out and simply left them there, the results would be the same anyway! You are definitely paying the fees for this afterwards!"

Petra: "Just stop it, you guys! This isn't the time for this! We can't put it out! Run!"

Subaru: "You sound like a middle schooler failing to recover from a mishap with fireworks…"

Says Subaru, exasperated, when he notices that the tablecloth in his hands has caught alight. The flames don't go out no matter how he bats at them, so he resignedly dumps the cloth into the fire. The fire from the storage pantry has spread within an instant, and the flames have started circling around to the dining room and kitchen as well. It feels like the magic stones they use for cooking will get caught in the blaze and explode at any second.

Subaru: "We sacrificed way too much for this…"

Says Subaru, frowning, as he looks down at the charred corpse fallen at the threshold between the pantry and the dining room. It's the beast that was blocking the door to the office on the third floor, which Otto lured downstairs with his sneaky magic, then got covered in the storeroom oil and burned to death.

It had brains befitting its brawn and graciously triggered every single trap without suspecting a thing. Fortunately it was seemingly susceptible to fire, falling into a panicked frenzy when it caught alight, and proceeded to burn up without doing anything else.

Subaru did face a conundrum when his dust explosion failed, but Otto and Petra's backup plan of using oil led them to victory.

For once you could say that Otto and Petra's failure to understand Subaru's lectures on the terror of dust explosions, and dimwitted insistence to lay down insurance, saved them.

But if we're to mention problems that arose from it, then it'd be that the flames that killed the witchbeast have, even after felling the beast, neglected to go out.

The fire burns the walls of the mansion, burns the food inside the pantry, tongues of flame reaching to the legs of the dining room table.

It reeks of smoke, of a fatal and burning world. Subaru's vision begins to haze. In this land without fire brigades, they are lacking in enough water magicians to put out the fire.

Subaru: "I know that we needed to do this, considering how Garfiel and Elsa're fighting and witchbeasts are prowling around…but it's so big we'd have to reconstruct the building…"

Otto: "This isn't the time to be discussing it, Mr. Natsuki. We'll follow Frederica and escape. Swiftly, before the third floor staircase stops existing."

Petra: "Hurry! Hurry!"

It all feels unreal to Subaru as he watches flames engulf the familiar scenery, when Petra and Otto tug at his sleeve.

Otto and Petra are the only people here except Subaru. Frederica and Rem split up with them when they began their plans to trap the witchbeast, and have also been tasked with judging when the beast moved away from the door, and then securing the hidden passage in the office.

It did worry Subaru to entrust the task to Rem and wounded Frederica, but thinking about pure combat ability, it's a sensible plan. Even when Frederica's unable to use an arm, she is far more than capable of defeating Subaru and Otto.

Either way, they succeed in repelling the witchbeast.

While praying that their reading is correct and no other enemies are in the passage, Subaru's team burst out of the dining hall and sprint up the stairway, aiming for the top floor.

Subaru: "What do we do if Garfiel dies in the fire?!"

Otto: "Garfiel surely isn't so stupid, he'll be well! And it's possible for him to escape by charging through the witchbeasts outside!"

Subaru is anxious about the fire's spread, and how it chips away the battlefield for Garfiel. Otto's shouts are correct, but seriously what if—

Petra: "Big Sis Frederica!"

While Subaru broods, the three reach the third floor.

Out of breath, Petra sights Frederica standing outside the office and waves to her. Frederica seems to perceive that the group's fight was successful, and instantly looks relived.

Frederica: "Thank goodness, you're safe. It comforts me that nobody is missing."

Otto: "Please excuse me, may I ask why you are saying this while staring at me? Do you mean that I seem probable to go missing? Please stop, I'm near to weeping!"

Subaru: "Yeah yeah, just calm down calm down. We'll put improving your reception aside as an issue for later, and for now think about how to deal with our current problems. Frederica, how's the passage?"

Frederica: "It operated without any issue. And I have confirmed that the path itself is also safe, at least as far as the inner room… incidentally, am I simply imagining this smell of something burning?"

Frederica narrows her eyes as she asks about the stench. Subaru grimaces, looks at Otto and Petra, and the two shake their heads.

Subaru: "Ahm, well we kinda made a couple mistakes, and the fire we used for defeating the monster got really huge. And so…”

Frederica: “The mansion has begun to burn. …I had not anticipated that the building would return to a state of complete normalcy, but now it shall burn down entirely. …It’s no comparison to our lives.”

Subaru: “Oh, you get it. Yup. Yup it’s an inevitable sacrifice.”

Frederica: “I have little sentimental connection to this mansion. Instead, Ram’s sentiment for the building is likely strong, so you would best prepare yourself for a scolding afterwards.”

Subaru: “Wheuhghh…”

Imagining the relentless and endless chastisement, Subaru suddenly feels trepidation for their reunion.

But it’s good that he can think about the future like this. Frederica smiles wryly at Subaru’s attitude, and a relaxed atmosphere spreads across the scene.

Subaru: “Now, we just imposed another time limit on ourselves, so let’s get out of here quick. Frederica’ll take the lead, then Petra then Otto. If you hit a safe zone the second you’re out of the passage… hard to tell what side of the barrier you’ll be on, but either way follow Frederica’s instructions. Best plan is to meet up with the villagers who fled with Patrasche if you can.”

Calling an end to the jokes, Subaru quickly explains what their current direction is.

Frederica and Otto’s expressions tense as they nod in response. But Petra furrows her brows.

She raises her little hand and calls,

Petra: “Subaru?”

Petra: “I-Isn’t this kinda funny? It almost sounds like you’re not coming with us…”

Subaru: “—It does. I’m sorry, but I’m not leaving with you. We’re splitting up.”

Petra: “Why?!”

Cries Petra in surprise.

She reaches out and grabs his sleeve, her fingers shaking, trying to keep him from going.

Petra: “Let’s just run! The mansion’s burning, and there’s so many scary monsters! You can’t beat them in a fight, can you, Subaru? So won’t you run?”

Subaru: “Well you’re right so I have no excuses there, but I’m not gonna fight. Though I guess in a sense, it is a battle.”

While happy for Petra’s concern, Subaru gently unhooks her fingers. He sees the grief permeate her big, round eyes, paining his heart.

Otto taps her shoulders from behind, taking care not to startle her.

Otto: “Petra. Mr. Natsuki has something that he needs to do. Until he’s done it, he cannot leave the mansion.”

Petra: “But! Subaru’s weak! He’s in danger! We should just leave you behind instead, Mr. Otto!”

Otto: “You’re not saying that because you believe in my strength at all, are you?!”

Shaking her head, Petra looks up at Subaru with tears in her eyes. Subaru kneels down to get on Petra’s eye level and pats her head.

Subaru: “I’m sorry, Petra. You, and Rem, and Frederica will all escape the mansion safely. But that still isn’t the entire rationale for why I came back to the mansion. There’s still one more person I have to get out of here.”

Petra: “Lady, B-Beatrice?”

Subaru: “Yes. Have you met her?”

Petra shakes her head.

Petra started working here about ten days ago. She has not caught sight of that shut-in girl even once during her time living here. Beatrice is indeed a hardcore shut-in.

Even though Subaru basically never left his room except to go to the bathroom either.

Petra: “I-Is she really around? You aren’t just thinking too hard, and fooling yourself that she…?”

Though she probably is not intending to, Petra begins doubting reality.

Could it be that this person only exists inside your own head? Is what she’s asking.

Subaru: “She’s an absolute pain, lonely but a complete meddler, takes everything upon herself and answers questions all on her own and suffers for it, can’t settle issues on her own so she wants someone else to end it for her.”

Petra says nothing.

Subaru: “I’d really rather not think that my imagination could come up with someone like this. If I’m gonna fantasize about anyone, it’s gonna be a helper character who’s with their fondness gauge at maximum.”

Beatrice would never once do a single thing that Subaru wanted, didn’t know what either she or others desired, was trying to give up on thinking, and was the pinnacle of nuisancehood. And so Subaru needs to teach her.

Subaru: “You know, Petra. Beatrice is basically the same age as you. And with how you’re mature in lots of ways, you might resemble her first friend.”

Petra: “Her first friend?”

Subaru reminisces on the past Theta mentioned.

Thinks about Ryuzu Meyer, Beatrice's old friend, who left a permanent scar on the girl's heart. Beatrice and Ryuzu may not have recognized it themselves, but from an outside perspective, they were obviously friends.

Subaru: "Petra. Once I come back with Beatrice, definitely be her friend. You'll like her. 'Cause it's so fun teasing her."

Petra: "Even more than Mr. Otto?"

Subaru: "Yeah. You don't even need Otto any more."

Otto looks like he wants to say something, but Subaru consciously ignores him.

He draws his hand away from Petra's head and stands up.

Subaru: "I'm doing it. I'm searching for Beatrice. I'll do my best not to die in the fire, but if I do burn to death then I want it to go down in the records that I died because of Otto's oil."

Otto: "I'd really rather that not happen. If you don't come back safely I'll slap you, I swear."

Says Otto, looking miffed, as he sets his hands on Petra's shoulders and draws her near him.

As if drawing a line between Subaru, and the four of them.

Subaru: "Frederica. I'm counting on you."

Frederica: "Unsparing to my health, I swear that I shall cut open a path to our escape."

Subaru: "Be sparing. If we can't keep you, it was pointless for me to come here."

Frederica's eyes widen.

It's not often that Subaru sees her looking so surprised. Feels kind of nice.

Finally, Subaru looks at Rem, on Frederica's back. The sleeping princess shows no signs of seeing Subaru off.

It's fine. Rem isn't meant to be seeing Subaru off. Subaru is meant to be greeting her.

Petra: "Take care, Subaru!"

Turning his back to the four, Subaru breaks into a run.

Even at their parting, Petra's voice washes over Subaru's back. But he doesn't glance behind him.

Petra would not desire him to, either.

The flames are spreading steadily across the mansion.

—With his hand to an unaffected door, Subaru must wonder whether this fire will reach the Forbidden Archive.

2

The shield catches the blade as it slashes down, and to a screech of sparks and metal, the knife flows away.

Weaving into each other's openings, a forceful kick plunges into Elsa's stomach—she takes the blow, rotating to dissipate the strike's force, and uses her momentum to slash at Garfiel, her blade closing in to slice his head in two. But,

Garfiel: "Lax!"

Elsa: "Goodness. How harsh."

Garfiel's wide, open jaws close down on the blade, making this the fourth mouth-intercept of the day.

The force of Garfiel's jaw instantly shatters the knife, and Elsa draws her hand back before leaping backwards in retreat. The theft of her favored weapon makes her smile deeper.

Elsa: "If you were wrong by even a hair, your head would have shot off. It’s certainly impressive that you did it.”

Garfiel: “Got th’trick t’it down. ‘M startin’ t’get bored ‘v how you fight, ‘bout now.”

Elsa: “How cold. Looking like you understand a woman’s entirety, when you’ve only known her a short while.”

Garfiel: “…Fuck off with that embroilin’ phrasin’, oi. —Hrn.”

Garfiel sticks his finger in his ear, grimacing, and sniffs as he notices something.

He looks down the hallway. His mouth curves into a grin.

It doesn’t look like Elsa’s noticed it yet, but Garfiel’s sense of smell has picked up the stench. This is the stink of stone and wood on fire —otherwise said, the aroma of flame.

Meili: “—Ahh, geez, I can’t believe it! He’s sooo useeeleessss!”

Right after Garfiel smiles, the girl atop the witchbeast puffs out her cheeks.

Elsa glances at her. Meili remains peeved as she continues,

Meili: “Apparently the Shadowlion who’s meant to be stalling the others just died. He never listened to my instructions anyway, and he got mad real quickly so he was always a problem, but…how did he manage to die when aaallll he had to do was nap outside a door?”

Elsa: “The true question is, why did you bring such a useless beast with you?”

Meili: “The Shadowlion was the only one except Boulderpork who wasn’t in rut or hibernation. And he still died, I can’t believe it.”

Groans Meili as she tosses another knife to Elsa. Elsa recieves it, confirms the feel of its grip, and remains utterly apathetic this information from Meili.

It doesn’t look like Meili cares at all about the dead witchbeast either. The poor creature.

Regardless. What he’s overheard makes a wicked smile arise on Garfiel’s face.

Meili: “Eww. Scary-looking precious guy, you’re making a real nasty face.”

Garfiel: “My mug’s nastiness ain’t a match fer th’Captain’s. N’anyway, ain’t it ‘xactly what I told ya? Yer sneaky plots ain’t nothin’ t’th’Captain n’ his happy band’v friends.”

Elsa: “While yes, they have exceeded our expectations…where does that leave them now? The slaughter of one useless witchbeast doesn’t change that we still have numbers. We continue to keep you, their pivotal combat force, pinned here…and nothing especially changes about their predicament.”

Garfiel: “Yeah, yer right.”

Elsa holds her two knives loosely while Garfiel crosses his arms.

He sniffs again, thinks back on his fight with Elsa until now—and decides.

Garfiel: “‘S’bout time fer things t’get movin’.”

Elsa: “What do you—”

Meili: “Elsa!”

Garfiel’s statement makes Elsa raise her brows. But before she can finish her question, Meili cries out.

Garfiel looks to find that the Boulderswine’s eyes have changed color, and the giant animal is so agitated that it’s stomping around on the spot. Meili calls out to the creature, getting it slowly back under control. But it seems like the witchbeast has, just like Garfiel, noticed the fire.

Meili pats the Boulderswine to calm it down, then looks gravely at

Elsa.

Meili: “Elsa, the building’s burning. Somebody set it on fire.”

Elsa: “…”

Garfiel: “Hell’re you sayin’ with that ‘somebody’. —’S was obviously th’Captain. Makes sense, n’ good that it’s so upfront. Witchbeasts’re beasts. If yer gonna drive ‘em away t’ make a path, quickest way’s t’scare ‘em with fire.”

Meili: “But…then he came to the mansion to save the people inside, only to burn it down in his escape?”

The decisiveness of Subaru’s actions stuns Meili speechless. Elsa also looks to be having trouble consolidating this information, perhaps because it doesn’t fit with her image of Subaru. But Garfiel’s heart remains horribly calm in contrast to their surprise.

Naturally, Subaru had not told Garfiel beforehand that he would go this far. Garfiel did believe Subaru someone who took daring actions, but not even he expected that he’d burn down the mansion. Which makes Garfiel feel comfortable as someone who decided to enter under Subaru’s tutelage.

And most importantly, the fact that this situation has been arranged lights a spark in Garfiel.

Garfiel: “Mansion’s burning. Outside’s a horde of witchbeasts.” Elsa: “—?”

Garfiel: “Got people we gotta save, n’adversaries we gotta stall. Th’only guy who can fight’s me, n’ th’Captain told me he’s leavin’ this up t’me.”

Meili: “What’re you suddenly going on about, Mister…”

Garfiel: “‘S goddamn obvious.”

Elsa tilts her head. Meili looks like she’s observing something creepy.

Garfiel clicks his fangs, feeling refreshed.

His body is light. Nothing scares him any more.

Garfiel: “With all these conditions in place, what fuckin’ man out there ain’t gonna get fired up?! M’goddamn goin’ for it. ‘S a FACING THE DRAGON, SWORD SAINT REID LAUGHS AND DRAWS BLADE.”

Elsa: “You recognize that that saying means someone abnormal and insane?”

Garfiel: “Y’bet I know. And? Yer sayin’ there somethin’ wrong ‘bout my amazin’ self n’ you bein’ here?”

Garfiel affirms his own stupidity with a refreshing breed of momentum, leading Elsa to stare in utter astonishment. But only for a moment.

She immediately grins, licking her lips as her eyes soften beautifully.

Elsa: “You are correct. You are sincerely correct. You’ve stated it perfectly.”

Agreeing with him, Elsa points the knives she wields at Garfiel.

She crosses her blades, her long, black hair dancing as she tilts her head.

Elsa: “But would you mind if we had a change in attitude? I doubt that you are suddenly going to grow any stronger, and also suspect that you recognize this after clashing with my constitution numerous times. A bout may leave me as the more wounded party, but the confrontation still remains unproductive.”

Garfiel: “Yer right.”

About ten minutes have passed since Garfiel and Elsa started fighting.

Steel has already met steel over one hundred times, each competing viciously with the other. Garfiel holds the slight advantage in terms of combat ability. He narrowly surpasses Elsa in brute strength, in speed, and in his techniques, never once conceding predominance.

But Elsa can heal her wounds in mere seconds and happily accepts injury without feeling pained in the slightest, never once hesitating in either her offence or defense.

And while getting into wounds, it's worth mentioning that Garfiel is also wounded. He also needs time to heal himself, while Elsa does not.

He is inferior to Elsa in terms of stamina. Should the fight turn into an endless cycle of bouts, then her blades will soon catch Garfiel.

However,

Garfiel: "Five…no, maybe six? 'S how many times my amazin' self beat you in."

Elsa: "Yes, you may be correct. And?"

Landing a direct hit with a kick, smashing her into the wall with his shield, grabbing her by the leg and slamming her head- first to the floor—Garfiel has landed many fatal strikes on Elsa. The injury healed every time, and he truly was not achieving anything, but—

Garfiel: "I was anticipatin' four 'er five times at best."

Elsa: "…"

Garfiel: "Vampires ain't immortal. You pile enough killin' blows on 'em…'n eventually they're gonna run outta life. That's what I'm gonna be doin' t'you 'fore this mansion's all burned down."

Garfiel takes his stance, legs apart, as he laughs ferociously with his fangs on full display.

Elsa hears him in silence, the smile vanishing from her face. She fiddles with the end of her braid before giving a quiet sigh.

Elsa: "Meili. —Give me it, and you pursue them."

Meili: “Elsa…are you serious?”

Elsa: “When given rationale to do it, failure to do it is discourtesy to the opponent. My only regret is that I may not be able to extract your guts cleanly.”

Replies Elsa with her eyes closed. Meili does not question further.

She drops the knife holder she has been championing to the ground, and draws a different holder—one containing merely two knives, and throws it to Elsa.

Garfiel: “Hmm?”

Garfiel hums cheerfully as he watches Elsa draw the knives from the holder.

These two blades radiate a pressure so intense that none of the others she’s used can compare.

The knife in Elsa’s left hand is completely black from the handle to the blade. It looks identical to the kukri she’s been using at a glance, but this one’s blade is curved with countless, bestial fangs down its edge, specialized more for goring than ripping.

The knife in her other hand is the exact opposite, pure white with a thick body. It also looks like a kukri, but its thickness makes it seem like a strike from it could snap bones, and pairing it with the black blade makes its ruthless image compound greatly.

Garfiel: “Yer tellin’ me that’s yer ace?”

Elsa: “These are the ones I use when I’m focusing on killing the opponent, rather than seeing their guts. Exclude Mother, and you are the third person I’ve used them on.”

Garfiel: “That’s one hell’v’n opinion I ain’t glad for, n’ one hell’v’a family I ain’t jealous ‘bout, oi.” Garfiel scrunches up his face at the unpleasant confession.

Meili gives orders to her witchbeast as she nimbly moves herself. The dimwitted beast stomps the ground, charging through walls as it heads toward the main wing in pursuit of Subaru's group—however,

Garfiel: "Well, thanks fer showin' me yer ace. I don't show you mine, n' 's what ya call unfair, yeh?" With that, Garfiel stomps the ground.

Immediately, a pulse rushes out Garfiel's sole and through the ground, speeding down the hallway, passing beneath Elsa before reaching the witchbeast—and exploding.

Pork: "—?!"

Meili: "Boulderpork?!"

The earth caves in beneath the beast, which loses its balance and crashes into the wall as it falls. The impact rocks the mansion, and Meili is unable to stay atop the witchbeast, instead coming to land in the hallway. She strokes the fallen Boulderswine's rump as she looks at the floor, sees the unnatural depression, and glances behind her.

Meili: "Don't tell me, you did this?"

By utilizing his Divine Protection of Earth Spirits, Garfiel can conjure depressions and protuberances in any surface within visible range that he can determine as being GROUND. It comes with disparities in effectiveness depending on how far away the target is or how large a scale he is aiming for, but it's more than enough for him to bluff with.

Garfiel has learned from Subaru to, when you've got something you really don't want others to find out, laugh with complete shamelessness.

Garfiel: "'S about what it is. Yer safe t'think that me not lettin' yer escape's n' expression'v my will. Long 's my feet're touchin' th'ground, yer ain't escapin' from anywhere my amazin' eyes can see ya."

Elsa: "Meili. You can put minimal forces upstairs. Call the others, and awaken that beast."

Meili: "…Mama'll be mad."

Elsa: "What will truly earn us a scolding is if we fail to remove the threat. And, I doubt we'll have the leeway to worry about what will come afterwards."

Garfiel: "So y'do get it."

Meili's expression loses its calm as she nods, puts her fingers to her mouth, and whistles. Garfiel silently watches on as the thin sound echoes far, all throughout the mansion. If the two were speaking truths, then witchbeasts should be approaching this spot before long.

This situation is only blazing hotter and hotter.

Elsa: "I'll pluck off your limbs and shoulder you home once you're lighter. I doubt this will all be worth it if I'm unable to enjoy myself protractedly."

Garfiel: "Where's th'option t'just quit it with th'guts thing?"

Elsa: "I'd rather quit breathing."

Garfiel clicks his neck at that statement, before stooping forward in preparation to receive the enemy's strike.

Elsa sways loosely and nimbly positions her white knife behind her, flexes her arm,

Elsa: "—I assure you that I, more than anyone else, can love you to your flesh and marrow."

A horrific, debauched smile. The shriek of blade rubbing against blade.

And,

Garfiel: "—Ghgh?!"

The white knife sticking from Garfiel's left shoulder breaks his bones apart.

—The battle between the Bowel Hunter and the Shield of Sanctuary, enters its final phase.

3

His beaten shoulders, his hips, his head all hurt.

He is battered all over after falling many times, always stifling his pained moans from the impact dead.

He runs, runs, runs, out of breath, knees shaking, eyes fogged, runs.

It hurts to breathe. He keeps his head low, so as not to inhale smoke. The flames have already engulfed the majority of the building, through which he sprints as he searches for a yet-untouched door.

Subaru: "—Hic."

Discovering an unopened door, Subaru flies madly at the doorknob and wrenches the thing open. Before him is revealed an utterly mundane guestroom, which will shortly drown in a sea of flame. Leaving the sentimentality aside, Subaru leaves the door open as he runs for another room. He goes for adjacent room, and the one adjacent that, and the one adjacent that, opening every door he sights—

Subaru: "—There!"

Freeing him from the scent of soot and char, the stench of aged paper streams out of the room.

Subaru sniffs the familiar, musty smell as he stomps across the threshold.

He raises his head. Addresses the person occupying this chamber.

Subaru: "Hey! Enough of this, stop being angry and listen to—"

Beatrice: "Get out, I suppose!"

An invisible shockwave comes racing at him, threatening to blast him away. But Subaru manages to hook his fingers on the carpet to defend himself from the force.

Amidst a pressure so intense it could drag him backwards with it, Subaru's cheeks twist into a smile.

Subaru: "Hah! Don't underestimate me too much. You think I'd put up with getting thrown out of here so quickly, over and over, by the exact same meth—"

Beatrice: "I won't say it again, in fact!"

Subaru: "Bhggagh?!"

A thick book rides the wind to smack against Subaru's forehead, dizzying him and sending him tumbling, flying backwards, ejecting him from the room.

He shoots down the corridor. Crashes into a wall. He shakes his head as the door closes itself in front of him, and he hurriedly leaps at the thing—already too late. This room is no longer connected to the Forbidden Archive.

Subaru: "Asshole! Who're you taking after, goddamn loli!"

After violently kicking the door open, Subaru breaks into a run in pursuit of another door.

That the room hadn't sent him to the second floor of the eastern wing—an area close to Garfiel's fight with Elsa—was probably Beatrice's kindness.

Subaru: "Then at least listen to me, stupid!!"

Beatrice must be thinking the exact same thing from within the Archive.

Keenly feeling that truth, and rejected times upon times, Subaru sprints through the mansion in search of the door to the Forbidden Archive.

With the fight in the western wing in its final phase, and the fire from the main wing blazing through the whole building—only a question of time remains until Roswaal Mansion burns to the ground.

Chapter 128:
Love You to Your Blood and Guts

He drives his fangs into the green tail slipping before him. Mindlessly tears it apart.

Purple fluids splatter everywhere and vivid blood showers his face, but he doesn’t care. His left eye has already been bathed in venomous fluid and blocked shut for ages.

He roars to obfuscate the burning pain before slamming his arm into the two-headed snake, killing it. He kicks its corpse, keeps everything in front of him in check as he retreats, and when the chill races up his spine—he instantly recoils back.

And the grisly blade screams past, grazing his chin.

The witchbeast in the blade’s path becomes prey to the fanglike knife. Flesh is shredded, blood spatters in sheets, a scramble of organs forms a curtain before him—which he charges through, aiming for the perpetrator woman before ramming his arms into her torso.

Elsa: “—!”

His right shield at her chest, his left shield at her flank, her flesh squelching and bones cracking at each point.

At his ears, before his eyes, from all directions come the cacophonous cries of beasts, their shrieks, his roars, crashing conflict, the pounding of metal on metal, too many noises mashed together for him to properly register the world.

He doesn’t care. This stuff in front of him, in his right-eyed vision, is what’s real.

Her voluptuous breasts crater in, the force of the gut-wrenching blow making her vomit blood. Even with her scarlet lips turning a deeper shade of sanguine, and faced with pain enough to threaten her life, her expression remains one of rapture.

It might not even be her combat strength, or her stamina, but that mentality of hers that's the real nuisance.

Elsa: "—Hah!"

Garfiel: "Ghrrrrr!!"

Her short exhale. His responding roar.

She swings her left arm from behind to in front, shrill noise pealing out from behind him. The slash reflects off the wall, rebounds off the ceiling, hits the floor as it comes pressing for the back of his head.

Garfiel: "…"

He directs his attention behind him, extinguishing the idea of evading it from his mind.

The woman before him draws her right arm firmly back, preparing to piston her serrated black knife into him. If this is to catch him between the two knives, then this blow will likely slice open his head, or maybe his throat.

He tilts aside, forcing himself out of the blade's path as it rushes to stab the back of his head.

A thunk resounds out from around his left shoulderbone. Feeling the tip of the rebounding blade bite into a gap between his bones, he clicks his tongue—when the knife slices into his joints, rendering his right arm momentarily motionless.

Elsa: "Huaaah!"

Garfiel: "Shah!"

So violent as to mute all sound, she looses the readied blade.

This unremitting attack makes for less of a 'slash' and more of a 'pointy bludgeon'.

The strike will blast his head off should it hit, mutilating it utterly. Garfiel immediately raises his left arm to intercept the strike, but with his poor posture, he cannot avoid all the damage to his right shoulder.

Animal teeth shriek against metal for only a microsecond before Garfiel's arm is easily shunted away.

With only a meagre drop in its speed, the back blade resumes its charge for Garfiel's head. More than enough strength to cleave apart his skull presses in, a second from hitting. Hitting—

Elsa: "—?!"

—what Garfiel kicks up, forcing it into the path between his head and the knife, the witchbeast's corpse.

An uncomfortable feeling like a hard-skinned vegetable against his cheek, and blistering venom that burns the skin it touches. Risking being bathed in both these things, he salvages the benefit of avoiding fatal damages.

The knife slices into the witchbeast's corpse, the battering force of the blow proceeding through the cadaver to strike Garfiel across the face.

The impact pummels him, sending him whirling left to right, spinning in circles—and with two wilful steps into the ground, he soars backwards.

His Divine Protection of Earth Spirits activates, obeying his will to make the ground he stepped on explode. The detonation sends him soaring backwards, the woman now to his back as he proceeds to zoom straight for her. —With the woman's white blade still sticking out of his shoulder.

The instant the blade touches her, the woman flinches.

Though she knows that the side contacting her is the pommel, it still makes her falter from making any instantaneous decisions.

With his right shoulder still against the woman, Garfiel spreads his stance to drop his center of gravity.

The instant this makes the woman think to step backwards and open range, Garfiel's arm shoots up and grabs her face in a vicegrip.

Garfiel: "—Partial Transformation!"

Immediately following his scream, a change occurs in the arm clutching her face.

The arm swells explosively—growing a coat of golden fur in an instant, transforming into the log-thick arm of a beast.

And naturally, it ends in a beast's paw, what with saber-like claws,

Elsa: "Kyhaaaaah!"

The thick claws gouge into the woman's face, splaying blood everywhere and making her recoil. His five fingers as they drive into her head prompt the same pain and injury as knives. Evens she has to put her hands to her face, backpedalling, shrieking while looking to the ceiling.

Garfiel: "Rhm!!"

He plunges a kick into a torso, shunting her back.

The force battering her chest carries more than enough strength to further destroy her shattered bones and ruptured innards, churning them into a greater mess.

The fallen woman drops her weapon, spitting up pure scarlet as she gives a faltering laugh.

It's horrible to listen to, and he's more than ready to swoop in and make it stop, but,

Garfiel: "Fuckin'! Just one after another!"

Just as Garfiel moves to pursue her, witchbeasts flood into the gap in his assault.

Rats with black wings, possums bloated in proportion to their anger, Spotted Rex assembled here from throughout the mansion, and a restored giant—the Boulderswine all rush in.

His claws rip apart the swarm of rats, one stomp of his foot eliminates the swollen possums, his kicks snap the necks of the Rex snapping at him, all as Garfiel faces the charging Boulderswine head-on.

Meili: “Get squished!”

Garfiel: “Y’think I’m gonna be toleratin’ that, y’dumbass!”

Tons of weight come charging with explosive force.

Rather than a blow from an animal, this cannonball is equivalent to a building dropping on him.

Not even Garfiel could take a direct blow from this and get out safely. He’d be unable to offer even a second of resistance, get blasted away and trampled flat. However,

Garfiel: “‘S what makes it fun—!”

Bracing his legs, Garfiel unleashes his Earthsoul Blessing to its utmost limit.

He feels the blessings of the earth pulsing up from underfoot, rippling through his flesh.

A warfaring glint lights Garfiel’s golden eye, fangs bared as he smiles wickedly, detonating the blood lying dormant inside him.

Garfiel: “—σσσσση!!”

This strangled bellow is not addressed to the outside, but a call to his own interior.

Flowing through his body, difficult to accept as it is, definitely not something he acquired by choice: his bloodline. He calls to his usually-hidden pedigree, feeling goosebumps as his soul trembles.

Just like his left arm that tore the woman’s face apart, Garfiel’s right arm swells explosively. Starting at his arms, his shoulders, his torso, his neck, his head all crunch as his skeleton changes shape, his face morphing from that of a human to that of a ferocious feline—a massive tiger.

Following the enlargement of his torso, his hips, his legs, his clothing fails to endure the pressure and bursts apart. Scraps of cloth hang off his frame, the two shields on his arms barely managing to stay equipped as small bucklers—here is a beast that, by physique alone, can compare with the oncoming Boulderswine.

Garfiel: “—℈!”

The floor creaks, caving in beneath him.

Even this solidly-constructed mansion cannot endure the confrontation of these two massive beasts. So giant that the hallway cannot contain him, Garfiel shatters the walls, ornaments crashing to the ground as his back scrapes across the ceiling.

Meili: “—Wugpig!!”

The girl atop the witchbeast shrieks in response to Garfiel’s transformation.

She must be screaming the name of the witchbeast. Answering to its master’s call, the Boulderswine gives a roar so strong as to disintegrate boulders and opens wide its maw with all its flat teeth, racing for Garfiel.

The witchbeast rears up on its back legs, raising its forelegs to stomp Garfiel flat.

The massive tiger, its golden eyes flaring, lets its own legs propel it into the opening before the behemoth’s crushing blow hits and stabs its claws into the Swine’s thick, stony hide.

Blades screech against bedrock as the tiger’s claws are peeled out of their sockets. Knifes fail to puncture the thick hide, and the Swine’s plummeting forelegs proceed to slam straight into the tiger. The stomp presses down on the tiger, a crushing pressure on its shoulders. The force pins Garfiel’s upper body to the ground, the merciless impact prompting the tiger to shriek.

Meili: “Don’t stop, Wugpig!!”

Bones shatter and flesh squelches, but the noises do not deter the witchbeast’s master.

Hearing her wailing voice, the Swine roars and raises its forelegs up, ready to stomp once again and crush the tiger’s head.

However,

Garfiel: “—϶!”

If his claws won’t work, the tiger has only one weapon left.

Twisting its neck, the tiger with its crushed shoulders uses its spine to upright itself. The Swine’s forelegs are raised and its belly is exposed—the tiger bares fangs.

Not even a witchbeast with skin as solid as rock can have its entire body at the exact same toughness. Compared to its legs or back, its vital regions are going to be less heavily guarded. And so, the tiger drives its sharp fangs into the Swine’s bared stomach.

Meili: “Boulderpork?!”

Garfiel: “—ℓℓℓℓ§!!”

The tiger’s jaws, so immense that they could swallow a man whole, close around almost half of the Swine’s extensive belly.

For a moment, the Swine’s hide does attempt to resist the piercing fangs. But like the points of knives stabbing into a fruit, the sharp fangs instantaneously and effortlessly tear through the thin skin.

The Swine’s shriek comes as the tiger kicks at the floor, using the momentum to roll sideways. With his fangs still sunken into his prey, attempting to shred the creature apart—it’s the hunting behavior of riverside-dwelling water dragons.

Were Natsuki Subaru here to witness it, he would deem it as being something close to the death roll of an alligator, a creature that does not exist in this world.

His hindlegs strike the floor, buying rotational and forward force as he mangles the Swine's torso. Inside the thick hide rest a vast store of blood and guts, which spill relentlessly out from the bitewounds and onto the mansion hallway floor.

Pork: "—ζ."

Eyes wide, the Boulderswine gives a weak death wail as it collapses.

The tiger spits out chunks of the Swine's flesh before slamming its rear leg into the massive creature, toppling it onto its side. The girl, having dismounted the witchbeast at the moment of the crash, is utterly lost for words as she watches her witchbeast's gruesome death.

Meili: "No, way…I don't believe it…"

Stepping back, the girl glances behind her to see what troops she has left.

Many witchbeasts have heeded her call are steadily assembling here. But they are only a mob of small- and medium-sized creatures, none of them large like the Boulderswine.

Meili: "Ugh! What is this?! Elsa! Elsa! Dooo somethinnngg!"

Elsa: "…That is a rather, unsparing demand."

Realizing that she is at a disadvantage, the girl slings senseless insults while calling her partner's name. Reply does come, from a shadowy woman who crawls out of the darkness. Her mangled face has regenerated. She fiddles tirelessly with her bloodied braid.

Elsa: "Gouging a woman's face open without hesitation, you are indeed fantastic, you are."

Garfiel: "—σσ℈! σσ℈! σσ℈!"

The woman laughs with a bloodsoaked grimace. The tiger, shoulders broken, growls in agitation. Its massive form quakes, before it butts its massive head against the fallen Swine, and pukes. The tiger moans in pain before its great body begins losing mass, bit by bit, and its enlarged form starts returning to human shape. After a few seconds there now stands a half-naked boy, batting away shredded strands of golden fur.

Garfiel: “Auh…fuck, m’back. Head hurts…”

Elsa: “I see…so you are half-beast. I did think your eyes looked rather nasty for a human.”

Garfiel: “‘F we’re gonna be followin’ yer logic, that means our Captain ain’t human either.”

Garfiel shakes his head, getting a grip on the sensation of his own human body.

Over the course of returning to human form, his broken shoulders have mended enough that they can both move. But in saying that, they still do flare with pain every time he moves them, and make his thoughts burn a soldering white.

He can’t stay in top performance for much longer.

But the same should be going for his opponent.

Garfiel: “Went n’ busted open yer witchbeast’s guts fer ya. Yer allowed t’go happily swimmin’ n’ that ocean ‘v blood there, I ain’t gonna mind.”

Elsa: “I’ll have to decline. Animal guts serve as no substitute unless I’m extraordinarily starving. The beauty of guts is that they are disembowelled from people.”

Garfiel: “Yer aesthetics make no sense t’me.”

Garfiel sticks his pinky into his ear and picks rigorously while giving an astonished sigh.

Elsa is overwhelmingly disadvantaged, but her attitude isn’t budging.

—Garfiel estimates that it will take five more tries at most until Elsa’s immortality ends.

And Garfiel has already showered four lethal blows on her. Five if you include the mauling of her face. This should be about time that she starts hitting the limit for her regeneration.

Meaning that Elsa’s stock of lives is already exhausted. Garfiel is injured as well, but that isn’t going to make him slack in this fight.

Being that no support is possibly coming from Meili’s beasts, they effectively have their blades at the other’s throat—so why is she being so composed?

Elsa: “It’s not that there’s any special reason for it. You don’t have to be so scared.”

Seeing Garfiel’s brows furrow in puzzlement, Elsa speaks as if comforting a child.

Garfiel scrunches up his face in response, growling like an animal.

To obfuscate the fact that she has clearly seen the slight confusion in his heart.

Garfiel: “Fuck off. Stop talkin’ like yer know anythin’.”

Elsa: “But it’s plain to see. Disembowelling someone means facing someone before they are disembowelled. Your face is a familiar one to me.”

Garfiel: “…”

Elsa: “It’s the face of being unable to comprehend a deviant.”

Garfiel falls speechless, his throat feeling to clench. Elsa puts her hand to her mouth and laughs.

She smiles slightly as she tilts her head.

Elsa: “Don’t worry, it’s fine. I’m not wishing to be understood by anybody. My happiness is something I acquire by spurning the life of another. To live is to spurn death.”

Garfiel: “…’M gettin’ that ‘f I take this seriously, ‘m gonna go nuts.”

Garfiel raises his arms, battering his shields together as he rejects any attempt at understanding her. He doesn’t have the leeway to be thinking about her circumstances. And her last statement has just eliminated any reason he had to pay attention out of whimsy.

Garfiel: “But I will ask yer this . …’F yer pledge that you ain’t ever gonna do nothin’ bad again n’ run away, ‘s not impossible that I’ll let you go.”

Elsa: “You truly are a precious boy.”

She shows her final mercy, then dispels it with a smile—the signal, to charge.

Blasting off, Garfiel soars ahead. Elsa counters him by swinging her white blade up to hit the ceiling, hit the floor, revolving and rebounding as it closes in on Garfiel.

Elsa’s wide white blade is a stringing-together of multiple knives. The blade-edge alternates from one side to the other, the knife rippling like a snake’s bones as it ricochets through the hallway.

Up? Down? The knife easily outspeeds the eye, soaring about as a white light. Garfiel braces his shields over his head and abandons the option of evading. The knife plunges down into his upper left arm, imparting him with the pain of broken bones as he resumes his advance.

Elsa: “I was born in Gusteco of the north, where it is very, very cold.”

Split-second combat is unfolding in this battleground, but for some reason her lilting voice sneaks into Garfiel’s ears.

It isn’t even audible. His attention is pyroclastic, focused amidst instantaneous trade of deadly attacks. There is no opening for this voice to butt in.

Is what it should be, but the woman's voice slips smoothly into Garfiel's consciousness.

Elsa: "The divide in wealth was fierce, and it wasn't uncommon at all for lower-class children to be abandoned. I was one of those children, with no parents I ever knew, drinking dirty water to survive."

Garfiel: "—Rghhhh!!"

Elsa: "I spent my days stealing objects, threatening people, doing things in that vein, with the people around me constantly changing. Why am I alive? What is happiness? …Not questions I had any time to consider back then."

His fist plunges forward, inches from belting Elsa's face.

But she leans aside to dodge the overblown attack, slicing her black blade up to cut shallowly through Garfiel's torso.

The bestial fangs pilfer his flesh. Elsa licks her lips as the bright blood bathes her.

Elsa: "It was frigid that day."

Garfiel: "Shut up! I ain't goddamn listenin'!!"

Elsa: "The wind blustering from the lofty mountains was so strong, so cold, that it froze the town that day. My breath could freeze in that chill, when the shopkeeper I stole from caught me."

With a hot sigh, Elsa speaks on, enraptured.

Her blades of death compound in momentum, slicing cut after cut into Garfiel as he fails to keep up.

Elsa: "No one would complain if he killed me, but seeing as I was a girl…I can still remember his face as he smiled, and moved to strip my clothes."

Garfiel: “Gh, auh…”

Elsa: “The bitter wind howled as he stripped my overwear, snatched my underwear…and when I contemplated that before he could do anything to me, the cold might just kill me first, I happened to pick up a shard of glass.”

Her leg sweeps up to try and belt him in the side of the head, but Garfiel counters it with a headbutt.

The impact reverberates through his brain and makes him recoil, but surely shattered Elsa’s foot too.

Elsa draws her leg back, retreats. But her expression remains one of ecstacy.

Elsa: “I wasn’t thinking about anything. I just had the shard of glass, then when he leaned forward I pressed it into his stomach, moved it, and sliced him open.”

Garfiel: “…”

Elsa: “I felt nothing for his screams, or the fact that I had taken a life. But amidst that icy gale, I did think.”

Garfiel’s breathing freezes. Elsa smiles.

Elsa: “How warm, blood and guts are.”

Elsa’s blade swings up, threatening to split apart Garfiel’s skull. He glides aside, kicks off the wall to manoeuvre behind Elsa, slams a kick into her back—but she instantly twists around and strikes his shin with her pommel, diverting the kick.

His leg crashes into the wall, which crumbles alongside plumes of dust. Garfiel clicks his tongue as he leaps back and away.

Elsa: “If there is happiness in the world, then it is in the warmth and beauty of forgetting the cold. From birth I had nothing, and now I had this: the first definite happiness I ever found. —You can’t understand, can you?”

Garfiel: “Ain’t wantin’ to, either.”

Elsa: “That’s fine. I don’t want sympathy.”

Garfiel: “Then why’d y’tell me th’damn story, ‘s fuckin’ gross.”

Elsa: “Why, I wonder?”

Garfiel’s eyes house hostility as Elsa tilts her head, mystified.

And she narrows her eyes saucily, licks her lips salaciously,

Elsa: “Because I find you truly darling.”

Garfiel: “…Sorry, but I already got a girl I like. Ain’t got time t’be datin’ a crazy bitch.”

Elsa: “So cold. But it’s fine. I’m only concerned about your innards.”

It feels like a conversation is happening, but fundamentally no conversation is.

Over all his exchanges with her thus far, Garfiel has finally come to understand this.

He has no interest or sympathy or anything for Elsa’s life story.

That was her foundation, she had those experiences, and she became this monster. That’s all.

Garfiel’s shields already know who they ought to protect.

Garfiel: “—You’re dead, Elsa Granhiert.”

Elsa: “Once I kill you, I will adore you, Garfiel Tinzel.”

Each calling the name of the other, the half-beast and the murderer wage violence.

The beaming light of the white knife slices through the corridor’s darkness, and the black knife pistons forward cleave Garfiel in two.

A knife ricochets everywhere in the corner of his vision. He cannot defend against the attack, nor does he have the option of evading it. But if he fails to take the blow and dampens his charge, he'll merely be repeating the same foolish mistake.

Garfiel: "…"

The knife slices through sound, dancing throughout the hallway.

If he cannot perceive the blade's point, he can only aim for the point it was thrown from.

Garfiel thrusts out his left arm, the fasteners on his shield loosened —and lets the thing fly.

He had loosened the bindings when he battered the shields together. Now he is tossing it, and Elsa's eyes shoot wide open as it smashes directly into her left hand—something crunches, and her broken fingers drop her white knife.

Having lost the hand manipulating it, the knife stabs into the ceiling, where it falls still.

A deep, dark smile, and a surging roar. A deathly blade murders the air as it swings down—Garfiel charging straight into it—and strikes him.

He sets his right arm upon his head to receive the direct hit from the black blade.

The shockwave pierces through his shield, rocks his skull. His eyes spin and he comes close to stumbling forward, but just manages to stomp firm and catch himself. He did it—when the woman's knee shoots up and smashes Garfiel's nose.

Elsa: "You mustn't be careless and think you're safe."

She says with a laugh, sweeping her leg up at Garfiel as he recoils.

Her leg hangs poised high, and from her shoe comes the glint of a blade in the heel—with his point aimed to stab Garfiel through the neck—

Garfiel: “Yer the one who better not be overlookin’ my amazin’ weapon.”

His open jaws swallow her heel and the blade whole, gnashing at her slender foot.

With her bones and the knife chewed up to the heel, Elsa’s eyes shoot open wide.

Elsa: “Goodness.”

Yelping in surprise, Elsa staggers away but loses her balance and tumbles to sit on the spot. Her right leg is mangled from the ankle down, inoperable, and the force of her own attacks has broken her arms as well. With her left leg as her support, Elsa gazes at Garfiel —

Elsa: “—Ahh.”

Taking in a breath, Elsa blushes like a girl in love.

Her exhale carries enough heat to be chromatic. Her wet eyes abound in hot passion.

Karlasar

—Before Elsa, Garfiel shoulders the immense Boulderswine, and throws it.

Although aware that she will be crushed beneath its incredible mass, it is not until the silhouette swallows her that Elsa's gaze strays from Garfiel.

With her breathing ragged, gazing at the grimacing blond boy with love—Elsa: "I feel thrills."

The overwhelming weight crushes the murderer, the vampire, the Bowel Hunter, until nothing remains untouched.

Her flesh squelches. Fresh blood mingles with fluids from the witchbeast.

Scenting the stench of death, Garfiel howls.

Roaring, bellowing, booming like thunder through the burning mansion.

—The Shield of Sanctuary Garfiel Tinzel, and the Bowel Hunter Elsa Granhiert, have concluded their battle.

Chapter 129:
—Choose Me

1

—When she thinks back on that instant, the terror assaults her even now.

How her clinging fingers were cast aside, and her name was affectionately spoken.

The love in their goodbye. The determination and tears in their smiling eyes. Both carried far more than enough weight to silence her.

What should she have said? She still doesn't know.

What had she been thinking? She can no longer remember.

What ought she have done? She still fails to see any answer.

—And so Beatrice remains, even now, cowering motionless in the Forbidden Archive.

Beatrice: "…Ryuzu."

The sound out her lips is a fragment from a memory so ancient, even just the word sounds wistful. When she speaks that name, emotions bursting, the frozen time inside Beatrice—the four-hundred year void—instantly comes surging to the surface.

Beatrice secluded herself inside the Archive, waiting for THEY's eventual arrival, only after Ryuzu Meyer had been lost as her existence became impetus for the establishment of the Sanctuary, and the Warlock Hector had been repelled.

Beatrice had lost someone so close to her that they could safely be called her only companion.

Anyone could see how haggard Beatrice was, having lost that friend owing to her own inability.

And everyone knew that only time would mend her injured heart.

So her Mother's conclusion was simple.

Echidna: "I suspect that warlock will return to destroy me someday. I plan to set up means to oppose him before that happens…but even that might be fallible."

Beatrice: "Yes, Mother."

Echidna: "If we engage in confrontation again, it will develop into truly heated, absolute combat. Considering the enemy's strength, my chances of surviving are about fifty-fifty…or maybe a little lower? Since Roswaal's unfortunately lost his gate, and can't assist in battle."

Echidna lowers her gaze, but Beatrice's unaffected demeanour remained stable.

It's not that she's suppressing anything. Ever since that day, her emotions have almost entirely stopped showing on her face. Who could suppose the effect that the overwhelming loss, the emotional aftershock, had had on her?

It could be that her emotions froze exactly because her heart knows that effect.

Echidna looks at Beatrice and her unchanged expression, running her finger through her white hair.

Echidna: "I'm already one of the witches least suited to combat. Once I know I can't enlist aid from Roswaal, genius in sorcery, it's after expending all possible means that I finally begin seeing hopes of victory."

Beatrice: "…What should Betty do, I suppose?"

Everyone knows that Roswaal was half- killed in the battle to establish the Sanctuary's functions. His gate was utterly decimated, making him ineligible as a magician.

The sight of her comrade lying in bed, still moribund in this very moment, arises in Beatrice's mind.

Sounding somewhat desperate, she assaults Echidna with questions.

Beatrice: "Should I do the same as Roswaal, and buy time until your algorithms are complete? Or should I sacrifice myself, conglomerate of powerful od that I am, and become the nucleus for the algorithm, I suppose? I won't regret it for an instant when it's for your sake, in fact. …Please, use me however you'd like, I suppose."

Beatrice grasps her skirt and curtseys, displaying the greatest of trust to her mother.

Honestly, the emotion is far too brittle and fleeting to be called TRUST. But Beatrice is unable to comprehend her own present mental state, and even supposing that she did understand herself, she would have likely reached the same solution.

Reckless lust for vengeance, and indignation at her powerlessness—the question of whether or not she recognizes these two feelings of hers constitutes the only single difference.

Echidna: "—I see. Once you've told me that, even I can ask for favors without any reproach. You truly are a good girl, Beatrice."

Beatrice: "…Yes. Betty's your daughter, in fact."

Hearing such words from Echidna would usually overjoy Beatrice.

Perhaps Echidna was aware of that, for she was careful give Beatrice verbal praise only infrequently. But now those magic words sink into Beatrice's empty chest with a hideously hollow thunk.

Perhaps nothing will rekindle the fire in her heart.

Is what Beatrice thinks, and so she fails to immediately react to Echidna's next words.

Echidna: “Beatrice. I’m entrusting you to oversee my archive of knowledge. Until the time that must come does come, you’ll protect the knowledge as the Archive’s keeper. —So that nobody can steal it.”

Beatrice: “…Wha.”

Echidna: “Fortunately, you have unparalleled affinity for Yin magic. You’ll use Gate Crossing to link a familiar location to an isolated space. …Yes, we’ll call it the Forbidden Archive. There, I want you to guard over the extent of my knowledge, compiled into books.”

Beatrice’s eyes shoot open in shocked turmoil as Echidna keeps speaking, leaving her behind. Beatrice had expected Echidna to order her to accompany her in this battle of life and death. Cast into an utterly unanticipated role, Beatrice can only glance about in bewilderment.

Even though witnessing her daughter’s discomposure, Echidna continues without missing a beat.

Echidna: “It’d be best to link the Forbidden Archive to Roswaal’s mansion. I’ll dismantle my laboratory, and prepare for the final battle. I’m sorry, but I can’t expend any people to carry the books. I’d like you to ask Roswaal about preparing the bookcases and securing labor.”

Beatrice: “W-Wait…”

Echidna: “It won’t last forever. Both you and I are already liberated from the fetters of predestined lifespan. The cycling of the seasons isn’t especially meaningful for us. But in saying that, once you consider that I may be lost, it’s irresponsible for it to lack deadline. Which means…”

Beatrice: “Please wait, I suppose!”

After a deep breath, she shouts.

Beatrice cannot comprehend what her mother is saying.

Or no. Her instincts are screaming at her, telling her not to comprehend it. Echidna's thoughts are vast, always easily excelling what the ordinary man could possibly understand. Meaning that Echidna's statements represent the optimum, and Beatrice had never thought to interrupt her before.

But now is not like that. Nothing like that.

If Beatrice lets Echidna speak her whole screed, she will surely regret it.

If Echidna states the whole of her opinion, what she'll present is the absolute optimum solution with no purchase for debate. The world will follow a course affirming Echidna's stance, and Beatrice will be unable to defy it.

To defend against that, Beatrice must interrupt before Echidna can finish.

Beatrice: "Mother…what are you saying, in fact? I-I, don't understand what you mean with this Forbidden Archive, I suppose. Betty is! Staying with you!"

Echidna: "Having you with me won't influence the confrontation with the warlock much at all, unfortunately. Naturally, it would surely increase my chances, but…only by a pittance. It would fall under statistical error."

Beatrice: "B-But if it's better than me being absent, then Betty will help you, in fact! It'd be—"

Echidna: "You can't. The risk that we'll both be destroyed outweighs a tiny, potentially non-existent boost to my prospects of winning. Considering that there is a less than fifty-percent chance that I will survive this battle, I have to endeavour to ensure my knowledge survives to the hereafter."

And ensuring her knowledge survives to the hereafter means upkeep of this Forbidden Archive that she's trying to entrust to Beatrice.

In this moment, Beatrice curses her Gate Crossing and her ability to create unique spaces. If she didn't have these powers, her mother would never desire that she take this ro—

Beatrice: “Don’t…tell me…my powers were for this?”

Echidna: “…”

Beatrice: “You knew from the beginning that this would happen… supposing so, then it isn’t just about this Forbidden Archive, wh-what happened in the Sanctuary was also…”

Echidna: “Having ways to anticipate things doesn’t necessarily mean using them. I did have means to both perceive this route, and settle matters without travelling it. But I swear on my way of life that I have not utilized that power. That alone I want you to believe.”

Echidna shakes her head in response to Beatrice’s strangled question.

Echidna approaches Beatrice, who is chewing at her lip, before taking a book from the bookshelf and presenting it to her daughter.

Beatrice: “This, is…?”

Echidna: “An imperfect replica of my BOOK OF WISDOM. The Book of Wisdom’s algorithms are both advanced and moreso complicated, so I didn’t manage to fully unravel them all…but it should be enough to work as a simple guide for the owner’s future.”

Beatrice accepts the book, tracing her shaking fingers over the cover.

She raises her head to look at Echidna, who stares at Beatrice with the same faraway gaze she always has. As though she’s looking somewhere into the distance.

Echidna: “There are two books. One goes to you, and the other has been given to Roswaal. I expect Roswaal will manage what comes next provided he reads the book. I know it’s a one-sided request, but I want you to see it through.”

Beatrice: “…”

Beatrice looks down at the book, her eyes wavering as she finally realizes that she is far too late. I have to make her speak, I have to make her say it. Were her ideas, but they were not nearly sufficient.

Echidna, her mother, had already settled on all of her answers.

Beatrice could cry, pleading and clinging, but it would not change Echidna's stance.

Because that's the kind of person the Witch of Greed Echidna is, and the kind of witch she is.

Echidna: "We'll return to the topic of cutoffs. I might not return, but the archive must be opened to someone someday. Once that happens, it'll be clear to you. Someone suitable to inherit my knowledge will surely come for you."

Beatrice: "Come, for me…"

Echidna: "We'll call this person THEY. The cut-off is when THEY open the doors to the Forbidden Archive, and announce that your duties are over. —This is my final request."

Final request.

The phrase makes Beatrice swallow her breath, and look up at Echidna's face as she gazes back at Beatrice.

Her mother's constant, unchanging expression.

But Beatrice feels that, in just this single instant, it comes mixed with unfamiliar emotion.

Echidna: "Betty. —Please, be well."

2

After parting with Echidna, Beatrice obeyed her mother's request and went to stay in Roswaal's mansion, using her Yin magic to create the Forbidden Archive and stockpile books of her mother's knowledge there.

It's the sea of knowledge that Echidna had spent her life amassing and cataloguing. When holed up in this room of books, it feels like her mother is embracing her.

Leaving aside the question of whether or not Beatrice used to perceive it that way, she did obey Echidna's instructions.

If she neglected to immerse herself in her duties, the bereavement tormenting her heart would exceed what she could bear. She passed her days in the Archive, oblivious to time, with the loss always plaguing her.

???: "Replicating souls…overwriting into vessels…"

Beatrice could not accurately determine just when it started feeling hollow.

But once enough time passed that she no longer remembered when she last held a real conversation, an adult Roswaal began venturing into the Forbidden Archive.

Roswaal: "I'll be iiiiiiiiiiiiintruding once again today." The skinny, unshaven young man limped into the room.

He used a cane and walked with a lumbering gait—the battle with the warlock had destroyed his body, and his gate had lost the majority of its functions. Even attending to daily life was an arduous task for Roswaal now.

Even so, after he recovered some amount of strength, he strained his inconvenient body and displayed his debilitated condition as he faced the bookshelves.

He was just skin and bones. His looks, known for their beauty, shone with no brilliance. His sunken yellow eyes alone blazed wet with insane ferocity.

Beatrice: "—Do whatever you want, in fact."

Though really, Beatrice didn't want to let anyone at all enter the Forbidden Archive.

Until the THEY that Echidna mentioned came, this place was meant to be Beatrice's Sanctuary, never to touched by anyone's eyes.

But Roswaal was an exception. He alone was devoting himself to Echidna's wishes, as Beatrice was, a companion who she had spent more than a little time with.

Roswaal's wishes alone would permit Beatrice's heart to open the Archive.

It may have been Beatrice's faint sense of camaraderie that determined the fate of Roswaal L.

Mathers, and his family.

Roswaal ventured to the Archive, sank into the sea of Echidna's knowledge, and staked his entire lifetime upon a search for something.

Beatrice did not know if his efforts ever wound up bearing fruit.

But the Roswaal L. Mathers who had studied with Beatrice under Echidna, ten years after Echidna and Beatrice parted—when bordering on thirty years of age—lost his life, and his descendant inherited the mansion.

Roswaal: "Myyyyyyyyyy goodness, it is a pleasure to meet you, Lady Beatrice. My predecessor had told me about you."

Beatrice: "…Roswaal's dead, I suppose?"

Roswaal: "The previous Roswaal has passed away. But do be at ease. I, the current Roswaal L. Mathers, have inherited the debts toward your duties and your mother."

The second Roswaal gave Beatrice a smile.

—With one of his eyes yellow, and one of his eyes blue.

3

Nothing especially noteworthy happened after that.

The Mathers family continued to introduce themselves as Roswaal down the generations.

Though aware that they did this to remember their respect for Beatrice's deceased mother, Echidna, Beatrice did not allow the Roswaals unlimited entry to the Forbidden Archive.

Naturally. The only Roswaal to whom Beatrice could give special treatment was the first one. All the other Roswaals were imposters.

She did accommodate them somewhat, given that they were providing the mansion needed to preserve the Forbidden Archive, but nothing further.

From then on, Beatrice would only ever open the Archive to THEY.

This awaited THEY, and the guidepost her mother had given her, forced Beatrice into solitude for a very, very long time.

???: "Your power is magnificent. Please, grant it to me as my spirit." —Shut up. Get lost.

???: "You've been isolated here for so long. It's a horrendous fate. It doesn't matter who ordered you to do this, it's unforgivable."

—What would you know? About the precious duty my mother desired of me.

???: "You don't think knowledge ought to be free? Can you imagine how many lives would be saved if the knowledge stored here was spread? You must already recognize it yourself."

—It has nothing to do with 'how many'. I'm only looking to save a handful of people. And there's nobody I can save any more, except one.

Four hundred years.

Beatrice wasn't seeking them out, hadn't permitted them in, but even so many people visited the Forbidden Archive.

They each flung whatever words they'd fling at Beatrice, keeper of the Archive, before inevitably demanding that the Archive be opened.

Their proposals, propositions, and demands did sometimes sway Beatrice's heart.

She wondered countless times after the doors burst open, and she noticed the daylight spilling in from outside, whether this may finally be the arrival of THEY.

But, heedless to Beatrice's expectations, not a single one of them knew about THEY, and Beatrice's book mentioned nothing indicating that they were THEY either.

So Beatrice cast away the words, the hands, everything they offered her, rejected them, and kept her mother's words close as she passed the time until today.

Over the years, resignation and disappointment steadily overtook Beatrice's heart.

She wished that she had spoken with the first Roswaal more.

Ever since she lost the only person who could share her memories of Echidna, Beatrice had to face this concept called 'eras' all by herself.

She had nobody to rely on. Her only option was to be stubborn, and seclude herself inside an impregnable, isolated barricade.

Over four hundred years, her cage consequently took shape. Was it a prison locked from the outside, or from the inside? —Not even Beatrice could tell any more.

Puck: "Hey there, Betty. It's really been forever. It's me, Puck."

This inconceivable reunion was perhaps the only event that even minutely thawed Beatrice's frozen heart.

Beatrice: "B-Bubby? How come, you're here…?"

Puck: "This mansion's Roswaal went and swindled my daughter. So here I am with her. I wasn't expecting you to be here. I'm glad we got to see each other."

The name of this cat spirit, bashfully washing his face with his paw, is Puck.

Like Beatrice, he is a man-made spirit created by Echidna. He is the only entity who shares Beatrice's birth and circumstances, applicable as being her race.

The time that Beatrice and Puck spent together four hundred years ago was short, but felt long. Puck was created before Beatrice, and separated from Beatrice's group before the battle with the warlock had begun, wandering the world in accordance with his purpose.

Beatrice never thought that they would meet again, and practically considered him dead. She keenly felt how the centuries-long reunion made her heart surge. But, her joy only lasted an instant—.

Puck: "After I left you, I spent about three centuries wandering the world before I finally found Lia. I'm not sure what you're waiting for, but I know your wishes will come true."

Beatrice: "Yes, yes I suppose. But I envy you, in fact. The role Mother gave Betty has…"

Puck: "Mother? Who was she, again?"

Beatrice: "…"

Beatrice remembers how Puck looked, not joking in the least, his head tilted in mystification. When Puck left, he and Echidna formed several Contracts. Beatrice didn't know the detailed terms of them, but Puck's forgetting of Echidna is obviously part of it.

Beatrice: "…No, nevermind it, in fact. I'm glad I got to see you again, I suppose."

Puck: "Mhm, it's great, Betty."

Puck, having fulfilled his purpose and meaning in life, looked dazzling to Beatrice. But she knew that the topic she wanted to broach would only serve to impede his path.

So she kept quiet, smiling sadly as she wished her brother well with his future.

The unexpected reunion gave Beatrice slight joy, but moreso agony as her dead four hundred years pressed down on her heart.

Comparing herself to Puck, who fulfilled his role, Beatrice was dumbstruck at the overwhelming disparity in their performance.

And she thought:

Beatrice: "…I'm no longer able to ever laugh like you, Bubby."

Beatrice decided to get as little involved with Puck's beloved half-elf daughter as possible.

If she didn't, Beatrice would wind up taking out her pent-up resentment on the girl. She would do such wrong to her beloved brother's blameless, precious daughter that the situation would never be fixed.

Calling her heart to a stop and suppressing her emotions was her forte.

She had spent four centuries constantly doing it through the sunrise, after the sunset, submerged in the moonlight.

Her speciality. A familiar deed. Lucid resignation. That kind of thing.

That kind of life—which suddenly met an intruder.

Subaru: "M-Make it painless ok."

Beatrice: "It's incredible that you're so persistent in your frivolity, in fact."

It had truly been forever since someone had entered the Forbidden Archive without permission. While looking down at the boy, fallen on the floor from the mana drain, Beatrice sighs and strokes her hair.

Using her space-connecting powers to send the boy into a labyrinth had been an act of simple revenge.

Revenge for having to help in healing the boy when he came in wounded yesterday. Revenge for having to grant the request of the half-elf girl he saved.

Her plan had been to alleviate some of her sourness about the affair by pestering the boy.

Then he defeated Gate Crossing on his first attempt.

He must not have noticed how shaken Beatrice had secretly been.

Beatrice: “Not someone I want to have anything more to do with, I suppose.”

Said Beatrice after expelling him from the Archive.

Not even Beatrice could determine how he reached the Archive in one attempt. Perhaps his affinity was for yin magic, and he just happened to be on Beatrice’s wavelength that day. But even if he did have yin affinity, he lacked any affinity as a magician.

He’ll only be staying for a few days. With that thought, Beatrice managed to ignore the uncomfortable strain in her chest.

Puck: “Betty. Were you mean to him? Come on, don’t do that. He helped Lia, so you better give him a real apology.”

Puck showed up in the Archive the next morning to scold Beatrice for her actions, and now she had to confront the boy she had just decided she’d stop having anything to do with.

Subaru: “She shows up, and what the hell does this loli start saying?”

Beatrice: “What I suppose is that word. I’ve never heard it before, and it still disgusts me, in fact.”

Subaru: “It means ‘too young to go down their route’. Sides I’m not really into younger girls.”

Beatrice: “…Your extensive discourtesy to Betty loops around to be pitiable.”

Tit for tat.

She hadn’t intended to apologize anyway, but this conversation completely eliminated any urge.

Beatrice passed breakfast in silence, saw Puck’s rather resigned expression, and breathed a sigh of relief. Seems like he’d forgiven her.

In exchange, it wound up that the boy would be sojourning in the mansion for the long-term.

Beatrice’s desire to seriously start cursing the situation intensified, and she decided to excuse herself and return to the Archive. The mansion came with complex circumstances and history anyway, and right now was a state of emergency, too.

This gutless boy would give up before long.

All Beatrice had to do was endure until that happened.

Subaru: “Hey, Beatrice. Done with work so here I am to hang out.”

Completely oblivious to Beatrice’s thoughts, the boy came parading into the Archive while looking like a nitwit, annoying Beatrice even though she hadn’t asked for any of this, and just kept doing it whenever he found time to spare.

Beatrice could only sit there, stunned at his impudence.

There had been others qualified to enter the Archive without Beatrice’s permission. But they had all been seeking the Archive’s knowledge, or seeking the powerful spirit Beatrice.

The second they opened they mouths, it’d be requests to liberate the knowledge. Or requests to Contract with Beatrice. Always.

Subaru: “Beatrice. —Mind if I pull your drills and make them sproing everywhere?”

Beatrice: “Are you trying to die, I suppose?”

Just when it looks like he’s going to say something serious, it’s the same crap as usual.

He had been somewhat desiccate in his first few days after waking up gaining employment in the mansion, but after that, his overly-familiar attitude was off the charts.

…Is what Beatrice thought, when suddenly:

Subaru: “I’m stuck with no way out. Completely upfront, I’m looking for your help.” —He noticed the first signs of the Witchbeast Affair in the forest surrounding the mansion.

With his body bathed in a witchbeast’s curse, discussing de-cursing and potential origins of the curse with Beatrice, she felt that there was something different about him compared to before. And she simultaneously noticed:

The yin power she perceived from him, and its somewhat crooked manner of peaking.

The witchbeast affair ended without being any of Beatrice’s concern, he apparently resolved his differences with the maid sisters, and was welcomed in as a true member of the mansion.

He then went around being his jolly self, pestering her with an attitude even more over-familiar than before, and there was that one delicious episode among others about his mystery condiment called mayonnaise, all while Beatrice began meditating on an impossible fantasy.

—A boy who showed no great interest in the knowledge, or in Beatrice’s power.

Could he be the one who Beatrice had been waiting for?

The suspicion was baseless, continuous, and exhausted her. But when she tried to deem it as a legitimate theory, she stymied herself by opening her blank book of prophecy.

Being that the prophetic text said nothing, this boy could not be Beatrice's awaited THEY.

And he was lacking in too many ways to be Beatrice's awaited one anyway.

First, his eyes were nasty. His attitude too. He hadn't any cultured refinement, and short legs. He regarded something else as more important than Beatrice, and was not gentle with her.

In fact she couldn't find anything good about him. It addled the mind as to what the half-elf girl and blue-haired maid found so appealing.

There wasn't anything good about him, so why couldn't he just be uniformly disliked and alone? If he was, then when he showed up in the Archive, she wouldn't hesitate to change the way she interacted with him a little.

Is what she sometimes thought, and yet.

Roswaal: "Beatrice. I'm thinking to invite Lady Emilia and Subaru to the Sanctuary." Said Roswaal to Beatrice after returning from the Capital.

A variety of questions whizzed through Beatrice's mind, her eyes wide. But Roswaal silenced Beatrice's queries with a single action.

He stroked the cover of the prophetic book in his hands.

Roswaal: "…Do you understand? Beatrice."

Beatrice: "I-I, do understand, in fact. …Do whatever you wish, I suppose."

Beatrice could say nothing else.

After Roswaal turned his back to her, and she learned that he was leaving for the Sanctuary in advance, Beatrice decided that she would hole up in the Forbidden Archive and go without seeing anyone.

The writ of Roswaal's gospel was demanding contact with the Sanctuary.

Beatrice did start having hopes for her own gospel after hearing that. But her prophecy book contained endless pages of pure solid white as always, abandoning her heart in a wasteland.

Beatrice knew what came of Ryuzu Meyer's sacrifice.

She also knew that the place had gone unfreed for four centuries. And that people diverged from demi-human races were held inside there, awaiting liberation.

And that it was a barrier the half-elf girl needed to overcome if she was aspiring for the throne. —But what would happen to Ryuzu Meyer's sacrifice if the place was freed? To Beatrice's feelings of powerless about being unable to save Ryuzu Meyer?

To her overwhelming sense of loss, that triggered her parting with Echidna?

Her emotions had nowhere to go. Sensing that the supposedly-frozen things had begun to pulse again, Beatrice knew that the end to her fate was truly coming.

Beatrice did not know the details of what happened outside the mansion.

The boy returned from the Capital with a memento of someone dear from Beatrice's memories. Seeing it, and feeling that the world had left her behind once again, Beatrice saw the boy's group off as they left for the Sanctuary.

And, thinking that what they would bring back from the Sanctuary would be her answer, gave up.

4

Beatrice: “And so Betty has decided, in fact…!”

Before they could bring back her answer, Beatrice sensed deadly violence whipping through the mansion.

Once she realized what was causing it, Beatrice understood that fate had truly deserted her.

Beatrice: “I won’t break my promise to Mother. …But it is meaningless to spend any more time in this emptiness, I suppose!”

THEY would never come. But she could not stop waiting.

Meaning that Beatrice needed someone to steal the option of ‘WAIT’ from her.

If that meant losing her life, then she’d offer it without any hesitation.

If there was someone, anyone, who she felt she could entrust this duty to even somewhat, then she could believe that her final wish would be granted.

So when the boy—Natsuki Subaru—burst into the Forbidden Archive this night, Beatrice’s heart was moved with more emotion than can be expressed.

It felt like fate, which had never once attempted to give Beatrice’s mind solace, had finally rewarded her.

If his hands would take her life and make her defy the promise, then even that would be—

Subaru: “I’m taking you out of here, Beatrice. —I’m dragging you out into the sunshine, where we’ll play until your dress is caked utterly brown with mud.”

—And he said this.

Beatrice: “Unwanted meddling, I suppose. Nobody asked for you to do that, in fact.”

She didn’t understand. What on earth was he saying?

He had never, not even once, behaved anything like THEY before. He had never snatched her gospel away and told her, “Sorry for the wait.”

Subaru: “Stop getting thrown around by a blank book and a four-hundred-year-old promise. —Be the one who chooses what you want to do, Beatrice.”

Beatrice: “…”

—So then why was he, after all this time, disrupting Beatrice’s heart after she had already steeled her resolve?

I’m meeting my end, had been the only thought in her head.

She saw the boy upon his return, and hoped: I will end by his hands.

But he was trying to show her a future that diverged from her hopes.

This wasn’t what she desired.

Her heart that could desire this hope had, over four hundred years of time, long ago withered to nothing.

Beatrice: “I-If, you…were THEY…”

…Is what it was supposed to be, but while listening to the boy’s indignant speech, something changed in Beatrice’s heart.

Her slumbering emotions shook like flowers taking bloom after winter. She raised her head.

There would be no taking this statement back, once she said it.

She was dispelling her four-hundred year obsession with her mother’s binding words, and now clinging to something entirely unrelated and new.

And though she understood that, from her mouth, the decisive words—

Beatrice: “Will…you be Betty’s THEY?”

Subaru: “Are you stupid? —Of course I wouldn’t be this weird mysterious THEY of yours.”

The instant he spoke it, his expression somewhat mocking, Beatrice’s newly-budded hopes were betrayed.

She doesn’t really remember what happened afterwards, as she surrendered herself to anger and expelled him from the room.

But she did know that she had said something she couldn’t take back, and before it could develop into something that couldn’t be taken back, was snuffed out.

Beatrice: “…”

What an utter clown she was.

This meant that she had done nothing more than betray her mother’s instructions. And her betrayal had been barred from procuring results, degrading Beatrice’s pledge into something horrendously cheap.

Beatrice: “I’m exhausted, I suppose…”

Then all she has to do is let things proceed as she had originally intended.

It had been a mistake to consider taking his hand in the first place. That had not been the owner of a heart so valiant that they could soil their hands for the sake of another.

That had been someone like Beatrice, constantly fretting about trivial things, indecisive and unsure, constantly piling excuses upon excuses, the owner of a weak heart.

And so the Death to end Beatrice would come in a different—

Subaru: “Finally back! Hey, stupid. Stop throwing people out halfway through conversations. Now just listen to me and—”

Beatrice: “—!”

Subaru: “Plot?!”

Butting in to Beatrice’s contemplations, the boy bursts back into the Forbidden Archive.

The instant she sees the boy, edging on speaking something more, Beatrice’s emotions seethe and she blasts him away with a pulse of magic.

She watches him fail to endure it and shoot out of the Archive until the doors slam shut.

Their conversation had disintegrated, capped off with his decisive comment, and still. Just how shameless was he?

Beatrice cannot comprehend how he could leave her with that statement, and then show up so brazenly.

She puts her hand to her chest to deal with her irritation, gives a sigh, and—

Subaru: “How about cutting this out! Is this you throwing a tantrum?! If you’re gonna resort to violence first thing, the conversation’s not going any—”

Beatrice: “You cut it out, in fact!”

Subaru: “Dua!”

The higher grade of magical pulse impacts his head, proceeding down to batter his torso.

Once she confirms that the screaming, tumbling boy strikes the wall outside the door, the Archive once again severs its connection to the hallway.

She can’t believe his persistence.

Is he ignorant to the concept of ‘giving up’? Or does he not realize how deeply his thoughtless words had wounded Beatrice’s heart?

Whichever it was, the boy is continuously rejecting Gate Crossing's goodbye.

Beatrice: "…This is truly no joke, I suppose."

With that irritated mutter, Beatrice drags the stepladder over from the back of the room, and takes her usual position opposite the door. She cradles her book of prophecy in her arms as she glares at the portal.

—The boy would be belting that door open once again.

With his selfish logic and inconsiderate sales pitch, he would come.

Times upon times upon times, she would reject him and cast him away.

Because he was not THEY.

Because he himself had forfeited his right to take Beatrice out of here.

And so Beatrice would never, ever leave here.

She merely has to end here, alongside her unfulfilled promise.

Because that was the only thing that would now grant Beatrice solace.

5

Blasted out of the room, Subaru crashes head-first into a wall for his breathing to halt.

This is his sixth time being thrown out of the Archive after his first failure in persuading Beatrice. He feels that all these repeated blasts in such a short timeframe have made him better at catching himself when dealing with invisible attacks.

But Beatrice's magic pulses are beginning to feel out how intense they can go without seriously damaging Subaru, meaning he absolutely mustn't slack.

Subaru: “This isn’t the time to be polishing your stupid magic, fuck! She’s not listening…”

Wiping away his sweat with his sleeve, Subaru demands that his knees get him to his feet.

He’s been running constantly since yesterday, had blood shed and broken bones mended, meaning he’s physically exhausted. The utter fatigue makes his vision hazy, and the only thing keeping him moving is willpower.

Subaru: “The fire’s gonna be spreading for real around now…”

Subaru stoops himself low and turns his head this way and that, clicking his tongue, for fatigue alone does not explain his poor vision.

The fire that killed the massive witchbeast is steadily engulfing the whole mansion.

The lower floor of the main block is nigh completely drowned in flame, and he can see plumes of smoke wafting from the eastern and western wings too.

The spreading fire has driven most of the witchbeasts out of the mansion, so there are no monsters to block Subaru’s path as he sprints about. But the temperature inside the building is heating up like an oven and his sweat is evaporating swiftly, his singed flesh bordering on charring at any moment. The building will start collapsing before long, and Subaru’s fate will drown to nothing in the fire.

Before that can happen, he needs to fulfil his goal and flee here with Beatrice.

But Beatrice’s heart remains stubbornly closed.

Subaru: “It does help that the mansion fire’s cutting down the number of doors, but…” That’s really the only conceivable benefit of the blaze.

Gate Crossing only operates on the mansion’s functional doors. So open doors or burned doors do not apply.

The further the fire spreads, the fewer doors will potentially lead to the Archive.

Subaru: “That said, the fire’s gonna cook me before the doors are cut down.”

And he doesn’t want to think about what would happen if all the mansion’s doors burn away. Subaru doesn’t know specifically how Beatrice’s Gate Crossing links spaces to one another. Potentially, the incineration of the mansion may sequester Beatrice’s Forbidden Archive, turning it into a permanently isolated hyperspace.

There is one place Subaru can think of that Gate Crossing might connect to outside of the mansion, the laboratory with Ryuzu Meyer’s sleeping crystal, but—

Subaru: “Would she link the mansion to there in her current mental state…?”

Beatrice’s Gate Crossing has sent Subaru to the Sanctuary once before.

Subaru has speculated on why this irregular event occurred.

Beatrice had emotionally detonated and forcibly expelled Subaru from the Forbidden Archive. Her intentions strayed as she focused intensely on a ‘farewell’—and her Gate Crossing consequently sent Subaru to the laboratory, is his idea.

That location is a symbol of sad and painful farewell for Beatrice. So perhaps that’s why Subaru was sent to the Sanctuary back then.

Making it inconceivable that Beatrice’s Gate Crossing would link to the laboratory now.

Beatrice is not focusing on ‘farewell’, she is focusing on ‘end’.

If she loses her connection to the world, the mansion, Beatrice will reach her end.

It feels to Subaru that Beatrice's ultimate decision will be to do that.

Subaru: "I'm not letting you ever be ended like that!"

Taking a deep breath, Subaru breaks into a run while keeping low to the ground.

He leaves the previous door open and searches for the next door, batting away smoke as he proceeds deeper into the mansion.

He hears the constant crackling of the building's structure burning in the inferno.

His skin is scorched and the boiling air threatens to sear his eyes. He endures both with a grimace.

The smoke slipping into his nose brings him near to choking, when he discovers a yet-unopened door and pounces for the doorknob.

The blazing doorknob emits heat, and sears Subaru's hand. Already his palms are atrocious with many ugly burns. He is quite used to gritting his teeth in agony.

With a stabbing pain piercing through his temples, he kicks the door open.

Subaru: "…"

He tumbles into the room with its cloying stench of ancient books.

He opens his mouth wide and takes a deep breath, having fallen face-up, and he glares at the dim ceiling above.

A familiar atmosphere, and rage prickling at his skin—definitely the Forbidden Archive.

Beatrice: "You again, simply incorrigible…!"

Subaru: "Hauhh! Of, course I'm back! I'm coming here however many times it takes to kidnap you. If you don't like it then let me drag you out of here right now! Then that'll be the end of these exchanges!"

Beatrice: “Enough of your useless chatter, I suppose! I know that the mansion is burning, in fact! If you don’t flee outside immediately, you will simply burn to death in the fire, I suppose!”

Subaru jerks himself up, his breathing ragged as he glares at Beatrice.

She remains seated on the stepladder, her round eyes as sharp as they can get as she bares her rage at Subaru.

For an instant, slight emotion dashes along the edge of those eyes, and Beatrice’s lips tremble.

Beatrice: “Or…do you mean to burn dead with the mansion and Betty?”

Subaru: “Are you stupid! After everything I’ve said, you still don’t get it?! I’m not thinking at all to die with you! I’m here to drag you out without you dying!”

Beatrice: “—! Domineering without fail, I suppose! Leave!”

Subaru stands up, pouncing for a bookcase to bide through the first magic pulse.

He feels the gale battering him, and then a second pulse that utterly drains him of energy. He glances up to find Beatrice with her left hand raised toward the ceiling, her face twisted in anguish as she forces herself to smile.

Beatrice: “I pilfered your mana, in fact. You must remember this sensation, I suppose.”

Subaru: “You, little…”

Beatrice: “Should your grip on the bookshelf slacken, that is the end, in fact. Stop involving yourself with me, I suppose!”

The moment his knees start to give out, the third pulse of magic strikes Subaru from head-on. An invisible wall of force crashes into him. Unable to support himself, Subaru is again pushed toward the door, proceeding to tumble and fly out the—

Subaru: “Nnngh!”

—Reaching his limbs out as far as he can, Subaru manages to catch himself on the door.

Pain runs through his limbs, and experience tells him that his arms are fractured and may be broken.

He grits his teeth and forces himself to ignore it.

Beatrice: “Wh—”

Subaru: “Go through it so many times, and even I can learn how to get through. So want to defer to my efforts and start getting in the mood to talk?”

Beatrice: “You’ve lost your chance to speak with Betty, in fact. By your own actions, you are the one who squandered it, I suppose. … Why do you not understand that, in fact?!”

Subaru: “I don’t get it, no. Since aren’t you actually guilty for this as well?”

His hand against the door, Subaru gets to his feet and wipes away the blood dripping from his open lip.

He watches how Beatrice’s brows furrow in utter confusion, and slips a wry smile.

Beatrice: “What’s so funny, I suppose?”

Subaru: “I just confirmed that my consecutive assault isn’t fruitless. If you’re seriously rejecting me, stop with the finicky crap and just blast me away. You have the power for it. It’d be so much quicker to just do that.”

Beatrice: “…You are telling me to kill you.”

Subaru: “Not that you can. That was me being a jerk. Sorry. But if you’re seriously rejecting me, then there should be easier ways for you to do it.”

Beatrice, bordering on tears, has refused to kill Subaru before.

Subaru has not advanced to a stage where he can understand what her sentiment or reasoning was back then. So all he has is speculation. Assembled from what fragments of her past Subaru knows. He had his suspicions, and still asked that question, astounding himself with how mean-spirited he truly is.

But if he doesn't ask it, Beatrice won't realize.

Realize the contradiction between her thoughts and actions, and the fact of Subaru's presence here.

Subaru: "If you seriously don't want to see me, then seclude yourself in the Archive, Beatrice."

Beatrice: "What…are you…Betty has not taken a single step out of the Forbidden Archive, in fact. But you are forcing yourself in of your own accord, and…!"

Subaru: "Nope, that's incorrect. If you were serious about holing up in here alone, there's no goddamn way I'd reach the place so many times in such a short timespan. Your rejection's just superficial."

Beatrice: "That! Is because…yes, is because you are enacting the method to cheat Gate Crossing, in fact. And the mansion is burning, reducing the number of doors…"

Stuck for words, Beatrice's rebuttal trails off to a weak end.

Subaru's statement has made her doubt herself. And even if not, Beatrice has lost the pillar that kept her standing through these four hundred years, and is currently unstable.

She can no longer tell if Subaru's words are right, or if her emotions are right.

Subaru: "…"

And honestly, Subaru doesn't know either.

He has no clue why he's managed to reach Beatrice's Forbidden

Archive so unfalteringly in this short timeframe.

It may be because the mansion's doors are burning away, leaving him with fewer options.

Or maybe the emergency situation is prompting his yin abilities to showcase absurd strength, and that's letting him defeat Gate Crossing.

It might be that Subaru is actually correct, that Beatrice is not truly rejecting him, and the doors of Gate Crossing are open to him.

Subaru wishes it for it to be the latter.

But the reality is insignificant. What Natsuki Subaru needs to do here, now, is secure any possibility of bringing Beatrice out.

Beatrice: "You…you! Are not Betty's THEY!"

Yells Beatrice, clutching at her skirt.

She gives up on thinking as she appeals to Subaru, howling.

Beatrice: "You said you weren't, in fact! You…you said you weren't, I suppose. If you were THEY…even if you said it as a lie, Betty would have believed you. Even knowing it was a lie, all I could've done was believe you, in fact."

Subaru: "Beatrice…"

Beatrice: "But you said you weren't, I suppose. Said you weren't, said I was stupid, in fact. Why yes, I suppose. You're correct, in fact. Betty is stupid, a stupid imbecile, who even now cannot disregard a promise from four centuries ago…and so! Nothing you say will change that it is over, I suppose!"

Choosing rejection, an invisible wind whips around the shouting Beatrice.

The torrent of magic gusts at her dress, at her long hair, filling the Archive with a tense and turbulent air. Subaru senses that this is the greatest gale yet, his body shuddering in terror at the coming strike.

His cowering heart wants to him to retreat, to flee outside the door.

He manages to suppress the urge, bites deeper into his lip, and raises his head.

To tell what must be told.

Subaru: “I…”

Beatrice: “…”

Subaru: “I’m not your THEY. I’ll say it however many times. Your awaited prince isn’t coming on his white steed. Not to the end, not ever!”

Beatrice: “—! Then! Betty shall simply rot here, in fact!”

Subaru: “Not happening. I’m not letting you choose that. I saying however many times it takes for you to change your mind. THEY isn’t coming. You can’t keep your promise. —But you won’t be allowed to die.”

Beatrice: “I just…hate you so much, I suppose!!”

With that, Beatrice’s emotions explode.

The torrent of magic changes form as it adheres to a single goal, a white light dominating everything in Subaru’s vision.

He doesn’t even have time to feel the gust of wind.

The shockwave pounds Subaru through his front and out his back, scrambling all the innards he has. His blood flows backwards through him as everything inside him is wrung out his pores, the pain agonizing.

His eyes spin, he loses his sense of balance, undergoes overwhelming vertigo, loses all perception of sound and smell and light. This might be what humans call dying.

—But, Natsuki Subaru knows.

Subaru: "—What are you doing?"

Withstanding a nausea so intense his organs could spill out his mouth, Subaru forces himself to speak so that his weakness is imperceptible.

The world exists underfoot, and the moment he recognizes that fact, he steadily regains his perception. He has his limbs, has his head, his organs aren't spilling out his mouth, his soul hasn't shed its vessel.

So what. Same thing as usual, just a near-death experience.

Natsuki Subaru is learned enough to know: this is not Death.

Beatrice: "You are, joking, in fact…"

His vision sways, blurry and unstable.

Regaining enough focus to somehow recognize that he is inside the Archive, he gazes at the girl in front of him, her arms spread wide as though witnessing something unbelievable.

It's Beatrice.

Not even she can comprehend his failure to die, and the preservation of his fundamental shape.

But there's no mystery about it. Subaru knew it would turn out like this.

It is inconceivable that Beatrice would let herself kill Subaru.

Subaru: "Beatrice…"

Beatrice: "…"

His consciousness is hazy. But willpower allows him to anchor his near-forfeited mind.

The girl before him is wavering. She cannot comprehend her own self, unable to fully reject him, as she looks at a ragged Subaru in terror.

Suspecting that his voice will reach her in this instant, he scrambles to assemble his waning consciousness, and speaks.

Subaru: “I’m, not…your, THEY…”

Beatrice says nothing.

Subaru: “But.”

The repeated and repeated rejections put Beatrice on the verge of tears.

The conversation would usually end here. Before it can—before Beatrice’s emotions can swell to their limit—Subaru speaks.

Subaru: “I…want to be with you, Beatrice.”

Beatrice: “—!”

Subaru: “You’re kind, and so you won’t be sad, I want to be by your side.”

Beatrice: “Auh…ghh…”

Beatrice’s expression twists.

It’s as though she’s suppressing fury, as though she’s suppressing tears, as though she’s struggling to keep some utterly undocumented emotion from showing on her face.

But she swallows her words, sighs a ragged sigh, and picks up the book on the stepladder. She flips through the pages, wrests through the pages, her fingers scrunching the paper, then gives quiet whine.

When,

Subaru: “—Wh, at?”

Before Beatrice can take any action, Subaru’s vision warps.

It has nothing to do with his hazy consciousness or deficient blood.

It’s a question of reality.

The Forbidden Archive is beginning to bend in front of Subaru.

The ground around him warps, the bookshelves losing their balance as they topple down one after another. Books fall messily to the floor, instantly drowning the ground in a sea of tomes.

Even still, the world continues to bend.

The ground beneath Subaru’s feet twists too, undulating like a bellows, preventing him from maintaining his balance.

Subaru: “What…what’s…?!”

Beatrice: “…”

While clinging desperately to the door, Subaru looks at Beatrice.

He finds that in this rippling room, Beatrice’s surroundings alone are untouched. The stepladder she sits on moves not an inch, supporting Beatrice’s weight as she looks at Subaru.

Subaru: “—auh.”

Before Subaru can say anything, the ground beneath him tilts.

The floor under Subaru fissures open with a noise like the ripping of paper. A black space expands from beneath the floor-tiles, unmistakably about to send him somewhere by methods other than Gate Crossing.

She might even be imprisoning him in some non-existent, hyper-dimensional space.

Subaru: “—Shit.”

It happens the moment he notices the hole and takes a step back.

The world slants in earnest, sending Subaru falling backwards in deference to gravity. The door’s gaping mouth swallows him, sending him back to the blazing mansion through Gate Crossing.

Subaru: “Hhot!”

The heat of the wall he crashes into makes him wail.

He raises his head, to find that he has been ejected into a hallway fully engulfed in inferno. The only thing he manages to recognize is the fact that he’s in the main wing.

The flames singe him utterly as he looks at the door he just exited, and, noticing that the door’s lower half is already swallowed in flames, is stunned.

It’s a miracle that Gate Crossing even worked. He doesn’t think for a second that jumping at that door will bring him back to the Archive.

Subaru: “Fuck, ing…if, this is the main wing…”

Then he might be able to find a functional door upstairs.

Vaguely recognizing from the number of doors that this is not the uppermost floor, Subaru decides to head for the stairway, engulfed in flames as it is.

The smoke stings his eyes, tears welling over. His lungs burn with every breath, though he manages to keep the smog from snatching his consciousness by holding his jersey to his mouth.

Every minute counts. Like fuck he’s actually going to reach the Archive—No. This isn’t the time for whining.

He cannot forget Beatrice’s expression at the end.

Subaru: “Stupid idiot, making that fucking face again…”

The numbness in his limbs from Beatrice’s magic pulse leaves his body.

He drags his body along, the thing more or less obeying his will, whittling at his soul as he runs for the end of the corridor.

Beatrice’s expression flickers through his mind.

It’s the same face he saw in a previous loop.

When he and Beatrice faced Elsa, and the supposedly-defeated woman took Beatrice’s life.

When Beatrice shoved him away to protect him, and had her stomach destroyed.

When she saw that Subaru was safe, and her body wordlessly turned to particles of light.

Subaru has not forgotten her final expression from back then.

It was not relief at having protected Subaru, nor joy at having procured her desired death, but a grimace.

—I don’t want to be alone. That kind of expression, obvious to anyone.

Subaru: “So like hell…like hell I’m gonna leave you on your own!” With that, he leaps into the fire as he searches for escape.

He feels something squirming and wrong inside him, but the heat from his singed flesh and the pain from his burnt skin prevent him from focusing on it.

Were Subaru an objective witness to this, he might unwittingly recoil from how repulsive it was. Subaru, running through the fire with his pledge to bring out Beatrice, is wreathed by an overwhelming mass of black miasma, embracing him almost like a protective vestment of shadow.

Oblivious to this, Subaru breaks through the wall of fire and reaches the stairway.

He gives a ragged exhale, looks at the staircase above, and recognizes that this is the second floor.

He proceeds to climb the staircase, thinking to dash straight for the uppermost floor—when.

Subaru: “…”

He hears the noise of something wet being dragged across the ground, and looks down.

The noise is coming from downstairs. His rationality tells him that this is impossible.

All he can hear around him is the crackling and booming of the burning building.

This is a mansion seconds from collapse, and that is the first floor of the main wing, where the inferno started. Nothing should be moving down there.

Subaru's sprinting all through the mansion means he knows this conflagration, which even the witchbeasts fled.

So this noise has to be a hallucination.

—But if it is, then what's that?

Subaru: "…No way."

While dragging something along with it, a silhouette emerges from the flames.

It is destined for the upstairs as it climbs the staircase as Subaru had, stopping at the landing between the first and second floor—and looks up as it notices Subaru's presence directly above it.

The silhouette is wearing black clothes, holds a black knife, has black hair, and is a woman.

Subaru: "Elsa…?"

Elsa?: "…"

The silhouette doesn't respond. But this definitely looks like the black-garbed woman Subaru knows.

Why is she here? Could Garfiel somehow have lost? If so, then Subaru's battle—Subaru's battle to save everything—has ended in defeat, and, Subaru: “No, I’m off…”

Just as he starts getting those ideas in his mind, Subaru shakes his head.

Subaru has to trust in Garfiel’s strength. Even supposing that his opponent was strong, Subaru was betting on Garfiel to win.

Otto and Frederica had done everything they could to assist in evacuating Petra and Rem.

Garfiel would have done his absolute best as well.

How would Natsuki Subaru have possibly gotten this far without believing in his companions?

Subaru: “Garfiel wouldn’t have lost. So, why’re you…”

Believing in Garfiel’s valiant fight, Subaru flings words at the silhouette below him. This woman shouldn’t be here. What is underlying her actions?

But just when he goes to question her, Subaru notices something.

Or no. He’s forced to notice.

Subaru: “—You’re not Elsa any more, are you?”

The dark eyes looking up at Subaru shine with not a speck of light.

The things are so hollow and empty that it’s unbelievable that those are eyeballs in those sockets.

The noise is coming from the crushed lower body of the silhouette, dragging along behind it. But the thing still acts like it’s alive, which Subaru finds incredibly repulsive.

Subaru did think she had life force enough that she wouldn’t die, but she’s still incapable of dying after all that destruction?

Subaru: “Though, this isn’t the time to be pitying her…!”

Even supposing she’s incapable of dying, Subaru has no words of sympathy.

Considering the fact that Elsa showed up before being half-dead, sympathy would be lenient treatment even despite her state. That said, Subaru doesn't make a hobby of tormenting walking corpses.

He rationalizes that she just needs to get caught in the mansion's collapse, and have the flames cremate her.

Subaru: "Get swallowed in inferno. I'm leaving to get Beatr—"

Shaking his head, Subaru disregards the silhouette and determines to head upstairs.

Subaru: "—Huh?"

With a slight noise, the silhouette leaps.

Its mouth gapes open as it aims for Subaru, swinging its wicked blade.

Subaru: "…"

The wind from the knife as it grazes past his nose makes Subaru's lungs forget to breathe and heart forget to beat.

The thing just tried to take Subaru's life, so natural that it may as well have been walking over to him.

But its strike just barely misses Subaru, instead shattering the floor before the tips of his toes.

The enemy hadn't been going on easy on him, its dead lower half had simply lacked the leg strength needed to pounce. If it had that leg strength, that attack would have killed Subaru.

Subaru: "You've gotta be kidding!"

He promptly kicks the silhouette as it pitches forward before ascending the staircase.

He dashes so intently that he forgets to breathe, glancing back at the shadow. The silhouette’s head sways from the kick and it jerks its limbs awkwardly to the ground like a marionette, then scuttling like a spider in pursuit of Subaru.

Subaru: “Are you joking?!”

He had called her a spider-woman before, but he didn’t think she actually was one.

Stunned at her inhuman locomotion, Subaru soars to the top of the stairway. He imagines the silhouette pursuing him as he dives into the inferno of the third floor hallway.

In the very middle of this hall is the office. That room, being the sturdiest in the mansion, should still be generally undestroyed—

???: “—σσσ!!”

Subaru: “Dhhah?!”

Intercepting Subaru as he leaps into the blaze, a lion-headed witchbeast roars.

Having lost its mane, and with over half of its body burned grotesquely, this is unmistakably the witchbeast that Subaru’s team supposedly killed in the dining room.

Apparently the near-dead beast returned to this door in adherence with its master’s orders.

Meaning that Subaru is presently a moth darting into a flame.

An unanticipated meeting amidst fire. The pun is working disgustingly well.6

The half-burnt witchbeast swings its foreleg what with those giant claws. The attack grinds away at the wall, closing in to strike Subaru’s neck, more than strong enough to mow Subaru down easier than a weed despite the beast’s moribund state.

Subaru: “You’re one-trick ponies!”

But Subaru dodges by ducking low and diving forward.

Subaru has learned from the other witchbeasts that they aim for their prey's vitals. Judging that the beast will definitely aim for the head, Subaru dives into a forward roll to slip past the beast's flank.

This beast, fully capable of devouring Subaru in one gulp, roars in rage as it attempts to readjust itself and face Subaru. But things will not come so easy.

Beast: "—σσσσ!!"

In pursuit of Subaru, the skittering silhouette bares its fangs at the half-dead witchbeast.

The beast, its back turned, is slow to react as the silhouette's flourished blade showers a slash down upon it. The beast's rear left leg is amputated at the joint, blood pouring from the crooked wound as the creature's shrieks echo through the corridor.

The beast whips its snakelike tail, striking for the silhouette that crawls across the ground.

The silhouette avoids it nightmarishly, manoeuvring beyond human capacity to bat the beast's tail away with its blade, stab its knife into the beast's open wound, and bore deep into the injury.

Subaru listens to the earsplitting screech resound as he heads for the office's door, certain not to let the opportunity escape.

He kicks the record room's door open on his way, but it fails to lead to the archive, instead leading only to time loss. The beast and silhouette are still fighting behind him, but being that the only howls he hears are from the beast, it's obvious how the scales are falling.

Subaru: "Beatrice!"

Having reached the office, Subaru prays to himself as he belts the door open.

If the Archive appears before him, he can say goodbye to the monster battle.

But what cruelly shows it self is only the sight of the dishevelled office.

Subaru: “Fuck…Then this wasn’t it!”

Practically illustrating the strength of Beatrice’s rejection, the office diverges from Subaru’s wishes. He can no longer search for other doors, or return to the lower floors of the burning mansion. If there are any potential doors left, they’d be—

Subaru: “The hidden passage…”

It’s difficult to call the hidden passage, which opens via a mechanism, a ‘door.’

The passage opens by way of a sliding bookcase, and it’s rather unlikely that passing through its entrance would lead him to the Forbidden Archive.

If there are any other doors left, they’d be deeper inside the passage.

Subaru: “There should be a door midway through the passage that opens to a small room…but…”

In a previous loop, Elsa ambushed him from beyond that door.

But he doesn’t know if that door falls within Gate Crossing’s area of effect. And above all, Subaru has to think that this is Beatrice’s doing, leading him from door to door to try and expel him from the mansion through the hidden passage.

She may be aware of the mansion’s current state, and be leading Subaru down a route that will give him survival.

In that case, the hidden passage may not even lead to the Forbidden Archive.

He may be led outside the mansion, to the mountain cabin at the end of the escape tunnel, and forever lose his chance to save

Beatrice.

Subaru: “—Not giving me any time to think!”

Subaru hears the beast’s death wail as the decisive blow is struck.

The witchbeast, which unwittingly put in a valiant fight to buy Subaru time, has most likely died for real to Elsa’s silhouette.

With a shake of his head, Subaru dives into the hidden passage.

A spiral staircase lengthy enough to reach the mansion’s underground welcomes him—and it seems that the inferno has reached even this tunnel, the heat and smoke precluding anyone from doing anything here.

Subaru puts his hand to his chest to cope with the aching, steeling his resolve as he speeds straight down the staircase. Descending right after ascending. The heat simmers him, and just imagining what color his skin must be makes for a terrifying thought.

After eventually reaching the end of the staircase, Subaru peers into the darkness of the passage, his breathing ragged.

It seems like the smoke had been leaking in from a gap in the stairway wall, for he sees no effects of heat or fire in the subterranean passage.

Instead of the threat of burning, Subaru has to deal with fumbling in pitch darkness.

He walks in deeper for another ten or so meters before reaching a somewhat wider space, finds the door to the small room he’s looking for, and stops.

Subaru: “Here…”

Subaru has never gone deeper into the hidden passage than this door. He doesn’t know if any other doors exist beyond this door.

Meaning that this is potentially Subaru’s last chance for a door to lead to Beatrice. And if this place functions as a proper hidden passage—

Subaru: “…”

Shaking his head to dispel his weakness of heart, Subaru reaches for the doorknob.

If Beatrice has lead Subaru here with intention for him to survive, then his chances here are poor. Subaru fearfully touches the doorknob—

Subaru: “Hhht! This door’s another…”

Crying in pain as his hand burns, Subaru grimaces and glares at the door.

The door’s response, as if it had reflected Subaru’s heart, makes a wave of disquiet surge up in him and—he notices it.

Subaru: “The doorknob’s, hot…?”

While the underground passage may be heated, there are no signs of fire.

The smoke and heat had likely been leaking in through a gap in the stonework that composes the staircase. If Subaru’s speculation is correct, then it’s inconceivable that this door would be so hot.

This door is hot enough that you have to wonder if it’s indeed been seared by flames.

Subaru: “…Beatrice. If you can hear this, please listen.”

Taking care not to touch the door, Subaru looks slightly upwards and mutters.

With belief that his voice will reach the absent girl.

Subaru: “Did you lead me here? If you did, knowing that the only escape route is through this hidden passage, then honestly I’m speechless at what a schemer you are.”

Beatrice's tactics to lead Subaru this far were indeed quite considerable.

The encounter with Elsa's shadow and the witchbeast surely had nothing to do with Beatrice, but she definitely led Subaru here move by move.

If he proceeds to open this door and reach the mountain cabin, Beatrice's plans will likely be fulfilled.

Subaru: "But apparently thing won't go so smoothly. …I could open this door, but I won't manage to escape how you want me to. This isn't me being stubborn and insisting that I don't want to run away, okay? I'm at least half in that mood, yes, but…it's something more serious."

Addressing someone who might not even be listening, Subaru smoothly strings word after word.

He taps his nails against the door blocking the way before him and gives a sigh.

Subaru: "If I open this door, I'm probably dead. You and the others might not notice this, but right now, that's how things are on the other side of this door. It's hard to explain verbally…but I understand the soul of science and I can tell."

Setting aside the failure in the dining room, Subaru's 21st-century knowledge is howling at him. This door Subaru is presently looking at is a door commonly found during fire-related emergencies, and must not be touched.

No joke at all, Subaru's life is in danger.

What comes next is a question of whether Beatrice is listening. And if she is, will she believe what he's saying?

Subaru: "Beatrice. I'm going to open the door. —I'm leaving how you judge my statements up to you."

Although aware that this thing before him is a threat to his life, Subaru's heart is rather calm.

It’s not that his nerves are steeled, or that he’s resolved himself.

It’s that he can calmly entrust his life to another.

I mean, after all.

Subaru: “—Beatrice, I trust you.”

With his hand burning in pain, Subaru flings open the door.

And—

6

Rather than climb down the spiral staircase, the shadow reaches the bottom via something closer to ‘plummeting’.

Shadow: “…”

The blood flowing from the shadow is clouded like muddy water, its visage as it drags its crushed legs along so ghastly it does not look a thing of this earth. With a wicked black blade in its right hand, and the dead witchbeast’s heart in its left, the shadow clenches its fist to crush the organ as it proceeds deeper down the passage.

The skulking shadow has a human’s shape, but not even it can determine whether or not it possesses human will.

Its body has been destroyed such that it cannot function, its life has been whittled such that it cannot revive, and it has already exhausted the absolute dregs of its vitality as a shadow.

If you asked how the silhouette could regardless be moving around like this, then the shadow would respond: because its personality before it was a shadow was just that intensely tenacious.

The shadow eventually, silently, reaches the deepest part of the passage.

The shadow lacks a will, and possess no goal other than to corner anything moving and take their lives. Sensing that its mark has gone through here, the shadow gives an easy flourish of its wicked blade.

Shadow: “…”

With a clunk, the door in front of the shadow splits apart.

The shadow kicks the door’s debris aside, and moves to peer into the darkness beyond, Shadow: “…”

A slight wind breezes by, making the shadow feel that they are being sucked into the darkness.

White smoke overflows from deep in the darkness, and a haze begins to form before the shadow.

And then—oxygen flows into the room where incomplete combustion occurred, mingling with the traces of the fire, instantly superheating and bursting out of the room.

Backdraft.

There’s no way that the shadow, a dimwitted thing moving only to destroy, could have anticipated the explosive phenomenon.

Shadow: “…”

The burst of flames engulfs the shadow, hellfire burning its body to nothing.

The shadow’s body had lost means to either restore or revive itself, waiting only to rot, when incinerating fires envelop it, exceeding carbonization as the blaze peaks instantly hotter—and burns it to nothing.

The fire’s momentum does not stop with merely the shadow as it proceeds to zoom through the underground passage, transforming the spiral staircase into a sea of searing heat, and gusts into the office to explode for even greater conflagration.

—The Roswaal Mansion now truly collapses as it meets its moment of demise.

Seeing how the Forbidden Archive has changed, Subaru swallows his breath.

Fissures run through the floor near the entryway, the hole to the hyper-dimensional space still alive and well. The fallen bookcases have no hopes of recovery, and in fact a portion of the room is up in flames.

The situation in the Roswaal Mansion has starting affecting the Forbidden Archive too.

Subaru: "…"

But, noticing the gaze fixed upon him, Subaru suppresses his shock and changes his gears.

For now, he shall focus everything on only one single girl.

—For this is surely his last chance.

Beatrice: "You're an idiot, in fact…"

Subaru: "That's seriously the first thing you say?"

Beatrice: "Well you are, I suppose. Betty put in so much effort so that you might escape, then you squander the opportunity, and come back, in fact. …The mansion no longer has any doors, I suppose. The Forbidden Archive has caught aflame too, in fact."

She's right.

The fire spreads to some of the fallen bookcases, turning the beloved books one by one into ash.

This entire place is flammable, and it's going to burn in a flash.

Subaru: "Which means this'll be the end both for me and for you."

Beatrice: " …Yes. It's the end, I suppose. There is not much that Betty desires any longer. The fire has spread to the knowledge destined for THEY, which utterly defies the promise, I suppose."

Subaru: "Does it. Then, I want you to listen to my final speech." Beatrice's empty eyes look at Subaru.

She says nothing to encourage or refuse him, but the reaction probably means that she's at least willing to listen. Subaru gives her a nod, and takes a small breath.

The words he hadn't managed to tell her before, at their previous parting.

Right now, he will tell her everything he wishes to tell, in full.

Subaru: "Beatrice. —Help me."

Beatrice: "…Huh?"

Assertion, spoken with chest held high.

Shock dashes through Beatrice's eyes in response to sooty-faced Subaru's declaration.

She had surely attempted to imagine what he would say.

While drawing near to her unavoidable end, Beatrice had definitely run many simulations of what words Subaru would accost her with.

I want to save you. I won't let you be alone. Perhaps those manly words, and the cool greeting she had expected from THEY, where what she had been waiting for.

But if Subaru is to communicate his true feelings, such statements are impossible for him.

Subaru: "So I've been considering how I'm saying this cool stuff like, 'I'm bringing you out of isolation', or 'I'm going to save you'. …Really, they're all I could come up with while riding off momentum to get through the situation. So I've been sincerely considering. What is it I think of you? What do I think of you, and what do I want to communicate to you?"

Subaru presents his sincere, unadorned thoughts to the wordless Beatrice.

While turning a blind eye to how cowardly and unfair it is that he's leaving the reception of all this up to her.

Subaru: "This whole me saving you thing's a joke, the truth of it is, you don't need my help at all. You're strong, you're smart, you're cute…you can do anything you put your mind to, and can get done anything you want done."

Beatrice: "…"

Subaru: "You are more than capable enough of living on your own. Of course. If you weren't then you wouldn'tve managed four hundred years. So not a word of this stuff about helping you or saving you resounded with you."

Beatrice: "…"

Subaru: "But even though you're strong and smart and can do so many things, it scared you to live on your own. It hurt you. It made you lonely. Nobody can fault you for clinging to THEY."

Beatrice: "After you rejected…Betty's feelings…what could you… possibly understand!" Biting her lip, Beatrice glares at Subaru with something like hatred.

But that wavering emotion fails to fully be hatred. Beatrice holds on to that fading fury, frantically trying to preserve it as Subaru shakes his head at her.

Subaru: "I do know. That you're kind. That when someone's having nightmares, you'll hold their hand to ease them. That when someone's in unworkable trouble, you'll offer your hand and open a path. That when someone you can't help hating loses someone close to them, you'll lament for them."

Beatrice: "Talking as if, you know anything…"

Subaru: "I'm powerless. I can't be any help to you. But if we're gonna say there's anything I can do, not wanting you to be alone, then it's only cling and beg."

Beatrice's eyes widen. Subaru presents his right hand.

It's raw with burn scars, disgusting to look at. But it's still better than his atrocious left hand after all the damage it took.

He wipes it, prepares it, makes it clean enough to suitably hold her hand.

Subaru: "Beatrice. Help me."

Beatrice: "…"

Subaru: "I won't be able to live with the loneliness without you. Help me."

To a third-party listener, it would sound an overwhelmingly pathetic and shameful form of coercion.

I can't live without you, so please take my hand, is his threat.

He cannot do anything for the other, so he is teaching the other that they can do something for him, and by that rationale, demanding that they live.

It's an excessively selfish, unreasonable, and hopeless means of coercion.

Beatrice: "Not, fair…it isn't fair, in fact."

Subaru says nothing.

Beatrice: "Using, those words…and, saying it so…after all this, you…when you're not THEY…when you rejected Betty, and yet…"

She is tongue-tied, lost for words, hesitant to speak, emotional, and anguished.

Her eyes remain set on the hand presented to her as she firmly embraces the book in her arms.

Tears spill from her eyes.

Beatrice: “I was alone for four hundred years! I spent all that time in isolation, so what could taking your hand now, possibly…you’ll just die anyway! Human lifespans pass like a blink of the eye to Betty…after all of this! How could I cling to this!”

Subaru: “It’s impossible for me to imagine your four hundred years. I can’t talk like I understand it, either. Four centuries, I haven’t even lived a twentieth of that. I know I can’t understand all of your fear for what’ll come after I die.”

Beatrice: “Then! Then…nothing you’ve said, presents any solution…!”

Subaru: “But, tomorrow, we can be holding hands.”

Beatrice: “…”

Subaru: “Tomorrow, and the day after, and the day after that too. It might not be four hundred years, but we can spend our days together. It might not last for eternity, but tomorrow, and in this present, I can treasure you.”

Beatrice: “—Hic.”

Subaru: “Beatrice. —Choose me.”

Subaru has already chosen.

Now he presents the choice to Beatrice. It all rests on her.

Will she stay loyal to her mother, and punctuate four centuries by being swallowed in flames? Will she disregard her promise to her mother, abandon her meeting with THEY, and take Natsuki Subaru’s hand?

Beatrice: “Y-You are, THEY is…”

Subaru: “Not me. Don’t equate me to some other guy you built up in your head. I’m me. Natsuki Subaru. Take all your unreciprocated feelings for this four-hundred-year asshole you’ve never even seen, and dump them.”

Beatrice: "…"

Subaru: "Rather than fear a goodbye that might someday come, live with me in a definite tomorrow. I'm weak, but I'm still aiming so high…if we're together, you'll be so busy fussing over me you'll stop having time to think about being bored or lonely."

Beatrice: "…nng."

Subaru: "Choose me, Beatrice."

He'll repeat it however many times it takes for the words to reach her.

Because he understands her wavering feelings, and her wavering heart.

So that the selfishness of Natsuki Subaru can shoulder the burden of her guilt for her indecision, and shame for breaking the promise.

So that this girl will never cry alone again.

Beatrice: "But you'll go away…"

Subaru: "It won't last forever. The future you're fearing will definitely come. The time when you're left behind, eternal as you are, will almost definitely come. But if you think only of fear for farewells, and throw away all the fun of being together, it takes far too much out of both of our lives."

Beatrice: "But you'll leave me…"

Subaru: "Let's be together. Let's live together. Let's go together. Let's pile memories upon memories, enough to blast away your fears of goodbye, enough that you can smile and say with your chest held high: I enjoyed it. Enough that you recover those four centuries you spent in solitude, and counterbalance them."

Beatrice: "Even if…that happened! I'll be alone, someday!"

He steps forward. Closes the distance.

The girl's wavering eyes reflect him.

He looks pathetic, he looks deplorable, he's a far cry from the prince she's been waiting for.

But right there is usual, mundane Natsuki Subaru.

Subaru: "You'll live forever, and the time you spend with me might only be a microsecond for you. So I'll carve it into your soul. My microsecond."

Beatrice: "…"

Subaru: "—That Natsuki Subaru was a man, who even through eternity, was too vivid to ever fade to sepia!"

The Forbidden Archive crumbles to the sound of shattering glass.

The area around Subaru and Beatrice is surrounded in spacial fissures and scorching flames.

But in this second, he feels not fear nor fire.

The only thing in Subaru is Beatrice.

And the only thing in Beatrice is Subaru.

Beatrice's shaking hands clutch the book received from her mother.

With belief that unhooking her fingers means mending her centuries of solitude, Subaru reaches out his hand.

And shouts.

Subaru: "Choose me! Beatrice!!"

Beatrice: "—Ah."

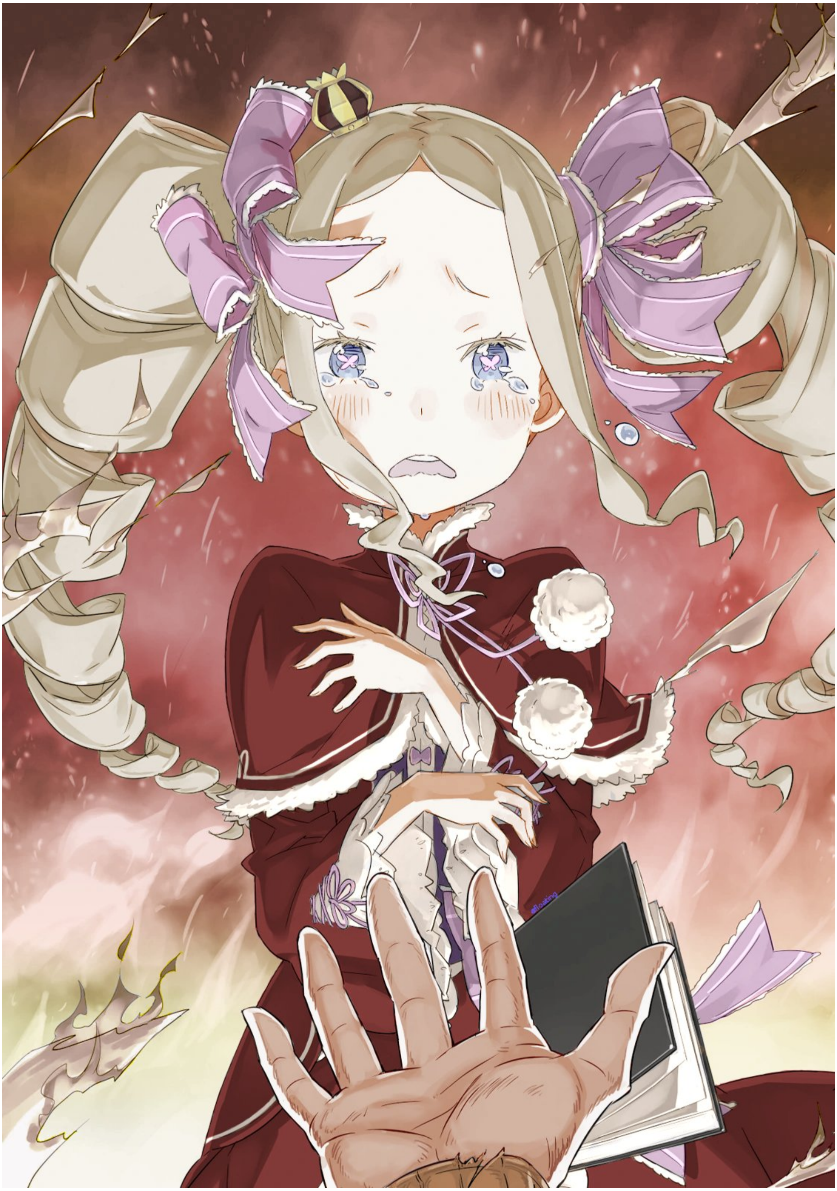
Subaru: "You want someone to take you outside! That's why you are always! Sitting opposite the goddamn door!!"

With the decisive boom, the world meets its end.

The Forbidden Archive, the girl’s isolated cage, is swallowed and disappears in rifts and fire.

But the instant before that happens.

—A single book thunks to the floor of the Forbidden Archive.



@floating

8

Having escaped through the hidden passage and reached the mountain cabin, Otto’s group watches the mansion burn from atop a hillock.

Otto, Petra, and Frederica. And Rem shouldered on Frederica’s back. The four of them succeeded in safely evacuating through the passage to the mountains.

The mountains, and particularly the area around the cabin, apparently have a barrier around them to repel witchbeasts. They see no signs of either wild witchbeasts or witchbeasts in ambush in their vicinity.

But not a single person here has the composure to rejoice about their survival.

All of them gaze at the mansion with something like a prayer, waiting for visible change to occur.

While trusting in the safety of Subaru and Garfiel, both still inside.

Otto: “…”

Putting the treatment of his wounds aside for later, Otto gazes at the mansion, regretting even to blink. Petra stands beside him, clutching her arms with a strength inconceivable by her youth.

She’s worried, so worried, so worried it’s unbearable. Everyone knows that the young girl feels great fondness for Subaru. Considering her grief, it’s impossible that Otto not pray for Subaru’s safety.

Otto: “…”

Otto gently places his hand atop her head to calm her.

He gives her a smile as she looks up at him in surprise, before returning his gaze to the mansion.

And he notices it.

Otto: “…There.”

In the middle of the burning mansion’s main wing.

A massive explosion of flame bursts from the office with the hidden passage that Otto’s group used. The windows shatter, overflowing inferno spreading everywhere in an instant, before the mansion loses its shape—and collapses.

Petra: “Auh…”

Otto hears Petra’s cry of grief.

And Otto, too, having witnessed the same reality and figured the same thing as Petra, withstands the urge to scream in denial. If he throws a fit here, it will be a disservice to the heart of the girl who most likely wants to cry even more than him.

But Otto’s thoughts are instantly invalidated.

Petra: “Mr. Otto, look!”

Otto: “Adagh?!”

Just when Otto borders on lowering his gaze, Petra’s little hand slaps him across the cheek.

The impact startles him, sending sparks across his vision and dizzying him. But he soon sees Petra’s look of elation as she points at the mansion, hurriedly looks over as well, and understands.

Otto: “Hah, hahaha…”

—A pillar of white light is extending from the destroyed mansion to the heavens.

The light twists like a rainbow, changing its angle high in the sky, shooting far to the east.

Practically announcing that its destination lies there.

Otto knows what rests in that direction.

So his cheeks relax as he watches Petra cheer in joy, and,

Otto: “Now it’s all up to you. —Truly, I am exhausted.”

9

Meanwhile, that same light that brought Otto relief is witnessed by Garfiel, half-naked and clad in only a cloth around his waist. He clicks his fangs.

Garfiel: “Ha! So y’did pull it off, Captain! Knew ya’d do it! ‘S a POSTHUMOUSLY TOO HOSHIN KEEPS HIS PROMISES!”

Having escaped the burning mansion and sprinted into the woods, Garfiel puts his hand to his hip and laughs like an idiot.

Lying on the ground beside Garfiel is a girl, her limbs bound in restraints made of the same cloth as Garfiel’s waistwrap—Meili, unconscious.

Spoils of war! Is not how he’s going to boast about it, but she’s a living witness who was involved in the attack, and there are many things they need to interrogate her about.

But above all, Garfiel’s principles would not allow him to kill the young girl.

Garfiel: “‘Said, th’shadow lady must’a been burnt t’a crisp.”

Garfiel gazes at the destroyed mansion, sighing.

He threw a witchbeast at her which crushed her—it’s an indirect method that left no feeling in his own hands, but Garfiel still did choose of his own volition to butcher a near-human life.

His fingers shake, and he can feel a wrenching pain in his stomach.

But Garfiel suppresses those feelings with a shake of his head, seating himself beside the sleeping Meili before leaning against a tree.

Garfiel: “F’now we’ll put off th’aftertaste’v winnin’ and th’feelin’ of killin’. Nothin’ my amazin’ self does now ‘s gonna accomplish anythin’. …Countin’ on you, Captain.”

Thrusting out his fist, Garfiel glares at the trail of white light, and:

Garfiel: “Once this’s all cleaned up, we got a guy we both gotta give a good smack ‘cross th’face!”

10

—She’s been caught.

She knew this would happen, and she still grasped for it.

Even though she’s known forever that, should she take this hand, should she cling to this warmth, she would never be able to return to her nights of isolation and solitude.

Even though she’d admonished herself about how insanely foolish it was to live while depending on an ephemeral warmth.

That voice, calling for her.

Those eyes, gazing at her.

Those hands, requiring her.

Even though she’d known how she could not possibly refuse.

—Subaru.

“Yes, that’s it.”

—Subaru, Subaru.

“Yes. That’s my name.”

—Subaru, Subaru, Subaru.

—Subaru!!

“And you finally called me by it.”

11

—The blizzard rages.

Blinding curtains of white unfurl, every puff of breath freezing the instant it touches the outside air of this gelid world.

The breeze bathing her is frigid, and the blizzard winds carry snow so sharp it nigh cuts the skin. But even amidst this ferocious storm, the girl with her silver hair fluttering holds strong willpower in her amethyst eyes, and faces forward.

“I’m never, never…going to let you take anyone!!”

A glow cases her arms as she stretches them out, and unleashes a massive volume of magical power. The blizzard amplifies the glacial magic that wreathes itself in pale light, which then slices through the world like an incandescent sword, one-by-one slashing apart the white witchbeasts passing overhead.

The unpleasant noise of their chittering fangs peals without end.

The embodiment of hunger—an ancient calamity beyond any salvation, specialized only to devour its prey, something with which no-one could coexist.

Faced with the multiplying malice of ‘hunger’ there stands, not retreating a single step, the silver-haired girl.

But her breathing is ragged, and she has lost some control over her gargantuan mana, with white crystal beginning to cover her lower body.

If this continues, she will soon transform herself into an ice statue.

But, even though she knows this, she cannot retreat.

“…”

The girl glances behind her.

There rests everything that she must protect from the witchbeast's slaughter.

A dilapidated ruin, and several lives who are placing their hopes upon her small shoulders.

And a man, having not entered the ruin, who dazedly observes the girl's battle, and a dead-still pink-haired girl in his arms.

Half her body feels frozen. But a fire blazes in her heart.

Who could possibly winge and whine after witnessing them?

For what purpose, and with whose confidence, is she standing here?

"I…I won't let you be the end to anybody! Everybody's hands were linked together…and I'm going to protect that! That is what I promised my Mother!"

A torrent of pale light crashes into the horde of approaching witchbeasts.

They cry no death wails, falling motionless amid the white gleam. They witness their companions' sad deaths, before instantly choosing to cannibalize them and chewing into ice.

It's terrible to watch.

But perhaps, potentially, that's what people look like too when they're clinging to hope.

Even so. Even so.

"So long as I haven't forgotten about Mother and Geuse, and about everybody today…and about what he wrote for me, I am never giving up."

Even if she does end up encased in ice, she will never regret it.

Cutting through the blizzard, the encroaching witchbeasts grow steadily and steadily nearer, closing in on the girl and those relying on her.

If she has to, she is resolved to give her life.

But just when the girl is tormented with that thought, she hears a voice.

“No need to push yourself so hard, Emilia-tan.”

“…”

She knows that someone has just landed beside her, having descended from high above.

She looks aside. The blizzard blusters too strong, and she cannot make out their face through the veil of white.

But she knows exactly who this is.

Their voice, their attitude, and above all, the fact that they would always come for her whenever she most wanted them.

“You can hold off and fall back. —The inaugural battle of deliverance is here.”

“I’m sorry. That kind of went over my head.”

It feels like they’re smiling.

The silhouette begins to walk, immediately followed by another, smaller silhouette.

She hears a second voice.

That sounds lively, as if the speaker’s been waiting for a very, very long time for this moment—

“What comes next is a complete unknown, in fact.”

“Yeah, we’ll be doing something about this. —Together, me and you!!”

Spirit Beatrice and Contractor Natsuki Subaru, two people who will from now on engage in battles upon battles while linked hand in hand, commence their inaugural fight here.

Chapter 124B:
You Reflected in the Mirror

1

While facing the witch who stares back at her from the mirror, Emilia sighs.

Composed solely of monochrome black and white, the Witch of Greed, Echidna.

Having discovered Echidna in this dreamworld reproduction of her room, Emilia keenly feels that this truly is a place constructed from her own head.

A peaceful, tranquil, kind world where her life in the forest continued forever.

A world where she could spend her days alongside Fortuna's, Geuse's, Arch's, and everybody's smiles.

Emilia: "But that world doesn't exist, does it…"

Echidna: "Utterly not. This is a false world constructed with your memories and wishes as the basis. However, the world-arranging algorithms that precede over the Trial transcend human knowledge. The people you see in this world are most exactly who they would have been, had there been just one flick of the switch."

Emilia has just remembered the truth the day of behind Elior Forest's freezing.

Had there been no casualties back then, and the forest's tranquility have been preserved, their lives would have been ones where everyone smiled.

The sight of Fortuna and Geuse, seated jovially at the dinner table, has seared itself into Emilia's mind.

It is exactly the scene that young Emilia had wished to see from the bottom of her heart, and equally was so for the present Emilia, with her memories restored.

Echidna: “Has witnessing the uncomeatable present made you want to submerse in this world?” As if peering into Emilia’s heart, Echidna assaults her with sweet temptation.

Emilia raises her head. Echidna gazes back, her eyes as cold as her voice. She strokes her snow-white hair, letting it flow over her shoulder and down her back.

Echidna: “Your mother, and that goodman. Does witnessing their happiness give you no desire for this to continue forever? I’m sure you’ve thought it pleasant and so dreamed of spending your days with everyone in the forest, and of your friends being so familiar with you.”

Emilia: “…What are you trying to say?”

Echidna: “Just some resentment, or something like it. That you’ve found me means that you’ve already reached your answer regarding this world. And I know that this answer of yours is to choose reality over dream, and exceedingly dull. If we’re going to be seeing results regardless, I may as well leave some faint indentations behind.”

Emilia: “…”

Echidna: “Rather than the happiness of your mother and your peers, you elect for a reality where they met unfortunate demise. The result of your Trial is: you are ultimately a wretched woman who prioritizes herself over others.”

Echidna’s fierce criticism lances through Emilia’s chest.

Her words are so cutting that Emilia feels pain, and though she has not actually been stabbed, she puts her hand to her chest and impulsively retreats a step. Emilia’s reaction makes Echidna snort.

Echidna: “So long as that’s given you some self-awareness. Anyway, the Trial doesn’t take the personality of its challengers into consideration. So long as they’re qualified, be they a hopeless moral bankrupt, or be they a conglomerate of egotistic narcissism, the Trial will accept them equally. Rest assured. You'll achieve your goals in short time."

Emilia: "It's sooo…sore a spot you're going for. Are you like this with everyone?"

Echidna: "Not at all."

Echidna shrugs in response to Emilia's strained statement.

Echidna: "Other than you, there's only two people in the world who I interact with spitefully."

Emilia: "It doesn't make me happy at all to be chosen for that world three. …I don't remember ever doing anything that would make you hate me that much."

Echidna: "There's no need to look so worried. My hatred for you has nothing to do with you being a half- elf. It isn't a question of your pedigree. With no connection to blood or nature, I just hate you. …Or no, that may not be strictly correct."

Emilia: "—?"

Echidna lowers her gaze, feeling something off about the latter half of her statement. Emilia furrows her brows at the brooding witch, before giving a small shake of the head. There's no way she can turn tail and just leave those previous comments sitting there.

Echidna has said so many things that need to be invalidated. Not only for Emilia's sake, but for the honor of everyone in the forest.

Emilia: "I don't think there's much to do about you hating me. I know how hard it is for absolutely everyone to like you. Since so many people have told me they hate me."

Echidna: "If that's the case then it would've been nice of you to show some prudence and stay in the forest."

Emilia: "Well I'm not going to do that. I'm sure I said it in the last Trial. I'm going to melt the ice and save everybody. Then I'm going to hold my chest high and teach everyone that now, the world's an easier place to roam.”

Echidna: “Easier to roam. What a brazen lie. Discrimination between races remains great, and people cannot easily accept those who differ from themselves. Which is why places like the Sanctuary retain their function even today. The disagreements you’re referring to will forever result in compounding casualties throughout the world. Am I wrong?”

Emilia: “…You’re not wrong.”

Echidna’s severe comments put Emilia on the border of pessimism.

Emilia still remembers the days she spent with Puck in the forest. How the nearby villages feared her, and showered her in more than a few curses and more than a little spite.

Echidna’s merciless attitude makes Emilia think about those days. She can try not to recollect on them, but the wounds and their unhealed scars continue to assert their pain.

Emilia: “But I’m going to act as if you are.”

Echidna: “…”

Still focused on that pain, Emilia firmly rebuts Echidna.

She watches Echidna narrow her eyes, and bites her lip, strength entering her eyes.

Emilia: “Being unlike others does, sometimes, make painful disagreements happen. Whether there’s lots or not many of you might be a big factor for what determines the victims and assailants, sometimes, too.”

Echidna: “And it’s been repeats of that, throughout history. People cannot accept those unlike them. The disparity in numbers represents exactly the disparity in strength. The many oppress the few. Now that you understand this truth, and have gotten a little bit wiser, what are you going to do? Gather up the few, and create a utopia for weaklings? Now wouldn’t that be exactly the essence of this place we call the Sanctuary?”

Emilia: “That’s…one option you could choose, I think. But I want to choose a different path. Even if I can’t change that there were victims or assailants, the future’s another story.”

The second that Emilia says the word ‘future’, Echidna’s expression freezes numb.

To Emilia, it feels like Echidna is angry, as if this is something she absolutely doesn’t want to be hearing from Emilia of all people. But Emilia continues.

Emilia: “I’m sure I’m going to do lots of things throughout the Royal Selection. I might face even more insults and spite than I did before. But I want to always say that I will never stop. To ask what’s so wrong about being unlike someone else. To ask what’s so scary about being unlike our neighbors.”

Echidna: “I’d rather you stop making be say this, but this is fundamental truth. People cannot accept the discrepancies between themselves and others. By essence, all creatures desire for others to be the same as themselves. To like the same things, love the same things, hate the same things, abhor the same things—they feel secure when matters are so, and love their capacity to sympathize. Your platform will be denied. As the ramblings of the weak.”

Emilia: “But that’s just a neglect to think! It’s lame!”

Echidna: “L-Lame…?”

Yells Emilia. Echidna’s eyes shoot open, looking not to have expected that word in the least.

Emilia puffs out her chest.

Emilia: “It is!”

Emilia: “It’s so lame. You’re not like your neighbor, so you hate them…are you a child? It’s ridiculous that someone would block their ears for a reason like that. I’ll say it countless times to any of those nitwits. Rather than mindlessly yell that you don’t like it, if you’re looking to quiet my endless tirades, it’s easier to change your thinking a little.”

Echidna: “Absolutely self-centered. Incredible self- deception. You’ll eliminate the opinions of others that you wish not to hear, so that you may enforce your own?”

Emilia: “I’m not eliminating anything. It’s up to them whether they unblock their ears. —I’m just confident that I’m the more stubborn.”

Her hand to her hip, Emilia demonstrates to Echidna that her will will not bend.

Echidna’s expression turns sour and she averts her gaze from Emilia.

Echidna: “Whatever you may assert, the world has not changed yet. The forest-dwellers, frozen in ice—supposing that they are alive, and you do bring them into a thawed world, society is not prepared to accept them. All you are doing is tossing those who were kind to you into adversity. All for your hypocritical beliefs.”

Emilia says nothing.

Echidna: “You wish to free your friends as soon as you can. But should you free them, your friends will suffer as the world rejects them. Living is suffering, and death too is suffering. In a world like this, what can your individual willingness do? What can it change. What does it change?”

Echidna is sincerely inquiring this of Emilia.

She has verified Emilia’s resolve through the two Trials of the past and impossible present. Now, Echidna is asking Emilia about her resolve for the future.

About Emilia’s prospects should she follow her intentions through.

About the route she will take to reach her imagined future.

About what Emilia will use as her cornerstone, and upon what concrete basis she will create this path.

Emilia nods in reply, and:

Emilia: “I’ll think about that after I finish the Trial!”

Echidna: “—Huh?”

Emilia: “It’s putting the cart before the horse if I get so focused on the future that I forget where I am. I know how this sounds when I’m the one saying it, but I’m a bumbler. When there’s a wall I have to scale, but I’m worrying about what’s on the other side of it, I’ll wind up falling into the hole at the foot of the wall.”

Between the Trials and her argument with Subaru, Emilia feels that she has a rather correct, objective view of herself.

She feels that her appraisal of herself is also unrestrained.

She is not someone so adroit that she can manage many things on her own.

It’s a question of whether, after putting in her very best effort on the thing right in front of her, she’ll manage to procure results.

She has hope for the future. Prospects for the future.

Resolved to aim for those hopes and prospects, she must take the very first step on the road to achieve them.

What she should be establishing right now is that exact, first step.

Echidna: “…I finally remembered how pointless it is to debate with you. Honestly this was all rather idiotic of me.”

Emilia: “I know that you’re smart, but I kinda think it’s sooo unfair for you to shut down other people’s opinions like that.”

Echidna: “Do you believe that we exchanged any opinions? I presented questions, and you replied with empty platitudes. I’d forgotten. That you’re a hopeless child, unable to stand on your own, constantly relying on others, a weak woman.”

Emilia: “You’re right…I am a weak child.”

Emilia lowers her eyes and gives a small shake of her head.

But she immediately looks back up, and matches her gaze to Echidna's.

Emilia: "But."

Emilia: "Is being weak really so wrong?"

Echidna: "…What?"

Emilia: "I know that the person who taught me something very important would say this. It isn't wrong to be weak. It's wrong to want to stay weak."

She thinks of the black-haired, nasty-eyed boy.

Lamenting his powerlessness, but kind and thus suffering more wounds than anyone else in his efforts, a precious boy.

If it were him, who borrowed everyone's aid but nevertheless took a place for the most painful parts, he would absolutely say that.

Echidna: "Reorientation."

Emilia: "Mm. I was slow to reorient."

Seeing how a smile arises on Emilia's face, Echidna perceives that there is truly no room for debate.

Echidna has no methods to stop the persistently optimistic, overly-enthusiastic Emilia.

Meddling in the issue any further would even begin to impact her dignity as a Witch.

Echidna: "…Well, enjoy the remaining T RIAL. Once you've completed it, a reality far harsher than these Trials awaits you. I'm sure you'll come to understand just how difficult it will be to uphold your shiny platitudes."

Emilia: "Thank you for going out of the way to talk to me. I'll make sure to remember what you've told me. And…"

She must be moments away from disappearing from the mirror.

Seeing how Echidna's reflection begins to fade in the mirror, Emilia continues her speech. Echidna furrows her brows, looking sour. And Emilia,

Emilia: "Thank you for showing me this world."

Echidna: "…"

Emilia: "It might be an impossible world, but it's still one I wanted to see. I never thought a day would come where I'd see them, Mother and…Father Geuse laughing together like this. Thank you."

It did hurt when Echidna told her that this world was not real.

But even if it is an impossible world, these scenes are what would have occurred.

These scenes full of happiness and love, enough to make Emilia tremble in joy and sorrow.

I'm so glad I got to see this, thinks Emilia from the bottom of her heart.

Echidna: "…You."

And so Emilia expresses her thanks—and Echidna's expression shifts.

Her expression has been one of witnessing something disgusting, her attitude has been one of withstanding displeasure, her stance has been one of scorn toward all of Emilia's action, and she has shown many such faces until now—but this expression is different from all of them.

—Echidna, looking close to tears, simply gazes at Emilia.

Emilia: "Echidna?"

Echidna: "I hate you. —I just, hate you."

Says Echidna, voice strangled and face cast down.

Her image in the mirror then warps, and the white-haired witch disappears from the glass in an instant. Instead what appears is a girl with long, silver hair and—

Emilia: "—Hic!"

A wave of rejection spears through Emilia's chest as she promptly averts her gaze from the mirror.

Her pulse has accelerated, and her breathing has grown slightly ragged.

She's supposed to have steeled herself for this, but it still terrifies her to be reflected in a mirror.

Emilia: "…"

A century passed in the frozen Elior Forest before Puck saved Emilia from the ice. —She has never seen what she looks like grown up.

The reason's simple. She's just scared.

Her century of slumber in the ice means that Emilia's heart has remained immature, while her body has matured to womanhood.

Once she regained consciousness, and first realized that she couldn't control her body very well, Emilia was struck with the illusion that her body may not be hers, and spent many nights in tears.

The reactions from the neighboring villagers helped spur on that trauma of hers.

Emilia shared the same distinctive physical traits as the Witch of Envy, and the villagers feared her like a demon. Even though they realized that Emilia was going to do them no harm, they continued to alienate her.

Once people knew that Emilia was not going to do anything, what awaited her was a life of discrimination, spite, and curses. During that time, Emilia came to at least unconsciously recognize that people hated her because she looked like the Witch of Envy.

That would be when she started rejecting mirrors and keeping her eyes from her own visage, which others detested.

Puck noticed Emilia’s mental wounds, and removed everything reflective from her vicinity. He would even call out to her when she was out fetching water, distracting her so that she would not face herself on the water’s surface.

—One of the clauses in her Contract with Puck, where he was the one in charge of Emilia’s daily grooming, was most likely something to protect Emilia.

To protect his daughter, who could not look in a mirror, Puck used the Contract as pretext to mask her trauma.

Emilia: “…I really have had so many people looking after me.”

And how long has she spent sulking alone without realizing how others felt? This is the end of the time she’s spent in ignorance of what she’s been given.

She takes a breath. Freezes.

And raises her head, undertaking the personally momentous deed of sighting herself in a mirror.

Reflected in the mirror is a girl with long silver hair and amethyst eyes.

Who is glaring so intently at her, looking as if it’s the end of the world.

Emilia: “—The heck.”

She says, the whole thing anticlimactic.

Seeing her matured visage in the mirror, Emilia sighs.

Emilia: “I look less like Mother Fortuna than I thought, it’s too bad…”

After her sulky mutter, the world shatters into pieces.

This happy, desired, but inevitably-to-part dream world, ends here —.

2

Emilia: “—ah, hauh.”

After regaining consciousness, Emilia realizes that she had fallen asleep while leaned against the wall.

She had slumped to sit on the floor with her legs splayed out aside her, relying on the wall engraved with Subaru’s messages. She combs her fingers through her disheveled hair and imagines the sight of her own self.

So that was her appearance, feared by many as a Witch, and what Subaru constantly said was ‘cute’ or that he ‘loved’.

Emilia, with her impoverished understanding of personal aesthetics, cannot tell which party is correct.

However, Mother Fortuna is Emilia’s conception of the prettiest and coolest of people. And so she does not think nasty eyes are a bad thing, and actually she doesn’t dislike how nasty Subaru’s eyes are either.

Emilia: “I just got back, this isn’t the time for me to be thinking about weird stuff.” Putting her hands to her cheeks, Emilia pulls the breaks on her own thoughts.

It’s all so ludicrously spineless of her. She safely ends the Trial and returns, and just looking at Subaru’s handwritten messages seriously gets her this elated?

Emilia: “But…this does mean that the second Trial is really over, right?”

Mutters Emilia to nobody as she gets to her feet and starts thinking about her results.

Going from how Echidna was acting at the end, the Trial is most likely over. Unlike with the first Trial, Emilia feels no particular sense that she has overcome anything.

But she indeed did wrest her near-captivated heart away, and managed to return.

Emilia: “…”

Fortuna and Geuse. As Emilia thinks back on how close they were, her heart aches.

But she suppresses her sorrow and turns her back to the Trial room.

Supposing that the third Trial is ready, it will require Emilia to exit and enter again as she did with the second Trial.

She’ll coast off her momentum to defeat the third Trial, and liberate the Sanctuary.

For Subaru’s sake, and for Ram’s request, and to actualize the big talk she spoke to Roswaal, people need her to take action.

Emilia: “—It’s just pitch black.”

Passing through the dark corridor of the tomb, her footsteps pealing off the stone floor, Emilia narrows her eyes as she notices how dim the light spilling into the ruin’s entrance is. Perhaps clouds are blocking out the moon, or this hazy glow is from starlight.

In the Sanctuary, which loses essentially all sources of light come nightfall, only the natural lighting pouring down from above serves to rip through the nocturnal dark.

Emilia: “—huh?”

Is what Emilia ponders as she walks.

So when she steps outside the tomb, the horde of gazes focusing on her lead her throat to unwittingly jam.

???: “W-We are in her presence!”

Somebody speaks up, and a chatter instantly spreads through the crowd.

The stir only unfolds further before the flinching Emilia, the overwhelmingly large group of people all focusing their attention on her.

—These are the residents of the Sanctuary.

The people who live in the Sanctuary other than Garfiel and Ryuzu.

Emilia has not interacted with them any more than necessary during her time here. Partly because Emilia's mental state hadn't been calm enough for it, partly because they had not been actively trying to interact with Emilia either.

Emilia has a kind of resignation when it comes to people staring at her like this.

The residents detest Emilia's lineage, but hold expectations for her to liberate the Sanctuary, and most of all must ascertain whether she is someone worthy of standing at their head.

And so Emilia had thought it impossible that they would show themselves to her in such great numbers before she had succeeded in liberating the Sanctuary.

Emilia had been convinced that interaction with them would only ever come about once she had achieved in attaining results.

So then why were they all gathered here?

And why were their gazes towards Emilia—filled not with loathing, but strong expectation?

???: "Can't say it's the nicest erv things…"

Before the bewildered Emilia, a girl steps forward from the group of villagers.

With her long, pink hair, this person is Ryuzu.

She steps forward to represent the villagers as she gives Emilia a smile.

Ryuzu: “Everyone here ers stuck at a standstill. Wondering what answer yer gonner give ter the Trial, and…worrying about what will happen ter us after the Sanctuary’s been freed.”

Emilia: “…I think it’s inevitable that you would. But how would this be ‘not the nicest of things’?”

Ryuzu: “Now thert’s easy. Everyone in the Sanctuary, about Lil’ Gar and Lil’ Su’s fight, er about your argument with Lil’ Roz, or…well, lots’er things. We’ve all been derscussing them in detail, and from there…”

Emilia: “D-Discussed it?!”

While she watches Ryuzu scratch her cheek, Emilia’s cheeks flush red.

Nevermind Subaru and Garfiel’s clash of wills, Emilia’s argument with Roswaal was just her being pushy with her unrefined opinions.

She had rationalized to herself that it wouldn’t be embarrassing for anyone to hear it, but now that she knows that someone actually did hear it, it is making her embarrassed.

Emilia: “But, even if you did hear about it…Miss Ryuzu, where did you?”

Ryuzu: “Hrm, so abert that…fer however I might look, I gert incredibly sharp ears. With it, yer pretty much can’t keep anything a secret so long ers yer in the Sanctuary.”

Emilia: “You do. …Wow.”

Ryuzu’s confession of eavesdropping winds up impressing Emilia more than angering her. Failing to notice how the young-looking old woman sticks out her tongue, Emilia nods in recognition of why so many people have assembled here. And,

Villager: “E-Lady Emilia.”

Emilia: “Y-Yes?”

Ryuzu: “Yer sound like yer met through a dating service.”

He’s one of the villagers—and being that he’s in Sanctuary, most likely a demi-human half-blood. His canines are slightly long, and his pupils are slit. He looks about as old as Roswaal or maybe a little bit older, seeming somewhat tense as he steps out before Emilia.

Villager: “I’m…no, we are, um…in complete sincerity, we are still undecided.”

Emilia: “…”

Villager: “About whether we may trust in you, or what it will mean to learn of the world outside the Sanctuary. Plainly said, the outside is awash with things we don’t know, and scares us. We were all born inside here and have lived inside here. We know nothing of the outside.”

This was what Garfiel had also propounded, the way of life in the Sanctuary.

The four-hundred year barrier has forced the people inside into life here for generations. They had no way to escape, and perhaps no need to think about the outside, either.

But now means to escape exists plainly before them, and this utterly foreign and unknown person named Emilia is attempting to liberate them.

Of course people would feel unease and rebellion. And doubtful that many could burst into the outside world, utterly confident.

Emilia had feared that Garfiel’s anxieties had been the consensus of opinion inside the Sanctuary.

And this man in front of her is saying things that are validating that fear.

Villager: “We could perhaps come into Master Roswaal’s care outside, but how would that differ from our present circumstances? …Plainly said, we are more anxious than hopeful. The change frightens us."

Emilia: "…Mm."

Villager: "However."

Emilia nods and edges on lowering her gaze, when the man's statement stops her.

The man straightens his posture before continuing, his expression tense.

Villager: "Everyone has heard Garfiel's…has heard the boy's voice." Emilia says nothing.

Villager: "We know what that trooper was thinking, and how he felt. And know the exchanges between him and that black-haired young man, and between yourself and Master Roswaal afterwards."

His back still straight, the man's expression twists.

Regretful, and near to tears. It sticks in Emilia's chest.

Villager: "I, sincerely speaking, thought it pathetic. That a fourteen-year-old boy was so worried for us, and that a child under twenty years old was howling at us like that. …And even though Master Roswaal stated that you could not do it, we listened to your words as well. And so, Lady Emilia."

Emilia: "—Yes."

Villager: "No matter what the results may be, and no matter what may occur after this, I believe your effort to challenge the T RIAL incredible. Venerable. Not all of us share that sentiment, and not even I have entirely accepted you yet. But I request that we may witness it to completion."

Witness what? No need to ask.

Bathed in his wilful gaze, Emilia looks at those behind him—the crowd of people who are accepting him as their representative—and nods.

Emilia: “Understood. I’ll be sure to end everything safely…and you’ll listen to what I have to say.”

Villager: “Yes. That is a promise. And to think of judging someone off hearsay, without ever interacting with them…we’re the last people who should be doing that, huh. —Wahgh!”

The man slumps his shoulders. When Ryuzu pinches his hip from behind.

The man springs up and turns around in objections, but Ryuzu just snorts a laugh.

Ryuzu: “Yer sure went on a while, sure are serious, aren’t yer. And yer fell back int’er talking casual halfway through. ‘Cause yer ain’t used ter doing this.”

Villager: “…M-My apologies.”

Ryuzu: “Anyway, there’s what we’re thinking. Apologies fer the meddler.”

With that charming little exchange, Ryuzu gets the man to stand down.

Emilia takes a deep breath, something other than oxygen puffing up her chest.

Ryuzu is giving her graces, and the people of the Sanctuary have come to see her efforts through. Who could estimate how greatly it reassured her?

Emilia: “Thank you, Miss Ryuzu. Now, I know I can try sooo hard.”

Ryuzu: “I see, I see. Well, good. …Next one should be the last Trial.”

Emilia: “Yes, it is. —I’m going to challenge it right away.”

With the strength they've given her, Emilia turns around to face the tomb.

But halfway through her turn she freezes, remembering something, and glances back to Ryuzu.

Emilia: "Ah, oh…actually, Miss Ryuzu, have you seen Ram? I'd like to tell her that I finished the second Trial, but…"

Ryuzu: "…Ram's left here ter attend ter some business. But she she's praying yer good luck. 'You have your tasks, and I have mine. Let us see them both achieved.'."

It sounds like Ram, and even though she knows it's just a report, it makes her want to give a wry smile.

Ram's task—where, and with whom, will she achieve it?

Emilia feels something astir in her chest, but she consciously suppresses it.

Ram is believing in her. And so, she will believe in Ram.

Just how Subaru and the others made a path for her, she wants to proceed from their efforts and make a path as well.

Emilia: "I'm going."

Ryuzu nods in reply, and the villagers's jabbering sees her off.

Filled with even stronger resolve than the first or second times, Emilia steps into the tomb.

Where—,

"Face the impending calamity."

The final Trial, approaches—.

3

Ram feels how her heartbeat grows a touch distant in her chest.

She has never been bathed in such hostility from this person ever before.

Physical contact with him, exchanging words with him, being ordered by him.

Those things were the epitome in joy for Ram, and her meaning in life.

And so the fact that she feels girlish elation—even when when he regards her with hostility—overjoys her.

???: “…Hoooooooow dare you show yoooooourself here.”

Mutters the tall man opposite Ram, glaring at her.

His tantalizing voice makes a sweet ache run through her brain.

Just by having his heterochromatic gaze on her, everything below her waist feels like it could shatter.

Although, this is naturally not the time to display such weak and girly things.

A woman like that would merely be deemed useless and discarded.

???: “Noooooooow then, what could you have cooooooooome here for?”

Ram: “—That is simple.”

She replies as usual, her face expressionless and manner tranquil.

With her pink hair swaying, Ram draws her wand from beneath her skirt, before pointing it at the beauty before her—pointing it at her dearly respected master,

Ram: “I have come to snatch you away from your witch delusions.”

And confesses that she is here to burn her loved one, consumed by an insane love, with her own.

Chapter 125B:
Starting as Revenge

1

The wind rages.

A single, strong gust whips violently at their hair and clothes as they face each other.

The setting is the outskirts of the Sanctuary, near the hidden house where young Garfiel and Frederica lived, in an unpopulated and unremarkable meadow.

There are no residencies anywhere near here, and even if there were, nobody would possibly pass by at this juncture. All of the people of the Sanctuary should be busy waiting for Emilia's Trial results.

To cheer Emilia on, and for Ram to exploit to clear out the crowd.

Roswaal: "Delusion, yooooooooou say."

Ram does feel somewhat guilty about using Emilia like this, but refocuses her attention as she sees Roswaal's lips relax into a smile.

Roswaal sweeps his long, navy hair down his back, then closes one eye and glares at Ram with the yellow.

Roswaal: "When you are the one saying it, aware of my feelings and my goals, it's quiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiite the sad thing to hear."

Ram: "I have have simply kept silent, but always thought so. As I naturally would."

Roswaal: "Natural…weeeeeeeeeell, I dooooooooo suppose so. From your perspective, it was a life of prolonged prostration and disgrace."

Ram: "…"

Ram responds to Roswaal's shrug by lowering her gaze.

She more or less understands what he's trying to say. Of course she would. Ram has always been paying attention to Roswaal. She understands to a painful extent how he, recipient of her love and loyalty, would perceive her allegiance to him.

Roswaal: "So, the first thing you do once unfettered from the Contract is stray froooooom my plans. That would be what you did in supporting Subaru and aiding in subjugating Garfiel, correct?"

Ram: "It had carried dual meanings, both for my objectives and to rectify Garf's idiocy. …Were I not there, I suspect that they wouldn't have managed anything."

Roswaal: "It does feel that everything worked out 'in the end'. Subaru makes some rather thoughtless bets, when so many precious things are involved and at stake. …I would never even think to make such an idiotic gamble for my precious one."

It's something of a sermon: cynical about Subaru's decision, and insistent that his own ideas are the rational ones.

And honestly, there is nothing about Roswaal's statement that Ram can refute. Many of Subaru's actions were utterly unplanned and haphazard. He had the luck of Heaven on his side for the whole Garfiel affair, including how Ram participated in it.

Ram's opinion of Subaru being a man of only good timing hasn't changed at all.

Should you focus only on the question of achieving a goal, then Roswaal's ideas are far superior.

Provided that the gospel can be trusted.

Ram: "Won't make gambles…because what came of prioritizing accuracy was the gospel."

Roswaal: "Eeeeeeeeexactly. Although you seemed not to trust it, and have aaaaaaaaaalways been adverse to it. Again, inevitable.

You've been praying for its writ to divert at any point that it possibly could."

Ram: "…I will not deny that."

Cannot deny that.

Ram truly was adverse to the gospel. But there's a huge discrepancy between Roswaal's conception and Ram's real motives as to why.

And it racked Ram with a sorrow that she never let show on her face.

Roswaal: "Do you remember? The Contract that we formed, with the gospel as our intermediary?"

Ram: "—That, provided that history is moving as stated in your gospel, I wager my life to serve you. In exchange."

Roswaal: "Should time proceed down a path diverged from the gospel's writ, my goals face a standstill. Should I lose sight of my goals, my life loses all meaning. You are permitted to do whatever you wish with my husk."

Ram: "Your life or death rests upon me."

Roswaal: "That waaaaaaaaas the Contract."

With that, Roswaal draws a black book from his breast pocket.

He cradles the thick tomb close, stroking its cover as he gives a sigh.

Roswaal: "It must have been truly long and painful for you."

Ram: "…"

Roswaal: "After all…you had to spend your life swearing reluctant loyalty to a man partly responsible for the destruction of your birthplace. Contrary to your prayers, your heart delights when with me…it must have been agony. My deepest apologies for being so aaaaaaaaapathetic."

Roswaal spins spiteful words to wound Ram.

Partly responsible for the destruction of your birthplace. Hearing that sentence, pain and memories of her hometown, and family, in flames pass through her chest.

The ONI have a low population even for demi-humans, but in exchange, possesses incredible strength.

Ram's race had gathered up their scant numbers and established a village deep in the mountains, then were exterminated overnight between fire and knives, leaving Ram and □□□ as the only survivors.

She had formed the Contract with Roswaal the morning after the fire, as she gazed dazedly over the scorched village.

Ram accepted the Contract for the sake of survival.

Without □□□ ever knowing anything, and equally without Ram ever telling □□□ anything.

Ram: "—?"

Feeling an inexplicable sense of awryness and a faint aching in her head, Ram furrows her brows. She feels that there is an unnatural vacuum somewhere in her memories. That there's something that has to be there, but it's being obfuscated by a network of lies, telling her that no such thing existed. Even though Ram's memories make no sense without it—.

Roswaal: "The despicable longing within you, and the lust for revenge that your true heart fostered.

Even with these contrary desires squabbling within you, you proved a truly eeeeeeeeexcellent pawn.

Just how extensively have I used you, with your obedient conformity to the gospel?"

While Ram searches her memories to try and find what is off, Roswaal continues his speech. This isn't the time for this, she thinks as she aborts her search for the vacuum and faces Roswaal, who speaks sweetly as he praises her loyalty.

But the glances he sends Ram begin to adopt another kind of sentiment.

Roswaal: “But who wooooooooould have thought that you’d betray me and ally with Subaru. Do you comprehend how much grief I have suffered because of this?”

Ram: “…I have not defied the terms of our Contract. Should the world proceed on a course differing from the gospel, I will adhere not to your words, but to my own heart. The Contract…should I have disobeyed it, then I would not have escaped unharmed.”

Putting her hand to her chest, Ram asserts the legitimacy of her actions.

This Contract between Ram and Roswaal was, naturally, not any simple spoken-word promise. Spells are engraved on both of their souls, and they will suffer more than appropriate penalty should they defy the terms. Since this has not happened, Ram’s heart has not defied the Contract.

But Roswaal gives a big shake of his head.

Roswaal: “Thaaaaaaaat is what I’m referring to. Considering that you have not been punished for disobeying the Contract in this situation…your soul believes without the slightest of doubt that you are adhering to the Contract. And I must find that a terribly unfortunate judgement.”

Ram: “What might you mean?”

Roswaal: “It’s simple. —The gospel’s writ has not diverged yet. The Contract between you and I truly reaches its terminus further from now, in the future.”

Asserts Roswaal, his voice low as he looks Ram in the eye.

The statement makes even expressionless Ram’s cheeks tense. What she is hearing differs greatly from what the Contract’s spell acknowledged.

Even with all these conditions in place, Roswaal's stubborn heart is not surrendering in the least.

Ram: "The writ has not diverged? Barusu will not challenge the tomb to liberate the Sanctuary, and Lady Emilia is not doing anything to bring about snowfall. How could you state that the writ has not diverged in this situation, Master Roswaal…has something happened?"

Roswaal: "Nothing at all, it's theeeeeee same as ever. While, true, neither of the things I stated have come into fruition…they still may yet."

Ram: "That will not happen. Barusu has left the Sanctuary, and Lady Emilia is defeating the Trials. To then state that matters will resolve to fit the writ…is this the floundering of an obstinate child?"

Roswaal: "I am quite a mature adult and so can deny being an obstinate child, but I can't deny that I am floundering. Iiiiiiiiiiinded, here is my useless floundering. —An endless, over four-century long, peeeeeeeeeerpetual stretch of floundering."

Changing his course, Roswaal asserts that his own actions are 'floundering'.

The clown laughs from the back of his throat, his expression twisted in insane elation as he slaps his knees, praising the perfection of it all.

Roswaal: "Floundering, exactly, it's floundering! There is the punchline! Is there any word to more accurately describe this obsession of mine? Noooooooope, there isn't! Floundering… floundering…ahhaaaaa, wonderful. It had never even occurred to me."

Ram: "Master Roswaal!"

Roswaal: "A man floundering in dependent obsession, and a servant whose lust for revenge against a madman has morphed into loyalty to him. Our circumstances are truuuuuuuly crooked and comedic. Hoooooooowever, calling my actions floundering will do nothing to change my intentions. You have acted prematurely."

Roswaal's insane smile disappears as he presents the gospel to Ram, so that she can see it.

Roswaal: "No matter what you may believe, the Contract remains unchanged. Until she overcomes the tomb's Trials, nothing has diverged from the writ that Natsuki Subaru will liberate the Sanctuary. And even should she not bring snowfall, no deviation will come to the writ provided that I bring snowfall."

Ram: "…"

Roswaal: "You may appeal to the terms of the Contract, but I also act in equal compliance. And so we sit upon parallels. The time has not come yet for you to enact your revenge."

Roswaal lightly tosses the book, catching it in his other hand before stashing it in his breast pocket.

Flickering flames arise atop his outstretched right arm.

Roswaal shows off how the flames change color from red, to blue, to green, narrowing his eyes.

Roswaal: "You are still subject to the terms of your employment. You have acted impertinently as my servant and so face punishment. If you had truly believed that the world diverged from the gospel, then all you had to do was wait for two more days. I would have presented myself to you without resistance. …Hastiness serves well for nothing."

Roswaal shakes his head in lamentation.

Roswaal: "Although."

Roswaal: "I do understand your desire to destroy me as soon as conceivably possible."

Ram: "…So you truly do understand nothing."

Roswaal: “—?”

Ram closes her eyes, murmuring feebly in reply to Roswaal’s cynical smile.

Beneath her eyelids there rests a wave of complex emotion, never to show on her face. By closing her eyes, Ram can see her own way of life, which she pledged to never show to anybody. She raises her head. Mana converges at the tip of her wand, poised this entire time.

Ram: “There is no meaning in having you should it be after the Contract is fulfilled. After you’ve been destroyed, there is no meaning at all.”

Roswaal: “—Come.”

Ram: “As you wish.”

—Flames of vibrant hue crash into invisible blades of wind.

With waves of heat surging through their Sanctuary, the Oni and the warlock begin their crooked dance.

2

Emilia perceives the exact instant that the Trial starts.

Her five senses vanish, and she forfeits the general concept of ‘having a body’.

Her sensory organs depart from her control, leaving her as only a mind floating helplessly in space —which is what she is right now, only a soul.

This one obviously differs in nature from the previous Trials.

Emilia: “…”

She can’t speak.

She has no mouth. No eyes either, but strangely enough, she can perceive the world.

Or no. You could say that she perceives the world, but it’s not such a coherent thing yet that you could confidently call it a ‘world’.

Emilia’s consciousness floats in a void of darkness.

She can regardless recognize her own self because of the many lights speckling this dark.

The dim lights come in many colors, splayed about in considerable number.

They resemble the glow of a minor spirit, but they give a decisively different vibe from the living spirits.

They may resemble minor spirits, but their light more closely matches that from a magic stone. Regardless, being that these surrounding lights have scattered around to circle Emilia, she feels that she will not lose sight of the world.

Emilia: “…”

Surrounded by lights, and relieved that she has not been left alone, Emilia starts feeling progressively confused about the utter lack of happenings here.

The dim lights simply float there in their positions, not doing anything at all. Echidna has been showing up at the start of these Trials to explain what has been going on, but this time she isn’t there to act as a guide.

Time simply passes on by—though Emilia cannot tell what the time disparity is between the inside and outside of the tomb, she knows that doing nothing will lead to nothing.

Emilia: “—?”

I have to do something, thinks Emilia, and a change occurs.

Emilia’s consciousness, formerly fixed in place and immobile, transfers over to another spot—close enough to the lights that she could probably touch them.

She has no body, but she can touch light. It's a weird sensation.

But she has no other way to express it. If she did, then she might simply be invisible to herself and instead have a body constructed of primal magic—she may just be od.

If her od is what holds her consciousness and soul, then that does somewhat explain her current condition.

Reaching some amount of agreement, Emilia thinks to validate her ideas by heading for one of the lights.

There have to be more than twenty of these scattered lights. With no particular reason for it, Emilia reaches out for the light that glows a dim silver.

And the instant her od touches the light—she sees it.

???: "Hate, hate, absolutely hate you. Me, I loathe you. I really do. All of it, entirely true. Ever since we first met…I've downright hated you."

Emilia: "—?!"

Immediately following the voice, a vivid scene slips into Emilia's perception.

Beneath an overwhelmingly giant sun, in a burnt field, standing beside a massive and dilapidated building, bathed in crimson sunlight, is a girl with blood wetting her silver hair—Emilia.

It's her fully-grown self, who she has just witnessed in the second Trial.

And she looks woeful as she stands before the ruin, assaulting someone with her words.

Emilia: "I've had the thought countless times, and denied it countless times, but…yes, a nightmare really did catch up to me. And so I'll say it."

Emilia: “…”

Emilia: “Maybe we really shouldn’t have met after all.”

A tear streams down from the corner of her amethyst eye.

It trails down to her cheek, falls from her chin, and the instant before it strikes the ground, the world bursts into nothing.

Emilia: “…”

Swallow her breath. As just an od, she’s incapable of something so dexterous.

All Emilia can do is accept the scene she just witnessed.

What was that light? What was this scene?

That had definitely been Emilia, but she doesn’t remember this at all. Or perhaps that had been an impossible scene, like the one in the second Trial.

Emilia: “…”

It’s not, thinks Emilia.

She calms her chaotic mind, searches through her memory, and remembers.

The words she heard in the tomb when entering the third Trial.

“First face your past” “Witness the uncomeatable present.”

And now the third one. Yes, it was:

“Face the impending calamity”.

Impending calamity. So, the future?

She had seen the past and a present, and for the finish, here’s the future.

So this is the baptism that the Trial shows those challenging these alternate worlds?

Which means that Emilia will eventually meet this future?

Where she is in such a dismal place, crying as she conveys her regret for meeting somebody?

Emilia: "…"

Emilia uses her feelings of denial to dispel her unease, recovering a superficial level of calm.

But, once her mind registers the darkness again, another change occurs.

The silver light that Emilia's od had just touched disappears.

A vacuum fills the space that the light once occupied, the thing now missing. Emilia is puzzled by this, but promptly realizes what it means.

If each of these lights represents a future, then Emilia needs to touch every one of these futures before she will be freed.

—If this is a Trial, then she will have to make some kind of choice after she's seen all the futures.

If Echidna is waiting anywhere, then she'll be waiting there.

Meaning: Emilia must witness over twenty futures.

Emilia: "…"

Will they be differing futures, or all fragments of the same future she just saw?

While feeling her non-existent heart wilting, Emilia reaches for the neighboring light.

This one is blue, reminiscent of something vast and deep, like an ocean—.

???: "You're absolutely right. They were our enemy, and the wound was deep. If we withdrew here, being that neither of us can heal, maybe we wouldn’t have managed any rescue.”

???: “In that case…”

???: “But they were just a kid. —And isn’t that enough?”

Again, the scene changes.

Now she witnesses a thick forest, with two people standing at the edge of a sheer cliff.

She can’t see their faces. But she knows both of their voices.

One is very familiar, and thought the other one isn’t, she does remember it.

The two are facing off before the cliff, one of them kneeling, the other looking down at the kneeling party. Both of them look horribly morose, Emilia feels.

???: “You…you are a hero. A hero’s…all, you can ever be!”

???: “I…”

???: “Why thank you so very much for your help!”

One silhouette reaches their hand out to the other, who turns their face away and imparts those cavalier words of gratitude.

This feels like a definite farewell between these two people.

A goodbye laced with only irreparable woe and disappointment.

The world begins to fade again, and Emilia’s consciousness returns to the dark space.

Emilia: “…”

Emilia had not been present in that scene at all.

She knew who the people in it were, but it feels awry that she herself was absent.

She's meant to be facing these lights while conceiving of them as futures.

So why on earth is it showing her futures where she is absent, or scenes that she will not be present for?

—Is she being shown how her decisions may affect the futures of those around her?

If so, then these scenes only present one possibility out of many.

It's telling her to witness how her decisions will impact those other than herself.

Emilia: "…"

The blue light vanishes as the silver light did.

Twenty lights still remain.

—Each one of them carries the weight of a choice.

Steeling herself for this, Emilia reaches out to see the outcome of her decisions through.

In the next future, and the future after that, Emilia's decisions await.

3

With a swish of her wand, she creates and unleashes a blade of wind.

Invisible and inaudible, the whirling blade closes in on its target's throat as an assassin.

Roswaal: "Is that all?"

But Roswaal easily evades the imperceptible attack by nimbly jumping away.

Of course he would. He is the head of the renowned Mathers family of sorcerers, a rare breed of magician proficient in all six classes of magic. For Roswaal L. Mathers, perceiving others' manipulation of mana is child's play. Even wind magic with its invisible blades is as visible to Roswaal as fire in the night.

Roswaal: “My turn.”

With a swing of Roswaal's arm, three fireballs of differing hue rain down upon Ram.

A red fire, a blue fire, and a green fire—all three of them pursue Ram when she leaps backward, quite annoying in how they tail her. She runs backwards, her breath slightly ragged, as she unleashes another spike of magic. The windblade strikes the three flames, which Ram thought would snuff them out, but instead they each react in differing ways.

Ram: “—?!”

The instant the red flame takes the hit, like taking a bath of oil, it combusts into a pillar of fire.

The blue flame is easily sliced to pieces by wind, its embers shooting out in all directions.

The green flame looks to be engulfed in wind, when it then absorbs the wind mana and changes its shape, morphing into a snake of green fire that slithers across the ground in pursuit of Ram.

The fire pillar blazes at Ram, who kicks off from a massive tree to avoid the blue flames, and then tumbles across the ground to dodge the green flame's fangs before again striking the fire-snake with her windblade.

The snake bursts into small flares, which scatter over the meadow to smolder.

Roswaal: “Oh my…that was only one exchange of magic, and yet you seem quite wounded.”

Ram: “Hahh…hauhh…”

Roswaal: “If you acted with belief that you could win, then I must say that your estimations are raaaaaaaaaather naive. Why yes, I am currently devoting a large allotment of magic to the algorithm to manipulate the weather. Hooooooooowever, I am not so careless to accordingly neglect what is aaaaaaaaaaat hand."

Roswaal tilts his head as he watches Ram, her shoulders heaving with every breath, and spreads flames to encircle them.

He creates the three hues of flame again, which take the form of giant fireballs in his hand before moving to revolve around him. Their numbers compound with every revolution, gaining speed. It only takes a few seconds before Roswaal is veiled in a vortex of chromatic fireballs.

Roswaal: "This is from one flame of each color. Ten flames of each type, for a total of thirty fireballs. You won't manage to dispose of them all with your current abilities."

Ram: "…"

Roswaal: "Although, were you intending to confront me while my combat strength was minimized, it was the epitome of foolishness to aid in the fight against Garfiel. My abilities may be diminished, but that means nothing when your abilities are diminished as well. I can tell from the mana overflowing from you. —You transformed, didn't you."

Asks Roswaal, his voice low. Ram settles her breathing and answers only with a glance.

Perhaps having expected no reply, Roswaal shrugs.

Roswaal: "Of course you would turn out like this, should you transform without my aid. You may challenge me with only the slightest of mana, but you'll approach your limit within a minute of fighting. If we view this in terms of you expending your best efforts for the sake of your goal, it's an affront to the eyes."

Ram: "An affront…to the eyes, you say."

Roswaal: "Iiiiiiiiiiindeed, an affront to the eyes. You did state this before. When I said that you needed only wait two days to see if the world had utterly diverged from the gospel, you stated that would be pointless. I had been wondering what you meant at first…but I've contemplated it, and come to a solution."

Her breathing is calming down, but neither her stamina nor magic is replenishing. Roswaal knows this, and so he is holding off on attacking Ram to have this conversation.

It's another story if she starts being an obstacle, but Roswaal doesn't intend to kill Ram.

And Ram has to feel that this complacency of his is an insult.

Roswaal: "If we take your goal to be revenge, then the answer is simple. You may brutalize me when I am a cripple, but that will not appease you. That is the only reason I can conceive that you would abandon your chance for definite revenge by challenging me now. It is only when you slay me, partway through my own goals, that you will achieve revenge."

Ram: "…"

Roswaal: "That was partly my mistake for pressuring you into a choice at a critical moment when you were still young. It may have panicked you, after time passed and you realized thaaaaaaat fact. And so you've run amok to ensure the opportunity does not escape you. …Though, you can see how that turned out."

Ram: "—auh."

A sound slips from Ram's throat.

A hoarse, breathy sigh.

Roswaal's odd-colored eyes fixate on Ram, making sure not to miss a single one of her actions.

With that gaze upon her, Ram thinks back on everything she's done for the last half of her life.

Although she always knew it, recognizing it again, after all this time, does prick her.

Feeling the pain, Ram opens her mouth.

Wide, so wide, as she looks up at the sky—

Ram: “Ahahahahaahahahaha!”

Roswaal: “—Ram?”

They’re mirroring each other.

As she thinks of how Roswaal chortled earlier, the thrill only escalates inside her.

Her reasoning is entirely different to Roswaal’s, but yes indeed this is amusing. She has to laugh.

And of course she would. Because, in the end.

Ram: “After all the interactions, after all of that contact, you still haven’t realized how the other party feels.”

He’s dim, he’s insensitive, no, it’s something on an entirely different level.

He’s stubborn. He is fixated. He has determined that this would never happen, and so not moved an inch.

To him, it’s inconceivable that the passage of time would see feelings that started as revenge transform into yearning.

Ram: “I have been by your side…because of the Contract.”

Roswaal: “Yes, indeed you have. In that smoldering village, you and I formed a Contract of vassalage. I still remember how, even without your horn, your eyes blazed wet with fury. And so I sealed that away through the Contract, and redirected your vehemence into loyalty. Although, I did believe that a day like this would someday come…”

Ram: “You’re right. You were right. I wished to murder you. But you stole that opportunity from me, and I proceeded to spend my days in the mansion with this inexplicable loyalty…and.”

Roswaal: “Unfettered from the Contract, you have today determined to sate your desire for rev—”

Roswaal is lining up his theories. It’s hilarious.

It’s truly as if he pays no attention to anything except his own feelings, she thinks.

Ram: “Master Roswaal, I am in love with you.”

Roswaal: “…”

Ram: “I wound up falling in love with you. That is why there is no purpose in attaining you once you are broken. That is not the Master Roswaal who I desire.”

Roswaal’s eyes shoot open as his body freezes rigid.

He is stunned, as if he had truly, seriously not anticipated this in the slightest.

Karlasar

He promptly shakes his head, attempting to come up with words, but his lips merely quiver with nothing meaningful coming out of them.

Ram: “Is something the matter?”

Roswaal: “Of, course there…are you, mocking me? After all of this, mocking me? You recognized that your strength is too lacking, and so are attempting to shake me mentally, and…”

Ram: “How could I possibly believe that such wiles would work on you, Master Roswaal? I am simply stating what I truly feel.”

Roswaal: “That only makes it even less conceivable!” Yells Roswaal, stomping at the ground.

Reflecting his agitated mental state, the shroud of fireballs flies into disarray. They soon come to a halt, floating at various points around the surroundings as Roswaal glares at Ram.

Roswaal: “You love me? What on earth are you saying. You detest me. I’m a man you detest. I’m a man partially responsible for the destruction of your birthplace. You’re meant to hate me so much you’d like to murder me!”

Ram: “I did at first. But not now. Now, I love you.”

Roswaal: “This idiotic…! Who would, think such a cheap…!”

Feelings that started as revenge must proceed to be revenge.

Feelings that become yearning must only ever start as yearning.

Roswaal stubbornly believes that people’s desires and feelings cannot change.

And so he cannot believe that Ram has changed her mind so dramatically as to alter her way of life.

Roswaal: “What about your revenge! Did you not pledge for it! Did you not face your ashen village, and swear upon the souls of your dead brethren that you would accomplish revenge!”

Ram: “I do think it wrong toward my brethren, and it does pain my heart to think of my birthplace. However, I cannot change that I have fallen in love. I am prioritizing my own feelings over those of the dead.”

Roswaal: “—!”

Ram: “And you are not my direct foe, Master Roswaal. Should my lust for revenge obscure my vision, that would be the more shameful course. …Would be my excuse.”

Roswaal is utterly lost for words.

Understand the situation right now!! would probably be an unreasonable demand. Roswaal is a man who has gone for a very, very long time while sticking to his feelings.

Wholeheartedly, persistently devoting his love to one single person, doing everything he could to make his wishes come true.

His emotions, his heart, and his belief that things ought to be this way are far too strong.

And so he cannot understand feelings that change over time, or understand that strength.

There’s really nothing she can do about the fact that she finds even this aspect of him darling.

Ram: “I shall never allow you to become an invalid.”

Roswaal: “…You’re contradicting yourself. No matter what your feelings are—no, doubly so presuming that they’re exactly what you stated—I don’t understand why you are challenging me now. If the gospel diverges, then I lose my purpose in life and mentally suffer. You are aware of this, so why!”

Ram: “Because this is the moment. Barusu, Lady Emilia, Garf…now that all of them have brought your heart close to wavering, I face my single and only moment of opportunity.”

So long as the Contract persists between Roswaal and Ram, Ram cannot defy Roswaal. That Ram is currently disobeying Roswaal is because her soul has judged that she is unfettered from the Contract, as Roswaal pointed out.

But is she truly? If one party believes that they fit the conditions, then they are exempted as a target for the Contract. Does the system of ‘Contracts’ truly possess such a vague and loose set of judgement criteria?

And so Ram pleads.

That she is not the only one who believes that the requirement to disregard the Contract, the divergence of the world and the gospel, has been met. That some corner of Roswaal’s mind has registered the same thing.

That this situation has arisen accordingly.

Roswaal looks utterly confused as Ram turns to face him, holds her breath, and dashes forth.

She draws her wand, wringing out the dregs of mana she has to cast a spell.

Roswaal: “—! It’s useless!”

Ram’s actions lead Roswaal to dispel his turmoil and order his floating fireballs to strike and stall her. But not a single one of the fireballs hits her as she keeps low to the ground, their heat doing nothing more than singeing her skin.

Ram has fulfilled the criteria needed to follow the gospel’s future until now—and he cannot determine whether to discard her. The fact that he cannot perceive Ram’s designs also plays into it.

Perhaps he might even regret killing her.

If so, then that alone is enough to elate her so magnificently that she forgets her previous melancholy.

Ram: “—El, Fula!!”

She concentrates the powers of wind, invisible destruction detonating before her.

Roswaal has prepared himself in fighting posture, but he is not her target. She aims for the ground beneath it, rupturing it open and sending a great explosion of dirt to drown out his field of vision.

Roswaal: “Do you think this smokescreen will…!”

Ram: “—!”

One sweep of Roswaal’s arm shatters the momentary veil of dirt into pieces.

The barrier fades to nothing, and as she watches it, Ram gives a sharp exhale and concentrates power to her forehead.

Ram: “…auh, ghh.”

Agony. Her vision drowns in scarlet as bloody tears spill from her bloodshot eyes.

Her muscles, her bones, both of them creak as she hears the noise of her tendons ripping.

She ignores all of it, gritting her teeth so hard that she shatters them as she steps forth. The ground beneath her shatters, and in that instant, Ram has transcended the limits of mortals.

Roswaal has batted the screen of dirt away—and Ram soars at him faster than a nanosecond.

He notices Ram, but before his eyes can even shoot open, she moves. Her outstretched arm reaches for Roswaal’s torso, and he swallows his breath as he realizes that her hand is contacting his chest.

Transformation. Nothing else could have fostered this advance in Ram’s abilities.

Although it is only momentary, Ram's strength currently exceeds the limits of the human body.

Roswaal must realize that it was his blunder not to consider that she could shatter his ribcage and pop his heart.

However,

Roswaal: "—Wh, at?"

When the shock and pain fails to come, Roswaal can only blubber in astonishment.

In the blink of an eye, Ram has skidded to a stop about ten meters away from Roswaal. She faces down, and vomits blood as she falls to her knees.

Roswaal furrows his brows, unable to comprehend the purpose behind Ram's actions.

But once he sees what is in Ram's hands, his expression instantly shifts.

Roswaal: "That!"

Ram: "To, me…this is, the root of all evil."

His face pale, Roswaal moves to start sprinting over. Ram responds merely by glancing up before, without any hesitation of all, giving a swing of her arm.

—And the gospel in her hands goes flying into one of the smoldering green flames.

Roswaal: "—!"

Roswaal screeches mutely, but still the blaze consumes the gospel and bursts even hotter. Alongside a satisfying boom, the ancient book transforms into a pile of green ash. Ram watches on, as if she has been yearning to see this for a very long time,

Ram: "—Now, finally."

Ram sighs in satisfaction, her cheeks growing flush.

—The fireball thrown out of rage pierces through her petite frame in the very next instant.

Chapter 126B:
We’ll Next Meet at a Tea Party

1

—She views the future.

???: “—Gone without, you cannot even wield a sword. Thief!!”

???: “Witness. The victor remains I.”

???: “Subaru, big sister Emilia, I know you must be so tired. I’m sorry. But I’m going to wind up being a burden too. I’m sorry. All the thanks I’d wanted to say could never be enough…”

—With every colored light she touches, Emilia sees a different future.

???: “To think that someone I wanted to kill so much was actually a kind person, what an incredible nightmare.”

???: “There exist feelings which mustn’t be spoken. Does it satisfy you, now that they have come to light?”

???: “Does this make you feel that you’ve seen your promise through? If it does…if it does, then I was better off bound and dead in that cave! If I was going to see this dawn, then I should have just offed myself sooner…! Shit, shit!”

???: “God I’m sorry. I’m weak and so this. God I’m sorry. I couldn’t make the kill, god I’m sorry. Now □□□ will always be alone forever. God I’m sorry for being so weak…”

—Woe, ire, death, rebirth, farewells, meetings, the future comes to her in many forms.

???: “Yes…my dear grandchild…must’ve grown up well…”

???: “I shall never perish to such nonsense as a curse!”

???: “It’s simply that I realized something. …That along the path up to today, I haaaaaaaaaadn’t been walking alone.”

???: “How come…there’s no soul inside?!”

—Must the future be despair? Is there nothing but sorrow and suffering?

???: “Just ‘s promised, ‘m fuckin’ killin’ yer! Yeh?! NATSUKI SUBARUIIII!!”

???: “Am I being so covetous? Am I saying anhything so indulgent? Don’t anhybody die, don’t anhybody weep…what is so complikkated about it?”

???: “After all, we must bleed ourselves to our very last drop to atone, yes?”

???: “Right and wrong and good and evil’s all a bunch’ve bullshit. You’re stopping right there. Say it’s Dragon or say it’s Witch, if you’re blocking the way then I’m…then we’re, gonna smash you.”

—Then, was it wrong of her to choose this path? Was she mistaken to wish for any favors?

???: “—I believe that to pray for favors is hubris. Prayers are for when you seek forgiveness.”

—In the final world of light, a girl that Emilia has never seen awake and speaking talks.

I’d like to have a proper conversation with her, she thinks.

The sentiment proves more than enough for her deny the rejection of everything.

2

Emilia’s vision clears, and she realizes that she is in a breezy meadow.

A hillock with a white table. Emilia herself sits upon a white chair, unable to remember what happened only a few seconds ago. But she does know that she is in a dream world.

Emilia: “Echidna?”

If anyone is going to greet her at the end of the Trial, then it’s going to be the thing’s supervisor, Echidna. Emilia casts her gaze around in search of her.

But even though she can see this field stretch on to the horizon, she sights no shelters or anything indicating the presence of people. And should she leave the table to go walking around, she might lose the table and never find it again.

She’s definitely right here in this spot, but it strangely feels like she might fall off the horizon. Emilia takes deep breaths to calm herself down, and decides to start moving if nobody’s around. Perhaps there’s an exit somewhere. She’ll find that, and get out of here. She’s got nothing to gain by wasting time here.

???: “It’s been like this forever—haa—but why is it that these situations—huu—always wind up being my post—haa? I can’t say I’m thrilled with it.”

Emilia: “…auh.”

Seeing the ball of hair that suddenly appears across the table from her, Emilia freezes.

She stares at this thing before her in shock, still halfway into standing up.

And gulps.

???: “Mm…an understandable reaction—haa—and the correct one—huu. The kid from before must’ve been a tad obtuse—haa.”

Emilia: “…”

Every word out this person’s mouth comes mixed with a gloomy sigh.

She is a rather listless woman with overwhelmingly long magenta hair, wearing a black robe. Her comments are not thorny at all, and she looks relaxed as anything.

—But Emilia regardless feels a pressure so intense it's practically strangling her.

If this person felt like it, then Emilia's head would be vanished in an instant.

Emilia has regained her past, and can now manipulate such a vast quantity of mana that her body cannot contain it all. Even though she has gained a massive boost in her capabilities as a solo fighter, she feels that she has no chance against this woman.

She'd kill Emilia as easily as swatting a fly—and Emilia knows this.

Woman: "You don't need to be so wary—huu. I'm not looking to hurt you, or to get hurt—haa. Since that'd be a drag—huu. But Echidna just doesn't want to see you so she—haa—forced me here."

Emilia: "I-I, see…"

Emilia gives a timid nod.

The pressure wreathed around this woman shows no signs of letting up. Nothing has changed about her ability to easily decimate Emilia. But if nothing is going to change about the fact that the woman can kill Emilia whenever she wants, then that'll stay the same regardless of whether she's scared or not.

Emilia inhales, holds her breath, exhales. Doing this, she forces herself to calm down.

Emilia: "You're here in Echidna's place…so you're also a witch?"

Woman: "—I see—haa—so you're braver than I thought—huu. That you're not timid during the critical moments—haa—might be you taking after your mother—huu."

Emilia: "You know about my Mother?"

Woman: “I can’t tell you anything, but yes—haa.”

The unexpected relation makes Emilia gulp, but the woman looks utterly exhausted after making that comment. Emilia could try to probe into it, but she probably wouldn’t get anything.

Thinking to herself: Someday, Emilia decides to temporarily shelve the topic of her mother. She has seen her past, seen an impossible future, and now Fortuna and Geuse’s light remains shining in her heart.

For now, that’s more than enough.

Emilia: “What would you like me to call you?”

Woman: “It’s nice when children don’t throw tantrums—huu—I’d like Typhon to get a lesson from you—haa. My name’s Sekhmet—huu. As you’ve guessed, I’m the Witch of Sloth—haa.”

Sekhmet leans her body onto the table, looking up as she gives a faint smile.

The bags under her eyes and the unhealthy-looking pallor to her skin are something of a concern, but her features are attractive, and she is a beautiful woman. Still, the word ‘witch’ and the ghastly aura she emanates do indicate that she is definitely not anyone ordinary.

Sekhmet: “I really couldn’t—huu—care less about how our names as witches are treated in the present—haa—so that doesn’t matter—huu. I just want to get this request done with—haa—and settle down into self-indulgent slumber—huu.”

Emilia: “Erm, if it’s such a bother for you…could no one else have done it? Echidna doesn’t have to be the one if she doesn’t want to…but aren’t there any other witches?”

Sekhmet: “You’re not going to—haa—get a conversation out of anyone else—huu. Minerva’s the only one who could manage an actual conversation here—haa—and she can’t show her face to you—huu.”

Emilia: “Minerva…”

Sekhmet speaks with awful rhythm thanks to her pauses to sigh. But hearing that she offers a better conversation than the other witches makes Emilia terrified of imagining what the others are like. But even that sentiment is overpowered by the strong feelings Emilia has for the word ‘Minerva’.

Emilia: “Minerva…”

Mutters Emilia to herself as she tilts her head.

The word feels horribly nostalgic, something that would stimulate her memories. But that said, Emilia cannot remember hearing it in any of her memories up until now, or in any of her recovered memories either.

But it’s a mysterious name, that could evoke thoughts of someone very close to her.

Sekhmet: “No sense talking about someone who isn’t here—haa. Anyway, I’m just here to pass a message along from Echidna—huu. Then I’m leaving it up to you what ideas you come up with to end the Trial—haa. Pretty easy job for me—huu.”

Emilia: “Erm, thank you for your efforts…?”

Sekhmet: “I’ll pretend that worked—haa. Now, listen closely—huu.”

Sekhmet calls out to the brooding Emilia, and lies her head sideways upon the table. She gazes up at Emilia, and with a sigh, sets her right hand on the table too.

Sekhmet: “In the third Trial—haa—you would’ve seen the future—huu. Those futures are possibilities of what will happen—haa—in this future where you decide to overcome this tomb—huu.”

Emilia: “Possible, futures.”

Sekhmet: “There’s a chance they’ll all happen—haa—and a chance none’ll happen—huu. Though, considering Echidna’s personality—haa—even I can tell that the futures you saw weren’t the nicest ones

—huu.”

What do the other witches think of Echidna? At the very least, it seems like Sekhmet considers Echidna as someone mean. Emilia can’t exactly say much on that.

Sekhmet’s opinion of Echidna is actually a little worse than what Emilia figures, but it’s difficult to demand a worse appraisal than ‘mean witch’ from Emilia.

Sekhmet: “The future splits into infinite pathways, and so derives possibilities—haa. But the futures you saw were all seeds thick with tragedy—huu. After they sprout and bud, what blossoms will come of them…? Haa. Are you prepared to wilfully walk a path of poison blooms that may leave everyone unhappy…? Huu.”

Emilia: “…”

Keeping silent, Emilia gazes earnestly at Sekhmet.

Sekhmet looks fatigued after giving such a long speech. But she soon furrows her brows when she notices Emilia’s gaze.

Sekhmet: “…I’m pretty sure that I already gave you the question, haa.”

Emilia: “Huh, what? That was the question? I answer that, and the Trial ends?”

Sekhmet: “That’s what it’d be—huu. …Though, considering your goal, you could say that the Trial was over the instant that you managed to get here—haa.”

Sekhmet makes it sound like a free round. Emilia gives a wry grin.

Emilia doesn’t mean any ill. But the issue is just so banal it surprised her. After all, it’s obvious how Emilia would respond.

Emilia: “Worlds that end tragically for everybody. No, I’m not prepared to see those at all.”

She has to think of memories that rip at her chest, that claw at her heard.

In that world of darkness, amid those colored lights, Emilia heard their wails times upon times.

Emilia: “These are futures where everyone might meet a sad end. In the dark world before this, I saw a lot of them. Where everyone was crying, suffering, angry. I don’t know the details of what happened, but I don’t want to see a future like that.”

Sekhmet: “…But, I can assure that if you continue on the path you’re on—huu—it’s highly likely for such things to happen—haa. Is that going to make you flee? Huu.”

Emilia: “No. That’s going to make me face it.”

Sekhmet narrows her eyes as Emilia shakes her head and puffs out her chest.

The overwhelming pressure threatens to consume her, but Emilia’s spirit will not yeild.

If she comes close to losing heart, memories of her mother and father support her. If she comes close to giving up, she has someone who will encourage her to keep going.

Emilia: “We’ll sprint so fast we dodge the sad futures. But if that isn’t going to work, we’ll ride our momentum to soar over them. If people fall in the jump, we’ll put in our all and pull them back up. And if we keep doing this, we’ll wipe away every single tear.”

Sekhmet: “You sure sound confident for being so reckless—haa. When you merely talk about ideals and what’s convenient for you, you’ll break the instant that you slip up—huu. You don’t think that’ll happen? Haa.”

Emilia: “If I were alone, it might.”

Emilia responds fearlessly to Sekhmet’s mocking words.

In a sense, Emilia’s stance is one that means being dependant on others. But that is the option that Emilia has left, after never being able to choose a single thing for herself.

Sekhmet: "…"

And Sekhmet looks utterly floored.

She immediately looks down, the table and her hair concealing her expression. When,

Sekhmet: "Pff, khaah…haah, hahahaha! Ahh, yes! So that's it! Yes, that's it, that's definitely it, of course you'd give that answer now! Ahhh, hilarious!"

Emilia: "Is it really that funny?"

Sekhmet: "It's an absolute riot to me—haa. Okay? Huu. So, Echidna, right—haa. She's this terrible wacko even after her death—huu—who enjoys watching the Trial's challengers agonize over their pasts and presents and futures alone—haa. The idea that her plans would be destroyed, and like this…ahh, it's hilarious—huu."

Sekhmet laughs uproariously, taking pained breaths while speaking with cheer. She lifts her head and sits upright, leaning against the chair back to view Emilia from straight-on. Sekhmet's eyes host a nostalgic gleam as she smiles,

Sekhmet: "The Trial presumes that you're taking it alone—haa—and you answer it by saying that you won't face your challenges alone—huu. —If Echidna heard this, she'd moan sour grapes all day, all while looking dead serious—haa."

Emilia: "Oh. So that's the reply I could've got. …Mhm, I sooo want to see that expression on her too."

Sekhmet: "She's a terrible loser, so I doubt she'd let you see her looking like that—huu. That's a privilege reserved for us dream-dwellers—haa."

Emilia: "So unfair."

Emilia pouts, which just makes Sekhmet's expression more gleeful.

To an outside observer, the harmonious joy abounding from them might make them look like friends who have known each other for decades.

Sekhmet: “Though, in exchange for that, I’ll bestow you with your Trial results—haa. As you’d expect, there’s nothing to complain about—in fact, you pass with a gold star—huu.”

Emilia: “Should it really be that simple?”

Sekhmet: “Did you want a more oblique answer, or some dramatic spiel—haa? Apologies, but you’d be wrong to expect something like that from me—huu. I’m the supervisor right now, and my word goes—huu. …The Trial’s over without any issue—haa.”

With a deep breath, Sekhmet snaps her fingers. She fails to get a sound on the first attempt, or the second, but on the third try finally manages a click —and a breeze gusts from behind Emilia. Emilia glances behind her, her silver hair swaying, to find that a door has appeared at the bottom of the hill. It doesn’t look like it leads anywhere, but Emilia intuitively knows that this door is the dream world’s exit.

Emilia: “You mean…once I go through that door, the Trial’s over?”

Sekhmet: “That’s the one—haa. Congratulations—huu. In the four hundred years —haa—since this tomb was made and Echidna’s Trials came into operation, nobody had defeated these Trials—huu. Well, not that there was an abundance of challengers in the first place—haa.”

Emilia: “…Yeah. Not many people have been to the Sanctuary, and meeting the requirement to get trapped in the Sanctuary is actually surprisingly tough.”

Sekhmet: “There’s that too, but…well, it doesn’t really matter—huu. It’s all over anyway—haa.”

It does bother Emilia how Sekhmet starts getting vague, but she doesn’t pry into it. More importantly, she’s elated to hear that the Trial is over.

Honestly, she doesn't feel any sense of achievement yet. It hasn't hit her yet. She had struggled so much with the first Trial that she'd almost broken down, thinking this whole thing impossible.

She did feel that she came here resolved not to lose, but even so.

Sekhmet: "You don't look like you agree with it—huu."

Emilia: "Erm, well I am kinda bothered. Sooo just kinda bothered."

Sekhmet: "Echidna doesn't present problems that can't be solved—haa. It's incorrect to say that's the whole of it, but that's basically the whole of it—huu."

When it's one witch saying it about another, it's probably right.

Emilia nods reluctantly in a show of agreement. Sekhmet glances at her, examining her, before giving a small wave of her hand on the table.

Sekhmet: "Once you exit—haa—that door behind you, it's goodbye to this dream castle—huu. Which also means that's the end of the Trial—haa. And that you're qualified to enter the room—huu—in the back of the Trial chamber—haa."

Emilia: "Open, the door. Mm, right. And go in there…what's in there?"

Sekhmet: "The mechanism that keeps the tomb functioning is—huu. Once it's stopped—haa—the Sanctuary's duties will come to their end—huu. You'll how how to stop it once you go in—haa."

Emilia: "I stop the tomb's functions, and the Sanctuary's duties end. So the barrier disappears."

If the barrier is extinguished, then Emilia and the people of the Sanctuary will be able to exit the forest.

She doesn't know how many people will leave for the outside world once the barrier is opened. Or whether life on the outside will truly be to their benefit.

But they can’t stay closed up in here any longer.

Just like how Subaru argued Garfiel down, Emilia has to convince them. This is the end of a period spent in a place with stopped time.

Once time is moving again, how are they going to make a place for themselves to live? If possible, then Emilia wants to search for the answer with them.

She can guide them by the hand, give a push to their backs, and no matter how hard it is, she can walk at their side.

Though it’s an unreliable, shaky, and fledgling demonstration of leadership.

Sekhmet: “It’s enough.”

Says Sekhmet, as if she’s seen into Emilia’s thoughts.

That comment alone doesn’t come with any of her characteristic sighs. Sekhmet said it for her while looking her straight-on, and it makes Emilia gulp.

And smile.

Emilia: “Mhm, thank you. That’s how I want to go my way.”

With that, Emilia gets to her feet.

She brushes her hair into order, before bowing her head to Sekhmet.

She doesn’t really know why she’s doing it.

But it feels like simply saying a goodbye won’t be enough. Why is it that she feels so grateful? Sekhmet surely won’t tell her.

She pushes her seat in, and descends the hill on her way to the door.

The door feels emepheral as it stands there in the middle of the meadow, and Emilia realizes that she feels somewhat sad to be leaving the castle in a dream.

White table, crisp breeze. Bright sunshine, perfect weather.

It would be so fun to hold a tea party around that table.

Emilia: “Miss Sekhmet. Can you tell Echidna something for me?”

Sekhmet: “…Let’s hear it—haa.”

Emilia: “If we ever get the chance to see each other again, let’s have a tea party. Even if I’m doing it in a dream, I’ll definitely welcome it.”

Sekhmet: “—No problem at all. I’ll tell her.”

Her hand on the doorknob, Emilia glances back to address Sekhmet, who smiles.

Emilia returns the smile, and opens the door.

Beyond the door is darkness.

But for some reason, she feels no hesitation about stepping into it. Emilia already know exactly where it leads.

She has overcome her past, chosen her present, and now meets a door to the future.

3

—Feeling somewhat suffocated, Emilia sits up on the hard ground.

Coming back from the Trial isn’t the same as waking up from sleep.

It’s not that her body fell into slumber, but that her consciousness was taken from her body led somewhere else. Her body and soul were in different places, and seeing that her soul wasn’t sleeping, of course it’s different from sleep.

If this were the same kind of thing as normal sleep, then considering that Emilia is rather bad at waking up, quite a lot of time would pass until she was really awake. Puck would be the one to wake her up before, but he isn't here now, and so it would've eaten considerable time. And now she will need to learn how to deal with this on her own, for the future.

Emilia: "—Ah, gotta stop."

Emilia shakes her head to dispel her sleepy thoughts, and puts her hand to the wall as she gets to her feet. She feels pretty much fine. It still doesn't feel like she's overcome the Trials. But if what Sekhmet told her in the dream was true—

Emilia: "I should be able to open the door."

She looks to the back of the chamber, sighting the stone door across the small room.

The door hadn't moved an inch when she pushed or pulled it before, and just like how the tomb's walls glimmer slightly to Emilia's vision, this door also looks to be cloaked in light.

Unlocked. Might be what it means.

Emilia's footsteps peal as she approaches the door. As she stands before it, she holds her breath for a moment.

On the other side of this door will be something that liberates the Sanctuary.

Sekhmet said she'd know what to do, but honestly Emilia's a little worried that she won't. Emilia isn't exactly confident about her smarts.

Is she not allowed to bring anyone along with her? Though, alongside the fact that not many people can get this far inside, she gets a feeling that the door won't open if anyone else is around.

Perhaps this is all happening because of how smoothly it all went: Emilia cannot erase her paranoia about this door.

Perhaps it's all a deception, she wonders. You could that being warier than before, but it's a wariness limited to things connected to Echidna. A sense of caution she gets because she knows the personality of the person who set this up.

Emilia: “Anyway, have to go in. Okay, here I go.”

She balls her hands into fists to psych herself up, and moves to put her hand to the door. Should she push or pull? While she considers the issue, and just as her fingertips graze the door—

—The stone door slides sideways to make a path for Emilia.

Emilia: “…I feel like Echidna’s smiling so nastily right now.”

Mutters Emilia, pouting at her spoiled start.

Emilia gets the feeling that this door’s gimmick is some very elaborate pestering from Echidna, which slightly calms her tension.

She gives a sigh, gets herself back in the mood, and steps into the room.

The door opens into a room less than half the size of the Trial chamber.

It’s smaller than a room that’s already small. Just two beds from the Roswaal Mansion would be enough to occupy all the space.

She hadn’t expected the room to be this cramped. Her eyes widen at how constrained it is, before she spots the thing in the back of the room and puts her hand to her mouth in shock.

—In the back of the room is something like a transparent coffin, with a woman lying inside.

Her time is frozen, keeping her so beautiful that you could wonder if she was only sleeping.

The coffin looks to be made out of magic stone, and when Emilia touches it to examine its purity, she is shocked at how superior it is. Such high-grade crystal would excel even Puck’s old anchor.

A woman is sealed in magic stone capable of sealing things superior to the Great Spirit Puck. —Of course, she isn’t breathing. Emilia feels no life from her, and what remains is a husk.

Her long, sleek hair is white as frost. Her cheeks and neck, what areas of skin are visible, possess the beauty of virgin snow. Emilia's breathing near hitches before her stunning visage.

Her beautiful form is garbed in perfectly black raiment, with not a single superfluous color present, the dress-like vestment crafted to her in miraculous concord.

A beautiful woman who can be described with the two hues 'white' and 'black'.

True beauty—the utter lack of need for any superfluous accessories—would probably feel terror when faced with this black and white countenance.

Emilia: "She's beautiful…"

Emilia's thoughts escape her lips.

Emilia would find another strikingly beautiful woman if she looked in the mirror, but her sentiments have nothing to do with that.

She is simply so enraptured by the beauty of this thing before her that she is absolutely moved.

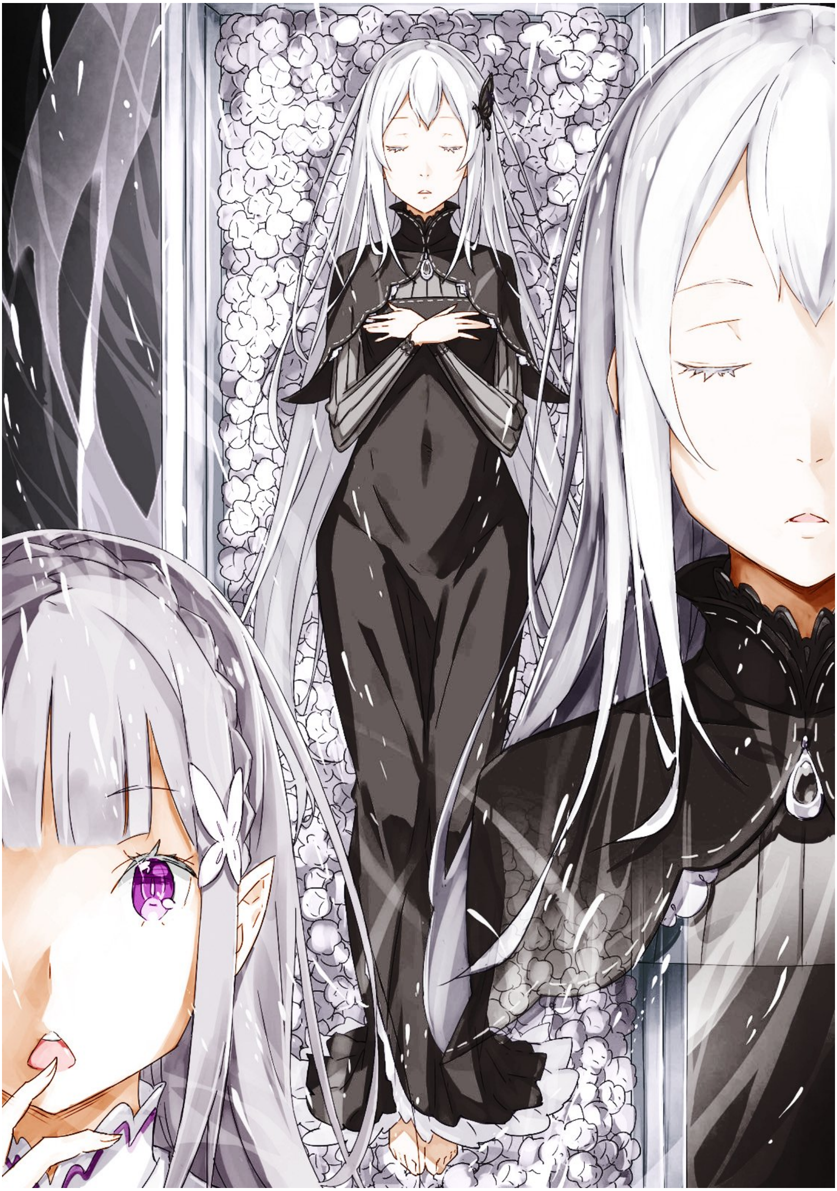
A beautiful woman of black and white.

That would be someone she met in the castle of dreams, the Witch of Greed.

In the depths of the tomb, waiting there beyond the defeat of the Witch of Greed's trials is,

Emilia: "She looks like Echidna…but who is she?"

A woman reminiscent of the Thirst for Knowledge Incarnate, but who Emilia has never seen before.



Chapter 127B:
Never Quit

1

The only observable thing in this room is the white woman in the coffin.

Emilia: “Then, this thing she’s entombed in…is the mechanism to turn off the barrier?”

Says Emilia after looking over the room, looking perplexed with her head tilted.

There are no nice and obvious levers, or magic stones you just have to crush. A dim glow shrouds the transparent magic stone encasing her, and Emilia can tell that it is siphoning mana. The only functioning thing in this place is this coffin.

Emilia: “Seriously, who is she…maybe Echidna’s mother?”

Emilia thinks back on the witch who always looked so disgusted around Emilia.

She also had white hair and wore black clothes, like the woman in the coffin, and Emilia remembers vividly how attractive her features were as well.

The visage of the witch in her memories and of the woman in the coffin have many points in common.

Like the positioning of her closed eyes, or the shape of the bridge from her lips to her nose.

Echidna had looked like a late teen, while the woman in the coffin is more in her early twenties.

Perhaps it’s better to think her Echidna’s older sister than her mother.

Emilia: "And…there's no name. But this is supposed to be Echidna's tomb."

Except Emilia goes in, to find that the woman in the coffin is not Echidna.

Perhaps the tomb's name was a deception, or—

Emilia: "Maybe this is Echidna, and the girl I saw in the dream wasn't Echidna?"

It's a crazy theory, and even Emilia has to shake her head.

Leaving aside whatever Echinda would say, Sekhmet surely would have mentioned something. And now it's too late for Emilia to simply regard anyone else as being 'Echidna'.

Emilia: "It's Echidna's tomb, but someone else is sleeping here… might be what's happening." If so, then they better change the name of the tomb.

It says that ECHIDNA RESTS HERE. But it's someone else's place of slumber, which causes lots of problems. Offerings will be going to the wrong person, among other things.

It's not the most clear-cut of conclusions, but still Emilia reaches it as she inspects the coffin, taking care not to touch the thing.

She glances over the flow of mana. It appears that the coffin and the tomb are absorbing minuscule amounts of mana from the earth linked to the tomb, and are using that mana to power some kind of algorithm.

It's an infinitesimal load of mana it's absorbing, but it's still powering as something as huge as the barrier, indicating that it's gathering the mana from quite a large area.

'Earth linked to the tomb' had been a literal statement.

The entire breadth of the forest inside the barrier is probably the tomb's power source. And the tomb takes tiny loads of mana at a time so that it won't affect that power source.

Emilia: “It’s amazing…so amazing, that I have no idea what it’s doing…” The algorithm is siphoning a flow of mana, powering the magical faculties.

Emilia can write simpler algorithms, but the complexity of the algorithm for the barrier around the Sanctuary far exceeds her comprehension.

If she stops these processes, she doubts that they will ever restart.

Not that there’s any need to restart them.

Emilia: “There. If I cut off this flow, that will probably sever the supply.”

Emilia follows the flow of mana and locates the origin point for the barrier, which uses the coffin as its nucleus.

Inside the tomb, where the woman’s hands are folded atop her stomach—is the exact point into which the mana flows. If Emilia meddles with the mana there to disrupt the algorithm, then that will terminate all of this tomb’s faculties.

Emilia: “…”

For a moment, she hesitates.

Terminating the tomb’s faculties will probably damage the mechanism that starts the Trial. Which means that she’ll no longer be able to enter the castle of dreams.

—She will probably never get to have that tea party with Echidna.

The witches, or at least Sekhmet, know about Emilia’s mother.

She had felt both awe and nostalgia for Sekhmet’s overwhelming power. She wants to know what exactly that sense of familiarity signifies.

If she cannot enter the castle of dreams, she is furthering herself from that goal. And that—

Emilia: “—I just can’t let go, can I?”

With that mutter, Emilia disrupts the weak flow of mana transmitting from the coffin to her fingertips.

A shift occurs in the power that supports the Sanctuary’s faculties and comprises its barrier. It meddles with the critical parts of the algorithm, compounding from a small into a massive alteration.

The glow eventually melts away, all signs of the algorithm vanishing from the magic stone coffin. All that remains after one last flash of light is the pure magic stone, with the woman still sealed inside.

Emilia: “…I guess that’s the end.”

Having observed no visible changes, Emilia timidly looks around the area. The flow of mana previously circling through the tomb is gone, leaving the tomb as nothing more than massive stone building.

With a quiet sigh, Emilia leans against the coffin.

The tomb has probably stopped rejecting the unqualified now. Emilia ought to bring Roswaal or Ryuzu inside, being that they probably know what’s going on, and ask them who the person slumbering here is.

Emilia: “It’s over…yes, it’s over…”

By repeating the statement over and over, Emilia attempts to catch the truth that she is not feeling.

She thinks back on the lofty talk she gave to Roswaal before challenging the tomb.

Roswaal had told her: All you have to do is procure the results you desire.

Emilia couldn’t suppose what his sentiment had been, but she doubted that he wanted her to beat the Trial. Though, he was also the one who beckoned her here and was endorsing her as a Selection Candidate, leaving her befuddled as to his reasoning.

Emilia: “Teacher…is what he said, right?”

What she also recalls is this person who Roswaal called TEACHER.

Even someone at the pinnacle of magicianhood like Roswaal would, naturally, have had a master.

Roswaal’s master, that being this person called TEACHER, had started the Sanctuary with him.

Emilia: “And maybe…that was you.”

Thinks Emilia as she strokes the coffin.

If Roswaal had his Teacher, someone irreplaceable to him, then perhaps this white woman would suitably be it.

Emilia: “—I need to talk to everyone.”

Emilia shakes her head and pulls her gaze away from the coffin.

Though, she will have to postpone the talk about the entombed woman. According to Subaru, if they fail to exit the Sanctuary before tomorrow night—that is, dawn of the day after next—then something terrible is going to happen.

If anything obviously out of the ordinary happens in the Sanctuary, run away as fast as you can, he said.

Though she has a whole day of extra time, she doesn’t know whether any unforeseen circumstances are going to pop up.

She trots out of the room and into the hallway, making her way to the exit. If things are still the same, then Ryuzu and the people of the Sanctuary should be waiting for her outside.

Emilia’s footsteps peal over the stone as she runs down the corridor, before exiting the dark tomb for open plaza.

Where,

Emilia: “—Huh?”

Met with a blizzard raging through the Sanctuary, Emilia breathes a hazy, white breath.

2

The snow encompasses everything in sight.

The gale roars close by, and the snow thieves her body of warmth. After a white puff of breath, Emilia’s amethyst eyes blink as her throat freezes in shock.

—What on earth happened?!

???: “—Lady-lia!”

The wind howls. Her chilled ears throb in pain.

Frigid gusts feel to slice at Emilia’s skin, dressed lightly as she is, when she hears a voice calling from beyond the blizzard and stops still.

Snow has already accumulated up to Emilia’s knees and threatens to swamp her down. She takes every step forcefully, trudging through the frost, to find silhouettes gathered beyond the veil of white.

They must be the people of the Sanctuary. Meaning that they waited for Emilia in this blizzard, without ever retreating indoors—

Emilia: “Everyone! Why are you all outside in this sn…huh?”

Emilia imagines everyone huddled together to stave off the cold, when she stops.

There are about forty Sanctuary dwellers including Ryuzu. That’s a huge number to start with, but Emilia also spots someone who shouldn’t be here.

???: “Lady Emilia! Is the Trial over?!”

The speaker is a young man with a crew cut.

Emilia knows him. Because she spoke with him before coming to the Sanctuary, and she would have spoken to him even had he not acknowledged her.

It's a youth from Earlham Village's young men's brigade.

Seeing him, when he's supposed to have left the Sanctuary several hours ago on Otto's instructions, makes Emilia's eyes shoot open. And what surprises her even more is that it's not just him.

With crewcut as their leader, Emilia spots several other people from Earlham. They have come in carriages, huddling with the people of the Sanctuary inside the vehicles or in its shadow to endure the blizzard.

Emilia: "Wh-Why is everyone…? But, didn't you evacuate?"

Man: "Yes, we did. On Sir Subaru and Mr. Otto's instructions. They said that the dragons know the way, so just run."

Emilia: "Then why?! Didn't you hear that it's going to be dangerous here?"

Man: "We have heard. And we were told."

The youth grits his teeth, before raising his head and pointing beyond the forest.

Man: "To wait outside the forest, return once the signal appears from the Sanctuary, and retrieve those still here."

Emilia: "Huh?"

Man: "Such as Lady Ram and the others. Anyway, they would fire magic into the sky. We were to return to the Sanctuary once we saw it, load the residents into carriages, and leave."

Emilia: "Who gave these instructions?!"

Man: "Mr. Otto did."

Hearing Otto's name makes Emilia think of that flaky-looking merchant.

Though, no matter what impression he gives, he is Subaru's friend. Every time she sees the two talking jovially, it reaffirms Emilia's assessment that he's someone capable of rivalling Subaru. Otto had definitely planned a lot of the happenings in the Sanctuary, starting with the Garfiel affair, while acting as Subaru's co-conspirator.

Meaning that these instructions are hugely significant.

Emilia: "B-But, this was still reckless. The blizzard is blowing so hard…you should've known that doing this was crazy!"

The man says nothing.

Emilia: "What's wrong?"

The man makes an awkward-looking expression and averts his gaze. Emilia doesn't overlook his reaction, instead pressing him further.

Emilia's amethyst gaze pierces him. He puts his hand to his brow, and sighs a frigid-white sigh.

Man: "Mr. Otto told us that the truly dangerous thing would be if it snows prior to the signal. Since snowfall marks the time limit…he told us to immediately leave the forest then."

Emilia: "They even knew about the snowfall…no, just, nevermind that. Why did you come, then?!"

Man: "—Because it snowed."

The man straightens his back and gives his firm reply to Emilia's wails.

His gaze is so strong, Emilia falls speechless.

They knew that snowfall meant danger.

And they saw it snowing in the Sanctuary, and understood that they had reached the time limit for that danger. With that knowledge, they chose to come here.

They sped here, to where the residents of the Sanctuary were in danger.

Man: “We suspected that Sir Subaru or yourself would have done exactly this.”

Emilia: “…”

With a wry smile, the man answers the question in Emilia’s throat.

So the evacuees overlooking the carriages behind him were Earlham’s young men brigade. Since their goal is to evacuate the people of the Sanctuary. Everyone unneeded must have left them and evacuated. That said, those who left would be forced into the tribulation of evacuating by foot. And these men were here, because they judged that this was correct.

Man: “Lady Emilia, if the Trial is over…can they exit this place?”

Emilia: “Y-Yes, they should. But, with this snow and wind…”

The man gazes at the ground, clicking his tongue in frustration.

Snow has piled so thick that walking even a short distance is a trial. Carriage wheels won’t find any purchase in this; they are stranded.

But if they could at least find somewhere warm, where many people could bide through the cold—

Emilia: “If we can’t relocate as far as the cathedral…let’s get everyone inside the tomb. The mana there keeps the inside warm, and we don’t have to worry about the building collapsing beneath the snow.”

Man: “It’s possible to go in?”

Emilia: “I turned off the tomb’s dangerous mechanisms, everything’s dandy now. Anyway, are you able to transport everyone as far as the tomb? And the dragons should be loosed from the carriages and let inside too.”

The six dragons had accommodated the brigade and brought them all the way back here. Even in this instant, the dragons' carriages are protecting two digit columns' worth of people. It's inconceivable that they could possibly abandon the dragons.

The man nods with a, "definitely."

This should be good enough to deal with the snow for the moment. The issue now is that something dangerous is going to happen alongside the snowfall.

Emilia: "I wish we'd actually talked about this beforehand!"

Emilia mourns the lack of time she had to speak with Subaru before challenging the Trials. This probably happened because Subaru didn't want to leave Emilia with anything that would needlessly worry her.

Though she's glad for his thoughtfulness, it's ridiculous that it's going to hamper her reaction to the danger.

Emilia can think of three people who, like Subaru's group, probably know about the snow. That is Roswaal, Ram, and—

???: "Yer've done well ter make it back ter us, Lady Emilia."

Emilia: "Miss Ryuzu!"

A pink-haired girl hops out of a carriage and onto the snow—Ryuzu. With now short she is, the snow that reaches to Emilia's knees reaches to her thighs. She trudges laboriously through the snow while Emilia hurriedly approaches her.

Emilia: "The Trial's all over now! Is everybody here?!"

Ryuzu: "All erv the Sanctuary's people, en all erv the humans who came back fer us err present, yes. But…"

Emilia: "But?"

Ryuzu: "Miss Ram and Lil' Roz ain't here. The two'erve them have been somewhere else since before it started snowing."

Emilia gazes over the people and the carriages.

She does not spot that familiarly bizarre outfit, nor that dependable pink-haired girl.

Emilia: “If I don’t search for them…Miss Ryuzu! Do you know? What’s going to happen if we stay in the Sanctuary with all this snow?”

Ryuzu: “…”

Ryuzu’s cheeks stiffen and she lowers her gaze. Emilia recognizes what this means.

Ryuzu knows what is happening. She knows what the danger is.

Emilia: “Please tell me, Miss Ryuzu. We have to prevent it.”

Ryuzu: “But yer see, the timing fer it’s off. Lil’ Su said that Lil’ Roz’s planning fer snow ter fall tomorrow night, so there muster’ve been some mistake fer it to be snowing now…”

Emilia: “What mistake, it is snowing right now! So! We need to do whatever we need to do when the snow comes! Miss Ryuzu!”

Emilia puts her hands on Ryuzu’s small shoulders as she attempts to persuade her.

Ryuzu’s sour expression shifts, until she’s left staring at Emilia in dumb shock.

Emilia: “Wh-What’s wrong, Miss Ryuzu?”

Ryuzu: “…Lady Emilia. Have yer gone into the building deep in the Sanctuary’s forest?”

Emilia: “Deep in the forest? No, I haven’t…”

Emilia tilts her head in confusion.

Ryuzu: “That isn’t posser…”

Starts Ryuzu, before looking at the tomb behind Emilia.

Ryuzu: “Then maybe there wers sermthing in the tomb…that seemed special, perhaps? Like, perhaps…a giant magic stone, er something similerr.”

Emilia: “—There was. A sooo giant magic stone. I kinda wanted you and Roswaal to look at it later…”

Emilia glances around the area, then draws her lips near to Ryuzu’s ear.

So that nobody else can hear her, as they begin preparations to move the dragons.

Emilia: “There was a woman inside the magic stone. I don’t know who she was.”

Ryuzu: “—!”

This information rocks Ryuzu’s expression.

Ryuzu’s eyes shoot open as she stares at Emilia. After a long, long sigh,

Ryuzu: “Then…”

Ryuzu nods as if agreeing with something.

Ryuzu: “Understood. Lady Emilia, ask whatever yer wish. I’m obligated ter answer you. Obligated ter follow yer orders.”

Emilia: “I’m not ordering anything!”

Ryuzu: “Listen. That thing yer touched in the tomb ers a magic stone that picks who’s qualified ter command LEWES. Yer now hold those qualifications instead erv Lil’ Gar. I…no, we, shall obey you. Please order us however yer wish.”

With that solemn reply, Ryuzu attempts to lower herself while thigh-deep in snow. This will result in her kneeling and burying herself head-deep in snow, and panics Emilia. She promptly grabs Ryuzu by the shoulders to stop her.

Emilia: “Awuh! Right, okay! So I can ask things from you, Miss Ryuzu. Then I’ll ask this. Please tell me what happens when there’s snow in the Sanctuary.”

Ryuzu: “…Lil’ Su says that once it snows in the Sanctuary, the witchbeast SIZEABLE HARE will come. It’s drawn here by the mana in the algorithm ter do something as massive as change the weather ter snowfall…ers the word.”

Emilia: “Algorithm to change the weather…then, somebody’s behind this?!” Ryuzu silently nods.

This is magic immense enough to manipulate the weather. Puck could easily do this, if he was being serious. Which makes Puck the most suspicious candidate, but considering Ryuzu’s attitude and the context of the situation, Emilia immediately lands on the culprit.

Emilia: “…Is it Roswaal?”

Ryuzu: “Most likely. I think Miss Ram left ter try and stop him. But if the snow came anyway, then it’s possible that…”

Emilia: “Stop. I don’t want to think about it. Anyway I need to find them. Miss Ryuzu, I’m going to start searching the village for them. If you have any ideas where they could—”

Ryuzu: “No need fer that, Lady Emilia.”

Ryuzu interrupts Emilia with incredible confidence.

It’s like she knows exactly what Emilia’s thinking, and it makes Emilia gulp.

And,

Ryuzu: “Us Ryuzu’s keep a close eye on everything in the Sanctuary. —We’ll find and get yer ter them in a jiffy.”

Ryuzu gives Emilia her stamp of approval.

Ram, as she lies unconscious, almost looks to be merely sleeping.

Roswaal: “…Ram?”

Roswaal draws the fallen, limp girl into his arms, jerking her . But Ram gives no reply.

This girl. Who would put aside anything to give Roswaal’s words priority. Ram.

Of course she doesn’t reply.

Ram is dying this very instant. And it’s all because of Roswaal.

The burning of the gospel had sent him into a fury. His vision seethed with crimson, he had no idea what was anything anymore, but he knew that he could not forgive Ram for doing this and—

Roswaal: “…”

—Struck her with a ball of fire while she was undefended, blasting her away.

She had overtaxed herself with imperfect oni strength, and burdened herself with the exact same fatigue only hours earlier. Ram’s body had reached its limit. When a fireball blasted her.

Her life hangs in the balance.

Roswaal: “…Ram.”

Roswaal cannot remember what he thought as he drew near to her prone form and touched her.

Even now, as he holds her close and gazes at her sleeping, he does not think anything.

Roswaal regarded Ram as an incredibly convenient pawn.

She had gone through ordeals by his hand, and their Contract preserved an extremely simple relationship between them.

He exposed his true thoughts only to Ram, and spoke of his goals only to Ram. He believed that, once that goal was achieved, he would hand himself over to her as his reward for his accomplice.

But Ram betrayed Roswaal partway through his course.

Ram's statements had been correct; going by her Contract, the script for the situation had not unfolded as Roswaal intended, and her rebellion was her pre-established revenge.

So he will not fault Ram. If forced to say anything, then he would've liked her to postpone her revenge and administer it once the situation about the barrier had been definitely determined. Then there was the topic of his bet with Subaru. Garfiel had been unexpectedly pliant, and some sympathetic-sounding talk had seen Emilia reattempt the Trial, but ultimately Subaru's speeches were the ramblings of a weakling.

It is impossible to defy a predetermined future. The path to reach that future may change, but events will still lead to the destined end. Should someone stray from the path leading to the correct ending, what awaits is doom.

But they're still resisting it, and it makes Roswaal laugh. And the fact that Roswaal knows this, and knows how weak he is for fearing their actions, also brings laughter.

Why are they trying to change anything? He can't understand it.

Once any feeling reaches its peak, once it apexes, it will never fade in intensity. If you love someone, if your heart ever blazes with love for someone, then that heat, that brilliance, ought to be eternal.

And the same concept applies even if the emotion in question is hatred.

Feelings you have held for a long, long time ought to ascend to legitimacy. Feelings fostered over time are ironclad, never to yield to anyone. They absolutely must be.

Garfiel's hatred for the outside has shattered.

Emilia has accepted her detested and sorrowful past.

And Ram's endless, vengeful hatred for Roswaal has,

Ram: "I am in love with you, Master Roswaal."

Roswaal: "—!!"

A love confession like a curse, burning deep in his ears.

Words that came from the mouth of the girl in his arms, which absolutely never should have.

Had the Contract been binding her heart or soul, then he would have understood it. Her burning desire for revenge had been converted into subordination to Roswaal, and her hatred into affection. Which was why Roswaal had Ram assist him in his goals more than anyone else, and trusted her for what would come after their realization more than anyone else.

Because Roswaal believed in her love-converted hatred, and her vengeful desire to kill him. Because he believed in the hatred in the eyes of the girl he first met, and how she gazed at him with absolute murder.

—And yet Ram betrayed her own vengeance, to extol love.

Roswaal: "Why did you, Ram? …I don't understand it…"

Roswaal hears how her faint breathing grows distant, and senses that Ram's life is ending.

Her heartbeat fades. Something screams that this mustn't continue. His right eye aches. Aches, so terribly. Stop! Stop asserting yourself. He's going to lose himself.

What should he do? What must he do? He cannot tell what it is he needs to do, and what it is he mustn't do. He cannot remember it. He cannot conceive it.

He looks around the area. Nothing here is what he seeks. The gospel, which told Roswaal of the correct path, has been lost in flames. Nobody will teach Roswaal. What is the choice he must make here? Nobody will teach him.

There is nothing for it now.

Roswaal: “—Wailing wind beckons the snow, light upon the earth repatriates to sky. Each droplet is silence given form, ivory untouched by past karma’s favor laments unchanging eternity—”

A canto.

This hummed, lilting canto gives direction to the power wreathed around Roswaal L. Mathers. The vast store of mana interacts with the refined algorithm, bringing dark clouds to the night forest. Frozen wind whips past, and a chill cold enough to freeze to the core rages through the Sanctuary. Clouds burdened with snow shroud all of the enclosed forest, and white frost dances to the earth.

—This is the power of the massive-scale magic algorithm ULTIMILLION.

Roswaal: “—ugh, khh.”

The canto ends, and the extensively-held magical power is released.

A massive load of mana is ripped out of Roswaal, and even he, who boasts a transcendental store of mana, feels somewhat dizzy.

Mana for magic this extensive should truly be built up over several months, and its should be used on a smaller area. Roswaal is irregular for procuring the mana over only two days, and for affecting a range more than twice the size of the usual.

After the magician who achieved this feat gives a long sigh, he finds himself utterly lost on what to do.

Roswaal: “I’ve made it snow, as the gospel tells…what do I do now?”

Roswaal has forgotten that he has made it snow one day earlier than what the gospel’s writ stated.

Or actually, not even the bet occupies any corner of his mind any more.

Roswaal does not pay any heed to the process. His only concerns are for how the events around the Sanctuary conclude. Snow falls, and the barrier is undone. Should that happen, should that happen—then what happens?

Roswaal: “Ram…yes…Ram.”

He can no longer hear Ram’s breathing.

Roswaal looks down at her face, and gently touches her forehead. Her transformation means that her scar, where her horn used to be, is bleeding. Roswaal wipes away the blood, and as he always does with Ram, injects colourless mana formed from a combination of all six mana types into her. This was a ritual the two had always done, so that Ram’s oni blood would not conquer her.

It’s not that he’s thinking anything.

Roswaal unconsciously understands that he is merely betting that her vitality as an oni will keep her alive. He has no questions about saving her.

Ram needs to live. For the sake of Roswaal’s goals, and for what comes after the realisation of those goals.

Roswaal: “Teacher…Teacher, I…What! Am I supposed to do! Teacher…Teacher! Please tell me…please…guide me, again…”

Roswaal’s confusion reaches its pinnacle, and he cannot even comprehend his own heart as he wails.

Though he is trying to ensure Ram’s survival, his anger about her betrayal remains. He knows that he has lost his beacon, but still searches for that old light.

The snow falls, encasing Roswaal and Ram in white flakes.

Everything drowns in the white, disappearing.

With the thought of, and perhaps that is fine, not present in him in the slightest.

Emilia cuts through the snow, breathing white puffs as she dashes onward.

Emilia: “Huma! Again, Huma!”

She shouts, casting ice magic upon ice magic.

She is doing it to avoid time loss from her feet getting bogged in the snow. She uses her magic to purposefully harden the snow, giving her a path to sprint upon.

Some people might slip and find themselves in quite a bit of danger by using this method, but,

Emilia: “All! Right! Got it!”

Emilia is a practitioner of ice magic, and grew up in Elior forest. She is accustomed to frozen ground. She dashes over the freezing snow of the Sanctuary as if she owns the place, with her small escort running after her.

Emilia: “Is this honestly working for you?”

Asks Emilia, out of breath, to her guide. The girl looks up at Emilia, and replies with only a nod. They can communicate, but she won’t talk to Emilia. This is exactly what Ryuzu—what the representative Ryuzu personality—had told her to expect.

Ryuzu had suddenly begun showing special respect to Emilia outside the tomb.

She informed Emilia that she was an entity born from the soul of a girl named Ryuzu Meyer, and that there were several duplicates of her in the same circumstances. These Ryuzu’s functioned as EYES spotted around the Sanctuary, went searching for Roswaal and Ram in the community, and were now guiding her to them.

There exists in the world extraordinarily rare magic called ‘duplication magic’.

Emilia had never heard about it being utilized on living creatures before, but perhaps it had been done as a kind of forbidden magic. Emilia had kept herself from asking all the questions she wanted to ask, ran through the Sanctuary while relying on the Ryuzu double, and dashed all about in search of Roswaal and Ram.

Emilia: “If I don’t hurry…the Sizeable Hare will show up!”

The witchbeast SIZEABLE HARE.

Even Emilia, ignorant of the world as she is, knows the name of this creature.

It is one of the three witchbeasts alongside the White Whale and Blacksnake, and like those other two beasts, regarded as a calamity.

It is a witchbeast of weak, frail, tiny little hares. But the beast itself is a group of individuals, a horde of creatures. It is not each individual hare, but the entire group of them that is the calamity called the Sizeable Hare.

With its endless hunger and overwhelming numbers it would devour everything in its path. But still that would not sate it, and it would proceed to wander the world while cannibalizing itself. Indeed a calamity.

The terrifying thing is how it can multiply itself infinitely. The Sizeable Hare will usually be low in number, cannibalizing itself to stave hunger when there is nothing to eat—but should it lay eyes on prey that stokes its appetite, it cannot be stopped. It will compound endlessly in number, gnashing away until the prey is destroyed, then cut its numbers back down as it moves on and leaves behind a wasteland. That’s what this thing is.

Emilia determines that she must face this incredible witchbeast.

They have already lost the time they need to flee the Hare’s attack. The accumulated snow hinders their escape, leaving Emilia and the others without options.

The non-combatants will hide in the tomb, while a frontline is formed at the entrance.

That is the only strategy they have for opposing the witchbeast. It'll be Emilia and Roswaal. If possible they'll include Ram, needing to assemble all the combat power available in the Sanctuary. And so—

Emilia: "…"

Snapped treetrunks and buildings battered from battle. Gashes in the earth, and unnatural pilings of snow. —A man and a woman, close together in a tree's shade.

Having found Ram limp and sleeping, and the dazed Roswaal, Emilia shouts.

Emilia: "—Roswaal! Ram!!"

Emilia leaves the silent Ryuzu double behind as she slides over the frozen snow. She manipulates the ground beneath her however she wants, scattering flakes of ice as she moves like a snow pixie, before grabbing Roswaal's shoulders as he lies motionless and half-buried in the snow.

Emilia: "Are you listening?! Roswaal, come on, Roswaal! We're in trouble! We have to save everyone! This isn't the time to be frozen!"

Roswaal: "…"

Rocking him makes the snow fall off Roswaal's head. It reveals his expression, and Emilia clicks her throat.

Roswaal's face as he looks at Ram, his eyes dim, looks feeble.

Emilia: "Roswaal…?"

Roswaal says nothing. He hasn't even noticed Emilia.

His lack of reaction scares her, and she lowers her gaze to what is cradled in his arms. There sleeps a pink-haired girl, —With snow on her cheeks, showing no signs of melting.

Emilia: "—! Ram? Ram!"

Emilia calls to Ram in Roswaal's arms, and tries waking her up.

But Ram gives no particular reaction. Of course she doesn't reply, but she doesn't open her eyes either—in fact, her eyelids don't even twitch. Emilia touches her cheek, and her lips, to find them abnormally cold. As if she's—

Emilia: "That, isn't happening!"

Emilia rejects her ineffectual thinking as she grits her teeth and reaches into Ram's clothes. Her hand strokes across Ram's chest, where she finds a faint heartbeat. It could disappear at any moment, frail, and feeble.

Emilia: "—She's alive! We're okay! We still have time, Roswaal!"

Yells Emilia with hope as she glances back to Roswaal. But Roswaal remains with his hand on Ram's brow, looking utterly dazed.

And Emilia notices it.

There is a massive amount of mana flowing from Roswaal's hand and into Ram. And this is acting as Ram's lifeline.

Emilia: "Then, you're saving Ram's life…"

Roswaal: "…"

Emilia: "—!"

As she hits upon that truth, Emilia also hits upon the bitter truth.

Ram is unconscious, in dire condition, and Roswaal must administer the delicate treatment to heal her. They cannot participate in the fight.

Meaning that Emilia must face the Sizeable Hare on her own.

—Can she do it?

This monster is one of the three that has survived for four hundred years, since the Witch of Envy’s era.

Who could guess how many people had steeled themselves to face this thing, just as Emilia was now? None of them had managed to destroy the beast. How does Emilia propose to fight it alone? Without Puck. Only Emilia.

Emilia: “If we go now…”

Maybe they can still run? But what are they meant to do if it chases them?

If they encounter it without any refuges or hiding places, then Emilia cannot protect the civilians from the beast. Guarding somewhere like the tomb presents the most potential.

It hurts that Roswaal and Ram can’t help in combat, but Emilia musn’t abandon the fight.

Emilia: “Roswaal. Bring Ram and come along with me. Everybody from the Sanctuary…mm, everybody is taking shelter in the tomb. And I’m going to protect them. Don’t give up on healing Ram, and —”

Roswaal: “It’s useless.”

Emilia meets Roswaal’s eye level and begins to tell Roswaal of her resolve, when his whisper interrupts her.

Roswaal stares at Ram’s face, his eyes still hollow.

Roswaal: “Useless. Everything is…I don’t know the future. I don’t understand myself. …This world is done.”

Emilia: “So you’re back to saying this! Who cares about the book! Maybe someone kind of important wrote it, but how does that have any say in what we do!”

Unable to bear his resignation, Emilia raises her voice at Roswaal.

Why is this happening? This is not the Roswaal that Emilia knows.

Always composed, making bold decisions like nothing, acting like he knows absolutely everything there is to know, all with a grin. Wasn't that Roswaal?

Who is weak man, who has given up on everything, looking like a cornered and lost child?

Emilia: "Roswaal. I can't understand what you're feeling or how you're hurt right now. I do want to understand, but there's no time for me to learn. …But I want to make that time. And so I need you to work with me."

Roswaal: "…"

Emilia doesn't understand Roswaal. He could continue being like this, and she still wouldn't understand him.

But if they converse, and divulge their feelings, there are things she will understand. And things she will never understand if she never does this. And things that will never be communicated, if the time for them is never given.

Emilia needs to create the time they need to grow closer to one another.

Emilia: "Please, stand up, Roswaal. Neither of us are ending here. We won't let Ram end either. We're all going back to everyone, together, and—"

Roswaal: "I…"

Emilia is insistent. But Roswaal does not meet her gaze.

He continues staring down at Ram, his scarlet lips moving to say:

Roswaal: "I, quit…"

Spoken so quietly, it could disappear.

The frigid, whistling winds do whip by, and the words are barely audible.

The whisper hardly left his lips. It's questionable whether Roswaal himself even heard it.

But she definitely does hear that quiet sound of surrender.

And so, Emilia—

Emilia: "—Don't you dare say that!!"

—Grabs Roswaal by the collar, and screams in anger.

The movement rocks Roswaal's head, and he whimpers in pain. Emilia assaults him, unrelenting, with her words.

Emilia: "You quit?! What are you saying 'you quit'?! There is nothing out there to possibly quit! There is nothing for you to quit! Don't you dare give up! Don't you dare surrender! Not me, or Ram, or you, have any single thing we're possibly done with yet!"

Roswaal: "…"

Emilia: "I finished the Trial! The past I was so scared of! A happy present that could've happened! Sad futures that might come! I saw them all! And I still decided to walk this path…and with that resolve, I can finally walk it!"

She howls.

Wrath beyond what Emilia can ever remember surges up inside her.

Yes. There it is. Listen to that whiny voice, hear those pathetic opinions, see that gutless spirit. This is what it looks like when you accept surrender as your end.

Emilia's roaring makes Roswaal's cheeks stiffen, and he averts his gaze. This is not him being worried for Ram, this is him distracting himself and running from something he doesn't want to see. Emilia grabs him by the jaw and forces him to face her.

Emilia: "Look at people's faces when they are talking to you!"

Roswaal: "—Hic."

Emilia: “You won’t understand what people are thinking if you don’t look them in the eye. You won’t understand why people are doing what they’re doing if you don’t look them in the eye. Keep your eyes on mine, hear my voice, stand up, and follow me.”

Roswaal’s odd-coloured eyes blink as if realizing something.

His lips twitch. But he manages no words.

Roswaal: “—auh.”

Emilia: “I’ll never let anyone say that they quit. As long as you’re alive, there’s nothing out there for you to quit. And—I am not letting anyone die here!”

Emilia gets to her feet. Turns around.

Over ten Ryuzu doubles have assembled here. All of them kneel reverently, awaiting orders.

Emilia takes a breath, and shouts her command.

Emilia: “Take Roswaal and Ram back to the tomb. I’m protecting everyone, no matter what.”

Speaking grandly, and aware that she only acquired this right by coincidence, Emilia leads the obedient Ryuzu’s as she breaks into a sprint through Sanctuary’s snow.

The Ryuzu’s group together to support Roswaal and Ram, taking turns to make the path while following after Emilia.

—Emilia no longer hesitates in her course for an instant.

5

And the tales—

“No need to push yourself so hard, Emilia-tan.”

The boy who cherishes the girl who decided to protect everything returns to her side, “You can hold off and fall back. —The inaugural battle of deliverance is here.”

“I’m sorry. That kind of went over my head.”

Their usual banter makes her smile as she supports her failing body, her eyes tracking the white silhouettes as they press forward.

The two silhouettes, walking hand in hand.

She hears two voices as well.

They sound lively, and, feeling that she has been waiting to hear this, the girl’s heartbeat pounds.

“What comes next is a complete unknown, in fact.”

“Yeah, we’ll be doing something about this. —Together, me and you!!”

And the tales converge, their wishes perfect mirrors as they enter the finale.

Knight and Princess, facing beast in blizzard-swept the Sanctuary.

A Knight who cannot manage on his own brings a magician at his side, consecrating everything to victory.

—The final battle of the Sanctuary commences.

Chapter 130:
Faces in the Snow

1

Icy winds whip past. Frigid temperatures slice at his skin.

A horde of white hunger swamps everything in sight. The hand he is holding is warm.

Natsuki Subaru feels not a speck of hesitation or doubt about standing here.

Subaru: “Great that we had that cool entrance and all, but isn’t this a little weird?!”

Yells Subaru about the unanticipated scene as the snow batters his cheeks.

Roaring wind rages through the Sanctuary, which is currently embroiled in thick snow. Subaru was ready for this to happen eventually, but the date is mismatched to what he remembers.

The Sanctuary would be buried in snow and lure the mob of white witchbeasts at morning—there was supposed to be over half a day of surplus time left.

Behind Subaru there stands a silver-haired girl, breathing white with her shoulders heaving. Emilia has been unable to fully restrain the mana overflowing from her body, and half-encased herself in ice. Her left side is covered in white, and though it must be painful, not a speck of anguish shows on her face.

Subaru mentally praises the bold Emilia, while simultaneously suspecting her as causing the snow.

Was she unable to control this frenzy of magic, bringing snow, and beckoning the Hare?

Subaru: “But then the order’s off…”

The sequence between the uncontrolled magic and the Hare's arrival are backwards.

Emilia used her magic to oppose the Hare, which resulted in her suffering damage. If Subaru is following the correct course of things, then the real cause is—

Subaru: "…"

Behind Emilia, Echidna's tomb looms.

Subaru acknowledges the gazes peering at him out from the entrance, and nods. If the people inside are the residents of the Sanctuary, then they are not feeling the effects of the tomb's mechanisms. That means that the tomb's operations have terminated, otherwise said that Emilia has defeated the Trial.

Emilia has overcome the Trial. Snow is falling earlier than anticipated. There's the state of the Sanctuary's citizens, and Emilia's resolute shouts and expression. And there's also,

Subaru: "Roswaal."

Roswaal: "…"

Roswaal, dazedly staring at Subaru while sitting beside the tomb's entrance. Subaru doesn't have time right now to check if Ram, sleeping in his arms, is okay. All he can do is trust that she is.

Beatrice: "Subaru."

When the small hand gripping Subaru's own gives him a tug.

Hit with an unfamiliar form of address from a familiar voice, Subaru chokes.

Subaru: "Oughbbhnuh."

Beatrice: "…Explain that bizarre reply, I suppose."

Subaru: "It just feels so novel when you say my name, so. Can you do it again but sounding bashful?"

Beatrice: “What?! You are actually mad, in fact! This is no time for buffoonery, I suppose!” Beatrice snaps at Subaru’s silly request, her expression terrifying.

Subaru reluctantly drops the issue, expecting her to ignore it no matter how much he pesters her, when,

Beatrice: “S-Subaru…there, I did it, in fact.”

Subaru: “Beako you are adorable.”

Beatrice: “—! I’m never saying it again, I suppose! I’ll remember this for after we’re done, in fact!”

Yells Beatrice, her face red as she swings her held hand in a huff.

Subaru looks at her, charmed, while also directing his attention to the horde of approaching hares.

He licks his dry lips.

Subaru: “So, Beatrice. We’re fighting the Sizeable Hare, where’s your mental prep sitting?”

Beatrice: “I am moments post-Contract. The opponent is one of the great witchbeast triumvirate. We are unprepared and conditions are poor. My Contractor is a novice. I haven’t participated in battle in four hundred years.”

Subaru: “And?”

Beatrice: “I could ask for no handicap finer, I suppose.”

Beatrice smiles fearlessly as the beasts, their teeth chattering, swoop in to close the distance. Subaru steps forward to face their attack and glances to Emilia behind him.

Subaru: “Me and Beatrice are about to crush the Sizeable Hare. Emilia-tan, I’m sorry for this, but some’re gonna slip past so I want you protecting everyone!”

Emilia: “I’m…”

Emilia cuts her sentence off there, hesitant for a moment.

But after closing her eyes and taking a quiet breath,

Emilia: “Right. Leave it to me. —And I’m leaving it to you.”

Subaru: “Yup, all mine.”

Put the right people in the right places, split the roles up between them, do what’s best for you to do.

Emilia gives a deep breath as she concentrates on controlling her magic and erects a defensive line.

The snowfall continues to rage as Emilia forms a blockade of ice.

Subaru steps out from Emilia’s line of defense as he gazes at the white typhoon.

Red eyes and sharp fangs stretch on as far as his eyes can see. Coated in pure white fur, this is the witchbeast spurred by the most primitive and insatiable hunger in the world. The Sizeable Drove—otherwise said, the Sizeable Hare.

The chittering of their fangs makes the ache in Subaru’s soul spread to his whole body.

He has died gruesomely, flesh devoured and innards ravaged, to those fangs. He has felt the agony of a hole gaping through his abdomen, spouting blood while teeth severed his windpipe. And he knows the overwhelming feeling of loss from death, his body chewed up and missing limbs, in Emilia’s arms.

To complete this loop series, Natsuki Subaru must surmount this witchbeast.

Beatrice: “—Are you afraid, I suppose?”

Asks Beatrice to Subaru, holding his breath as he gazes at the beast.

Her face is impassive as she glances up at him. But her eyes, and her expression, inform Subaru far more eloquently than her words.

—Inform him exactly who it is that stands beside him.

Subaru: “Nope. Not at all.”

Beatrice: “Oh?”

Subaru: “Emilia’s at my back and you’re at my side. It’s like I’m strongest man in the world.”

Beatrice: “Doubtlessly, in fact.”

Beatrice’s cheeks relax into a smile.

So you do get it, says her expression. Subaru joins her in her wicked smile.

The Sizeable Hare enters a frenzy, rushing for the brazen duo.

Beatrice points her free right hand, the one that is not holding Subaru’s, at the Hare.

Beatrice: “We’ll begin with a warm-up, I suppose. —El Minya.”

Space spirals alongside the canto as purple crystals materialize around Subaru and Beatrice, surrounding them.

These things, with the brilliance and bearing of icicles, are the magical stakes that Beatrice used in a previous loop to skewer Elsa. In a single instant, forty of them have formed.

It takes less than a moment for one to aim and silently shoot off—without its aim deviating in the least, to spear straight through the open mouth of a hare. The skewer proceeds to plummet through the air and plunge into the rearward horde of hares, where it explodes. Fragments of crystal shred through the hares around the site of impact, slivering them. That is what one shot can do, and Beatrice fires forty at once.

The looming omnipresent destruction brings bloody flowers to blossom through the white world. The ruthless opening attack annihilates hundreds of hares. Aftermath of the destruction litters the clearing, where the surviving hares shriek in agony. The beast can multiply infinitely and there are still units of it left, but even so, it works Subaru up.

That is, Beatrice's unimaginably devastating destructive capabilities do.

Subaru: "W-Woaaaaaaaaaaaaaaah!!"

Beatrice: "I-Is it that incredible, I suppose? It isn't anything so impressive, in fact. This is the lowest of techniques from Betty, I suppose. A piece of cake, in fact."

Subaru: "No, what, the…this, savage magic! What affinity?!"

Beatrice: "It's obviously going to be yin, I suppose. I'm not the best at other types of magic, in fact."

Says Beatrice, not looking entirely satisfied about Subaru's praise.

The ravaged witchbeast immediately starts cannibalizing the gore from the corpses and multiplies itself again, but Beatrice pays this not the slightest of mind.

Beatrice: "Pay attention in fact, Subaru. Here's a lecture from one yin user to another, I suppose."

Subaru: "What, is that all?"

Beatrice: "Huh?"

Subaru: "Was our relationship just about both being yin…"

Beatrice: "Th-That wasn't what I meant, in fact. You're a fellow yin user, my Contractor, and also umm…Betty's Subaru, I suppose. Yes. And so here's my lesson to you, in fact."

Beatrice, flustered, probably doesn't even know what she's saying. She coughs before raising her finger and lowering her voice.

Beatrice: "About the apex of yin—the apogee of Yin Magic."

Subaru: "What do I need to do?"

Beatrice: “Hold my hand, and keep me from being alone, I suppose.”

Subaru: “I mean I do think that’s important, but…”

Beatrice: “…It seems you don’t quite understand spiritualism, which gives me some concerns for the future, in fact.”

She can be as exasperated as she wants, it won’t change that he doesn’t know what he doesn’t know.

Beatrice shakes her head at Subaru as he frowns, and pulls him forward by the hand.

Beatrice: “Fundamentally, a spiritualist and a spirit fight on the battlefield as single entity with separate minds, I suppose.”

Subaru: “A single entity with separate minds…”

Subaru thinks about Emilia’s fighting style.

The most striking battle that involved both Emilia and Puck was the one with Elsa in the loot house. Emilia had placed Puck on offence while she took charge of defense. She would also use simpler techniques to buy time so that Puck could unleash massive attacks.

That bald old man mentioned that that was the basis of how spiritualists fight.

Subaru: “So I just have to do that. Okay, time for Shamak!”

Beatrice: “Being subject to your defective Shamak would probably damage us as well so I would rather we not, in fact. And Subaru, your gate is…”

Beatrice trails off, looking reluctant to speak. Subaru feels apologetic that he forced her into giving this consideration. His gate is probably junk.

He abused it. He can feel that it’s broken. Again, he is speaking fantasies.

Beatrice: "—It's coming, I suppose."

Mutters Beatrice halfway through her speech. The instant after Subaru grunts in confusion, he realizes that his feet are no longer touching the ground.

Beatrice kicks off the ground, and the jump carries the two of them straight into the air like a spring.

That exact nanosecond, a horde of witchbeast's fangs closes in on the spot the two had just been.

The Hare's fangs clatter against each other as the hares leap off the ground in pursuit of the two.

Subaru: "We're flying?!"

Beatrice: "We only jumped, in fact. I've diminished the effects of gravity with the yin spell, Murak, I suppose. If we desired, we could fly by riding the wind, in fact."

Subaru: "You see we're falling though?!"

Beatrice: "We could keep riding the wind if we were simply fleeing…but we are annihilating them, I suppose."

Like leaves tossing in the wind, Subaru and Beatrice are buffeted by blizzard. They regardless fail to gracelessly flip upside-down midair, probably by Beatrice's doing.

The two are on slow descent from their ten-meter high peak. The hares wait below them with their mouths gaping open, leaving Subaru to put his hopes in another rally of magical spears.

Beatrice: "Subaru, a continuation in fact. Spiritualists don't cast magic by using their internal mana, but by directly manipulating the ambient mana, I suppose. A Contract with minor spirits is essential for this, so you are not currently meeting those requirements, in fact."

Subaru: "Ah, uhrm, Beatrice? There's, there's kind of a whole bunch of them right under us?!"

Beatrice: “Just listen to me, I suppose. Your gate is trashed, and you cannot use minor spirits. So poor useless hopeless Subaru’s only role is to stay at Betty’s side and praise Betty’s magnificence, I suppose. Why are you even here, in fact?”

Subaru: “That’s what I wanna know!”

Beatrice: “Then I’ll teach you, I suppose.”

The witchbeasts leaping up from below them will start reaching their feet in no time at all. If their fangs bite on, the hares will never let go. Even he has to find it overwhelmingly lame to take huge damage and start crying after how cool and composed he acted. Subaru yells rather hysterically at Beatrice.

Subaru: “What do I do?!”

Beatrice: “Visualize, in fact. Imagine the same crystals that I made before, I suppose. They are crystallized mana, spears weaved from corporeal magic. They taper to sharp points, with ruinous shards packed inside them, piercing through defenses, and stabbing into flesh. —Visualize this attack.”

Subaru: “Visualized!”

Beatrice: “Now all you must do is incant, I suppose!”

The horde of hares waits below them, mouths agape.

Red eyes, bloodstained maw, sharp fangs, instincts that view Subaru as merely a wad of meat.

Utterly repugnant, utterly loathsome, this is the greatest adversary in the Sanctuary.

Both: “—El Minya!!”

Subaru and Beatrice’s cantos mirror each other, and the conjured spears rain down at the ground from on high.

Explosions and destruction rock the earth of the Sanctuary, eviscerating the ugly witchbeast.

Emilia: “Amazing…”

Sighs Emilia in admiration as she freezes a hare that slipped past solid.

Her amethyst eyes stay fixated on Subaru and Beatrice, fighting the beast beyond the shroud of snow.

More specifically, Emilia’s eyes stay fixated on Beatrice as she holds Subaru’s hand. Emilia herself is a spiritualist, who is using the minor spirits’ magic this very instant. She understands to a painful degree how incredible this magical confrontation is.

First, Beatrice is not receiving any magical reserves from Subaru.

They are definitely connected by the pass from their Contract: it’s simply that Beatrice is abstaining from doing so. Subaru was thrown into combat immediately after forming this spirit Contract. If Beatrice siphons the mana she needs from him, he won’t last. Beatrice understands this, and is taking care not to burden Subaru.

Second, it’s not that Beatrice is taking magic from Subaru—she’s giving it to him.

It’s not the most accurate phrasing, but it’s the truth. Subaru, as he holds hands with Beatrice, is receiving Beatrice’s support, allowing him to use magic that should be inaccessible to him. He isn’t using his gate, and is instead using Beatrice’s presence itself like a gate. There is no way that Subaru can possibly understand how monumental this is.

Beatrice the spirit is supplying the magic for both herself and Subaru not from some outside source, but her own magical stockpile.

And third, she is legitimately witnessing advanced yin magic.

The class of a magician’s magical affinity greatly influences their future. Specialization in any of the four main types of magic will demarcate them into distinct roles, and the same applies to the two special types of yin and yang; meaning that their essence differs greatly from the other four, even before reaching the advanced stages.

And then is the fact that they initially look to lack uses. They comes with lots of problems, like the time needed to procure results or required quantity of magical power, that are also cons.

So the yin and yang affinities are both rare, and have few advanced practitioners.

Many spells have been lost over time, unlike with the main four, making it a difficult environment to produce any new great magicians.

Yin has all of these glaring issues, and Beatrice has mastered it. And she is using ancient magic, long lost to time and history, as if it's nothing.

Emilia: "Woah, they went really high that time. Huh? They're gone…oh, there they went."

The way they fight is so dreamlike and phantasmal that it makes her lose her sense of reality. Though part of it probably comes from the fact that Subaru and Beatrice are so amicably holding hands.

Emilia can tell that Subaru is fighting desperately, but Beatrice is even smiling.

She must be having a lot of fun. It's not that she enjoys fighting, or flaunting her power. It's just that doing this is fun for her.

Emilia: "…"

Emilia blinks, and Subaru and Beatrice have moved to a completely different spot. It's teleportation magic akin to the more limited Gate Crossing. Purple spears blast through a row of hares from either end, the beasts shrieking furiously as they try to leap at the two, only for their bodies to catch on something midair and shred apart.

Emilia strains her eyes. She spots it.

The fragments from the detonated spear have not vanished, and instead sit suspended in space, as if frozen in time. The leaping hares shred themselves on those splinters, ripping themselves apart. The crystalline trap is spread all across the area as the witchbeasts move, jumping, tumbling to resolutely attack the two, all while triggering the trap quite comically.

The Sizeable Hare is a fearsome witchbeast, but the individual hares are not that threatening. They lack any great power, and should an experienced fighter pay mind to the hare's ferocity while combating it, they will definitely come out ahead.

A fighting style as reckless as 'follow your instinct to eat' will learn nothing. They want their fellow hares to be caught and dismembered in the traps, because their hunger is everything. So they pay no heed to the fact that they will die caught in the exact same trap, jump at them, and become a cadaver.

Emilia: "Ah!"

Emilia strikes another hare that escaped the siege with her magic.

She dashes over to the frozen hare and kicks it to pieces without any hesitation. It shatters into shards of ice, so utterly deceased that it cannot reform.

Subaru and Beatrice have been putting in such a good fight that only a surprisingly few hares have slipped past to Emilia. Emilia can even concentrate on suppressing her own magical power.

But even as she watches Beatrice's display of overwhelming strength, Emilia cannot erase the kernel of anxiety within her.

Beatrice's snare is powerful and cunning. The Sizeable Hare keeps catching itself in the trap, building a mountain of corpses. But Emilia cannot see the end.

What Emilia witnesses is one of the hares trembling, when another hare appears as if sprouted out of the first one's back. The hares repeat and repeat this, the beasts multiplying like mice.

100 hares compounds into 200 in an instant, and into 400 in the next.

It has numbers, and wretched instincts ignorant to the concept of ‘stopping’.

Which is why this beast is counted as one of the great three, and has gone four hundred years doing whatever it wishes as a Calamity —

Emilia: “Subaru, Beatrice.”

Emilia calls their names. Though they look to have an overwhelming advantage, they mustn’t fall negligent.

Emilia will never forget how she shivered after returning to the tomb with Roswaal and Ram, and first confirmed the Sizeable Hare’s presence.

Those eyes regarded every single thing alive as nothing more than its food.

An entity truly incapable of any co-existence will make those who oppose it feel that utter despair.

To oppose that overwhelming absurdity, Emilia needed to demonstrate comparable power.

And that was what she had intended to do.

A torrent of magic churns within her, not fully under her control. It surely cannot all belong to her alone, and should she unleash it, it will annihilate the Sizeable Hare.

She would be offering her life in exchange. And she was prepared to do that, if it came to it.

Emilia: “Subaru…”

She murmurs his name as he fights on.

Her had known about the Hare’s attack beforehand, and it doesn’t seem that he’s fighting it without a plan. He’s brought Beatrice out of the Forbidden Archive, and has her so full of life.

He would never do anything to bring gloom to that smile.

And so Emilia believes in Natsuki Subaru.

White magic, capable of ending everything, asserts its presence in her heart. She holds it down, advising that its time has not come yet.

—She believes in his words.

3

For Subaru, using magic has always been tantamount to whittling away his soul.

At first it had been exactly like what Puck and Roswaal had said, that Subaru possessed not the slightest of talent as a magician. It was so bad that, when he first used Shamak, he couldn't keep himself from wringing out his mana and so fell immobile.

He next got by on hits of Bocco Fruit. He used magic during his duel even when he was prohibited from doing so, and ultimately he abused his gate so terribly that it collapsed. He has not any hope of being a magician.

Magic had saved Subaru many times, but he considered it something like whittling away at his already delicate core, sharpening it down, something like that. He thought it inevitable that it broke.

And so he had only dreamed about doing what he's doing now, firing off consecutive blasts of incredible magic, and could only think this reality impossible.

Subaru: "Hey, Beatrice! Should we really keep blasting them like this?!"

The Sizeable Hare generates more hares than what Subaru and Beatrice defeat. The hares eat their dead brethren, steadily compounding in number. It seems like they're using their multiplication as energy, for each hare grows more forceful the more that their number compounds.

This does encourage some dim hopes that, if they keep buying time, the hares will eventually run out of energy to multiply themselves. But,

Beatrice: "There's no limit to their propagation, in fact. That's how they were crafted to be, I suppose. Even when they verge on destruction they will not be destroyed. Unless you annihilate them all at once."

Subaru: "So what do we do? Do you have any ideas?"

Beatrice: "Subaru, are you trying to rely on adorable Betty for everything, I suppose?"

An explosion of crystal opens a hole in the mob, blasting the hares away, to be dismembered on the suspended shards. Beatrice sees this through as she pulls Subaru's arm and hops into the air. Though neither her tug nor her jump are that forceful, she easily succeeds in both.

Beatrice walks on air, dancing through space to avoid the hares' fangs as she weaves through gaps in her crystalline snare. The lack of a single drop of blood sullying her extravagant dress proves that, in this fight, she feels not the slightest agitation or unease.

Beatrice: "We're moving, in fact."

Subaru: "Right."

With that, space bends, and the two engage in a short-range teleport.

They cross through space in a manner unlike Gate Crossing, reappearing behind the horde of hares. The beasts sniff, but having lost Subaru and Beatrice, remain fraught with openings.

Beatrice: "You take the left, I suppose."

Subaru: "Right's all yours."

Visualize. Beatrice's magic reacts to Subaru's fantasy, manipulates the world, and brings about that transformation.

He definitely feels that he is benefiting at her expense, but that's why he's not playing around in the slightest.

The purple crystals of yin's Minya spells form in accordance with Subaru's imagination.

Subaru generates winding grooves on the projectiles to magnify their piercing force before firing them off all at once. His hands never touch them, but they do fire according to his will. It's like he's drawing a mental bowstring, to shoot incorporeal arrows.

They spear through the air, landing a direct hit on the undefended hares, blasting the mob of them screeching away.

Beatrice's destruction does the same thing to the right end of the mob, scattering them in all directions.

Fissures in space swallow mobs of hares, sealing several hundreds inside a closed space as if in a picture frame. The hares hop about beyond the looking-glass. Beatrice fires a crystalline spear at the heedless mob of hares—shattering the planar world to pieces, sending the hares inside to their end.

Subaru swallows his breath, astonished at Beatrice's multifaceted sorcery.

While Subaru keeps repeating Minya like an idiot, Beatrice keeps repeating entirely new combinations of yin magic to annihilate the Sizeable Hare.

It's as if she's showing off every card she has in hand to Subaru. Or as if she's doing it to remind herself of her skills.

Beatrice: "About now, in fact."

Subaru: "Hm?"

The Sizeable Hare has been cut down in number, only for it to instantly regenerate the exact quantity it lost.

Subaru witnesses this, and again feels the strangeness that he has been feeling for a while now.

Putting that together with Beatrice's muttering, Subaru feels the urge for a conversation.

Subaru: "Beatrice. They've been recovering the same number they lost…but doesn't it feel like they've never gone over their original amount?"

Supposing there are one thousand hares, if Subaru defeats one hundred of them, it multiplies to make one hundred more. If he defeats two hundred hares, he gets two hundred more hares. The scales have not tipped once, no matter how many of them he kills.

But Subaru has never seen them multiply beyond that highest number.

Beatrice nods to Subaru.

Beatrice: "Their multiplication itself may be unlimited, but there is likely a ceiling to how many hares there can be, in fact. So they cannot multiply beyond that, I suppose."

Subaru: "Then, if we can finish off that ceiling all at once…"

Beatrice: "Theoretically, that will destroy it. …But that presents its own difficulties, in fact."

Subaru sees hope, but Beatrice makes a complicated expression.

Well, of course. There are enough hares to drown out everything in sight. If they had the magic to burn everything in visible range then they might be able to destroy the Hare, but how much power would it take to do it all in one second, and get all of them?

It's a violent plan akin to missile bombing the whole region. And if even one of them survives, they will all instantly regenerate. The risk is far too great.

Subaru: "Then…okay. That's it."

Beatrice: “You’ve thought of something, I suppose?”

Subaru: “It’s me being utterly dependent on you yet again but yeah.”

Subaru watches the witchbeast multiply as he whispers into Beatrice’s ear.

Beatrice lowers her gaze in thought, and nods.

Beatrice: “I’ve been thinking the same thing, in fact. But doing it would require…”

Subaru: “I know there’s a bottleneck. However! You better not get the wrong idea, Beatrice!”

Beatrice: “—?”

Subaru: “It’s not like we have to solve this problem on our own, yeah?”

Beatrice’s eyes widen at this. She gives a quiet sigh, pitching over in Subaru’s direction to set her forehead on his chest.

Beatrice: “Truly, Subaru…you present some extraordinary solutions, in fact.”

Subaru: “I do promise to be such a thrillingly fresh and novel Contractor that you’ll never ever get bored.”

Subaru shoots her a thumbs up, his teeth sparkling. Beatrice smiles wryly before looking up, her face against his chest.

Beatrice: “Fine I suppose, let’s do it in fact. But even Betty needs time to pull this off, I suppose. Let’s see you manage well over that period, in fact.”

Subaru: “Just pretend you’re relaxing on a safe sturdy boat. It’s what I’m doing.”

Beatrice: “We’ll see who’ll be doing the paddling, I suppose.”

Beatrice pushes away from Subaru's chest.

She takes a breath, closes her eyes, and begins focusing on escalating her magic.

Seeing this, Subaru psychs himself up and kicks off the snow.

The witchbeast's fangs click and clatter as it chases Subaru, running. Silhouettes come swooping for his legs. But they're too slow. After these two days of butcheries, the Sizeable Hare looks wimpy.

Subaru: "Out of the way! Move it! I don't have the time to deal with you right now!" Subaru dodges the fangs, kicks away the hares.

He incants, using crystal spears to force open a path as he charges through the clearing with Beatrice cradled in his arms, sprinting back to the tomb.

Emilia: "Huh, wha, Subaru?!"

Emilia looks shocked as she witnesses Subaru's return.

Subaru skids to a stop beside her before placing Beatrice, her eyes closed, on the snowy ground beside him and stroking her head.

Subaru: "Sorry, Emilia-tan! We're having some trouble pulling it off on our own!"

Emilia: "I-I mean, that's fine, but…what do we do now? Right, I'm going to—"

Subaru: "No, we have an idea for how to beat it. You don't have to use your suicide bomber absolute death moves. Or actually just don't use them. It'll make all our efforts until now pointless."

Emilia swallows her breath and stares intently at Subaru's face.

Did she seriously think he wouldn't figure it out? She seriously did, didn't she.

Of course Emilia would, if truly backed into a corner in a situation like this, bring harm to herself to land the decisive blow. What an impossible girl.

‘It’s okay to hurt myself if it saves everyone?’ Just stop.

Subaru: “It’s best that everyone’s safe and everyone’s saved, duh.”

Emilia: “…Subaru.”

Subaru: “So Emilia- tan, I have kind of a crazy request. If it doesn’t look feasible then I’ll think on it more, but if it looks feasible then I want to see your best. —Let’s all win this together.”

Emilia: “…”

Emilia puts her hand to her chest, seeming to feel something about Subaru’s statement, blinking several times.

Subaru conjures crystal spears and fires them at the witchbeast horde to hold them in check, buying time for Emilia to come to her decision. It does not end up taking long at all.

Emilia: “Alright. Let’s do this, Subaru. I’m ready for anything.”

Says Emilia, steeling her resolve, her gaze determined.

Subaru pumps his fists as he glances back to her.

Subaru: “That’s the spirit. Here we go!”

4

Subaru feels incredible swells of magic beside him, coming from both sides.

Emilia stands on his left, and Beatrice on his right.

Each of them holds one of Subaru’s hands, linking the three of them together.

There was no real significance to them doing this. It’s just to motivate Subaru.

In context of battle, you call ‘motivation’ ‘morale’. And high morale is essential for dictating the tide of battle.

Subaru: “Visualize, visualize, visualize!”

Subaru envisions the wicked, powerful, magical assault.

He creates pointed amethyst spears and bombards the expanse of approaching hares with them. He fights his hardest, repeating volley after volley to keep the hares from reaching either themselves or the tomb.

Subaru is not using his own mana to cast this magic. So he is casting without suffering any strain—would be a complete misunderstanding.

He is getting the mana he needs to cast from Beatrice, but Subaru is the one regulating the magic. He visualizes the spears’ force, their aim, their quantity, materializes them and fires them, then instantly moves to the next attack.

He would be suffering even more bodily fatigue alongside this, were he an actual magician. He cannot hope to imagine the immense burden and concurrent workload. He can agree with his lack of talent for it.

The spears strike against the ground, shockwaves and detonations sending the hares flying as they screech in protest. Their fangs click and chitter and click and chitter and click and with the howling blizzard as accompaniment, it sounds like the cog-wheels of hell, or something to that effect.

The cogs on the grim conveyor to send Subaru’s team to the guillotine press ever closer.

Subaru: “Minya! Minya! Ah, crap! Biting my tongue on this magic!”

While grumbling about the unpronounceable incantation, Subaru takes aim at the charging Hare. He fires the conjured crystals, and the leading hare’s head—goes untouched as the spear strikes the ground before it, and the shockwave pushes it back into the mob.

The plan is in phase one.

Subaru is controlling the horde with his conjured spears, but he isn't killing them. They want to avoid disruption to the ceiling, and having the hares multiply at some indefinite juncture. He is keeping the Sizeable Hare at its ceiling while pinning it in place. Although,

Subaru: "If you're attracted to mana's smell, then there's no way you're prying your attention from us."

After all, there are two people here maintaining nigh- unwitnessed magnitudes of mana. And they're both beautiful girls. Subaru, right now, has flowers in both hands. Anyone would envy him.

Subaru: "Visualize, visualize, visualize…come on, you gotta be jealous! Wanna try coming closer!" Hums Subaru, not neglecting to taunt the animal.

Part of it is to inflame the enemy, but it's more about Subaru encouraging himself. If he feigns that an extraordinary situation is an ordinary one, he can manage to keep himself going.

If he doesn't do this, he cannot assure himself steady knees. Both of his hands feel a warmth. With this touch on his palms, he absolutely cannot show the pathetic side of himself.

Subaru: "Visualize, visualize, visualize…!"

Mutters Subaru over and over as he strains his eyes.

The horde of hares has pushed forward; there is a limit to how far Subaru can restrain them. But preparations are not in place yet.

Not Emilia's, or Beatrice's, or Subaru's.

Emilia: "…Subaru."

He feels someone squeeze his hand, and looks to find Emilia gazing at him, her eyes faintly open.

Her preparations are in order, then? She is smiling, awaiting Subaru's signal.

Subaru: “—Hic.”

Pushed onward by Emilia’s gaze, Subaru strains his bloodshot eyes further.

The curtain of blustering blizzard is thick, constantly concealing and revealing the places he is trying to see. But the sight of their wriggling, white forms does tell Subaru of the slight difference between the witchbeast and the snowbanks.

—Just a little more, a tiny, right there, there, there, there!

Subaru grits his teeth. Waits for the moment.

Confirming that the front, the sides, all of it, everything is correct, Subaru’s eyes shoot open.

Subaru: “Now, Emilia! Follow the lines!!”

Shouting, Subaru squeezes down on Emilia’s hand.

Emilia’s amethyst gaze focuses firmly to the front as she looks at the lines Subaru drew.

While he kept the Hare in check with conjured spears, Subaru had been simultaneously drawing lines across the earth with mana. Using formless mana to gouge into the earth had been the utmost in difficulty.

But Subaru, as talentless as people called him, overcame that ordeal by a combination of focus and pretentions that far exceeded those of the ordinary person. The ones that disallowed him from looking uncool around others, those pretentions.

He drew four lines in total.

Four long lines, that form a box around the mass of hares.

Lines that would tell Emilia where to aim.

Emilia: “Excellent, Subaru! You did sooo wonderful!”

Cheers Emilia at his beautiful set-up, saying things she would usually never say.

Emilia raises her right hand, Subaru's hand still in her grip, and places her half-frozen left hand atop it. And, incants.

Emilia: "—Al Huma!!"

The multitude of magic surges as the world transforms in accordance to Emilia's canto.

Mana rushes to Emilia and Subaru's linked hands before shooting into the atmosphere, piercing through the earth, and converging with Subaru's lines of mana. —The earth bellows as something incredible occurs.

Subaru: "Woah…"

Says Subaru, astonished, as he watches what happens.

Well of course. Anyone witnessing this would react the same way.

Emilia's magic traces over the lines that Subaru drew—and all of the snow within the box starts levitating.

All of the hares within the box remain atop the snow platform, but they have not noticed that these tremors happened because the ground beneath them is floating.

It may be a limited space, but the floating platform is still about twenty by twenty meters. This sight, of so many hares crowded together and shuddering on this platform, beautifully demonstrates the supernatural nature of 'magic'.

Subaru: "Emilia!"

Emilia: "Got it! I'm not letting them get away!"

But if they stop here, then the Hare is just going to jump off the platform.

There is one more thing they have to do to keep it from escaping.

Emilia raises their linked hands up high—and swings them right down.

The floating snowfield rumbles. Surely, the Hare never imagined what would happen.

A roar, and a frigid blast of stabbing wind.

It showers over Subaru and the others as they keep their eyes fixated on the platform, to see the results through.

—By the time the wind stops, the snowfield is vertically shut.

The left and right ends of Emilia's floating platform have folded to meet at the center.

The ground has been shut in the same manner as a book, sealing the Hare inside the snow without any means of escape.

Subaru hurriedly looks over the closed platform's surroundings. They missed—none. Movement—nowhere.

All of the hares are in one place, trapped in an extraordinarily small area. With this,

Subaru: "The big one's all on you, Beatrice!"

Subaru calls to Beatrice, telling her that the secondary set-up is complete. Hearing this, and having quietly chanted the canto the entire time, Beatrice's eyes open.

Seeing the sight before her, Beatrice laughs quietly.

It's not surprise or anything like that. A smile abounding with trust arises on her face,

Beatrice: "Here is the pinnacle of yin. —Al Shamak."

The instant she murmurs the chant, a shadow drowns out the world.

—For a moment, it is manhandled by something like vertigo.

But it really does only last for a moment.

The vertigo stops, and a shock impacts its feet. Then the bondage pressing on its body disappears. It starts off by giving a big shake to get the snow off its fur.

It sniffs the air, looks around the area.

Its eyes, its nose, its ears, all get the better of it as they prioritize the hunt for prey. Its red eyes glance about as it searches for sweet-smelling game.

Nothing. There had been prey so delectable that it made its stomach wrench painfully, right in front of it, just a second ago. With tender flesh and sweet blood, prey that might sate this starvation even temporarily had definitely been right there.

Its nose smells nothing. Its eyes see nothing. Its ears hear nothing.

The prey is gone. It looks around. Nowhere in sight.

Hunger instantly overwrites its disappointment. To distract itself from its hunger and urge to chew, it decides to bite into the white mass beside to it.

It gnashes at it, shreds its flesh, slurps at its blood while clawing out its innards. It chews away to its heart's content, swallows it down, and then notices that identical meals are unfolding all around it.

There's less prey now.

It doesn't feel like it's in danger, but in accordance with its survival instincts, it bites off the head of another white mass that frantically consumes all around it. Bites into it, and swallows it down.

And this repeats. And repeats. Spurred on by endless hunger, it goes to the neighboring prey, and the prey neighboring that, and the prey neighboring that, and the prey neighboring that, and the prey neighboring—.

Eventually, after devouring everything around, it is the only thing left.

It licks up the blood soaking the ground, leaving not a single scrap of gore or blood-soaked grass left. Once it tidily cleans up the remains of the meal, it truly is alone.

But even with meat in its stomach, starvation far exceeding its body mass assaults it.

It cries out, teeth chattering, near to madness. Unending starvation, insatiable hunger. The maddening lack of release, no matter how much it eats.

Mother must have felt this too.

For an instant, a mysterious thought passes through a mind dominated by hunger.

The indistinct thing had been a simple flash of emotion, nothing so cultivated as to reach language.

And it, too, vanishes eternally in the face of maddening hunger.

The creature trembles, trembles violently. It shrieks as it feels its innards churn about, and it unconsciously creates another entity.

This sudden, new white mass tumbles back-first onto the ground, as if it’s forgotten how to walk. Every single one of its organs registers this thing prey, and it bites into the tumbling mass without any hesitation.

It swallows it down without allowing it even to shriek. After eating, the hunger still torments it. And following all this agonized struggling, another creature other than itself is born into the world.

And it repeats, and it repeats, the same thing going on and on and on and on.

It’s alone now. Nothing else exists in this world. There are buildings, and forests, and earth, and air and wind, but no prey. It’s alone.

And it proceeds to eat.

Eventually, even IT is devoured by another stomach, and disappears.

The new lonely one repeats and repeats it all until it is that no longer. The world turns.

—Insatiable hunger is never to be sated.

6

The momentary presence of the incredible shadow makes Subaru swallow his breath.

Subaru: "…"

The black orb that Beatrice's canto created swallows the snowfield trapping the Hare that Emilia sealed, then proceeds to shrink smaller and smaller, before eventually shrinking smaller than a marble and silently vanishing.

Even Subaru, who does not know the theory behind this feat, understands what this means.

Al Shamak, the greatest of Shamak spells, is magic that affects space.

The magic swallowed the Hare and the snowfield, then blasted them all into another dimension.

Neither regeneration nor multiplication mean anything any more.

Because it's literally another world's issue.

Subaru: "I know I did…ask you to send them into an isolated space like the Forbidden Archive, but…"

Beatrice: "Do I hear malcontent, I suppose?"

Subaru's voice trembles before the incredible feat, while Beatrice pouts beside him.

She puts her hands to her hips, quite displeased with Subaru's attitude.

Emilia: "Seriously, wow…"

The whole thing makes Emilia's eyes open wide as well.

Emilia is more learned in magic than Subaru, so her surprise is happening on another vector. Her powers have probably settled in somewhat after half-freezing herself and using such immense magic. Once she figures out how to control it, she'll probably be fine.

Subaru looks around, confirming that there is nothing where the Hare used to be.

Then he glances behind him, and confirms that the tomb is secure too. Peeking out from the tomb is an expressionless mob of Ryuzu's. Looks like the Ryuzu doubles have all managed to reach safety too.

Roswaal is leaning against the wall beside the tomb's entrance, with Ram in his arms.

Ram's hand is touching Roswaal's cheek, and Subaru can see that Roswaal is crying.

Subaru: "…"

Witnessing that, Subaru feels the weight in his chest disappear.

There are still so many things that they have to talk about. Otto, Garfiel, and the others are still back at the mansion. He does believe they're safe, but they need to meet up and talk. And on this side, too. He has so many things to ask Emilia.

But somehow, it feels like everything is all right.

There are so many things he hasn't verified yet. But seeing Roswaal crying, and Ram smiling softly as she watches him, makes Subaru feel that: hey, everything's all right.

Emilia: "Subaru, come on!"

Subaru takes his breather, until Emilia suddenly pokes his cheek.

Emilia smiles at Subaru when he looks back at her, and then gestures to the area behind him. Where there Beatrice stands with her arms folded, still looking sulky.

Beatrice: “I believe that this ace deserves a few words, in fact.”

Beatrice puffs out her cheeks. Subaru replies with a nod.

And,

Beatrice: “Ah, eep!”

Subaru slips his hands under her arms and lifts her right up.

He ignores her adorable yelp, embracing her as he spins around on the spot,

Subaru: “You did it! Knew you could, I’m so in love with you, Beako!!”

Beatrice: “Wh—hold it! Sto—let me—let me go, I suppose! Betty isn’t…”

Subaru: “Yes yes yes! You are adorable! Beako is wonderful! Beako is supreme! All hail Beako!”

Showing her in praise, Subaru spins round and around with Beatrice in his arms.

Beatrice’s face flashes beet red as Emilia watches them frolic, her gaze awfully gentle. The spirit and Contractor, spinning and spinning in an energetic expression of delight—

Both: “Ah!”

—Lose their footing at the last moment, and happily plunge face-first into the snow together.

Interlude: Each Gives Concession

1

Subaru: “—Aaand, done!”

Subaru sticks the two twigs into the heap of snow before him, then wipes the sweat from his brow.

It’s an amateur work, thrown together in an hour, but he still has to be impressed at the results.

Murmurs of admiration spread through the onlooking crowd as well.

Subaru: “Yeah, I must have a talent for this stuff. If we’re ever hurting for food money, we can make it snow, and make it as the esteemed snow artists of the nation.”

Emilia: “Stop being so silly. I’m not going to make it snow to help you with that. …But, it really does look sooo good.”

Says Emilia with a white puff of breath as she sits on the stone steps, observing Subaru’s work. Reflected in her amethyst eyes is Subaru’s snowman—but since labelling it as a ‘snowman’ wouldn’t quite describe it correctly, perhaps it’s better to call it a ‘snow sculpture.’

There are now about 20 sculptures of Puck crafted from the leftover snow in the Sanctuary. What had compelled Subaru to make so many? Ask him, and he would only be able to answer with: copious romanticism.

But it’s making Emilia and the Sanctuary’s people happy, so the shallow rationale will suffice. ???: “I’m sure that you’re not trying to be, but you truly are an idiot, Barusu.” Says someone else, judging Subaru harshly.

The speaker is a girl, seated on the steps with her head on Emilia's lap. She has dressed out of her trademark maid uniform and currently wears a simple white outfit.

Her clothes burned as she wavered between life and death. While her face does look paler than usual, neither her tone nor venom suffer for it. So everything's good.

Subaru: "The two of you keep ganging up to call dumb…I did put in quite a bit of work throughout this whole mess, so can't you be nicer to me? I could use a little more commendation."

Emilia: "Mm, you're right. Thank you sooo much, Subaru. But I was the one doing work when you were away, so actually I'd like commendation too."

Subaru: "The stuff you've started saying, Emilia-tan…"

Though, Emilia does deserve praise for protecting the Sanctuary during Subaru's absence. It's uncertain whether the residents would have escaped the Hare had Emilia not instructed them to go in the tomb. And had Emilia not cleared the Trials, there would've been nowhere to take shelter anyway.

Neither is it certain that Subaru would have thought to use the tomb as a shelter. Since his thoughts had been fixated on escaping before the snow came.

Subaru: "Well, we'll call it a happy mistake that the Men's Brigade came back and sparked your motivation, Emilia-tan. …Seriously, thank you."

This is true for previous affairs too, but this whole series of events involved far too many gambles.

It feels like Subaru couldn't manage on his own, and constantly had others rescuing him. Even though he'd decided to take the hardest parts upon himself, ideally.

Emilia: "But of course, though. If you do absolutely everything for me, Subaru, I'm going stop knowing what I'm even doing here. You've done enough zipping around that it's okay for you to rest a little.”

Subaru: “No it’s just that when I want to help with all the brains and brawn I don’t have, running around like an idiot’s all I can do.”

Emilia: “But that’s going to change, yes?”

Says Emilia teasingly, suppressing a laugh as she strokes Ram’s head. Subaru instantly understands, and rubs his finger under his nose as he replies with a, “yeah.”

He made many mistakes, and others were constantly rescuing him, but he managed to save basically everything he needed to. And he would never agonize over these issues alone again.

Subaru would no longer hesitate to rely on others, would not slack in his own efforts either, and has people to give him a good kick in the ass when he needs it.

Subaru: “…”

Subaru looks up, shifting his gaze from the clearing to the tomb.

His gaze goes past Emilia as she sits on the steps, all the way to the mouth of the tomb. Inside that place, its Trial mechanism absent, are two people.

What could they be discussing inside? It does prey on Subaru’s mind, but,

Subaru: “Well, even I have enough tact not to interrupt them.”

There’s a wealth of opportunities they have to speak, but they couldn’t stand to wait.

Surely. They have mountains of things to discuss.

2

A girl and a man face each other with a transparent coffin between them.

Girl: “Mother…”

Murmurs the girl as she looks at the woman in the crystal coffin.

It feels like she’s floating, like her feet aren’t touching the ground. Some of it is from the remaining rush of battle, some of it is from her feelings of loss and liberation from losing her old haunt, and most of it is from the unreal sight before her.

She had never thought that she would see her mother again.

The woman in the coffin—the witch, Echidna—looks not at all different from Beatrice’s memories. Long, white, beautiful hair alongside her intelligent yet gentle features. It vividly revives memories of how she smiled at Beatrice, though it only happened rarely.

Beatrice: “Betty…wasn’t able to keep her promise to you, I suppose. I’m sorry.” Beatrice strokes the coffin, beginning the four-hundred-year reunion with an apology.

When they parted, Echidna had instructed Beatrice to give her stockpile of knowledge to THEY. Had given her abundant books to fill the Archive, and a gospel that told the future. Beatrice no longer has either.

The gospel telling the future that Echidna desired of Beatrice, and all of the knowledge that Echidna amassed, has departed the world as ashes.

Beatrice: “Betty never even met THEY…and the books have burned, in fact. I’ve done excessively many things I must apologize for, I suppose.”

I’m a terrible daughter, thinks Beatrice.

A foolish daughter who could not achieve even one of her mother’s requests, even with four centuries. Now she is meeting her mother who she cannot even face, and should be apologizing profusely, but—

???: “…You look raaaaaaaather more refreshed.”

Mutters the man across from her, easily disclosing her thoughts.

Beatrice glances up to see a man with long hair arise from the dim, smiling weakly. It's Roswaal. He's supposed to be a familiar face, but Beatrice cannot keep herself from feeling offput by him. Perhaps because his eyes, always crazed in pursuit of his goals ever since Beatrice had met him, now look uncertain—and because he is missing is clown makeup, his face bare.

Beatrice: "You best me in terms of refreshed in fact, Roswaal. Making my presence without cosmetics means violating the instructions from your predecessor, I suppose."

Roswaal: "The clown make-up was a sort of war paint for me, yoooooou see. Wearing it let me interact with others spiritedly, as though I were donning a mask. But there's sooooooooomething I realized."

Beatrice: "Yes?"

Roswaal: "That regardless of the make-up, I am aaaaaaan absolute clown. So how meaningful is it, truly, that I neglect my cosmetics?"

Beatrice: "I see, in fact."

Beatrice nods as Roswaal gives a joking shrug. She fiddles with her pigtails in silence before going on,

Beatrice: "Now."

Beatrice: "You must have things to say to Mother, I suppose. Reunion with her has been your…has been your family's deepest wish, in fact."

Roswaal says nothing.

Beatrice: "You mark perhaps the tenth Roswaal since the progenitor who directly knew Mother, I suppose. Lords of the Mathers family have been short-lived for generations, so the visitors to the Archive shifted rather steadily, in fact. …You've been different ever since childhood, I suppose."

Beatrice may not have been deeply involved in the history of the Mathers Family, but she did watch from aside how their affairs progressed.

The first Roswaal was Echidna's only student. Though he lost almost all of his magical ability in his fight with the warlock Hector, he did not give up on being Echidna's student.

He frequented the Archive even after Echidna's death, disregarding the dazed Beatrice as he obsessively searched and searched and searched for something, and likely gave that something to his descendant before dying.

Ever since, all the descendants from Roswaal's line demonstrated magical capabilities bordering on those of their progenitor, and the Mathers family expanded.

Now is the current Roswaal. The man standing in front of Beatrice.

This Roswaal exhibited the most supreme talent out of all the Roswaal's yet. He was such a genius that, secretly, even Beatrice had to shiver.

His power eclipsed that of the progenitor, who Echidna had singled out personally, and could have done anything he wanted with his claim as one of the strongest magicians in the world.

Beatrice: "You had all that talent, and you still failed to escape the Mathers' curse, in fact. Your family has been entranced with thoughts of reuniting with my deceased Mother, the path a cruel one you fixedly walked…I do sympathize with you somewhat, I suppose."

Roswaal: "Do you? But how are you and we any different? You spent four centuries bound by the words of your deceased mother. It's identical. Or rather, unlike my family's shifting over the generations, you suffered pain in solitude beyond what anyone can empathize. We did what we needed to strive forward toward our goal. You simply suffered in place."

Says Roswaal, his words even graver than Beatrice's.

In the end, they're both bad, she thinks.

Roswaal's family has inherited the same feelings over lives upon short lives, in pursuit of a single reunion.

Beatrice had been trapped in an empty cage for her immortal life, waiting for the day that she could fulfil her promise.

An objective onlooker would see them as equally foolish clowns.

The two glare at each other in silence.

But their silent competition ends when Roswaal averts his gaze.

Roswaal: "This is a tedious argument. When two fools point at the other whilst mocking their foolishness, we begin crossing the boundaries of vain comedy."

Beatrice: "…You are correct there, in fact."

Roswaal: "Do you mind me asking something?"

Roswaal raises his finger. Beatrice silently looks up, expressing her consent by neglecting to reject him.

Roswaal looks down at Echidna as she sleeps in the coffin.

Roswaal: "Did Subaru manage to be your They?"

The word 'they' makes Beatrice swallow her breath. She has never spoken directly with Roswaal about THEY. But Beatrice does not think it strange for him to learn about her from sources outside her knowledge.

And thinking back on it, the people who had visited the Archive until now had ultimately been brought there by Roswaals up to the previous generation. The Roswaals easily could have heard the story from them and passed it on to their descendants.

And frankly you could say that even Subaru had been brought there by Roswaal. —Not that Subaru would accept it if you told him so.

Roswaal: "…Why are you laughing?"

Beatrice: "—Ah. Sorry, I suppose. I'm not laughing at you, Roswaal, in fact. It just made me imagine something amusing, I suppose."

It amuses Beatrice how she managed to figure, with pinpoint accuracy, what the black-haired man would say. He's just that straightforward, perhaps. She doesn't want to think any further into it than that.

Either way, Beatrice shakes her head.

Beatrice: "That man is…Subaru is not fit to be my THEY, in fact."

Roswaal: "…Hrm."

Beatrice: "Subaru isn't nearly qualified to inherit Mother's archive of knowledge, I suppose. He has no mind to educate himself with the knowledge or use it for his purposes, and he lacks the fundamental background to do either, in fact. And he looks dumb and he's flimsy and he's useless at magic and his legs are short, I suppose. He isn't Betty's awaited THEY in any capacity."

Roswaal: "That soooooooounds quiiiiiiiiite the harsh opinion."

Beatrice: "Exactly, I suppose, Betty is harsh, in fact. And so I rebuffed every opportunity that came to me over these four centuries. …I rebuffed them with THEY, in fact."

Beatrice does feel something like guilt towards all those who tried to take her out of the Archive, when she thinks of it now. Not all of them had reached out to Beatrice while thinking only in their own interests. Some of them had spoken kindly to her.

But Beatrice cast away every single hand that reached for her.

Beatrice: "I know that I should've chosen THEY, I suppose. That I should have faced everyone who called to me, individual by individual, and properly thought out my answer, in fact. I was meant to choose someone suitable to inherit the Archive, Echidna's knowledge…that has to be what it was, I suppose."

Roswaal: “However, you say that the one you picked, Subaru, is unfit to be THEY?”

Beatrice: “I do, in fact. There’s no issue, I suppose. Betty’s choice is Subaru, in fact. Not THEY. I chose Subaru, I suppose.”

Beatrice sees how Roswaal’s breath catches and his eyes open wide.

It must be a difficult answer for him to accept, considering how he has devoted himself to Echidna. Beatrice had been in the exact same position as him until only a moment ago. She understands how Roswaal feels so much that it hurts.

And because she understands, she has to explain it at length.

Beatrice: “Subaru laughed at me when I begged him to be they, in fact. He crowed that he could make me happier than someone I’ve never seen, I suppose.”

Roswaal: “What a…prideful thing to say.”

Beatrice: “I don’t dislike that forcefulness, in fact.”

Rather than enticing her with polite speech, explaining to her what she should do, and clarifying how he would use Echidna’s knowledge, he was utterly candid.

Roswaal: “But no matter what he preaches, Subaru will not place you in first. It’s obvious simply by looking at him…you must already recognize this.”

Beatrice: “You don’t seem to understand, I suppose, Roswaal.”

Roswaal: “I don’t?”

Beatrice: “Betty didn’t leave the Archive because she’s Subaru’s number one, in fact. I left the Archive because I want Subaru to be my number one, I suppose.”

Choose me, he said.

I’ll be too lonely to live without you, he said.

Convenient prattle, she thought. Pleasant bullshit, she thought.

But it swayed Beatrice's heart. It resonated. It took her heart, sealed stuck in one place for four hundred years, and jolted it.

Now that she knows the freedom she felt the instant she took his hand and left the Archive, and how it almost brought her to tears, her heart just won't stop.

Beatrice: "Abandoning my post may disqualify me as Mother's spirit, but I don't mind, in fact. Betty is Contractor Natsuki Subaru's spirit, I suppose. My regret and shame for that…is gone, I suppose."

Roswaal might consider it a betrayal.

He had also been bound for four centuries by Echidna's curse, and perhaps Beatrice's announcement that she escaped it first was a betrayal to him. She didn't escape by fulfilling her role, but by abandoning it.

If she's going to face her Mother, or face Roswaal, she has to rationalize that.

Beatrice: "…"

Her heart is already resolved. She has already taken that hand.

Beatrice is going to live a life so vivid it never fades to sepia. Something so intense that, no matter how the years drag on, she never forgets those important to her. So she keeps silent, waiting for Roswaal to reply.

Roswaal: "You don't have to brace yourself. I'm not the Witch Echidna's spokesman. I have no right to intrude on your answer, whatever it may be. Just do what you wish."

Beatrice: "Roswaal…"

Roswaal: "And even had you not abandoned them, you would have never fulfilled Echidna's orders. Because I would have prioritized my own desires over you and sacrificed you. If we are speaking of betrayals, that constitutes a significant one."

Beatrice: "…"

Penitently, Roswaal acknowledges his wrongdoings for what happened in the mansion.

Just as Beatrice had realized in the Archive, Roswaal was the one plotting to take Beatrice's life. She had reasoned it the result of the gospel. Though she doesn't see how it all connects.

Beatrice: "Roswaal. What happened to your gospel, I suppose?"

Roswaal: "…It's burned to nothing. Thanks to a wicked maid who deeeeeeefied her master. The future is in ashes now. And perhaps eeeeeeeeeverything is."

Beatrice: "Everything is hollow and the future lies imperceptible… would be something, but you look considerably refreshed, in fact."

Roswaal: "—I wonder iiiiiiiiif I am."

Roswaal casts his gaze down in reply to Beatrice's perfect repeat of their previous conversation. He reaches for Echidna in the coffin, for her untouchable fingertips.

Roswaal: "I'm sad that I've lost the definite path to the answer I seek, and scared. …But perhaps I'm also joyed to read a story that I never could have read before. Though, I haven't felt so in over four centuries now, so I can't tell whether it's legitimate."

Beatrice: "…?"

Beatrice scrunches her brows. Something feels off about that statement.

Seeing her confusion makes Roswaal smile slightly.

Roswaal: "We haven't spoken nearly enough."

He says with some self-deprecation.

Roswaal: "You can't dismiss it aaaaaaas being beyond our control. At first there was need to be blindly fixated, but after that we did have time. We spent so much time in the same mansion. And even so, even though we had seen the same things, I kept avoiding you, like I was scared of talking about it.”

Beatrice: “Roswaal, what are you trying to say, I suppose?”

Roswaal: “I’m saying that it could’ve been…that we could have spent our last four hundred years like we did in Teacher’s laboratory together.”

Beatrice: “Teach—?!”

Finding an old, familiar word in Roswaal’s quiet speech, Beatrice swallows her breath. She breathes a shaky breath as she swallows down the implications,

Beatrice: “Impossible, are…you, Roswaal?”

Roswaal: “I’ve always been Roswaal?”

Beatrice: “No! Not like that…you have to know what I mean, I suppose!”

Roswaal: “I’m only joking. And you’re correct. I’m—it’s me, Beatrice. Roswaal.”

The instant he interrupts himself, Beatrice sees Roswaal in double.

She sees a tall man with long navy hair, and a young man with hair the same color. That is the youth who adored Echidna, abounding in wits as he tagged along everywhere behind her.

Beatrice: “But, then…Roswaal, this…how?!”

Roswaal: “I’m using one of Teacher’s theories from her hunt for immortality, soul transcription. I adopted the least risky of the experiments conducted in this Sanctuary, and tested it on myself.”

Beatrice: “Soul transcription…that’s the experiment to transcribe your consciousness and memories into an empty vessel, achieving a subjective immortality…but that experiment ended in failure when the souls failed to adhere, in fact!”

Roswaal: “Transcribed souls are pretty poor at adhering to vessels when they’re empty. That was a setback, but…If the issue is a problem of familiarity between the soul and vessel, then I overcame that problem by increasing that familiarity quotient.”

The research faced setbacks due to problems of familiarity between vessel and soul.

After Ryuzu Meyer became the nexus of the Sanctuary, Echidna’s crazed thirst for knowledge lead her to consider adopting the crystallized Ryuzu for other experiments.

But the Ryuzu doubles lacked any quality that let them accept foreign souls, and the experiment ended in failure. Roswaal is saying that he bested this issue by associating the vessel with the soul. After mulling over this, Beatrice finally understands what Roswaal’s presence here truly means.

—By transcribing his soul into the body of his descendants, entities close to himself, the first Roswaal continuously extended the path to reach his goal.

Roswaal: “Are you going to call me inhuman, Beatrice?” Beatrice says nothing.

Roswaal: “Are you going to call it inhuman that I, desiring only my reunion with Teacher, committed the atrocity of assembling my ignorant children as vessels?”

Roswaal’s words stab into Beatrice.

But the way that Roswaal gazes so calmly at her makes it almost seem that he’s waiting for her to lambaste him.

So Roswaal wants to face judgement too? Just like her, when she informed him that she abandoned her Contract with Echidna?

Roswaal must want to ask Beatrice, who knew Echidna, about the morality of his actions. About his four-hundred-year obsession, his unerring and unrequited love that has done nothing but inconvenience others.

Beatrice: "…It's not my job to say anything about it, in fact. I know how this sounds, but Betty's relationships with your descendants were shallow, I suppose. Though, thinking on it now, they were all just you, in fact. So I feel no disgust that you founded yourself on your children outside of the gut reaction, I suppose. My thoughts on it are euch, in fact."

Roswaal: "Euch, huh. Hoooooooooow harsh."

Beatrice: "But that's all I think, I suppose. Actually, I'm overjoyed that a friend from four hundred years ago is still alive, in fact."

Roswaal: "…I, see."

Roswaal closes his eyes. That might not have been the reply that Roswaal was looking for, but Beatrice doesn't care.

Beatrice is conveying her emotions honestly. That's how she resolved to be when she left the Archive. And now,

Beatrice: "Roswaal. Squat down for a moment, I suppose."

Roswaal: "Squat? Here?"

Roswaal tilts his head as Beatrice points to the ground beside her. Beatrice nods. Roswaal's eyes widen as he obediently squats down on the spot.

Beatrice watches Roswaal squat down as she removes her right shoe. She grasps it firm in her right hand,

Beatrice: "Grin and bear it, in fact."

Roswaal: "—Ghah?!"

Roswaal's face now rests at the perfect height to get slapped with a shoe.

The satisfying slap echoes through the room as it whacks Roswaal's face aside. He puts his hand to his reddened cheek, eyes spinning.

Beatrice puts her shoe back on during his confusion.

Beatrice: “Since I’m generous, I’ll say that’s enough to forgive you, I suppose. …It’s just consequences speaking for consequences, in fact. Subaru’s going to forgive you too, so I may as well let you off, I suppose.”

Roswaal: “…And I think that’s your hindsight bias speaking after everything ended with no deaths.”

Beatrice: “It is, in fact. Also, Subaru’s amazing for all the work he did to prevent any deaths, I suppose. You ought to take a lesson from him, in fact.”

Roswaal: “—Ha, hahaha! Reeeeeeeally now! I ought to take a lesson from him! Ahaha! My god…ahh, is that not, geeeeeeeeeeeenuinely humorous?”

Roswaal laughs as if Beatrice, hands on her hips, just told an excellent joke. He cannot keep himself from pitching back in laughter and bonking his head on the wall. Then he strikes the back of his head against the wall several times more, before giving a deep sigh.

Roswaal: “Sorry. —But I don’t feel that I’ve done anything wrong. Let me state that much.”

Beatrice: “Whatever, I suppose. If you’re going to apologize, do it the others, in fact.”

Roswaal gives Beatrice’s curt statement a nod.

Still seated on the ground, he looks up at the coffin.

And,

Roswaal: “Beatrice. What follows is a discussion only between you and me.”

Beatrice: “…”

Roswaal’s lowered voice makes Beatrice narrow her eyes.

Beatrice crosses her arms and jerks her chin to say, well, we’ll see what you have to say. Roswaal places his hand on the coffin as he pulls himself to his feet, and gazes at Echidna. His odd-colored eyes teem with maniacal passion,

Roswaal: “—If it were possible to truly see Teacher again, would you assist me in it?”

SETOWI

3

Subaru: “Man, they’re really not coming out. I know they have a bunch of stuff to to talk about, but isn’t this too much?”

Impatient with the stale situation, Subaru pouts as he waits in the clearing.

He has already made ten more snowmen. There are now thirty sculptures of Puck making various expressions, transfixing Emilia and the Sanctuary’s residents.

And Ram, who had quite enviably been borrowing Emilia’s lap for the past while, has recovered considerably and now leans easily against the stone steps. But since her gaze keeps shifting toward the tomb, it’s clear that she’s worried about what’s going on inside.

Beatrice has been awoken, and Roswaal has backed down.

Subaru doubts that anything violent will happen, but he does understand Ram’s concerns. They haven’t heard Roswaal say for himself that he’s calmed down after his fit.

But they’re assuming that he isn’t okay.

Subaru: “Well we’re just leaving that to Beako.”

Beatrice has known Roswaal for even longer than Ram has. And Beatrice was the one to tell them that the female corpse in the tomb was Echidna’s.

It’s best that the two of them talk alone if they’re going to be doing it in the corpse’s presence. Subaru can get involved on the topic of what they’re doing with Echidna’s corpse afterwards. No issue.

Subaru: “And it’ll be easier to talk about our future course after we meet up with Garfiel and the others.”

If they managed to escape the mansion safely, then they should be coming straight to the Sanctuary. Subaru asked the Men’s Brigade to drive their carriage back to Earlham Village, too. They should meet up with everyone by tomorrow night at the latest.

They need to deal with the snow covering the Sanctuary and assess damages. Considering how long that will take, it's best that they do have this free time. And also for the sake of their nerves.

By focusing on making snowmen, Subaru has managed to more or less calm down emotionally. He should be able to hold a peaceful conversation with Roswaal. He's able. Yes he is able. He rather considers himself able.

Emilia: "Good work, Subaru…Why are flailing your arms around?"

Subaru: "Ah, I mean, nothing? I'm not shadowboxing as practice to beat that fucker's face in! He'll probably get me first anyway!"

Emilia: "Really?"

Says Emilia beside him, tilting her head and looking confused.

She looks cheerfully over the rows of snow sculptures.

Emilia: "There's a whole mountain of Pucks. I know he'd be happy to see this."

Subaru: "Would he? I'm imagining him complaining like, 'But I thought I was prettier than that?'."

Emilia: "Oh, that did sound like him. Puck, are…ah, he's sleeping right now."

Mutters Emilia as she withdraws a blue crystal from her breast pocket.

The jewel has settled down into a state where it glows a deep blue, reflecting the sunlight on the snow as Emilia holds it.

Puck, devoid of any Contract with Emilia, is sealed inside this crystal.

Subaru: "But you can't summon him like you could before."

Emilia: “No, I can’t. This crystal isn’t pure enough to seal a spirit as strong as Puck. He’s staying inactive so that the crystal doesn’t break, but…I don’t think I can touch him or talk to him like this…”

Subaru: “Gotta get a better gemstone. Something like the old green one.”

The crystal pendant hanging from Emilia’s neck. It shattered into pieces following the cessation of Puck’s Contract, and apparently was quite a rare stone.

Puck apparently had it with him when he first Contracted Emilia, so not even she knows where to acquire one.

Emilia: “But I’ll definitely get a good gemstone and bring Puck back someday. Then…there are so many things I want to talk about with him. There’s everything he kept quiet from me, and everything I discovered because of it.”

Emilia lovingly strokes the gem’s face, her amethyst eyes full of determination.

She looks so stunningly beautiful that Subaru has to swallow his breath. Emilia notices this and glances up at him with a questioning hum. He rubs his nose.

Subaru: “Er, no, it’s sorta…Emilia-tan, you’ve changed. I mean you’ve always been cute but now it’s like you’re strong too?”

Emilia: “If I am, then it’s thanks to you and everyone else. I’m always only ever getting things from others. I want to be able to repay everyone soon.”

Subaru: “I mean that’s the same case here about the only ever getting things thing.” Subaru and Emilia both keenly feel their powerlessness.

But that doesn’t mean they’re going to lick each other’s wounds. Subaru gets that impression from Emilia, which he finds both heartening and isolating.

He finally got some of the confidence and strength for him to support her, and then she dashes so far ahead that she doesn't need it.

It feels like he could run after her forever, and he'd never catch up.

Emilia: "By the way, Subaru…so, um."

Subaru: "Mhm?"

Emilia: "They're taking a long time in the tomb. …Mhm, it sure is long."

Subaru submerges himself in sentimentality, when Emilia awkwardly calls to him. She glances over to the tomb, which sits there the same as ever.

But Emilia's face is steadily changing color. Her cheeks grow flushed, and seeing how the intense blush reaches to the tips of her pointed ears, Subaru panics.

Subaru: "E-Emilia-tan?! Your face just flashed to red, I mean are you okay?!"

Emilia: "I-I'm, okey. I am absolutely composed. Now I would, uhrm, like to discuss a certain matter."

Subaru: "I, I'm, indeed."

For some reason having Emilia speak politely makes Subaru wind up doing the same.

Emilia glances over the area, and once she confirms that no one is nearby, she gazes red-faced at Subaru. More specifically, she gazes at Subaru's mouth.

Emilia: "So, um…Subaru, it's like, you said that you l…love me, right?"

Subaru: "Erm, um, yes. I did say that. I love you."

Emilia: "—Well, that, erm, makes me, sooo, sooo happy, but…"

The way that Emilia's sentence trails off gives Subaru a bad feeling.

She just said, "That makes me happy, but…". Subaru can think of only one thing that could follow on from this.

This sentence ends in: Let's just be friends.

Subaru: "I did mention this before, that I'm waiting for you to notice me, and'll put in my best effort so that you do."

Emilia: "I'm…that, makes me very happy. But, even when you say these things to me, I don't really understand what it is to like someone like that."

Subaru says nothing.

Emilia: "It was the same in the carriage, and it's the same now in the tomb. You're telling me you love me, but I still have nothing I can tell you. I know it's sooo terrible of me…"

Hearing her sentence reach its feeble end, Subaru puts his hand to his chest in relief.

Emilia's answer is still in standby mode, then. Nothing's changed from before, which is fine.

So long as Subaru's repeated and persistent love confessions haven't sickened her, everything's fine. Subaru will offer Emilia his hand without fail, provided she could just get stuck enough to need it. That's the slight discord between Subaru and Emilia's recognition of the other's feelings. Which becomes utterly pointless with Emilia's next statement.

Emilia: "But! I think that we really need to talk about the baby in my tummy!"

Subaru: "…"

—.

——.

———.

Subaru: “Pardon me?”

Emilia: “I don’t know if they’re a boy or a girl yet, but either way we have to shower them in love! But I was never taught about that so I don’t know what to do…You have to talk to the dad for these things.”

Subaru: “No, no, no no, no…wait, wait, wait…”

Subaru’s mind cannot catch up to Emilia as she rapidly talks on.

The speed of Emilia’s speech has made her out of breath too, and Subaru can see that she’s agitated.

There is no way that the two of them can converse decently like this.

Subaru: “Emilia-tan, take deep breaths, and calm down a second. I’m doing that, right now, taking deep breaths to calm down. Oh hey there’s some snow over here.”

Subaru squats down, gets a handful of snow, and smacks it onto his face to physically cool himself down. He hears Emilia breathing deeply as he forces himself to think rationally.

The baby in Emilia’s tummy. Emilia’s the mom, and Subaru’s the dad. He doesn’t get it. Subaru’s coming of age still has yet to happen.

Subaru: “Emilia-tan. When you say baby, you mean like an infant, right?”

Emilia: “E-Exactly. I know it’ll be tough with the Royal Selection, but…that’s not the baby’s fault, and we have to make sure they’re happy! I want the baby to get the love it needs from the people who must love it.”

Emilia’s determination is noble and beautiful.

But what she’s saying doesn’t make sense. Subaru has never done anything like that with Emilia.

Which means that Emilia and someone else have—no he'd rather not think about that.

Subaru: "Emilia-tan…you know that babies don't come from storks or cabbage patches, right?"

Emilia: "But when a boy and a girl kiss that makes a baby."

Subaru: "…"

He is stunned.

At her ignorance, and how adorable she is for thinking this.

Emilia: "Subaru? What's wrong? Hey, Subaru!"

Emilia doesn't look to understand anything at all as she calls Subaru's name.

It somehow looks like her expression has grown stronger thanks to motherly self-awareness. Perhaps that was why Emilia seemed strong to him. Which means that maybe he shouldn't fix this misunderstanding.

—No. He must. This isn't the time for him to be thinking this stuff. If Emilia keeps on this course, everything's going to continue alongside Emilia's fake pregnancy. She'll be imagining her stomach growing bigger by the day and talking to the thing. Which is cute, but presents its own problems.

Emilia: "Subaru, maybe, you regret kissing me…?"

Subaru: "Uh no actually I'm craving your infinite kisses?!"

Emilia: "A-Are you now…"

Subaru regrets his knee-jerk response as the conversation flows deeper into a swamp of misunderstandings.

Subaru basically just told Emilia that he's craving infinite baby-making. And he is, but that comes later.

Emilia needs to be educated properly at this very first stage.

But how come Subaru has to be the one to do it?

Subaru: “C-Curse you, Puck!”

Subaru curses the cat spirit sleeping deep in the crystal.

In his mind, he sees the cat put its paw to his head, stick out its tongue, and say: Whoops!

—Subaru, after all his ambivalence, only realizes that he can have Ram or Frederica do the explaining long after Emilia starts pestering him about picking names for the child.

Interlude:
Emilia Camp • Warlock • Spirit • Spirit User

1

Bones creak at the moment of impact, his body whirling through the air before slamming into the wall. Unabating, the shock pierces through the flimsy woodwork, splinters showering the figure as he shoots out of building. He lands to skid gracelessly over the snow, kicking up frost as he tumbles.

"…"

The prone figure doesn't even twitch. Everything falls so silent that he could practically be dead. Subaru glances at the person who was shunted through the wall, and at the pugilist inside the building. The assailant notices Subaru's gaze, and with a satisfied sigh, "Yeh…I goddamn got it done, oi."

Says the blond boy who smiles as he clicks his sharp fangs—Garfiel.

Subaru scratches his head, watching Ram run over to the pummeled Roswaal,

"Y-You sure did."

He manages to say.

2

Garfiel and the others met up with Subaru's group in the Sanctuary half a day after Emilia announced her pregnancy, otherwise said, on the morning after the Sizeable Hare fight.

Patrasche came to the Sanctuary pulling a carriage of six people, including Garfiel.

Hearing that the girls they'd gone to rescue in the mansion, Rem, Petra, and Frederica were all okay, and that the rescuers Garfiel and Otto were fine too, relieved Subaru.

But the bonus that they brought along with them was, ???: “Oh look, hi there again, Mister.”

Says a girl with pigtails, bound in a corner of the carriage—Meili, the beastmaster who attacked the mansion with Elsa.

The unexpected reunion strikes Subaru dumb. Meili addresses him with the same friendly tone and demeanor as before, in the mansion.

Meili: “Care to hear me out? This blond guy has just no clue how to treat ladies. He leaves them sitting there wrapped up in bindings, it’s so awwwfulll. Don’t you think so, Mister?”

Subaru: “Yeah. Though I don’t know what you could’ve done to me so I’dve gagged you too. …Which means we caught you, but what about Elsa?”

Meili: “No clue there. But Elsa wouldn’t have survived that blaze, would she? So I guess she’s dead. Doesn’t bother me.”

Meili doesn’t care in the slightest about the death of her supposed compatriot, Elsa. Subaru furrows his brows.

Subaru: “You sure must be relaxed if you’re looking for better captivity conditions. Doubt you’re gonna be having a great time. You did some really bad stuff.”

Meili: “I know. But I messed up, so it’s kinda just like, oh well. And if I go back Mama will just scold me anyway.”

Subaru: “Your mom. I know you mentioned this a few times in the mansion, but that means you have some kind of kingpin. …Well, just another thing that’ll get cleared up by talking to Roswaal.”

Meili: “Give me meals thrice a day with no peppirs, okay?”

Meili cheerily turns her back to Subaru, announcing that the conversation is over. They’ll have to deal with her incarceration later. But either way, she’s an important witness to what happened in the Roswaal Mansion attack.

It genuinely surprises Subaru that Garfiel had the smarts to capture her.

Next is the safety of the Sanctuary and the Earlham villagers. After they learned that those who evacuated the Sanctuary earlier were safe in a nearby town, everyone's well-being was secured. Just when Subaru put his hand to his chest in relief, the first blow of closure struck.

Garfiel: "Personally think my amazin' self's bein' damn nice t'let yer off with just one punch."

Garfiel swings the arm he used to punch Roswaal as he gazes at the open hole in the wall. Though Subaru has quite a few objections about Roswaal, and believes that Garfiel's fury is justified,

Subaru: "When that punch is stronger than ten of my punches combined, I really have to wonder about calling it 'nice'…"

Garfiel: "Stop bein' so passive, Captain. C'mon, have a go."

Garfiel snorts and presents something to Subaru. Subaru looks to Garfiel's hands, to find him holding a branch that he must have gotten in the forest.

It's a rather good branch, thick and long. Like a wooden baseball bat.

Subaru: "…Where is this going, exactly?"

Garfiel: "'D be a dick move t'hit him a bunch. Yer get one shot, but ain't no one got any right t'complain if yer use this t'make it a good one."

Subaru: "It's already enough of a dick move to beat him up after what you did!"

And he's using a weapon. Subaru could start arguing semantics over whether or not this counts as a 'punch'. But Garfiel just tilts his head, and jerks his chin toward the hole.

Garfiel: "It don't look like anyone agrees with yer, Captain."

Subaru: “Huh?”

Stricken with a rather rueful Garfiel, Subaru looks outside to find that Ram has gotten Roswaal back to his feet, where Frederica faces him with her fist brandished over her head.

Frederica: “Brace yourself, Master!”

Frederica’s powerful arm cuts through the air as she drives her fist into the same spot Garfiel hit, his left cheek. Roswaal goes flying through the air yet again, this time coming to a stop several meters away when he slams into a tree trunk. The impact makes snow fall from the treetop, burying Roswaal beneath it.

After witnessing it all, Frederica claps her hands with a satisfied nod.

Subaru: “Seriously?! Everyone endorses this retaliation?”

Garfiel: “We gotta get closure, Captain. ‘S gonna be fuckin’ awkward later on ‘f he don’t get his payback fer what he did. Ain’t like I ain’t gonna heal him. ‘N there’s Lady Emilia too.”

Roswaal pokes his head out of the snow, his eyes spinning, as Petra and Otto await their turns beside him. Ram pulls Roswaal out, while Emilia stands nearby to heal him at a moment’s notice.

Subaru: “I mean Emilia-tan is there as a healer yes? She absolutely isn’t waiting her turn yes? Though I guess she does have a right to be included.”

Garfiel: “Eh, think’d be hard with her personality. But anyway, that’s what yer got. So c’mon, Captain.”

Garfiel pushes the wooden bat over to Subaru. He timidly accepts it.

Subaru: “You won’t let me in on the talk if I don’t hit him?”

Garfiel: “I ain’t goin’ that far. ‘S just that you wanna smack the shithead ‘cross the face too, yeh?”

A shove to his back makes Subaru step out of the house.

Garfiel shoots Subaru a thumbs up from across the hole in the wall. Looks like he's imitating things from Subaru. With that send-off from his yet-uncomfortable brother surrogate, Subaru goes to the very end of the Roswaal Closure line.

Incidentally Petra just slapped Roswaal's face with a soaking cloth.

A wet, satisfying thwack echoes throughout the Sanctuary.

3

Subaru: "Ahem, okay. Now that we've had our closure, I think it's time for us to discuss recent events and figure out what we're doing for the future."

After clearing his throat, Subaru takes charge of the proceedings and glances over the group. All the important players in this loop are together in the cathedral. Which is quite a number of people, and makes Subaru sentimental about how the household has grown.

In the cathedral are the old residents of Roswaal Mansion—Subaru, Emilia, Beatrice, Roswaal, and Ram—alongside the new Roswaal Mansion residents Otto, Frederica, and Petra. And then are the main figures from the Sanctuary, Garfiel and Ryuzu.

Rem is currently sleeping in Ryuzu's house, under the care of Pico and the other Ryuzu doubles.

Emilia: "Subaru, your eyes look kind of distant, are you alright? Are you still not feeling well?"

Subaru: "Nope, I'm fine. Just getting sentimental. Team Emilia's doubled in size. Though, add in the Sanctuary's people and the villagers from Earlham, and you'll start getting a bigger figure."

Emilia: "…You're right."

Emilia nods, her eyes similarly distant.

After demonstrating her will by holding her ground, and holding the defense lines against the Sizeable Hare, the Sanctuary dwellers and Earlham's young men's brigade must view her more favorably.

Just because someone is dependable in a pinch doesn't mean they're a Ruler, but it's a world of difference compared to when they were alienating her.

If they can interact with her more often, then they'll surely come to learn Emilia's personality. They just need to gain more understanding like that, over time, thinks Subaru.

Subaru: "Aaand I'm off topic. Okay, back to the point. So we all know what happened in the Sanctuary and at the mansion? Now I'd kinda like to exact some responsibility from the guy who triggered it all, or ask for some details, but…"

Everyone in the room turns to look at the topical mastermind.

Roswaal lies limp in a corner of the cathedral, in Ram's lap. His eyes open as he notices the gazes upon him.

Roswaal: "Ooooooooooh? After you have all tormented me so thoroughly, you stiiiiiiiiill must brutalize me further before you aaaaaaaaaare satisfied?"

Subaru: "You get what you pay for. Emilia-tan even healed you, so stop saying this shameless junk. But anyway, I'm more surprised about Ram."

Ram: "…For what?"

Subaru sticks his tongue out at the mouthy Roswaal as he redirects the conversation onto Ram. She holds Roswaal's hand as she rests his head on her lap, her words making Subaru furrow his brows.

Subaru: "No, I mean."

Subaru: "I know you weren't in top shape, but I'm impressed how you just kept quiet and watched the Roswaal Closure. I was certain you'd flip."

Ram: "Foolishness, Barusu. …I don't believe in the least that Master Roswaal is utterly incapable of mistakes. But I do wish to take his side when his path is mistaken. Of course I would find myself thinking that way. And you cannot see even that? How foolish."

Subaru: “Don’t open and close by doubling up on the fool business! But anyway with that logic, you…”

Ram: “Exactly. You were justified to strike Master Roswaal. So I accept that he was stricken. That I tend to him with care and kindness afterwards is my convenience.”

As always, Ram’s exhibitions of love are somewhat masculine.

Nobody can complain at her about her devotion to Roswaal. Garfiel alone does look like he’s beset with a dilemma, but he stays silent, probably because he’s always been talked out of mentioning anything.

Beatrice: “You have odd tastes, I suppose. After all those burns to your stomach…were Betty and miss silver-hair not around, you would have been left with those scars, in fact.”

The next one to speak is Beatrice, who sits quietly beside Subaru.

Her knees are folded up to her chest as she leans against Subaru’s left shoulder. She has assisted Emilia in Ram’s treatment, erasing the injuries, and so allowed Ram to recover so well.

Ram: “I give you my gratitude, Lady Beatrice and Lady Emilia. But I would prefer that your saving my life acts as no pretext for you to meddle with affairs of my love.”

Beatrice: “Betty isn’t generous to do that, I suppose. If you’re going to devote yourself to this wrongdoing man, even if it hurts you again, that’s at your liberty, in fact.”

Roswaal: “—It won’t happen again.”

Beatrice gives Ram her harsh reply, when Roswaal hears her and sits up.

The two of them catch their breath, and Subaru also gulps.

Roswaal is not wearing his cosmetics, exposing his unadorned face.

Without his clown make up, the handsome man covers his left eye with his hand, and gazes over the people assembled in the cathedral with his blue. He bows his head deeply.

Roswaal: “I will never achieve anything by so arrogantly making sacrifices of us ever again. —I swear it on the soul of my mentor.”

All: “…”

Roswaal: “And I’d rather Beatrice not punch me a third time.”

Jokes Roswaal as he raises his head and looks at Beatrice. Beatrice looks away, sour.

Beatrice: “The second one was your punishment for moronic blather, I suppose. The third’s beyond me, in fact.”

Roswaal: “Which is how I’d like it to stay. I’d prefer to avoid undergoing any more revenge from you all. Garfiel and Subaru were so ruthless that even I had to prepare myself for death.”

Subaru: “You’re putting my hit in the same class as that? It couldn’tve been that strong.” Though Subaru had wanted his punch to be one with some oomph.

His strike cleanly struck the tip of Roswaal’s chin, and what a sight it was to see Roswaal too dizzied to stand.

Either way. Roswaal’s statements do feel genuine. Meaning that Subaru is unhesitant to give trusting him a try. It seems that something moved Roswaal as he watched Ram risk her life to burn his gospel, contributing to his change of heart.

Subaru: “Though you’re being kinda anticlimactic considering we diverged from that gospel you loved. I was seriously thinking that winning you over while you have a breakdown’d be the last job to do in the Sanctuary.”

Roswaal: “That bud was plucked before it could sprout. No words of mine can change that I lost our bet. At the moment that I lost myself, and defied both my Contract and gospel tooooooooo bring snowfall. And you preformed so excellently that I indeed did do that.”

Subaru: "…Well, it's because Garfiel and Emilia-tan put in serious work."

Roswaal: "You have a bad habit of neglecting to name yourself at moments like this. Either way, the results are the results. You overcame every Trial that I thought impossible, and liberated the Sanctuary. …I have lost."

Garfiel: "—So hey, Captain."

Roswaal shrugs with resigned acceptance. Subaru finds himself too stuck to say anything, hen Garfiel raises his hand and butts in.

His glare remains fixed on Roswaal, while his sharp fangs clatter.

Garfiel: "Are yer ser'sly thinkin' t'add this guy t'our team? Honestly, I still ain't quite agreein' with that."

Subaru: "Garfiel…"

Garfiel: "Well, fuckin' duh! Th'fuck was this prick thinking he was doing in the Sanctuary and th'mansion? Sayin' you weren't there, Captain, th'village'd be rabbit food n' my Sis n' this girl'd be killed fer fun by the guts lady! We protect this guy, 'n we don't known when he's gonna go back t'slicing our necks!"

Howls Garfiel as he stomps the floor, a slight quake running through the cathedral.

Garfiel is correct. They have had their conversations and beat-downs with Roswaal to bring closure, but that had only been the pre-amble for hearing his explanations.

Roswaal had exposed everyone here to mortal danger for the sake of his own goals, and Subaru has seen everyone lose their lives multiple times.

This world that has no sacrifices, where everyone is together and safe, was only accomplished because he had those deaths as a groundwork while he worked together with everyone.

Subaru is furious enough that he wants to slap Roswaal, and interrogate him. He wants to do what Garfiel is saying, and turn his back on Roswaal.

Subaru: “But still, we need Roswaal.”

Garfiel: “Captain!”

Subaru: “We absolutely need Roswaal’s help if Emilia is going to win the Royal Selection. She loses this guy as her supporter, and Emilia’s out of the running. We’ll make him pay, of course…but, we can’t just say ‘okay goodbye now!’.”

Garfiel: “Yer really fuckin’ telling me to forgive a guy who tried to kill my family?!”

Subaru: “…”

Garfiel’s emotional words pierce Subaru.

No matter how Subaru tries to pacify him with words, Garfiel will not agree. He had almost lost Frederica, and almost lost Ryuzu.

This boy had spent over ten years training himself so that he could protect his family. Roswaal is his unforgivable nemesis.

Frederica: “I…forgive the Master.”

Garfiel: “…Sis?!”

But the one to rebut Garfiel is his very own blood relative, Frederica, who had almost been murdered.

Her long, blonde hair sways as she speaks. Garfiel’s eyes shoot open in shock.

Garfiel: “Fuck’re you saying! This shithead tried to…”

Frederica: “And given that, I am still alive. Because you saved me, Garf.”

Garfiel: “Yer talkin’ from fuckin’ hindsight! He tried! To kill you! And Nanna! And ain’t that…ain’t that all there is to it!”

Frederica: "…The Master has cared for me for over a decade."

Garfiel's shoulders heave as Frederica narrows her eyes. Her gaze inspires compassion, as she is perhaps moved by her matured brother's anger.

Frederica: "That I may achieve my goals, I accepted the hand that the Master offered me. I have learned much over the time since, and now I am here. To speak in more common terms, I exploited the Master's generosity for my own purposes. Would our debts not be even?"

Garfiel: "Don't fuckin' treat debts on the same level as life! You don't know when he'll betray—"

Otto: "Erm, I apologize for this when you're so enthusiastic, but would you mind if I interjected?"

Garfiel tries to argue, but this time Otto pulls the breaks.

Garfiel's furious gaze turns to Otto, who has his hand raised. But Otto lets the glare wash off him as he soothingly says,

Otto: "Now just calm down, calm down."

Otto: "We'll put aside Garfiel's emotional argument for a moment, and consider Margrave Roswaal's likelihood of committing something like this again…I think we're safe to believe that he won't, at least momentarily."

Garfiel: "Eh? Fuck're yer sayin' prick. Yer fuckin' asleep? I'll put yer lights out, oi."

Otto: "The Contract, remember? The instant that this affair reached an obvious conclusion, a Contract was bound between Mr. Natsuki and the Margrave. Correct, Margrave?"

Otto is entirely calm as he deals with a seething Garfiel.

It is also bold of him to verify the state of the Contract not with Subaru, but with Roswaal. Roswaal realizes Otto's intentions, his eyes widening somewhat.

Roswaal: “Otto iiiiiiiiiiis correct. Owing to the Contract between myself and Subaru, I cannot defy Subaru’s course.”

Garfiel: “Course, bein’?”

Subaru: “He dumps the gospel and helps make Emilia Ruler. That’s the Contract between me and Roswaal. He can’t pull this crap anymore.”

Subaru takes over, Garfiel grinding his teeth in anger.

Subaru has won the bet. Roswaal is bound by the Contract, preventing him from forcing the future to follow the writ of the missing gospel.

Though it’s another question as to whether that makes Roswaal harmless.

Garfiel: “That still don’t close th’books on what he did! ‘F we settle this with a ‘I’m so sorry I won’t do it again’, we ain’t ever getting’ ROGOS’S REVENGE DEMANDS MORE THAN ONE HAND!”

Garfiel’s shouting emphasizes his stance even still, creating a divide of opinion among the group regarding Roswaal’s deeds.

Subaru, Otto, and Frederica accept them.

Garfiel and Petra reject them.

Emilia and Ryuzu are undecided.

Subaru will need to wait and watch to see how Beatrice and Ram fall. Their relationships with Roswaal differ from everyone else’s.

Subaru: “Petra…”

Like Garfiel, Petra is adamantly furious at Roswaal.

She grips her skirt, her face red as Subaru calls her.

Petra: “I’m still against it no matter what you say, Master…Subaru. The Master tried…our Lord tried to do something terrible to the villagers. Even though everyone trusted him. Even though I thought our Lord was a good person!”

Roswaal: “…It does hurt toooooo hear that.”

Even Roswaal has to frown as a little girl lambastes him.

Petra is probably the one best reflecting the general feelings of the populace, without any ulterior inter-camp motives or complicated circumstances. Not because she’s a child. But because her attitude clearly speaks of the rage she feels toward Roswaal for betraying her honest opinion of him as her Lord.

The villagers of Earlham and the Sanctuary have not been informed that Roswaal was behind this whole mess.

Petra is present at this meeting as a sort of representative because, after the bits and pieces of conversation she heard in the mansion led her near to the truth, she never spoke up to secure absolute conviction. They are trusting in that cleverness of hers.

If Petra had tried to thoughtlessly dig for answers as any child her age would, they might have said some junk to deceive her. But they didn’t.

Subaru: “I know I’m repeating myself, but we need Roswaal. If we drop Roswaal here, we close Emilia’s path. You can say you don’t want to work with him, or conversely we could bind him in ropes to get him to, either way he’s working with us.”

Garfiel: “We ain’t gonna convince each other, Captain.”

Subaru: “We’re not. So we need to find a compromise. What do you want Roswaal to do that will satisfy you for now? And apologies but we can’t have you kill him.”

Garfiel: “—Tch.”

To keep Garfiel in check as he starts getting to his feet, Beatrice stands up. Short as she is, it’s more than enough to look down at the boy as he sits.

Garfiel clicks his tongue and shifts his glare to Roswaal,

Garfiel: “First is securing th’necessities fer th’gramps n’ grans in the Sanctuary. Yer gonna make sure everyone’s safe, no matter if they’re stayin’ or goin’. ‘S the first concrete step t’achieving what Sis’s trying t’do.”

Roswaal: “Very well, accepted.”

Garfiel: “I ain’t gonna be hearin’ any excuses ‘bout not havin’ th’funds ‘cuz the mansion burned down.”

Roswaal: “The building that burned was an auxiliary residence of the Mathers. The main residency is elsewhere. I try not to be so grossly unprepared as to fall into something as ridiculous as bankruptcy.”

Roswaal’s confident reply shocks Subaru.

It’s news to him that the incinerated mansion was a side residence. He starts looking stupid for worrying about where they would live now.

Garfiel: “N’following from that condition, two more promis…no, a Contract.”

Roswaal: “…”

Garfiel raises two fingers. Roswaal falls silent.

Garfiel lowers one finger.

Garfiel: “First’s what th’Captain said. You pledge t’everyone here that you’ll stick t’those terms. That you ain’t pullin’ any more of this shit.”

Roswaal: “…Yes, of course. And the other?”

Garfiel: “Easy. —You violate that, and my amazin’ fangs mash your head to pieces.”

Frigid bloodlust emanates from Garfiel.

The murderousness that should be spearing only into Roswaal is so intense that its ripples brush against everyone's skin like a razorblade.

Roswaal: "Very well. —Let us tie the Contract."

So when Roswaal accepts it only a few seconds later, and Subaru feels the bloodlust dissipate like an ebbing wave, his body untenses and he breathes a sigh.

Garfiel sits cross-legged with his elbow on his knee and hand on his chin, looking unsatisfied.

Garfiel: "…'S all I got for th'moment. You best leave it there too, miss."

Petra: "But…"

Garfiel: "It ain't gonna make yer friends or family happy if y'tell them."

Petra, bordering on tears, looks up at Frederica beside her. Frederica nods, and Petra suffocates her sobs by pressing her face to Frederica's chest. It's enough to pain anyone's heart.

Subaru: "Anyway, while we still have questions about how we're securing aid for Earlham's and the Sanctuary's villagers, and where we're going now that the mansion's in ashes, and basically what we're doing, can we say that we've finished exacting responsibility and've all had our say on this?"

After waiting for Petra's sobbing to stop, Subaru sums up everyone's thoughts.

If nobody objects, then they have completed the first stage of conversations about the Sanctuary and mansion affairs. Now they just need to discuss the other issues one by one—

???: "Excuse me."

But someone does raise their hand in the silence.

And it's the leader of their group, who has not yet given her opinion on Roswaal, Emilia.

Everyone's gaze focuses on her are she looks to Subaru, seeking permission to speak.

Subaru: "Go ahead, Emilia-tan. Feel free to say anything."

Emilia: "Then I'll oblige."

Emilia nods at Subaru and looks at Roswaal. Roswaal raises an eyebrow, looking rather surprised as he waits for Emilia to speak.

And she does.

Emilia: "Roswaal hasn't done the most important thing yet. This discussion isn't over until he does."

Roswaal: "Most important thing…?"

Roswaal fails to figure out what Emilia is talking about, looking confused. Subaru tilts his head too as he contemplates what Emilia could be trying to say. Emilia looks over the group, and with a quiet sigh,

Emilia: "When you do something bad, you have to say you're sorry."

All: "…"

Emilia: "Everyone's been telling Roswaal to do this and do that to prove that he's repented, and Roswaal swore to his Teacher that he won't do anything bad again, but before we even get to that, isn't there something he has to say? Roswaal, did you say it even once? I didn't hear it."

Her cheeks red with anger, Emilia rails on Roswaal.

She is saying things so juvenile that it leaves everyone speechless. But Emilia is not joking in the least, and is truly, demonstrably mad.

Emilia is angry. Even though she rarely ever gets angry at all. Except it's happening, and Emilia is mad.

To ensure that something so obvious, but that everyone forgot, does happen.

Subaru: "Roswaal."

Subaru looks at the astonished Roswaal, and smiles as he looks to catch him off guard.

Subaru: "Apologize, Roswaal. If we're going to doing things together, then you're obligated to, just as a person."

Roswaal: "…"

Subaru shares Emilia's stance, the sentiment spreading to everyone in the cathedral.

Roswaal perceives what this sea of gazes is seeking from him, and swallows his breath.

Emilia: "—Mm, that'll do."

The way that Emilia smiles after seeing Roswaal's apology leaves an incredible impression.

4

—Subaru makes an indescribable expression as he looks down at the woman in the coffin.

Roswaal: "Whaaaaaaat an impolite face to make whiiiiiile looking at my Teacher."

Says Roswaal, as he peers at Subaru from aside.

Inside the deepest room of the tomb, Subaru and Roswaal face each other with the coffin between them. So that they can speak, without anyone intruding.

But before that,

Subaru: “This is honestly your Teacher, the Witch Echidna?”

Roswaal: “Iiiiiiiiindeed. Her body rests eternal in the magic stone, her mortal beauty preserved. Living was worth it, when I can meet her again as I am now.”

Subaru: “All I really have to say about your descendant-hopping super-motivated faux-stalking is euch.”

Roswaal: “Beatrice hit me with the eeeeeeeexact same comment.” Roswaal seems to be having fun, but Subaru feels no urge to smile.

Beatrice told Subaru that Roswaal has been perpetuating his life by transcribing his soul. Subaru had told a joke about something similar before, but he had never even dreamed that it would be correct.

But it does make him agree with the family’s fanaticism for Echidna, since it was all actually just Roswaal.

Subaru: “Do you feel guilty at all about your descendants? …I guess the answer’s obvious.”

Roswaal: “The Mathers family was made for that purpose. I began it, I continued it, I constructed it. It doesn’t discomfort me, no matter who criticizes me.”

Subaru: “The quintessential stalker.”

Roswaal: “Surely not. Regardless, there’s something I’d like tooooooo confirm. About this person you saw in the Trial, who is not my Teacher called Echidna.”

Roswaal narrows his eyes as he speaks. Subaru narrows his eyes as well.

There are differences between the Echidna that Roswaal is talking about, and the Echidna that Subaru met in the dream castle. That was the shock Subaru got when he glimpsed the woman in the coffin.

Subaru looks down at her figure once again.

Long white hair and pale skin. Beautiful features, and a sleek black dress. Her distinctive characteristics are identical to Echidna's. But she is obviously someone else.

The Echidna that Subaru knows is slightly younger than the woman in the coffin. Her features erred more on the 'cute' than the 'beautiful' side, and her hair was cut shorter than the woman's. They do look alike. If someone called them sisters, Subaru would believe it.

However,

Roswaal: "My Teacher had no relatives. She had no elder sister, and no one to call a daughter except Beatrice. I know this better than anyone else."

Subaru: "So, who was the Echidna in the Trial? It was her, but with her youth restored…isn't what it feels like either. They're different people. I can tell that this isn't just a thing about ages."

Roswaal: "Anyone intruding on the Trial must be connected. If this person was the one managing the Trial, they are assuredly connected. Perhaps some external party took action while I was unaware…would be conceivable. But."

Roswaal doesn't continue, but Subaru senses that he has dismissed whatever he was going to say as impossible. He doesn't have any basis for it, but perhaps Roswaal is confident in his stalking proficiency. It's a confidence telling him it's impossible that someone could do something bad to his Teacher without him knowing about it. Which is gross.

Roswaal: "I feel that you're imagining something rather iiiiiiiimpolite."

Subaru: "Blame your imagination or actually just blame you. Anyway, me and Emilia both saw Echidna during the Trial. Or at least, an Echidna that isn't this one."

Emilia had been present when Subaru first saw the woman in the coffin. That was when they realized that the woman Beatrice called Mother was not the person they called Echidna.

Who was the girl in the dream? Without ever reaching any conclusions, Subaru wound up starting this talk with Roswaal.

Subaru: “We can’t use the Trial’s systems to enter the dream again?”

Roswaal: “The tomb’s functions were ceased by a destruction of the algorithm. The art for it is lost, and the requirements are complex. And the miasma permeating this tomb has escaped. This tomb is just an ordinary, historical stone structure now.”

Subaru: “I, see…”

Disappointment that he cannot confirm it, and disappointment that he cannot see her again, assault Subaru simultaneously. Just for some reason, Subaru didn’t find interacting with her and the WitchES so bad, even factoring in the whole betrayal thing.

So losing the opportunity to do so summons melancholy in Subaru.

Subaru: “…We’ll put the unchangeable stuff off for later. So, what are you thinking to do with the woman in the coffin? Bury her?”

Roswaal: “I’ll neither bury nor burn her. Subaru, I’d like you not to misunderstand. …I desire reunion with my Teacher, but that doesn’t mean I’ve been yearning toooooo meet my Teacher’s cadaver. This is merely one step along the way.”

Subaru: “What do you mean?”

Subaru raises his brows, wariness and distrust swelling within him.

Subaru had thought that Roswaal’s desired reunion with his crush was a face-to-face meeting with the corpse in this tomb.

He hadn’t considered it until he learned that her corpse was actually in the tomb, but the second that

Subaru found out that Roswaal’s mentor was inside here, of course he began to think it.

But Roswaal easily rejects that idea.

Roswaal: “I desire to speak again with my Teacher, with blood running through her, soul housed inside her, life breathed within her. Retrieving her corpse is simply the first step.”

Subaru: “You’re going to resurrect the dead?! That…this world has magic to bring back the dead?!”

Roswaal: “Make sure you don’t misunderstand. This possibility is present because it is her. There is no way to bring back lives that have met a conventional death. The Od Lagna would never permit such convenient magic as resurrection.”

Subaru: “Od Lagna?”

Subaru scrunches his face at the new word.

Roswaal: “Od Lagna is…how to say, a stockpile of mana in the fount of the world. No, supposing that the world itself were a living creature, then it would be its nexus, and the od of the world. Though we can only imagine as to its exact location, and whether it is sentient or not.”

Subaru: “The od of the world…wouldn’t permit it, meaning?”

Roswaal: “To explain that would require quick perusal of the entire history of magic to this day.”

Subaru: “In three sentences.”

Roswaal: “How harsh.”

Roswaal stokes his chin as he considers what to say. Then he begins explaining as coherently and succinctly as he can.

Roswaal: “All of the magic in this world was devised by past magicians. The first incidence of magic was when an individual with outstanding talent in the manipulation of mana began casting magic of their type. As more people became capable of magic, and disparities in proficiency began to arise, it became difficult to classify the phenomenon without assigning names or classes.”

Subaru: “That’s when magic got names, and was split into the separate type affinities.”

Roswaal: “Yes. While magical techniques and knowledge was expanding, people with incredible talent for it began being born. They devised novel uses of mana, separated from the existing forms of magic, to create new magic. The development of magic has always proceeded as mundane magicians comprehensively over-apply the novel discoveries from a prior selection of geniuses.”

Subaru: “Kind of a spiteful lecture, since you’re one of the geniuses.”

Roswaal: “I may have gone through unpleasant times, oooooonce or twice.”

In every world and universe out there, the overly proficient ones are alienated. There was a time when Roswaal was immature, and suffered those gazes and obstacles. Though nowadays he would definitely smile back and secretly get revenge.

Subaru: “So what does this have to do with Od Lagna?”

Roswaal: “The existence of a font for magic and the power called mana. Research investigating into the topic proceeded as people tested unprecedented approaches and methods for using mana. Those who created magic with shocking effects began to stand out even among the geniuses. Each case of this magic produced results beyond compare to previous magic, such that a single magician could alter a region’s geography. —And when they did, they all saw exactly the same thing.”

Subaru says nothing.

Roswaal: “With its dim glow, it was the mana that they so naturally manipulated. But this was a mass of power overwhelmingly more vast than any mana they had touched before—these magicians, with their cognizance of so-called forbidden magic, all witnessed this expanse of mana, and their minds soon fell ill.”

Subaru: “And that was Od Lagna…the fountain of the world?”

Roswaal: “Just as humans fear injury or disease, the world rejects those liable to shake its foundations. Is what some first started saying about Od Lagna. The true common point between those whose minds were broken by witnessing Od Lagna, was that they reached new heights of magic that would have rewritten the practice’s history.”

It’s unclear how powerful their magic was.

They had divulged some portion of the theory behind their magic, but before they could publicly exhibit the completed algorithm and have it adopted for use, the magician who invented it would invariably have their mind broken.

Subaru: “Then resurrection would be one of them?”

Roswaal: “I wish to see my dearly departed again. The desire is omnipresent, shared by everyone, and more than a few geniuses were motivated by it. Though, before they could reach anyone, they all lost their minds to Od Lagna.”

How sardonic, thinks Subaru.

It isn’t clear whether Od Lagna truly exists, or that Od Lagna destroyed the magicians’ minds. But still, they sought. To find the limit of their abilities. To realize a goal that everyone would yearn for.

Roswaal: “One theory states that Od Lagna is the consciousness that rules over everything in the world. And though it warrants skepticism, perhaps Od Lagna could be the one bestowing people with BLESSINGS—is the nonsense that people have come up with.”

Subaru: “Trying to stay uninvolved, and then involving itself…that celestial bunch never make sense, no matter where you are.”

Roswaal: “‘That celestial bunch’ is an entertaining way to put it.”

Ignorant to the logic behind Subaru’s epithet as he treats Od Lagna as a god, Roswaal laughs. Subaru hadn’t expected this discussion, but their real topic is elsewhere of Od Lagna. Subaru brings the conversation back to, Subaru: “So, your reunion with your Teacher won’t enrage Od Lagna.”

Roswaal: “Eeeeeeeexactly. It doesn’t use any forbidden arts, or any special powers or algorithms. In fact, I’m far more worried that you would be the one displeasing Od Lagna.”

Subaru: “…Honestly I was thinking the same.”

Return by Death. Subaru doesn’t intend to reveal its requirements to Roswaal in detail, but it’s no exaggeration that Subaru’s ability is conceivably touching on the resurrection taboo.

Subaru has used Return by Death to alter his own doomed fate, and even saved the lives of others.

If Od Lagna witnessed this, there is no way that Subaru would pass its harsh standards.

Unless, perhaps, the entity that allows Subaru to Return by Death is strong enough to survive Od Lagna.

Subaru: “Just the idea makes me shudder. Anyway, your methods for this are…?”

Roswaal: “Sorry, but I’m not going to tell you that now.”

Subaru shakes his head and gets back to talking, when Roswaal fires that statement.

Subaru’s eyes dart about in confusion for a moment as he fails to understand what was said.

Subaru: “Huh, wh, wha? What did you say?”

Roswaal: “Only whaaaaaaat you heard. I’m not going to tell you my methods for achieving my ultimate goal. I’m rather sure that nothing in the terms of our Contract reeeeeeequires me to.”

Subaru: “I mean, yeah, but…come on!”

Roswaal: “I want to make this clear to you, Subaru.”

Says Roswaal coldly. He walks around the coffin to come to Subaru's side, looking down at him as he raises his finger.

Roswaal: "I have lost my guide the gospel, and lost sight of the path of how things should be. But that doesn't make me abandon my goals in the least. Our Contract prevents me from using my past approach. And even supposing I laid pointless obstacles before you, Garfiel would rip my throat open, so I am also barred from that."

Subaru: "…Yeah, exactly. So what can you do? What path can you pick except one where you reveal your goal, and come to us for help?"

Roswaal: "That is simple. —I will oversee you."

Subaru: "…"

Oversee. It's definitely not a peaceful word, and it renders Subaru speechless. Though Roswaal's eyes gleam in different colors as he looks down at Subaru, they are lit with identical emotion.

Roswaal: "Fortunately, your goal of making Lady Emilia the Ruler overlaps with my path to achieving my goal. This is where you were supposed to secure an unshakable will of iron, devoting yourself to Lady Emilia no matter the loss, and become a Knight riddled in wounds."

Subaru says nothing.

Roswaal: "But that route is defunct. You instead chose to walk a more painful, more agonizing path of thorns. Though I do respect you for it, I also pity you."

Subaru: "Excuse me?"

He can't let that pass. Subaru glares at Roswaal, who shakes his head. He is definitely doing so out of pity for Subaru.

He faces his palm to Subaru, who is both irritated and confused.

Roswaal: "This is where you should've learned what it is to lose something. You should have become a SAGE, who even in the face of loss, stringently protects only what is precious. I know how it sounds, but I wanted to save you.”

Subaru: “What’s so sagely about that. What is so clever about accepting loss!”

Roswaal: “You have rejected loss, chosen to salvage everything, and you will hurt for it. You will repeatedly suffer wounds beyond repair, repeatedly suffer loss, frantically attempt to regain what you lost, the invisible hurt compounding perpetually. And I pity that.”

Subaru: “—Hic.”

Roswaal: “And so I will not be lenient about your refusal to be a SAGE, and decision to be a FOOL. As expected, yes? After all, you’re the one who chose this.”

Roswaal’s hand lands on Subaru’s shoulder.

Subaru trembles as Roswaal draws his face near to Subaru’s, and whispers in his ear,

Roswaal: “—Should you lose anyone who you needed to protect, I will swiftly incinerate the survivors.”

Subaru: “…?!”

Roswaal: “You’ve chosen to save everything. You must not miscarry a single thing. A world of loss must not lead to the future. So long as a future where you accept loss could lead to a future I do not desire, I will invalidate it. —Now that the gospel is gone, you are what guides me to my goal, Subaru. Only you, and your path.”

Roswaal draws his face away and gives Subaru’s chest a light shove.

It isn’t particularly strong, but Subaru pitches back as if he’s been stricken, his breath catching as his back hits the wall.

This man, Roswaal L. Mathers, is terrifying.

His conceptions have changed. He has stopped relying on the gospel, and will never do anything to throw Subaru or Emilia into adversary again. He will assist Subaru if Subaru desires it, and will put in his all to keep Emilia en-route to the Throne.

But if Subaru makes even the slightest mistake, Roswaal will instantly overturn and ruin everything.

No lie and no deception. Roswaal will absolutely do it.

Roswaal: “What, there’s no need to be so scared. Provided that you continue to fulfil your roles, I will offer you my utmost assistance. —That is the Contract between us.”

Subaru: “…Really taught me to be more careful when looking at Contracts.”

Roswaal: “Your duty is to ensure that not a single person present today is lost, Subaru. Without ever losing a single person, lead Lady Emilia to the top. Should you achieve that, I will also fulfil my goal. I will see my Teacher again.”

Subaru weakly hangs his head. Roswaal gives a long sigh at him, and nods.

His shoes peal on the stone as he corrects his posture.

Roswaal: “Upon my name of Margave Roswaal L. Mathers, once we return to the main estate, I shall appoint you, Natsuki Subaru, as Knight. —The promise will be fulfilled.”

Subaru: “…”

Accolade.

Something that Subaru has yearned for, the right to stand at Emilia’s side.

Hearing it after everything else in this conversation does diminish his joy, but after everything Roswaal has said, he will definitely stay to his word. He gains no benefit from not supporting Subaru.

Seeing Subaru silently nod, Roswaal turns to exit the room. This conversation is over, is what he must mean.

But his footsteps pause before he can exit, and he turns back.

Roswaal: “Right. I did just tell you that I’d be helping you wholeheartedly, so heeeeeeere’s another piece of information.”

Subaru: “…What is it.”

Roswaal: “—I hired the Bowel Hunter to kill Beatrice, but both this and the previous attack from the Demon Beast Master are completely unrelated to me.”

Subaru: “—Huh?”

What more could there possibly be? Subaru had thought, his jaw dropping as Roswaal speaks. Unable to comprehend what Roswaal is saying, Subaru remains utterly still as he seeks further explanation. Roswaal closes one eye,

Roswaal: “There’s nothing to add. I was the commissioner for the affair in the Capital, and requested Beatrice’s assassination. But I never asked anyone to kill Frederica or Petra, and had no time to tell them the particulars. I had been following the gospel’s writ and placed the order before the Selection started, you see.”

Subaru: “But, that can’t…I mean, she and Elsa are from the same group! So!”

Roswaal: “Someone other than myself was operating to attack the mansion, iiiiiiiiis what it means.”

Subaru: “…”

Roswaal: “Adversity never seems to end, and isn’t there worth in resisting it?”

With that cynical statement, Roswaal’s footsteps grow steadily distant.

The voice echoing through Subaru’s head throws his mind into disarray as he stands, utterly still, his back leaned against the tomb’s cold wall.

All the issues he had supposedly resolved still sit smoldering in his chest.

Feeling heat from the embers, Subaru clutches his head, and sighs deeply.

5

???: “You look depressed, in fact.”

What saves Subaru, brooding as he is, is the astonished voice of a young girl.

Subaru sits there as he sees her dress sway. His gaze traces up the luxurious fabric to find an adorable face looking down at him, arms crossed.

Subaru: “Beako.”

Beatrice: “I don’t know what Roswaal told you, but my Contractor needs to stop making that face, I suppose. It reflects poorly on Betty, in fact.”

Subaru: “That’s a real issue. And I just told you how awesome I’d be oh hell this is pathetic.”

Subaru slaps his cheeks and shakes his head.

Beatrice kneels down to reach Subaru’s eye level, before narrowing her eyes.

Beatrice: “It seems that he said some terrible things, I suppose. …I don’t mind hearing out your whining, in fact. As a temporary, special service, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Just the sentence ‘whining into a little girl’s chest’ is abysmal so I’ll give that a pass. If it really is looking bad then I’ll instantly be there though.”

Beatrice: “Well, if you’re so inclined then I’ll deal with it with you, in fact.”

Beatrice snorts as she gets to her feet. Subaru lifts himself up as well.

He looks ahead, gazing at Beatrice as she stares at the coffin.

Subaru: "…That's your mother, there."

Beatrice: "And she isn't the Echidna that you know, I suppose."

Neither of them know what this means.

But Beatrice is glad that she got to see her mother again, even if as a corpse. If the one sleeping here had been the Echidna that Subaru knows, 'disappointment' wouldn't be enough to describe it for Beatrice or Roswaal. Though Subaru is fine for Roswaal to do some anguishing, he doesn't want to see Beatrice in any more sorrow.

After all, Beatrice has already lost one of her desired reunions.

Subaru: "I wonder what happened to Ryuzu Meyer's crystal."

Beatrice: "…I don't know, in fact."

Murmurs Beatrice, leaving Subaru without a clue of what to do.

Echidna's laboratory rests deep in the Sanctuary 's woods. Inside is a system to produce Ryuzu duplicates, and the original Ryuzu Meyer who acts as both nucleus and operations for the barrier around the Sanctuary.

A girl named Ryuzu Meyer is sealed in the crystal there, like this woman in the coffin.

Or should be.

—Because the Ryuzu Meyer crystal has disappeared.

Beatrice had gone to the facility with Subaru, determine to see her old friend again, and was dumbstruck at the sight. Subaru cursed that he hadn't gone in to check the facility himself beforehand.

A giant hole gaped open on the floor where the crystal had been, both the supporting base and Ryuzu Meyer's body absolutely gone.

Subaru wondered whether they had fallen into the underground beneath the rancid, stinking room, and asked Emilia to sent minor spirits down to check—to no avail. Beneath the facility was a cavern that led to the forest through an underground passage.

Whoever took the crystal knew about the passage's existence, and had been waiting for the barrier to be broken before grabbing the crystal—is the only theory he can conceive.

The thief's motives aren't the issue here.

The issue is that they have stolen the chance for Beatrice to see her friend again. She may be acting strong, but she must be worried.

Subaru will get it back someday, and this reunion will occur.

He is determined for it.

Subaru: "Well I can sound as pompous as I want, I'm still insignificant by myself."

Subaru rolls his shoulders and stretches his arms, wryly recognizing his own powerlessness.

He is relying primarily on Beatrice, but also Emilia and Garfiel for strength.

And for smarts he can depend on Otto, or loathe to say it but Roswaal. Everything else is Frederica and Petra—he truly does have others compensating for a lot. As always, Subaru's skill and ability remains feeble and limited.

Beatrice: "Subaru, what are you grinning about, I suppose?"

Subaru: "Just thinking, there are times where you're weak and pathetic, but there's also times where you're not. All I can do is leave it to you."

Beatrice: "It feels that I understand what you're saying, while simultaneously I don't, in fact."

Though she cannot discern what Subaru means, Beatrice smiles, perceiving that he is counting on her. Subaru gives her a nod,

Subaru: “Well yeah.”

Subaru: “I’m not expecting you to figure out that much. It’d be pathetic if you saw through me. But anyway, man spiritualists are amazing. I’ve never done magic like that before, all got me really fired up.”

Beatrice: “…Ahm, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Though that was another case of be being completely dependant on you so I can’t go bragging about it. I mean I can say I’m a spiritualist, but it hasn’t exactly hit me yet.”

His Contract with Beatrice has been consumed by the course of events around the library’s collapse, making it a rather brief affair.

Though he felt a definite connection when she called his name and settled herself in his arms, which seems to be enough.

Beatrice: “Subaru. —I have something important to tell you, in fact.”

Subaru: “Hm?”

Beatrice looks serious. Subaru tilts his head, waiting for her to speak.

Beatrice: “Your Contract with Betty means you’re a spiritualist, but…Betty is very different from most spirits, in fact. So you would best consider yourself as being slightly different from a genuine spiritualist, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Well the other spirits I’m aware of aren’t humanoid, and Puck’s the only one that’s sentient, talks, and moves around. So I get you’re a little different.”

The only other spiritualists that Subaru knows would be Emilia and Julius.

Emilia is Contracted to Puck, and also has a relationship with the minor spirits. Julius has multiple Contracts with multiple lesser spirits, stronger than minor spirits, and should be operating as quite the powerful spiritualist.

One exception to the pattern is the evil spirit Petelgeuse—but Subaru would rather not remember him and so he will be omitted. Exceptions are exceptions after all.

Beatrice: “Betty is…well, strictly speaking, Betty and Bubby are diverged from the principles of other spirits, in fact. Mother…the Witch Echidna made us, meaning that we are man-made spirits, I suppose. With that said, it’s logistically difficult to create us by infallible means…while Betty is inestimably powerful compared to ordinary spirits, I do have some flaws, in fact.”

Subaru: “Flaws…”

Beatrice looks ashamed as Subaru voices the word.

Beatrice is prideful, and has incredible respect for her mother. It must hurt her to acknowledge that she has flaws at her most fundamental aspect.

But Beatrice casts that weakness away with a sigh,

Beatrice: “Bubby and Betty each have different flaws, but…one of my flaws is monopolization of my Contractor, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Monopolization of your Contractor?”

Beatrice: “Put simply, merely by preserving a Contract with Betty, the Contractor exhausts practically all of their capabilities as a spiritualist. So…erm, being that you’re in a Contract with me, Subaru, you can’t Contract with any spirits except Betty, I suppose. That applies be the spirit minor or lesser, in fact.”

Subaru: “…Okay, got it.”

Grasping Beatrice’s point, Subaru nods several times.

Preserving a Contract with Beatrice uses so much of Subaru’s resources, that he has none left to Contract with other spirits.

While Emilia can ask the minor spirits, rather than Puck, for their aid, Subaru is unable to do this.

Subaru: “Well that’s kind of a disappointment, but I’ll accept it anyway. There’s heaps of benefits to a Contract with you, ignoring the cons. And I’m not going to let go of you to go making Contracts with some dumb minor spirits.”

Beatrice: “G-Good.”

Hearing that reply, Beatrice’s tense cheeks relax somewhat. But she instantly erases that expression, clears her throat, and,

Beatrice: “Th-There’s still more left, I suppose. Though it’s a very minor thing compared to that other one, in fact. No need to think too hard as you listen, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Okay. Well I’m drowning in stuff I don’t know here so please just tell me anything.”

Beatrice: “Erm, so well, Betty is a little, yes, just a little higher grade compared to most spirits, and, erm…I have poor mileage, in fact.”

Subaru: “Mileage…makes you sound like a car.”

It takes a lot of MP to use powerful magic or summon creatures in video games. That balance between cost and power is the mileage, but why is Beatrice having such a hard time saying this?

Subaru: “Huh? But for having poor mileage you used tons of magic against the Hare, and you let me use magic too, and you weren’t sapping anything from me either right?”

Beatrice: “That was using mana from the stockpile I had amassed over a long period, I suppose.

Had I been taking the mana I needed for that fight, not even thousands of you would suffice, in fact. You can thank me for that, I suppose.”

Subaru: “W-Well sure. I can’t imagine how strained I’d be if I tried doing any of that.”

Consecutive Minya’s and that final Al Shamak.

One Shamak is enough to exhaust Subaru’s store. There is no way he could have provided for all of that.

Subaru: “But we can’t keep doing that, can we? I’m your Contractor, so of course I need to supply you with mana.”

Beatrice: “I’m expecting you to, in fact. Man-made spirits like Betty and Bubby are substantiated od, meaning we don’t naturally produce mana, I suppose. So we need to get mana from the atmosphere or our Contractor, in fact. And I can only receive my mana from people, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Okay. …Then how were you getting by in the mansion?”

Beatrice: “…I-I was taking bits from everyone there, in fact.”

Beatrice must feel guilty about it, since she looks away as she talks.

She looks embarrassed, and her gaze grows even redder as Subaru stares at her. While Subaru doesn’t white understand what nuance mana drains have among spirits, going off Beatrice’s reaction, it is apparently not very good manners.

Subaru: “Anyways, you look like you’re very sorry about it so I won’t probe into it. So supposing we save the mana you collect from me for everyday functioning, how much stored mana do you have left?”

Subaru’s mana reserves are paltry and Beatrice consumes lots of mana.

Meaning that they will have to use Beatrice’s powerful magic sparingly, chipping away at her reserved mana bit by bit.

So Subaru must confirm how much mana she has remaining.

Beatrice: “—None, I suppose.”

Subaru: “…Hm?”

Beatrice: “None, in fact. I used everything I stored over those four centuries in that battle, I suppose. The loss of the Forbidden Archive also took quite an amount…and that final Al Shamak was the killer, in fact. I have no mana left in reserve, I suppose.”

So, what. That means…

Beatrice has no mana stored up.

Subaru’s mana is barely enough to cover Beatrice’s day to day.

Beatrice consumes lots of mana, and doesn’t have the mana to use her powerful magic. Subaru’s Contract with Beatrice means that he can’t enlist the minor spirits for help.

Subaru: “So…did we just make a team of a spirit and spiritualist that can’t use magic?!”

Beatrice: “W-Well, I suppose that’s one way you could put it, in fact.”

Subaru: “How else could you put it?! The hell! Are you kidding me, is this seriously happening?!”

Going from the results, what Subaru achieved by becoming a spiritualist was acquiring a little girl.

Subaru: “Actually I’m really worried about where this is going now?! Are you sure we’ll be okay?!”

Beatrice: “Whoopsie, I suppose.”

Subaru: “It’s not funny!!”

This is the newborn pairing of two people that create half a spiritualist.

Their arguing echoes, far, far, forever through the tomb.

Appendix:
Advent

—Footsteps peal through the cold, dark chamber.

Not a speck of light beams into the space, making the path a charge through dark or shadow.

But the footsteps sound without hesitation, travelling through the rancid chamber with a casual gait.

With such ease that they may as well be traversing their own room.

"…"

Water drips. Insects squirm.

Mud and gravel crunches underfoot. This place inspires nothing but discomfort, but the silhouette gives not the slightest murmur of discontent.

Hordes of insects open a path as they flee the silhouette, their stronghold disturbed. Water flows over their feet, the gentle downward slope their guide as they walk on.

Eventually, the silhouette stops, their long hair flowing behind them as they look up.

As before, there is no light.

But their eyes shine with a gleam called conviction.

Dim lights dance as wind whips around the silhouette's feet.

Their long, pink hair and long-sleeved robe flutter in the breeze. At their feet, at the point from which the wind blows, a circle draws itself in the ground.

"So the starter algorithm still works."

With that murmur, the silhouette atop the glowing circle—the girl—levitates.

She ascends as if riding on an invisible floor, rushing for the roof of the dark. That instant, as if ghosting through the bedrock, the girl launches to the outside.

The sunlight burns her eyes. The girl closes her eyelids.

It takes exactly ten seconds for her to open her eyes again. Sun rays piece through her eyelids and into her eyeballs. Prompted by rebellion toward that, and some amount of impatience, she keeps her eyes open wide.

—What she sees is the sun rising anew.

"…It's far less emotional than I expected."

Faced with the daylight, the girl tilts her head.

Indeed, not a single ripple of emotion arises in her apathetic eyes. After all her time spent with a false sun, she had hoped that seeing the real thing again would move her, but the results are unpromising.

"Either way, I've safely left the barrier. Meaning that the thing safely defeated the Trial, frustratingly. I'll give my thanks for that and no more."

If that hadn't happened, it would have been inordinately difficult to leave the Sanctuary. She would catch herself in her own scheme. When she thinks of the girl who dealt with that mess, she feels something akin to displeasure sprout in her heart.

"Well, it's no issue. I can't be too reckless in this body, and I might as well traipse about for a while to fill in the blanks."

The girl flexes her hands open and closed, checking her body's condition.

Duplicates of a progenitor body-vessel, and a subsumed soul of the same nature. She has fit her soul to it and anchored in, but familiarizing to it will take time.

“He already gave me a name, after all. I think I’ll call myself Omega.”

She smiles as she treads on the grass, slipping through gaps in the trees to exit the forest.

The journey is somewhat troubling for a young girl’s legs, but it’s no matter. The fatigue and pain prove that her soul and body are connected. She must enjoy her long-lost life in abundance.

“Beatrice has left the Forbidden Archive, Roswaal has lost his gospel. Though considering the man who pocketed the burnt remains, and Garfiel’s persistent rage, the fires are still smoldering yet. How will he face what’s to come? Perhaps I’ll watch over him, from the sun and in the shade.”

Purposefully excluding the girl that irks her, she begins to walk.

There is a world where she’s going. What never grows dull for her, abundant, endlessly sating her curiosity, a mountain of treasures for the dead Thirst for Knowledge Incarnate.

“If I’m like this, perhaps I’ll understand someday.”

Along her path, the girl sights a ring of flowers, and smiles.

She plucks a flower petal, sniffs its scent, pops it in her mouth.

Even beautiful flowers shall wilt. Why must the flowers wither?

Are even the beautiful memories shared between people destined to wane?

“—Ahh, why must love fade?” the girl muttered as she stepped forth, her long pink hair swaying.

Again the Witch is unleashed on the world.

Bonus Short Stories

Elsa and Meili:
The Assassin Sisters' Dark Diary, Kill 4

1

In front of the charred remains of the mansion stood alone a girl with her hair in a braid.

The ashen air blew through her blue hair as her gaze swept across the blackened ruins. She wasn't looking for anything; her eyes just wandered around aimlessly.

"…Ya ain't gonna find anything searchin' like that."

A voice called out from behind the girl. The voice was rough, but contained a trace of concern. Because of that, the girl didn't turn around. She simply relaxed her lips. That concern was laughable to her.

After all, the girl and the owner of the voice were recently involved in a battle to the death. It had only been a day since the battle, yet the person was already showing concern.

"…Hey, don't even think about doin' anything stupid. Try anything and my fangs will rip right through ya, child or not."

"I think that's a big bluff, coming from you."

"Huh?"

"Mister, you're kind to women and children, aren't youuu? That's why I believe you wouldn't even think of being merciless to a girl like me."

The boy bared his fangs at her in dissatisfaction. Whether it was because she was correct, or because it was pointless to argue, or possibly neither.

Meili watched as the boy struggled to make up his mind and found it endearing.

"Don't worry. I'm not going to do anything. It takes time to gather witchbeasts, and if I called for them, you'd kill me instantly."

"Heh, don't "Legend of Alosya' me, like ya understand everything."

"Despite your attitude, you're the one that's here with meee."

"That's because there's no one I trust to watch ya besides my amazin' self."

Revealing his lack of allies and strength, the boy Garfiel, kicked the ground with crossed arms and squatted in the scorched remains of a garden.

And like the girl he looked towards the burnt ruins of Roswaal's former mansion. Spotting a quick flash of emotion in his jade eyes, the girl smiled sweetly and giggled.

"Mr. Tiger, you look really uncomfortableee."

"That's because… Dammit, ya already know. Stupid kid."

"That's mean. And besides, you and I aren't that different in age. That's what the man with scary eyes said."

"Dammit Captain, what're ya doin', talkin' with a captured enemy?" he muttered to himself.

Sitting down on a patch of burnt grass, Garfiel made a bitter face. In his mind he saw the black-haired boy's carefree face, while with his eyes he saw the girl's detestable smile.

That was that, then.

"…The agreement was to let ya see this."

"Yes, that's riiight."

"So? Do ya feel any better doin' this?"

The boy's concern lingered, though masked by his agitated words. At those blunt yet touching feelings the girl simply pursed her lips again. “Who knooows?” she murmured.

She realized after saying those words that she might have subconsciously tried to imitate her sister. And so Meili Portroute, a sentimental girl, smiled and closed her eyes. Within the charred ruins, the person she was looking for was nowhere to be found.

Although she should’ve known that from the beginning.

2

“Elsa, are you immortal?” Meili asked, resting her elbows on her knees with her hands on her cheeks.

In response, the listener furrowed their eyebrows as they wiped blood off their cheek. “That’s quite a question to ask suddenly.”

“I don’t think it’s that sudden. I mean, you were surrounded, covered in blood, and stabbed with a spear. And yet you seem fine.”

Meili pointed towards the other girl’s stomach, where there was quite literally a spear sticking out. It had entered through her stomach and made it all the way through, leaving the end to poke out her back. Any internal organs in the way had been pierced, and the amount of blood pouring out looked particularly deadly. Anyone could tell that it was a lethal wound.

And yet, despite receiving such a wound, the black-haired girl seemed almost calm… No, she wasn’t quite calm. Her cheeks had flushed and her breathing heightened.

She felt every moment of pain and every drop of blood. But this excited Elsa.

“That’s unsanitary ,” Meili remarked.

“Oh, that’s harsh coming from someone who surrounds themselves with witchbeasts all the time.”

“I make sure that they clean themselves. And this isn’t about the cleanliness of the body, but of the mind… Hurry up and pull that out! It hurts just looking at it.”

Elsa complied with a grimacing Meili and pulled out the spear from her stomach. The wet, sloppy sound echoed as Meili looked around their blood-stained surroundings.

In the dark, dirty shack there were the unidentifiable remains of about twenty bodies scattered all over the room.

That day, Meili and Elsa had gone on a job together to eliminate some people for reasons unknown. Thus the sea of blood around them.

Meili was to be the rear-guard, while creating the rivers of blood was Elsa's job. Those were the roles they'd always stuck with. Considering the two of them, it was the obvious choice.

"I barely know anything about you, Elsa, despite working together like thiiis."

"I wasn't hiding it. If you ask then I'll answer."

"Then I'll ask. How has that stomach wound already healed?"

Elsa stood in front of Meili, having obeyed and pulled the spear from her abdomen. Rubbing her bloody hands across it, there was no wound, just pure, soft, white skin.

"That's just unnatural."

"True, I'll admit that it's not normal. This is…the result of a curse."

"Curse?" Meili echoed.

"There are countries that would try and claim that it's a blessing, though."

Elsa's voice was uncharacteristically harsh as she rubbed the spot where the wound would have been. Meili realized that this was a topic Elsa didn't enjoy discussing.

She didn't want to cause Elsa any further pain, but she simply couldn't hide her curiosity.

“So it could be called a blessing or a curse. Does that mean you were born with it?”

“No, I wasn’t. When I was about your age, I still had a normal human body. But after I was caught stealing back in my home country, I was sold as a slave.”

“And then?”

“The person who bought me was a bit of a strange one. He didn’t have much interest in girls…but the biggest issue was his skill in curse arts.”

At this, Meili looked down behind her eyelashes at the term. As a Witchbeast User, many witchbeasts used techniques similar to curse arts. Curse arts, however, were techniques fundamentally designed to end a person’s life.

It was difficult to associate them with Elsa’s undying body.

“In Gusteko, there’s a curse art called the curse doll. Have you heard of it?”

Meili shook her head at the unknown term.

“Simply put, it’s a curse art designed to harm a person. You choose the target you want to kill, then you carve the curse into the one who will be the curse doll. Once you activate that curse, the person who became the doll is unable to die until the target is killed. They’ll be an undying doll.”

“…Isn’t that something amazing? I mean, you can create a bunch of undying people. That would put us out of a job,” Meili commented.

“Yes, that’s true. But there’s no curse art that is that convenient.”

Elsa smiled somberly at Meili’s innocent brutality.

“First, the person who becomes the curse doll loses all sense of self and can only act in ways that help it kill the target. Second, once the target has been killed, then the curse doll dies.”

“Ahh, then they wouldn’t be a good paaawn…huh? But, wait…”

Meili pursed her lips as a strange contradiction came forth from Elsa’s explanation. According to Elsa’s story, she was one of these curse dolls. But also according to that explanation, she should have no self and only act to kill a target.

“But you can talk normally, Elsa… Or is it because you’re insane? That would make sense.”

“It hurts if you think that makes sense… I’m…an exception to a curse doll.”

“What do you mean?”

“I told you. Whoever bought me was eccentric and had a talent for curse arts.”

Elsa didn’t want to speak more of her former “owner,” so she cut off the explanation there. She played with her braid as she continued, “There are others like me with undying bodies. And those girls tried several different methods to kill themselves… They stabbed their hearts with stakes, they drained other people’s blood. People started calling them vampires.”

“An undying curse doll…”

Meili felt a chill upon hearing those words. She had asked ‘Are you immortal?’ Elsa responded that she was unable to die. It was just a slight difference in words, but Meili felt like there was meaning behind her choice of words.

“Do you also want to die? Like those other girls, Elsa?”

She had to ask that question. Elsa had been slashed with swords, stabbed with spears, burned her insides. Perhaps she just wanted to die like a normal person.

At Meili’s question, Elsa just looked confused. “Why?” she asked, tilting her head.

“That’s what you meant, wasnt it?”

"Really? Then I'm afraid you're mistaken. I have no wish to die. I might not want to live as long as those 'vampires' though… Mostly though, this body has its own many advantages."

"Advantages?"

"The smell of blood, torn flesh, of insides, makes me feel alive. And this body gives me lots of opportunities to feel that. I'm happy with this body." Smiling gently, Elsa dropped the spear she had been leaning on, and walked towards the sitting Meili. "That's why you don't need to look so worried."

"Worried? Me? For you?"

"Yes. When you asked if I wanted to die, you looked so sad. You really are a lonely girl, Meili."

"D-Don't say such stupid thiiings!" Meili shouted, turning red as Elsa patted her head.

Part of it was at being called lonely, but it was also because Elsa's hand was covered in blood and messing up her hair. That was something that Elsa never learned to be mindful of.

"Come on, you'll get my hair dirty. Your hair is a mess, too… Ah! How could you leave it like that? Unbelievable!"

Meili grabbed Elsa's braid that had come loose in the fighting. She had done the braid just before they started work so that they would match.

It was hard to believe that someone with such a proper appearance could care so little about their looks.

"Even if your wounds heal, a sloppy appearance won't get fixed so easily. Make sure you take care of iiit."

"Yeah, but, you know. Since you're always with me, you can worry about it. That way I can focus more on the job at hand."

"Don't try to play this off!"

Trying to braid hair in such a bloodstained environment was next to impossible. Especially since it was after a job. Elsa's wounds had healed so they should have been focusing on leaving.

Standing up, Meili grabbed Elsa's hand and started walking. If she didn't, then her partner would just end walking into a crowd of people.

That was all there was to it. There was no deeper meaning in holding hands.

"You need to stay focuseeed. If you don't, then I'll end up dying before you with your undying body."

Those words, spoken without facing each other, were meant to be half-comeback and half-teasing. And for a moment, Elsa's eyes went wide before returning to her usual smile.

"Well, who knows."

3

"Stupid Elsa… I was supposed to die fiiirst." She recalled the exchange while pushing back the pain from her wounds.

Deep within the burnt ruins of Roswaal Manor, Elsa had been crushed and turned to ash by the flames.

As far as Meili knew, Elsa had survived being stabbed, having her neck broken, and having her heart crushed. But she had yet to be turned to ash. Elsa had wished for a place to die, not that she was aware of it herself.

To feel alive in the death of others meant that you lost the sense of being alive yourself. That's what she thought now.

Thinking along those lines, that would mean that Elsa dying here was a blessing for her. At the very least, she wasn't the type of person to cry and struggle when faced with her death.

"Mr. Tiger, we're done. Thank you. I'm satisfied now."

Rather than become a captive, Meili had come to the ruins to burn Elsa’s final resting place into her memory. That was her duty as Elsa’s sister in arms.

That much had been done. And so the next step was…

“Whatever, I don’t care.” Sitting in the burnt garden, Garfiel kept eyeing Meili with a somewhat irritated expression. “If you wanna cry, I ain’t gonna stop ya.”

Taken aback by such blunt words, Meili tried to smile in response. Only she couldn’t. Finding a burning sensation in her eyes, she quickly wiped them and looked up at the sky.

And so, with her face hidden, she opened her mouth towards the sky. Garfiel said nothing as the emotions came pouring forth from her lips. And then quietly, the two mourned the black-haired girl in that blackened garden.

—And the two would never again speak of what happened that day.

END

The Witch’s After Tea Party

1

As the sun bathed the white snow in its rays, making it look magical as it reflected off its surface, she exhaled a misty breath.

The light, too bright to look at, made her slightly narrow her eyes. She put her hand against the towering tree next to her, feeling the rough sensation of the bark on her palm. This isn’t an illusion, it’s the real thing, she thought.

She clenched her fist tightly, closed her eyes due to the glare, inhaled some icy cold air into her lungs until she could take in no further, and then let it all out.

“Just as I thought, a lot of things feel different from how they used to when you acquire a new body after many centuries,” the girl grumbled in a way that made her seem older than she appeared, her peach pink hair fluttering in the refreshing wind.

She was a charming, dainty looking girl. She had azure eyes, which shone with intelligence, and it ought to be stated that her lovely features exuded a sense of elegance and grace.

With but a single glance, anyone could tell that the girl gave off a certain, extraordinary aura.

Her young, undeveloped body was wrapped in a white robe with naught an undergarment to speak of. The sight of her treading upon the bare ground with her tiny, bare feet, made her look extremely vulnerable.

Her vulnerability was not only the kind where she was vulnerable to being seen by people, but also one where she was even more vulnerable to the climate at the same time. Since the girl was walking around a snow-covered forest, her body was losing heat as each second passed, and thus was shivering all over.

To be honest, the girl’s travel attire was a huge mistake, as she hadn’t really considered this when she chose it.

“And after all that work, haaa. Would it not be comical if you froze to death due to the cold? Huuu.”

And then, suddenly, the bewitching, slothful voice of a woman echoed inside the trembling girl’s mind.

It naturally couldn’t have been the girl’s voice, as it sounded entirely different from hers. It hadn’t gone through her ears, but directly to her mind. The girl heaved an inconspicuous sigh, scrunching up her well-shaped eyebrows.

“That’s not a very pleasant thing to imagine. There is nothing to worry about in that regard, however. If I truly needed to, I could generate enough firepower to burn the whole area to the ground. You should not presume to look down on me.”

“Sooo even though you went through great pains to sneak out in the dead of night, you’ll throw it all away and get found out by making a lot of noiiise?” Is that an ideal scenario for you, Dona-Dona?”

“…”

“Cut, it out…Daphne. E…chidna…doesn’t, mean anything bad by it…or, maybe just a little? Mm, see, she must just be, relieved, to be alive again, prob…ably.”

She heard cynical remarks spoken with a sweet voice quickly get followed by faltering words of defense. The two differing voices did not belong to the girl, and they were different from the slothful voice of the woman who’d spoken first.

The three differing voices had taken turns speaking to the girl. However, all of the voices being directed towards the girl were laced with an equal amount of familiarity and complex emotions.

At that, the girl—no, the Witch who had changed her form, Echidna, relaxed her lips.

The form of the Witch with white hair and black eyes who was known for her black and white beauty had been lost. She was now using the girl's body as a vessel for her soul, having managed to pull off the improbable act of reviving herself.

It was clear she had put a great deal of effort into her revival, and this turn of affairs was greatly troubling for her, but Echidna had maneuvered through it all and accomplished what she'd set out to do.

I'm not really one to get emotional, but I'll give myself a rare pat on the back for a job well done in this matter. However…

"When you spend over 400 years as a spirit, you sort of forget what it's like on the outside…"

"You got a little over-excited there. Dona, you're such a child. Not good with stuff at all."

"I'd rather you not refer to me as a child, but… I suppose there's nothing I can say to that now."

Echidna responded to that childish voice resounding within her mind, but she knew her words wouldn't have any persuasion. In any case, I would rather not freeze to death right after my revival.

Thinking of something she could do as a last resort, and not having any other choice, Echidna snapped her fingers.

Her fingers that had grown numb produced a delicate, faint sound, and around her arose spots of crimson light. A small fireball the size of her fist flickered and swayed, manifesting an amount of firepower larger than one might think. It drove away the coldness of the snow-filled forest, which in turn banished the danger of freezing to death.

"Though the Gate seems different, the use of magic doesn't seem to be an issue. In that case…"

"You'd be a laughingstock if you made a mistake with your use of magic this time and burned the whole forest down as a result."

"It just doesn't end… How dare you all keep spouting unending sarcasm at me. After working so hard to enact this plan, I'm starting to regret bringing all of you out."

Echidna sighed at the voice of the fifth person that rang in her head, as it marked the last one.

She unconsciously stretched her hand under her robe toward the object tied around the base of her bare neck—where an imposing blue glintstone necklace hung.

Echidna contemplated for a while, running a nail along the glintstone's hard surface. A person with a trained eye would be able to tell that it wasn't just your average object, but something that held great power.

It was an extremely high-grade magic crystal of the highest level of purity. It had an extraordinary ability to store magic energy and was currently storing overwhelming power within it, making use of its entire capacity.

Even a thousand high-level magic users wouldn't be able to use up the stored mana. And while it was extraordinary that such a small fragment could hold so much, using it all up would be quite an extraordinary feat as well. Your average person could never even imagine doing something like that.

And would anyone actually believe it was currently being used to store the souls of five people?

I went through great pains to secure this magic crystal and the vessel for my own soul. I spent 400 years as a spirit, and slowly put this plan into action over the course of 10 years—and finally, the moment has…

"Echidna! Earth to Echidna! Did you even hear a word I said?"

"—. I did. You're yelling right into my ear… No, would 'ear' wouldn't be the right word in this case? Could you not yell in my mind so much? It's seriously giving me a headache."

"This isn't the time to be having a leisurely conversation! Look beside you. Look!"

"Beside me?"

She pulled her consciousness out of the sea of thoughts by following the voice, then looked dubiously to her side. Thereupon, she saw a bright red light and many trees engulfed in flames, and the fire spreading from one tree to another.

Taking a quick glance, Echidna realized her single fireball had made the trees catch fire and was the spark that had started this forest fire.

"Oh dear."

"You seem quite composed, haaa."

"Well, you see, it's important to remain calm and not panic in these situations. And while it is certainly true that this inferno was unexpected…"

As Echidna finished speaking, she pointed her palm towards the burning trees and closed her eyes. "Extinguish!" she cried, emitting words of power from her lips as she opened her eyes.

"It still hasn't gone out…"

"Heeey, Daphne has some thoughts on this… That place seems to be different frooom Dona-Dona's Dream World, so will she even be able to interfere with it just by using words?"

"That would certainly be a problem."

"A b-big mis…calculation, isn't it?"

"Dona, did you start the fire? Are you a bad person, Dona? Are you Typhon's enemy?"

"This isn't the time for talking! Hurry up! Hurry up and put it out! Look!"

"Of course. I shall do it posthaste…guh."

As she tried to reign in the Witches having a shouting contest in her head, Echidna attempted to put the raging forest fire out with a spell but was hit with dizziness instead. Her spell had fizzled out mid-cast and failed to activate.

While the Witches were wondering what had happened, Echidna swiftly grasped the situation. “I’m not familiar enough with this body yet to create a flood using magic.”

Which is to say…

“I can’t put the fire out.”

“Then you need to get out of here right now—!!”

Not only had she been at risk of freezing to death, but now she was faced with burning to death on top of that. Echidna hit the ground running, as if that angry voice had whipped her into doing so.

The forest fire is spreading, and soon there will be nowhere to escape to. I need to get out of here.

Though she was unfamiliar with this body and hadn’t lifted a finger in over 400 years, Echidna ran like her life depended on it, gasping for air as she did so.

“The harshness of the outside world, is a little, different, from what I imagined,” Echidna lamented while panting, her body feeling heavy as the cold air took it into its embrace.

Although I feel like my body is about to break, when I consider the fact that I haven’t felt like this in several hundred years—

“No, that still won’t make this any easier… Hic.”

2

Fortunately, thanks to her desperate escape, Echidna managed to avoid burning to death.

The flames that were burning the forest down were quite powerful, but by guiding them however I pleased with wind I’d created with mana, I managed to secure an escape route. I wouldn’t have gotten out of there without it.

Now that I have escaped the dangerous forest fire, I can go back to traveling in these clothes—or rather, I was hoping things would have been that easy, but…

“Out of season heavy snowfall and a forest fire…and now after all that, I’ve found a girl wearin’ nuthin’ but rags. Are my eyes actin’ weird because of the miasma?” said a man.

“Don’t worry, I’m seeing the same thing…as long as this ain’t a dream or somethin’,” another man added.

“Hm…” While sitting on a tree stump, Echidna placed her hand on her chin as if she was thinking about something. Her appearance was that of a young child, but that pose suited her rather well due to the aura she exuded.

Thus, the man, no, the men, appeared confused due to the strange sensation, and were looking at each other. They were a group of fierce-looking men dressed like bandits that gave off dangerous auras. It looked like there were 18 of them at a glance, and with each of them holding a well-worn weapon, they looked rather comical surrounding a little girl. However, not judging things from appearances alone and following their instincts was their forte. You could assume that was the case due to how they looked and what their occupation was.

“I assume you’re here because of the Great Rabbit, yes? In other words…you gentlemen are Scavengers.”

“What?” a scavenger blurted out.

“Hm? Are you called by a different name in this age? According to his knowledge, you could be called looters, but that doesn’t suit you either… I wonder what I should call you?”

Echidna tilted her head a little, making the men make nervous expressions as if they’d just felt something ominous.

Scavenging—an occupation that also existed 400 years ago—was something that involved going through the homes and belongings of the villages and people that had been ravaged by witchbeasts and turning what was plundered into money. This was especially so if the site had been ravaged by the Great Rabbit since everything apart from the original inhabitants would remain untouched, making it an ideal site for Scavengers.

“Even if there are survivors, you can easily dispose of them and make it seem like witchbeasts did it. What a clever way to hunt. You gentlemen were just born to be hyenas.”

“Hyena? You mean… Hyena-people? What are ya even talking about…no.”

The man in the front shook his head and glared at Echidna with a machete in his hand. His fear for the mysterious child and a strong desire to harm her could be seen in his eyes. It was clear he was well aware of what he should and should not get involved with.

“I don’t know what yer story is, but our livelihood depends on it. For some reason, the rabbit’s trail disappeared without a trace. On top of that, there was a wildfire and…you appeared.”

“I see, do continue,” Echidna prodded.

“You’re an ominous girl, but ya don’t look bad. And you have those ears after all,” the man said, smiling wickedly as he flicked his ear.

His gesture brought Echidna’s current physical characteristics to light—which she had because the girl who had become her vessel was a half-elf.

It’s not as if they think of me as a half-devil. What’s important is the value of the product, not the purity of the blood. Whether I’m a pureblood or a half-blood, it’s all the same to them.

“Elves are treated like that in this age too?” Echidna wondered.

“Based on the way ya say things, are you an old hag who’s been hidin’ in the woods for a long time or somethin’?” Elves are scary since ya can’t guess their age by their looks. But yeah, that’s right. Even now, elves get sold fer a good price.”

"…"

"—Woa?" the man grunted. He'd felt like his skin was boiling for a second. The other men, having felt the same thing, were startled. They all started buzzing about it, wondering what could have happened. The only one who knew what had happened touched the glintstone on her chest and tried to calm the Witch of Wrath's rage.

"Hey, I don't know if yer a brat or an old hag, but whatever you do, don't get any silly ide…"

"Alright," Echidna said, cutting him off. "At this rate, we won't be able to reach a mutual understanding. You gentlemen want to capture me and make some money. On the other hand, I want to continue my carefree journey. So, I'd like to propose a compromise. What do you say?"

"A compromise? Do ya think you're in a position to negotiate?"

"I want you to give it some thought. That way, there will be a chance that both of us make it out of this safely," Echidna appealed with a smile, her head tilted.

The child's smile made the man gasp hard and take a step back, as if it had overwhelmed him. And then, the man, looking as if he couldn't believe he'd reacted like that, immediately said, "I'll give it a listen."

"I'm glad. My proposal is simple. 30 seconds is all I need. I'll go with you without fighting back if you are able to stand in front of me for 30 seconds without anything happening to you. Since it seems interesting too."

"Ha. What's up with that? Do you think something like that will be enough to scare us…?"

"—Well then, the 30 second countdown begins now."

The moment she perceived that they had accepted her terms, Echidna stroked her long-white hair, narrowed her dark eyes, and glared at the men.

"…"

All of the men looked like they had no idea what had just happened. In their eyes, it must have looked like the child in front of them who looked to be around 10 years old had suddenly turned into a beautiful girl with white hair. However, before the men could get an answer to their question, they started succumbing to the abnormality that assaulted them one after another.

"Kah…ku."

The man holding the machete fell to his knees. His eyes darted around all over the place, not focusing on any one thing, and then began foaming at the mouth. A similar phenomenon occurred not only to him, but to all the men surrounding her as well. The eighteen men in Echidna's line of sight were unable to resist her Witch's Miasma and thus in great agony.

The men scratched and tore at their necks, rolled their eyes back into their heads, blew foam out of their mouths, convulsed, choked on their tongues, split their own heads open with their weapons, buried their heads in the snow, and died in agony in various other ways.

"—Exactly thirty seconds."

Having finished counting the 30 seconds she'd promised them, Echidna looked around. There was nothing but men lying motionless in their own blood and vomit. Unfortunately, there hadn't been any among them who could endure the thirty seconds of hell and qualify to be the Sage that could reign over the six Witches.

"It was unfortunate for all of you, but a promise is a promise. I'll just continue with my carefree journey then. I don't think anyone will mind if I borrow some clothes and shoes," Echidna said, then took some clothes that could fit her from the fallen men and put them on.

By that time, her appearance had already returned to that of the child from before.

“It doesn’t last long, it seems. I suppose I’ll have to wait until I get more used to it. But still…”

Echidna looked back at the fallen men, then closed her eyes and thought of the boy with black hair, of the boy who remained unaffected while being surrounded by the Witches covered in miasma—though he probably didn't even realize how abnormal it was to be able to do that.

"I can't wait to get to a city now that I have a little traveling money. I'd like to think that the taste of tea has changed over the course of a few hundred years… Now then."

Echidna flipped the hem of her long clothes and once again set off on her journey without a destination. While leaving, she began feeling gratitude for the men who had provided her with clothes, shoes, and travel money.

"I was about to go out and make a terrible first impression with people by wearing nothing but a piece of cloth over my naked body. It was quite a terrible mistake—I will always remember you gentlemen as being my saviors."

She hadn't uttered words of deceit or anything; she'd been sincere. Echidna would never forget her debt to them, till her soul perishes, the men who worked as Scavengers, who met the Witch here and died.

"Aah. I know, I know. You guys are noisy. Spare me already."

The Witch slowly started moving forward on her journey as she responded to the voices in her head.

—The sky was high above, the wind was lukewarm, and the light seemed to be blessing the one who had returned after hundreds of years.

END

The Emilia Camp's Great Evaluation Meeting

1

"You're as selfish as ever, uncle!"

The one bluntly admonishing him in a loud voice was a young girl who had her arms crossed.

The girl had her braided deep indigo hair bundled up over her head, and her formal clothing gave off a dignified impression. Her gentle, well-featured face could certainly be described as beautiful, but right now it was tense as she scowled, her anger clearly on display, so it would be unwise to just carelessly drop a compliment.

And the focus of this girl's anger was a tall man bearing hair of the same color as her and heterochromatic eyes, he was smiling wryly and looked like a clown.

"I dooooo apologize for the trouble I am causing you, Annerose. However, it was not necessary for you to go so far as to come to the sanctuary personally. The journey must have been difficult."

"If I had not come here personally, just who in the world would give you a proper scolding, seriously! It's because everyone else keeps spoiling you that you've ended up with such a bothersome attitude. You're already a grown man, so do be sure to reflect on this."

"My my, it would seeeeeem that I am always disgracing myself before you. But I suppose you are correct. My apologies."

His bitter smile deepened, and the man—Roswaal dropped his shoulders and sincerely lowered his head to the girl. This attitude of his caused the girl's eyes to widen,

"What's this now. For you to sincerely apologize… Did you perhaps hit your head somewhere?"

"It wasn't exactly my head, but the sides of my face have received quite the magnificent pummeling, among other areas.”

“What! Uncle’s face?! Just who exactly would have the nerve!”

As the girl placed her hand against her mouth in shock, Roswaal turned around to the sight behind him. In front of the procession of dragon carriages that Annerose had brought with her was a boisterous group. Roswaal pointed to the blonde boy—Garfiel, who was standing among them.

“It was him. It was a truly tremendous blow… I was blown right through the building.”

“What is this… I shall have a few words with him!”

Unable to hide her astonishment, the girl rapidly dashed over to Garfiel. Having noticed the girl’s approach, Garfiel looked slightly cautious.

The girl then thrust her finger toward him,

“You! To think you actually walloped my uncle, it must have been a sight worth seeing! Should uncle ever try to hassle you about it, just report it to me. I shall be your ally!”

And said this, causing Roswaal’s shoulders to drop even further.

2

“I am known as Annerose Miload. I was born into a branch of my uncle’s Mathers family… I suppose you could say he is a relative of sorts. I am pleased to meet you.”

Following this majestic introduction, Annerose offered a perfectly refined bow.

The self-awareness in every movement of this girl that was not even ten years of age made it plain to see that she was born of nobility, and moreover how pure her bloodline was. That deep indigo hair of hers was proof that she was related to Roswaal by blood just as she had explained, but—

"She's so upstanding it's hard to believe she's Roswaal's relative…"

"While the margrave might be the one most familiar to you, it would not be wise to think of him as representative of the nobility in general. It is a well known fact that Margrave Mathers is a rather eccentric person, after all."

"Well, I suppose that's true. Even back at the castle, most of those nobles were basically what you'd expect."

When Subaru quietly murmured this, Otto agreed with an ambiguous expression, "I guess so." Indifferent to this exchange, the procession Annerose had brought with her entered the sanctuary one by one—Entering the settlement, they started partitioning the passengers who numbered over a hundred.

Although the sanctuary was fortunately released at long last, its present condition could only be described as miserable. After all, the heavy snowfall that had summoned the Great Rabbit had now completely covered the forest, furthermore, the forest was also the site of Emilia's hard-fought battle to annihilate said witchbeast in addition to which it was also the location of Subaru and Beatrice's inaugural battle, the after-effects of which ruined the forest even further.

Roswaal was completely exhausted, and Emilia was having a hard time controlling her power that had just broken free of its restraints due to which they had no choice but to wait for the snow to clear out on its own. Consequently, the sanctuary was left in an out of season state of cold and regardless of whether it was temporary or not, they wanted to leave as soon as possible.

"And right at that moment, showing up with immaculate timing was…"

"—We who had made preparations in advance under the master's orders. Frightful."

"Uoohhh?!"

With their conversation interrupted as if it was completely natural, Subaru and Otto both jumped simultaneously. Witnessing their surprise, a young, blue-haired man bowed slightly as he apologized, “That was rude of me.”

The young man’s deep blue hair was tidy, and his face that gave off an impression of intelligence was adorned with a monocle over its left eye. His figured covered in a black butler uniform was rather slim, but his body was well trained and even a novice could see that his form was flawless.

“U-Umm, You are…”

“I am Clind, a steward working under Lady Annerose. I was previously in the master’s… In Roswaal L. Mathers’ employ, as a steward, obviously. Audacious.”

“A steward… It seems to me that that’s the highest position among butlers and maids and stuff.”

“Yes, that is correct. Sagacious.”

Clind lowered his chin as he answered, and Subaru felt a tremble in his spine.

He had certainly felt awed by Annerose’s conduct as well, but Clind was a step above even that. How should he put it, it was like he was so put together that it was actually off-putting.

Clind
Annerose

"Excuse me, Mr. Clind. I believe you said something along the lines of preparing in advance?"

"Correct. Master had contacted us beforehand. You are Otto Suwen, the minister of internal affairs, is that not so. I have already heard the details. Capable."

"Although I was barely involved in that decision so I can't really accept it!"

Looking on from the side as Otto screamed about his position, Subaru murmured in a low voice, "Seriously?"

The fact that this rescue party led by Annerose was prepared in advance meant, of course, that Roswaal without a doubt considered this to be something that would be necessary after he made the contents of the gospel a reality.

Although the future took a different path in the end, it was extremely ironic that they would be saved like this.

"…Thanks to which we can unravel at least part of the spell that binds the master. Thankful."

"Eh? What was that just now?"

"Is it not about time you felt hungry? I was asking if you would like to dine. Repetition."

"No, that definitely wasn't it?! I get the feeling you were saying something really important?!"

Subaru objected to this unabashed attempt at a cover up, but Clind raised his brows, dropped his shoulders, sighed as if to show his exhaustion, and showed no sign whatsoever that he would answer Subaru's questions.

This attitude of his immediately convinced Subaru that he was someone connected to the Roswaal Manor. And like so, Subaru was mystified by Clind.

"You're at it again… Teasing others like that is a real bad habit of yours, you ought to keep it in check, Clind."

"Frederica, you know this guy… Wait, that's obvious."

Frederica who was approaching them as though she had seen something she couldn't overlook nodded extremely reluctantly in response to Subaru's words, "Yes."

"Unfortunately, I have known him for quite some time. Because he has been in Roswaal's employ for a long time… I too was in his care when I first started."

"For a senior you've known for such a long time, you're rather bitter towards him…"

"I suppose so. While I do acknowledge that he certainly possesses ability befitting a steward… This man is deeply flawed in ways that that cannot compensate for. In particular…"

As if she had a list of complaints as long as their acquaintanceship, Frederica almost started enumerating all sorts of grievances. But before she could, a small figure rushed over to them.

"Big sis Frederica! The villagers have all gathered in the clearing. What shall we do now?"

"P-Petra! You can't, don't come here right now!"

"Eh?"

Petra had just finished guiding the villagers to the dragon carriages, and was now approaching Frederica for her next instructions. This made Frederica's face go pale, but she was too late.

By the time she noticed, that man… Clind was already standing before Petra who was surprised. Everyone around them was astonished by his speed that transcended human sight as he looked down at Petra, and then nodded.

"—I see. This girl's present looks extraordinarily promising. Gold star."

“P-Present…? Not my future?”

“Yes, your present. You possess a spirit full of potential, your value is at its peak at this very moment, in your youthful state. Frederica was once the same as you, but just look at her now… Disappointing.”

“Get a hold of yourself, you damned pervert!”

Frederica attacked Clind with an unexpectedly merciless kick. Clind dodged this attack from behind without even looking, and slipped behind Petra.

“Uhya”

“Th-That’s so low, you degenerate! Fight me head on!”

“Do not speak such absurdities, there shall be no fight. I merely wish to offer this girl with a promising present—Yes, Petra, I wish to offer her some advice on how to best go about her work. Favor. For what reason would you interfere with this? Mysterious.”

“You…!”

Clind remained as calm as ever, causing Frederica to start attacking him ferociously, but Clind avoided all of her attacks, keeping Petra between them all the while. Petra was already getting dizzy in this maelstrom of wind, but the battle only got more intense.

“Aah, Mr. Natsuki. I’ll handle that somehow, so I think it would be best if you went to see Lady Emilia for now.”

“That would be a great help, but what do you mean somehow…”

“Somehow means somehow. Well, considering the path ahead of me, I at least ought to be able to handle something of this level, something like that.”

Otto said this with a shrug, causing Subaru’s eyes to widen. He then immediately averted his eyes from his friend’s consideration and determination and started patting his back violently.

“That hurts! Hey, what are you doing all of a sudden!”

“Don’t worry about it. Well then, I’m leaving the rest to you, our minister of internal affairs.”

That was all Subaru said before he ran off in a hurry. “I still haven’t accepted that!” He heard a voice yell from behind him, but he ignored it like he always did.

In this manner, he quickly made it into the clearing. Right in front of the cemetery, he found Emilia talking to Annerose on the stairs. He ran over to them.

“Mm, Subaru, you’re late. What were you doing, I wonder?”

The first one to notice him was Beatrice who was sitting on the stairs. She brushed the dust off her skirt and stood up, after which she naturally lined up next to Subaru.

“Ohh, sorry, sorry. I was just chatting with Otto and then got caught up in a weird typhoon… Beako, there’s this butler wearing a monocle, you have to stay away from him no matter what.”

“—? What’s with that? Just what is that butler going to…”

“Well, this and that. Please, Beako. You’re precious to me. I don’t want you to get hurt.”

“I-I understand, in fact. Well, if you’re going to say all that, I suppose there’s no helping it, I shall do as you say, I suppose.”

Subaru pleaded with a sincere expression which made Beatrice turn red in the face as she nodded unsteadily. He figured that at least for now, this would reduce the risk of Beatrice experiencing something unfortunate.

Now what was left was to rack his brains as to how he could prevent any sort of contact between Clind and Beatrice.

“…Your present condition would suggest that you have encountered Clind.”

Subaru was caressing Beatrice's head due to both relief and her loveliness when Ram called out to him. Holding her elbows, she maintained her usual stance as her light crimson eyes suddenly narrowed.

"Ram has not seen him in a while, but it would seem that his incorrigible nature has not changed in the slightest."

"Aah, it was obvious, but you know him too, huh. He's that much of an ikemen and yet he's a lolicon, what a cruel act God has committed…"

"I haven't a clue what 'ikemen' or 'lolicon' are supposed to be, but that is his intrinsic nature. He had even gotten awfully friendly with Ram when she was young and bright. Surely…"

"Surely?"

"—Surely, it was the same for Rem."

Lowering her eyes slightly, Ram said this as if confirming something, as if she was persuading herself. Her words caused an ache to flash through Subaru's chest.

Rem's existence, her memories, were still gone. —Having safely brought her here from the mansion, her reunion with Ram truly was complicated after all.

Subaru had already been hurt by the fact that Ram did not remember Rem, but this time was no different. But what wasn't the same was the fact that in this world, Ram and Rem had a future.

Under the premise that they would bring Rem back, even though Ram could not recall her existence, she acknowledged that she was her sister and was doing her best to come to terms with that fact. That in itself saved him.

"Well, anyway. We'll have to coexist with Clind somehow, so we'll be counting on you for that part, big sister."

"I suppose so. If I could mention just one thing, it would be that when it comes to the young, he does not differentiate between male and female.”

“What exactly am I supposed to do having heard that?!”

It would also be troublesome to delve too deep into his perversions. This caused Subaru to shriek, and in response Ram’s lips suddenly relaxed into a dignified smile that was very Ram-like.

Seeing this, Subaru donned a bitter smile himself. And then—

“Hey, you there! Are you the Subaru Emily spoke of?”

“Woah there.”

Someone rushed towards Subaru rapidly, causing him to instinctively take a step backward. The one pointing her finger at him was none other than Annerose.

Her eyes were harsh as she glared at him and her lips trembled.

“I am, but… Eh? Why are you glaring at me with such hostility?”

“The reason is completely obvious! You took advantage of the fact that Emily is so defenseless despite her cuteness to force a chuu on her! Can you take responsibility for that?!”

“Wha…?!”

Annerose’s accusatory interrogation momentarily left Subaru at a loss for words. Emilia then cut in on their quarrel with a flustered expression.

Grabbing Annerose’s small shoulder, she shook her head as her face reddened.

“Y-You’re wrong, Anne! He didn’t force me at all. He even told me to move if I didn’t want it. I was the one who didn’t move, so… So it was consensual!”

“Wait, Emilia-tan! That way of putting it makes it sound strangely non-consensual, also, Emily? What kind of relationship do you have with this kid?”

“Emily is Emily, it is my pet name for her. Emilia and I refer to each other using pet names, that is the sort of close relationship we have. If you understand that, it’s about time you got out of our way you meddling insect.”

Her attitude as she waved her hand to shoo him away did not possess the slightest bit of the refinement of a young noble she had displayed earlier, there was only hostility towards a rival in love, and a declaration of war.

“Wait, isn’t it strange for us to be rivals in love! Emilia-tan’s the cutest girl in the world, you know?!”

“So, what about it? The two of us will raise the baby in her belly with love. So hurry up and get out of here, you homewrecker.”

“Mm! I can’t overlook what you just said! Did this brat dare say such a thing to Betty’s contractor I wonder! Perhaps I should go ahead and shut that mouth of yours right now!”

“Will you use a chuu I wonder. You’re being rather forward, Miss Beatrice.”

“You’re just complicating things, so just be quiet for a bit, Beako, big sister!”

Beatrice had gotten angry when Annerose insulted Subaru due to her misdirected hostility, and now Ram was stirring the pot too. Subaru was frantically trying to resolve the situation.

Emilia’s amethyst eyes widened as she watched all of this happen, and her lips suddenly relaxed into a smile. Her finger gently touched the magic crystal on her chest—Where Puck was sleeping.

“This is reeeeally chaotic, but… Fufu, these are the people precious to me.”

Emilia’s whisper was swallowed up by their noisy quarrel, and was not heard by anyone.

But the magic crystal shone brightly for a moment, as if the one within was listening to his beloved daughter.

END

One Day II

Chapter 1:
The Relationship of These Sisters

1

—Everyone subject to the scene would agree this is unbearable to witness.

Garfiel: “H-Hey, Sis. That luggage looks pretty heavy there. Want my amazin’ self to carry some?”

Frederica: “Garf…no, do not worry. I am merely offering some slight assistance, since it discomforts me to be constantly served as a guest. Feel free to relax, Garf.”

Garfiel: “O-Oh. W-Well, got it. Jus’ holler ‘f yer need anythin’, ‘kay?”

Garfiel scratches his cheek, standing stock still as Frederica pushes the trolley. Frederica gazes at him for a moment, but immediately pulls herself together and refocuses on her work.

The small wheels roll across the floor, their noise fading further down the mansion’s hallway.

Garfiel dazedly watches his sister grow distant.

Subaru: “…So annoying.”

Garfiel scratches at his short, blond hair, sighs, and walks off in the opposite direction from Frederica. Subaru puts his hand to his forehead, having witnessed this scene from around the corner of the hallway, and bemoans the irritating exchange.

Emilia: “They’ve had a week to calm down and talk…but they still look sooo uncomfortable.”

Says Emilia, hidden in the same place and same manner as Subaru. Subaru was squatting while Emilia spied the exchange from above him.

Subaru feels Emilia's breath grow distant as he stands up and rotates his hips.

Subaru: "It's a decennary reunion…and one without any contact during the decade. I heard their goodbye wasn't exactly an invigorating one where they were wishing each other success, and I can understand it being awkward, but…"

Subaru crosses his arms and tilts his head.

He can understand it, but it's still irritating. Annoying. Watching them makes his back itch. Garfiel and Frederica have been like this ever since their reunion. While they pretend to be on acceptably affable terms when others are around, things are actually poor.

Garfiel might look emotional and impulsive, but he's a surprisingly good actor when he puts his mind to it. And there's no need mentioning how well Frederica conducts herself. They probably hadn't been planning to, but the siblings have successfully deceived quite a number of people in this handful of days.

But it's obvious to Subaru, who has often caught the two of them alone, and now Emilia's witnessed it too.

Emilia: "It looks like Garfiel's trying to approach her, but Frederica can't look at him straight in the eye. Even though they're finally back together. How come?"

Subaru: "It's hard to enjoy the reunion when the goodbye's so messy. I mean, I'm just going off my manga knowledge here. …I think the problem's Frederica."

Emilia is right – Garfiel is ready to be open with Frederica. But Frederica looks less promising. Frederica might be feeling guilt toward her brother, who was left behind in the SANCTUARY. During all of that time, Garfiel sharpened his fangs to secure a stubborn, childish heart.

Which comprised a third of the obstacles that Subaru had to deal with in the SANCTUARY. Yes, Frederica is partly responsible for Garfiel's attitude.

But having said that, Frederica did not purposefully ruin Garfiel, and nobody is in the wrong here.

Actually if anybody is in the wrong, then it's Roswaal.

And so not Subaru and not anyone else casts blame on Garfiel or Frederica.

—But it seems like they feel otherwise.

Subaru: "Man, what a mess…"

It boils down to Frederica having an excessively strong sense of responsibility.

Frederica left for the outside world so that she could create a home for the people of the Sanctuary once the barrier was broken. She bore an incredibly noble and lofty burden for a ten-or-so year old girl. Perhaps that ambition of hers had been what caused her to leave Garfiel behind.

Ultimately the Sanctuary was lost, and what Frederica worried would happen did.

But thanks to her actions, there were places ready to accept them, scattered and shoddy though they were. And that was something she ought to take pride in.

Still, she feels more guilt than accomplishment. Because her guilty conscious must be overly strong.

Subaru: "What the hell, you can't do that. When you pull off something amazing, you have to puff out your chest with pride."

Emilia: "Mm. I agree. And if you think you did something wrong, apologize. Then they'll forgive you…I just want them to get along."

Both Garfiel and Frederica have vanished from the hallway.

Emilia looks at the spot where the two had faced off, her amethyst eyes narrowing. Subaru peers at her and nods.

Subaru: “Yeah.”

Subaru: “Alright. We’re gonna give them a little push so they can sort this out.”

Emilia: “Give them a push…you mean, have them make up?”

Subaru: “Yup. We have complicated brother-sister, sister-brother, human relations here. If the mood’s so sticky they can’t move, then how about some third parties cause enough ruckus to jolt things?”

Subaru claps his hands, raising his finger as he makes his proposal.

Emilia considers it for a moment in silence, before giving a determined nod.

Emilia: “You’re right. Mmhm, families should get along. Okay. Let’s do it. Let’s do our plumb best to have them make up.”

Subaru: “Who says plumb anymore?”

Mutters Subaru as a motivated Emilia balls her hands into small fists.

While thinking: Man, it’s been a while since we’ve done those lines.

2

The reprieve from issues stemming from the Sanctuary had only been fleeting, as the two problems of terrible post-processing and housing assaulted Emilia’s camp.

Roswaal’s plot (parts of which he claimed no responsibility for) had burned down the mansion. They could rebuild it, but reconstructing a building that had been burnt to a clean crisp would take time. It seems that there is no convenient magic in this world to reform objects that have lost their shapes, or any Full Metal Alchemist-style techniques to erect buildings in an instant.

Their only choice was to Contract a builder from a nearby village or town, or perhaps an architect specializing in noble estates and villas, to build it.

Roswaal: “Hooooooowever, that mansion was not my main house… it was an inconspicuous spot to shelter Lady Emilia while leading up tooooooo the Royal Selection. I was planning to move to the main house shortly after the Selection started. Soooooo it’s not as much of a problem aaaaaaaas you’re making it out to be.”

Is what Roswaal said when they started looking for somewhere to relocate.

Apparently the Mathers family has several mansions on hand, and the main house has already been prepared as their base of operations.

Nobody is residing in the main estate except for those maintaining the place.

Once the workers have everything prepared to welcome their masters in, the group will relocate their headquarters to there.

But where do they stay in the time between now and then?

Roswaal: “Don’t worry, thaaaaaaat’s also been addressed. Some relatives of mine have a mansion in a region nooooooot far from the Sanctuary. They’re a branch of the Mathers family. We can stay there for a while. Though I suspect the large number of guests will trouble them.”

‘Roswaal’s relatives’ is an incredibly unsettling phrase, but nobody had any better plan.

After that discussion, the main players in Emilia’s camp went to the relative’s mansion, while Earlham and the Sanctuary’s people went to Earlham Village. Perhaps so that the Sanctuary’s residents could be accepted as residents of Earlham, they were purposefully introduced to other villages within Roswaal’s territory.

Frederica had been the one to set the foundations for this, and it all ought to be considered her achievement.

Though, while all of the Sanctuary’s residents are part-demi-human, they’re also all half-bloods. None of them look too different from an ordinary human, so blending in won’t be too hard.

And though they might have different customs due to their ignorance of the outside world, the kind people of Earlham would surely teach them the basics without hesitation.

Everything might look settled, but the problems will still keep piling up. Even so, no obvious trouble is occurring at the present, since everybody has done their absolute best.

Subaru prays that all the noticeable problems will be resolved before anything can happen.

—And he has judged Garfiel and Frederica's relationship troubles as something to resolve during this blissful, boring period.

3

Subaru: "And thus masterplan Make Garfiel and Frederica Friends Again is a go…is sort of where we're sitting, do you have any suggestions?"

Ram: "This is the first thing you say to me upon entering the room? Intruding on my peace is a heavy crime to pay, Barusu."

Says Ram in an emotionless voice, seated and glaring up at Subaru.

Her face is expressionless as always, but Subaru's relationship with her means he picks out the wisps of emotion swirling in her eyes. As a qualified interpreter of Ram's emotions, Subaru judges that she is currently 'displeased'.

Subaru: "I know you look at me like that a lot, but does that mean that you're basically always displeased when interacting with me? Don't you ever get tired of being cross all day?"

Ram: "Do relax. I only do this when speaking with someone annoying or pointless to interact with."

Subaru: "I see, alrigh th…no hold on."

Subaru furrows his brows at Ram while she implies that he is currently one of the two. Ram snorts at Subaru's reaction before closing the book in her hands.

She stands from her seat and offers it to Emilia, who stands beside Subaru.

Ram: “Here you are, Lady Emilia.”

Emilia: “Thank you. But it’s okay. I know it’s exhausting if we stay for too long, so we’ll be done quickly.”

Ram: “I see. Then I shall gladly take it.”

Subaru: “So you’re not offering it to me. You weren’t kidding about gladly, geez, Sister.”

Subaru shrugs as Ram seats herself back in the chair. But something that Subaru says makes Ram’s brows furrow slightly.

She must be reacting to the word ‘Sister’.

Emilia: “Miss Rem’s still the same as before.”

Ram: “…Indeed. Again today, she’s sleeping so quietly that you cannot tell she’s alive.”

Emilia speaks with concern, and Ram replies with her voice slightly lowered.

On the bed next to Ram’s chair, where the pair are looking, sleeps a girl.

With short, blue hair and a face identical to Ram’s. A light blue sleeping gown garbs her, and the size of her chest as it pushes the blanket up is the only point of difference between her and Ram.

Obviously, this girl’s name is Rem.

She remained asleep through the mansion fire and their relocation. Until they remove whatever is causing it, she will likely remain sleeping forever.

Subaru: “Do you feel like accepting it yet?”

Ram: “I did tell you. I’m not so thoughtless as to believe entirely everything when I still haven't spoken to her yet. …Though what I'm seeing is far too persuasive to dismiss entirely."

Complex emotion arises in Ram's eyes, and Subaru winds up frowning.

Ram's expression as she watches Rem sleep is horribly melancholy from Subaru's perspective, being that he knew their relationship. The elder doted on the younger, and the younger respected the elder.

Rem and Ram's relationship was the exact picture of beautiful, familial love.

As Rem sleeps, Ram's memories contain not name nor recollection nor existence of her beloved sister.

Subaru knew this would happen, he had anticipated this would happen, but it still makes him horribly disconsolate.

But even so—

Subaru: "You say it's complex, but you come visit here every day for her."

Ram: "…I do wonder. Honestly, not even I know what I'm trying to do. But it calms me down to be with this girl you call my sister. …No, part of me is unsettled too, but…"

Subaru: "Unsettled?"

Ram: "Because I'm seeing my own face…isn't quite it. When I look at her as she sleeps, I feel something astir in my heart. It's as though I'm chasing after mist, something which my hands will absolutely never grasp."

Ram puts her hand to her chest. Subaru quietly gulps.

Everyone in the world except Subaru has forgotten Rem—but even so, she remains a thorn inside her only blood relative, Ram.

Ram doesn't seem to know the name of that thorn, but if it's something that Rem left to her dearest elder sister, then it constitutes more than enough of a clue.

Subaru: “I’m open to tell you everything I can about what she’s like or the times we’ve spent.”

Ram: “—I think we better not.”

Subaru offers to help Ram recover her memories, but Ram shakes her head.

Subaru’s brows furrow as Ram puts her hand to her chin in thought.

Ram: “It’s this, unreachable hollowness. It’s like there’s a hole inside me where she used to be. And if there is, anything you fill it with will definitely fall out. And even now, just hearing she’s my sister…her appearance is the most obvious indicator, but it still doesn’t feel real. It feels like, the moment I stop these daily visits… even what I’m feeling now will disappear.”

Emilia: “…And that’s the curse of the Witch Cult’s Gluttony?”

Emilia interjects, looking like she cannot let the topic slide. Ram looks up to find Emilia with her brows lowered in a rare display of anger.

Ram: “A gross feast of NAMES and MEMORIES…My impression of the Witch Cult was never good, but it’s certainly abhorrent now.”

Emilia: “…Witch Cult.”

Mutters Emilia quietly, her gaze lowered.

While Ram’s speculation surprises Subaru, the maliciousness of it also makes him wince.

This doesn’t feel real for Subaru, who remembers Rem clearly, but it isn’t that Rem’s existence is ‘missing’ from Ram and Emilia’s memories. It’s that it’s ‘missing in perpetuity’. Just how sand never stops falling from an hourglass, it is continuous, ongoing now and forever.

Subaru: “We can’t do anything unless we stop what’s causing it…”

The more Subaru talks about their memories together, the quicker the sand will fall. Perhaps even Subaru will forget the memory the second that he voices it.

Ram is concerned that Rem will disappear from the world—or at least that must be part of it.

Ram: “It seems that you have some thoughts about the Cult, Lady Emilia.”

Subaru bites his lip while Ram looks up at Emilia. Her pale cheeks stiffen as Ram’s cerise eyes gaze at her, before she slowly nods.

Emilia: “I’ve done lots of thinking about the Witch. Because I’ve been cursed at so much for looking like her…but, the Cult is…”

Ram: “…”

Emilia: “Apparently it’s something I wanted to forget. But I can’t regard the one I remember and the one that’s there now as the same. What could have happened since then, that it’s like this now? …That’s what I want to find out.”

Subaru: “I don’t really wanna say this, Emilia-tan, but…you get that they’re not people you can really communicate with? It’ll probably end up as a painful experience.”

He doesn’t want to snuff Emilia’s will, but it’s unfair for him not to say it.

The Witch Cult that Subaru knows is a giant mass of malice constructed by a bunch of religious crazies. He doesn’t know what it used to be like. But that’s what the cult is like now.

Emilia: “Thank you. For worrying about me.”

Subaru’s concern makes Emilia smile slightly, and she shakes her head.

Emilia: “It’s okay, I understand. What happened in my memories, and the people I was with…it's all a century ago. There's no way they could still be alive. One hundred years is sooo much of a person's lifespan. I don't think I can meet them again."

Subaru: "But you still want to know what happened…right?"

Emilia: "I'm sorry, I know it's selfish. But I think I'm the only one who needs to find out. Because I'm the only one who saw what happened there, and the feelings that were there…and what Geuse and Mother felt."

Emilia's eyes are sad as she imagines the two, but her mouth remains set in a gentle smile. There's her mother's name, and Geuse. They're important memories for Emilia, and apparently connected to the old, utterly different Witch Cult.

Subaru: "Got some really mixed feelings here, Mr. Geuse…"

Mutters Subaru to himself with a sigh, somewhat resentful toward someone he's never even seen. Emilia feels familiarity and sorrow for the name, and hearing it gives Subaru complex feelings. If the Witch Cult hadn't changed its course from when 'Geuse' joined the fold, Emilia probably wouldn't have been put through so much crisis.

If he was going to be Emilia's ally anyway, Subaru would appreciate if he could've stayed at her side from start to finish. …is the breed of selfish resentment he finds himself thinking.

Ram: "—I doubt I can be as kind as you, Lady Emilia." Although as quiet as ever, her voice is full of chilling animosity.

Subaru's breath catches as he looks at Ram as she looks at Rem. Her face is expressionless, but the glint in her eye is shockingly red.

Ram: "The Witch Cult's particulars have nothing to do with me. I won't object to your desires to hear their story, Lady Emilia. I won't, but do remember that my revenge is another matter entirely."

Emilia: "Ram…"

Ram: “I couldn’t care less about this Cult or Gluttony, but I return what I’m given, be it debts or enmity. Dismembering the heart-gouging hellion still won’t be enough for me.”

Grisly rage overflows from Ram, her petite frame seeming to blur.

As if a giant were there, emitting an overwhelming sense of presence—indeed, as if an oni were there.

Ram: “I’ll eviscerate Gluttony so thoroughly that the memory demands awe.” It’s less ‘resolve’ and more ‘death sentence’.

The recipient is absent, and her tone is utterly calm. Nevertheless, this is unmistakably a death sentence—it feels like an icicle has speared down Subaru’s spine, making him hesitate even to speak.

Subaru: “…”

With that, silence falls upon the room.

Even the noise from his fidgeting feels like it would break the tense atmosphere, so Subaru cannot move. What does shatter the stressful mood is in fact the person who caused it.

Ram: “It was unlike me to say that.”

She sighs, the tense atmosphere vanishing entirely. Subaru lowers his shoulders in relief,

Subaru: “No, it wasn’t unlike you. The Ram I know was someone who did get violent when stuff involved her little sister.”

Ram: “…I see.”

Ram’s statements had been disturbing, but she had definitely been thinking purely about Rem when she spoke them. Subaru appraises it on that point alone, making him feel glad for Ram’s sentiments. Besides, Subaru can’t forgive G LUTTONY either. If he can then he wants Gluttony’s neck for himself, without even handing it over to Ram.

The sensation of murder. —The slipshod conclusion to his fight with Petelgeuse left very little direct feeling in Subaru's palms. Perhaps Subaru's hesitation toward taking a life could stymie him at the critical moment.

But still, he cannot forgive Gluttony, and he has the resolve to do it if it's to save Rem.

Subaru: "…We got really off topic."

Subaru scratches his head, his dark thoughts not showing in his expression.

Ram looks at him meaningfully, and Emilia looks at him concernedly, but Subaru had managed to smile at both of them, surely.

Ram: "You're right. Now, since you're intruding on me as I enjoy my unexpected holiday, I'm sure your business must be suitably important."

Subaru: "Why are you so audacious when pressuring people? Frederica's in your position and she feels so apologetic about getting guest treatment that she's helping in the mansion…"

Ram: "I'm wounded. And Frederica's the one failing to read the mood by working when she's being received as a guest. …She can't stay composed when with Garf, and Clind is inciting her into it too."

Subaru: "Mr. Clind is?"

This is the name of the Mathers family's young butler who is tending to Subaru and the others. He is handsome, with a slender face, who exudes an incredible aura of grace and capability. He gives a similar vibe to Julius, but unlike Julius Clind is polite and incredibly considerate.

And so Subaru thinks it strange that Ram doesn't seem to think too fondly of him. Though perhaps that's just what everyone looks like to Ram when they're not Roswaal.

Ram: "You should ask Frederica and Clind themselves about how poorly they interact. Anyway, I'd like to return to my reading, so do state your business quickly."

Emilia: "I'm sorry, we just keep on talking. I think Subaru mentioned this right at the start, but it's about Frederica and Garfiel…"

Emilia valorously gets to changing the topic.

'Let's do something about Garfiel and Frederica's awkward relationship!' was a nice idea and all, but Subaru and Emilia found themselves absolutely stuck on what to do.

Since neither of them are very experienced when it comes to mending sibling relationships.

Subaru is an established only-child, and so is Emilia.

Neither of them have been blessed with siblings, so nothing comes to mind when it comes to non-parental blood relations. And in Garfiel and Frederica's case they don't even have ordinary parental relations, but we'll leave that part aside.

So they wandered around the mansion in search of advice, and visited Ram, who stays in a fixed location.

And Subaru considers her the closest sister he knows. Though her relationship with Rem is gone from everyone's memory except Subaru's, he hopes that Ram might have something useful to say, considering that she and her sister had such a good relationship.

And even disregarding that, Ram is childhood friend of Garfiel and Frederica. Maybe something from an episode that Subaru wasn't around for will make her hit on an approach to fill this decade-long divide.

Emilia almost gives Ram an expectant gaze, when her lips come to a halt.

Subaru tilts his head at the frozen Emilia, wondering what happened, before following her gaze—and freezing still as well.

Ram: “…What?”

Ram narrows her eyes, looking terribly uncomfortable.

In her hands she holds a book, at which Emilia and Subaru stare.

The title, “How to Grow Closer to Your Younger Sibling,” is horrifically critical to the current affair.

—It seems that they aren’t the only ones feeling clueless about sibling relations.

Chapter 2:
Young Souls and Watcher

Having learned that Ram is useless regarding sibling problems without her memory, but that she is nonetheless a good sister, time passes on for Subaru and Emilia with no good progress.

Subaru: “But don’t you feel like Ram was being pretty unsympathetic?”

Emilia: “Don’t say that. Ram has her own opinions. …She’s known them longer than we have, so that’s probably the difference.”

Emilia smiles wryly at the pouting Subaru as they walk down the mansion hallway.

They have left Rem’s bedroom and are reflecting on the encounter as they venture about. Through Subaru’s mind passes the words that Ram left them with before their departure:

Ram: “Garf and Frederica’s relationship? It should be fine to just leave them be. They aren’t children…well, Garf is a kid, but he’s not bereft of his own ideas. Though said ideas tend to be inaccurate. They’ll manage something on their own.”

It’s a rather ruthless judgement on Garfiel, what with how fond he is of Ram.

But it’s possible that Ram regards Garfiel as something like a younger brother. His crush could be called cute, were the feelings not so intense and violent. Poor Garfiel, infatuated with a fortress of a woman.

Emilia: “—? Hm? What’s wrong?”

Subaru: “No, it’s nothing. Was just reflecting that man, Garfiel’s not the only one looking at a tall hurdle.”

Emilia: “—?”

Emilia tilts her head cutely.

Subaru hates how her mind utterly fails to put together what his gaze and words mean. Perhaps the fact that he winds up forgiving it is one of those foibles of loving someone.

Subaru: “Anyway, so Ram’s out…who to consult next?”

Emilia: “Huh? You’re going to keep trying?”

Subaru: “Well yeah. We haven’t solved anything yet, and there’s nothing manly about giving up ‘cause you stumbled on the first step. Don’t you want to improve their relationship too, Emilia-tan?”

Emilia: “I do, but…Ram knows them best, and that’s what she said, so maybe that’s the best thing to do.”

Subaru: “Leaving them be might solve the problem over time, but you can’t forget that it’s been a decade since they parted. I’m not going to wait another decade for them to reconcile. I want to give them a shove so they make up quickly.”

Subaru insists that they stick with the plan, while Emilia seems somewhat pressured by Ram’s statement. That said, while Subaru does want Garfiel and Frederica to reconcile, he also wants to keep this chance to do things with Emilia from escaping.

Since no matter what Subaru does in this caper, it won’t escalate into bloodshed. Could this heart, after all that protected trial and error, ever feel so light?

Emilia: “What happened? Subaru, you just burst into a grin…”

Subaru: “No, was just thinking that mulling over things without being frantic about it is bliss. Wow! No matter how everything falls, there’s no bloodshed and nobody dies!”

Emilia: “Subaru…”

Subaru shoots her a thumbs up, his teeth sparkling, but Emilia looks at him with incredible pity. Subaru thinks back on his statement, figuring that he must have said something strange. And then shocks himself at what a brutal, inappropriate comment it was, and how impoverished his desires are.

Subaru: “D-Disregard that, Emilia-tan.”

Emilia: “It’s okay. I know it’s been hard. I’m sorry I didn’t realize how you felt. Subaru, maybe you should spend the day resting in your roo—”

Subaru: “No not happening and that reaction’s for when you don’t realize how I feel!”

Emilia gazes at him with sympathy.

And, at that point in the conversation,

???: “…So you’re the ones making this racket, I suppose.”

Sighs a voice. Subaru looks over to the speaker, to find a girl in an extravagant dress standing there —Beatrice.

She has come from the other end of the hallway and stopped to look at Subaru and Emilia, her brows furrowed on her cute face.

Beatrice: “You two are certainly enjoying yourselves, in fact. I can hear your arguing from the other end of the mansion, I suppose.”

Subaru: “There’s some sarcasm. If you’re sad you’re not included then just say it. We’ll let you deliberate with us in our profound discussion hour.”

Beatrice: “Who said anyone is sad about being left out, in fact! Don’t just go saying whatever you want, I suppose!”

Beatrice crosses her arms, her cheeks red with indignation. Both Subaru and Emilia have to smile at how incredibly Beatrice the attitude is.

About a week has passed since Subaru and Beatrice formed their Contract. That said, nothing especially dramatic changed about their relationship.

Subaru teases Beatrice like always, and Beatrice overreacts. These exact same exchanges unfold endlessly for these two.

But, Beatrice has been more out and about lately. And sometimes, as if remembering something, she comes to hold Subaru's hand.

Subaru: "And so on is what you say, but really you're here because you wanna hold my hand. Oh geez this poor girl's too much."

Beatrice: "Don't distort Betty's actions by giving them these weird pretexts, in fact. Betty keeps touching you because circumstances demand it, I su…Subaru, I suppose."

Subaru: "It is adorable how you reminded yourself to say that."

Emilia: "Subaru."

Emilia cautions Subaru as Beatrice's face goes red. Subaru pokes his tongue out at Emilia and reaches out for Beatrice.

Her hand lightly closes around his fingers, before she re-thinks it and timidly grasps his hand proper. It's what Beatrice always does.

He feels her small fingers on his palm. This tickly, awkward touch is the fruit of Subaru's labor.

But this time Beatrice does not do it, and instead she simply stares at Subaru's hand, hesitant.

Subaru: "What's up? I do wash my hands after going to the bathroom."

Beatrice: "I wasn't worried about that, but now that thought's going to be in my head and it's disgusting, in fact! No, it's something else…"

Beatrice glares in response to Subaru's unneeded comment, and she glances behind her. Subaru tilts his head at that, when he hears the answer come from down the hallway.

???: "Where'd you go, Beatrice-chan?"

A voice calls from down the hallway, beyond a corner, searching for Beatrice. The voice is female, filled with affection and friendship.

But hearing it makes Beatrice's shoulders hitch up,

Beatrice: "Eep!"

Squeaks Beatrice, her eyes darting around before she dives into a nearby room. Subaru and Emilia watch on wide-eyed as Beatrice peeks out from behind the door.

Beatrice: "Tell her that I'm not here, I suppose. Please, in fact."

Subaru: "Hey."

Beatrice: "Please, I suppose."

With that, she silently shuts the door. Subaru shrugs while Emilia furrows her brows in confusion. And,

???: "Oh! Subaru!"

A girl appears from beyond the bend in the hallway, her face lighting up as she comes darting over.

With the skirt of her maid outfit fluttering, the auburn-haired girl trots near—it's Petra.

Petra is also staying in this mansion following the incineration of Roswaal's estate. Considering the danger that comes with being involved, Subaru had tried to convince her to go back to the village, but she refused to listen.

Petra has been utterly focused on helping with odd jobs around this mansion as part of her maid training. What an ambitious, disciplined girl, Subaru thinks.

As if complimenting Subaru's thoughts, Petra curtseys politely to Emilia,

Petra: "Please forgive me, Lady Emilia. I present my apology for having raised my voice."

And says that.

The childishness she displayed toward Subaru instantly disappears, and Emilia's eyes widen at the maidly behavior.

Emilia: "Ah, um, it's okay. Don't worry. You can please relax, knave."

Subaru: "Emilia-tan, 'knave'?"

Emilia is going to need to learn how to respond when others humble themselves around her. But putting aside that messy-yet-heartwarming conversation,

Subaru: "So, what's up, Petra. Something happen?"

Petra: "No, nothing has happened…but since I've finished my work, I was thinking to entertain Beatrice-chan. But I haven't been able to find her."

Emilia: "Beatrice-chan… Gosh."

Emilia's breath hitches, and she puts her hand to her mouth as she holds in her laughter. Subaru also comes close to snickering. Beatrice, for all of her hauteur, has been dubbed with a -chan by Petra.

Subaru burst into laughter when he first caught them interacting.

Petra: "Is there something the matter, Lady Emilia? Have I perhaps said anything strange?"

Emilia: "No, nothing. I just thought that was a bit sooo funny."

Petra: "'A bit' but 'sooo'?"

Sometimes Petra's childishness does come to the fore. Emilia gives her a smile and glances to Subaru, her gaze asking him what to do.

Subaru pretends to mull over the issue,

Subaru: “Right. Beatrice. She loves the attention, so I’m sure you have fun fussing over her too?”

Petra: “Mhm, I do. Beatrice-chan isn’t honest at all. She’s super cute whenever I’m with her. I don’t think people like her should be left on their own.”

Subaru: “Why do you think that?”

Petra: “‘Cause she’d be lonely. You can’t leave her there.”

Subaru nods to Petra’s smart-yet-simple reply.

It took a lot of words to get there, but ultimately it’s the same reasoning by which Subaru dragged Beatrice out of the Forbidden Archive. Children see to the truth of things. Or really Subaru and Beatrice just argued at each other using child’s logic.

Petra: “How come you’re laughing now too, Subaru?”

Subaru: “It’s not that I’m making fun of you. It’s just that you’re so brilliant, Petra.”

Petra: “Really? Eheehee.”

Subaru pats Petra’s head and gives her a nod.

Then he puts his hand on the doorknob behind him, and swings the door open.

Beatrice: “Whaugh?!”

With a thunk, an eavesdropping loli gets sent to the floor.

The loli pushes herself back up, her eyes teary and forehead red from the door belting against her.

Subaru: “The heck are you doing.”

Beatrice: “Moreso what the heck are you doing, in fact! This hurts! This sincerely hurts, I suppose! It hurts and furthermore you broke your promise…”

Subaru: “I didn’t promise anything, and I didn’t even say I’d do it. After taking careful consideration of who to support, I decided that supporting Petra’d be funnier.”

Beatrice: “Funnier! Funnier, he says, in fact! Just abysmal, I suppose!”

Complains Beatrice, rubbing her forehead while Subaru blocks his ears, pretending not to hear her. When a girl cuts into their exchange. Petra faces Beatrice directly, making Beatrice’s mouth gawk open and pigtails bob.

Beatrice: “Ah, erm, um, don’t get the wrong idea, in fact…I, I wasn’t hiding from you or anyth…”

Petra: “Come on, Beatrice-chan. You’re going to get told off if you play hide and seek in other people’s mansions. Though I understand wanting to play so much you can’t help it…”

Beatrice: “What?! S-Stop acting as though Betty were a child, I suppose! Though I might look like this, I am fully an…erm, fully an…”

Petra: “Fully an?”

Beatrice: “…Nevermind, in fact.”

In the end, Beatrice surrenders. Emilia looks surprised, and Subaru also closes his eye at the unfamiliar happenings.

The entertaining thing about Beatrice and Petra’s relationship is that somehow Petra is the dominant one.

Beatrice always maintains a haughty, cocksure attitude when interacting with anyone. Subaru and Puck had been the exceptions, and now Petra has thrust herself into that count.

For some reason, Beatrice can’t interact with Petra using her normal demeanor. Not even she seems to understand why that is. But Subaru has spotted her holding hands with Petra, looking rather reluctant about the whole thing, several times now.

Nevermind what Beatrice thinks, to an outsider they're just a couple of young girls. And this is two girls, with portents of feature beauty, holding hands. A charming spectacle.

Petra looks slightly older than Beatrice. Perhaps it's happening because Beatrice struggles to counterbalance Petra when she behaves like an older sister.

Petra: "Okay, let's go. We don't want to interrupt Subaru and Lady Emilia's work. And Brother Clind got some sweets for us, so let's go eat them together. In the dining room."

Beatrice: "O-Okay, I suppose. I'll go…so you don't need to pull me along, in fact."

Beatrice sends a pleading look to Subaru as Petra leads her out of the room by the hand, but Subaru cruelly replies with a thumbs up. Emilia waves her goodbye as Petra drags her away, still looking mad and with her tongue sticking out.

That circumstances-demanded skinship with Subaru will have to come later. Emilia puts her finger to her lip as she contently watches one girl abduct the other,

Emilia: "That is sooo surprising. I didn't expect Beatrice to be weak to Petra."

Subaru: "Right? It stunned me at first. It's adorable to watch though so I didn't say anything. And I think Petra's totally right."

Emilia: "She'll be sad if left alone?"

Subaru: "I don't mind being with her all hours of the day, but that defeats the point of leaving the Archive. If she's making memories, then the pages of her photo album ought to have as many people in them as possible."

Since she has to compensate for four centuries of blank pages. If Subaru consumes all of the space in her album, it's going to get samey quick.

Her memories need to be full of lots of people and lots of faces.

Subaru believes it best to stand at her side as she clicks the shutter, sometimes slipping into the frame.

Emilia: “Subaru…sometimes you are sooo cool.”

Subaru: “Huh, what, seriously? What happened, what RNG was that?!”

Emilia: “It really is only sometimes though.”

Subaru scratches his cheek as Emilia giggles.

While it was somewhat joking, compliments from Emilia inevitably get him excited. He wants to always be reminded of this feeling whenever he teases Beatrice. Gotta keep teasing her now.

Subaru: “Feels like the aims and the means swapped places, but you do get that sometimes. Now, we got to see that heartwarming sight, so next is…”

???: “Indeed, a heartwarming sight. The spectacle of two girls with their lovely souls, smiling as they join hands…that is this world’s splendor. Effulgence.”

Emilia: “Eek?!”

Just when Subaru starts moving to the next topic, a voice speaks up that makes Emilia yelp.

Because the speaker’s arrival is just that abrupt and unexpected.

And their location is just as unexpected as their arrival. This character stands behind Subaru, so close that he can feel their breath on his neck, their expression nonchalant as they join the conversation.

???: “I do apologize for the surprise. But I could not suppress my occupational urge to present you with astonishing service. Misfire.”

Subaru: “C-Mr. Clind?”

Clind: “Yes, this is Clind. I do hope that I have not fouled your temper? Trepidation.”

A handsome, slender man gives them a perfect bow.

His blue hair is just long enough to touch his shoulders, and he wears a monocle on his left eye. His starched, black butler suit seems to take joy in being his clothing as it perfectly displays its potential, his every movement so refined that Subaru unwittingly has to stand up straight.

This man’s posture is so perfect that it could be a match for Wilhelm’s, but the aura that Clind exerts differs from the Sword Demon’s.

If Wilhelm gives the impression of a honed blade, then Clind is the flow of pristine waters. Material beauty is dissimilar to conceptual beauty. Though both soothe the mind equally.

Subaru: “It’s kind of shitty to show up behind people out of nowhere, Mr. Clind…almost had a heart attack.”

Clind: “Should that occur, we will devote our utmost efforts into your resuscitation. There is no need to fret for everything is well. Death’s Door.”

Subaru: “Um?! Except that’s no help at all?!”

While Clind’s polite gestures remain strong, his reply falls apart terribly.

However, his current behavior gives no indication to his personality or capabilities. Clind is as excellent a servant as he appears, being the paragon butler of the Milord household.

Although young, he keeps the mansion in order with his bold personality.

And that isn’t all—he’s even capable of swordsmanship in an emergency. He is so skilled that, when they first met, Garfiel tried to pick a fight with him: “Guy’s pretty fuckin’ good.” Though Clind ignored the duel invitation.

However, for all of Clind's excellence, he does have some flaws. One of them is his demonstrated penchant for mischief. Another is,

Emilia: "Petra hasn't been any trouble for you, has she? I know that you're letting her participate in the work, but I'm still kind of worried…"

Clind: "There is no need for worry. Petra is outstanding for a girl of her age. I await to see how her proficiency and beauty shall bloom. Envy."

Emilia: "I see. Thank goodn—"

Clind: "However, she shall grow into an adult. …Which I find a terrible shame. Chagrin."

Clind furrows his brows, looking utterly disappointed.

This is one of his flaws, and a big one.

Clind is extremely interested in young girls like Petra and Beatrice.

Putting it straight, he's into little girls—a lolicon.

Clind: "What could be the matter, Master Natsuki? You look as though you've seen a prospective criminal. Have I perhaps done something untoward? Confirmation."

Subaru: "It sort of seems as though you're self- aware about it, considering how precise that comment was. I'm not really into younger girls so you have that, but seriously when they're that young…"

Clind: "It appears that you could be under a terrible misapprehension. Smile."

Smile, he says, while not smiling in the least. His attractive face darkens dejectedly as he adjusts his monocle, and he turns to face Subaru.

Clind: "Do I have your attention? I do not admire Anne-Rose- sama, nor Petra nor Lady Beatrice because they are young. It is because I am infatuated with the promise and youth of their souls. To be enraptured by pure, immaculate souls is natural. And it happens that many possessors of such souls are young. Thus Misapprehension.”

Subaru: “Well…great.”

Clind gives a speech to rebut Subaru, though Subaru tunes out for most of it. However, Clind’s next words destroy that attitude of Subaru’s.

He looks at Emilia, and,

Clind: “In fact.”

Clind: “My eyes perceive a similar luster to Lady Emilia’s soul. Purity.”

Emilia: “Me?”

Subaru: “Goddamn geez, Mr. Clind!”

Emilia tilts her head. Subaru can only find himself shocked and awed at Clind’s perception. It should not be possible to determine that Emilia is mentally much younger than she appears without investigating her background and upbringing. Clind’s eyes have penetrated straight through that, and he has ascertained that Emilia is mentally a loli.

A lolicon’s nose is to be feared, thinks Subaru in dumb astonishment.

Subaru: “So then Miss Ryuzu or something’d be…”

Clind: “Her appearance is exceedingly darling, but her soul is matured. It is beyond the means of someone as callow as I to divine promise from someone so set in their ways. Recklessness.”

Subaru: “Amazing…”

It truly impresses Subaru that he can see through the loligranny.

Emilia has been party to this exchange, but doesn't seem particularly interested in Clind's fetishes.

Emilia: "Mr. Clind, there's something I kind of want to ask…"

Clind: "Please ask whatever you wish. Inquiry."

Emilia: "Did Frederica use to work here before she started working in Roswaal's mansion?"

Clind: "…Indeed. Affirmation."

Subaru furrows his brows, sensing that Clind was tongue-tied for a second.

The hesitation makes Emilia blink too, but the conversation continues as is.

Emilia: "Which means that you've known Frederica for a long time?"

Clind: "Frederica and I have known each other for a decade—I was still a manservant who had only just begun work when the Margrave brought Frederica to the Milord household. We would have known each other since then. Old Friends."

Emilia: "I knew it! Okay, so I have a question about Frederica. Is there anything she likes or dislikes that we can use as a starting point for her to reconcile with Garfiel?"

Clind: "A starting point for reconciliation. Rumination."

Clind puts his hand to his chin, in thought. He looks pretty as a portrait even while ruminating. Subaru fiddles with his track suit zipper while lamenting, "So hot guys can get away with being lolicons…" about the amazing differences in beauty. After a minute of thought, Clind nods with a quiet sight.

Clind: "I shall make chicken the primary dish for Lady Annerose's next birthday. Plan."

Emilia: "Where'd Frederica go?!"

Clind: "…Ah, forgive me. Whenever I attempt to meditate upon her, my brain unfailingly rejects it. I'm afraid this is my idiosyncrasy. Beg Your Pardon."

Emilia: "Do you maybe not get along with Frederica, Mr. Clind?"

Clind: "Preposterous. Denial."

Clind shakes his head at Emilia.

Clind: "She is an excellent servant who conducts her work swiftly and accurately, and is also proficient in tact. Should you ignore that her appearance sullies her station, what demands the maid to be adorned in splendour and beauty, I have not any complaints about her. Indifferent."

Emilia: "Um? I think I just heard something extremely prejudiced, but is that just me? Subaru?"

Subaru: "No it's not just you, it's just Mr. Clind."

It seems like Clind's unrelenting prejudice springs from Frederica's appearance. While yes, the initial impact of it did startle Subaru, Frederica is actually both diligent and abounding in femininity. There's nothing wrong about her as a woman except her appearance.

Clind: "I sense that Master Natsuki has reached the same conclusion as myself. Espy."

Emilia: "Did you? Subaru?"

Subaru: "I'm trying to end my habit of probing for other people's flaws, so could you please not?! Emilia-tan your looks are a mega critical on me!"

Emilia: "That's not what we were talking about, geez. …But, thank you." Says Emilia, her cheeks slightly flushed.

These compliments seemed utterly ineffective before, but since Emilia finished the Trial they've starting working on her somewhat, which is novel.

Puck isn't around to give Emilia lessons on fashion any more, and she's gotten into the practice of dealing with her own grooming and dress. Apparently she's been doing some trial and error on what looks stylish.

Though naturally when she started thinking about chopping her silver hair short, everyone collectively yanked the breaks on it.

Either way, it doesn't seem like they're going to get any useful information about Frederica from Clind. Subaru and Emilia sigh, hitting a quick dead end yet again. When Clind speaks up,

Clind: "Simply as speculation…"

Clind: "Judging by what I have heard, could you be seeking an improvement to the sibling relationship between Frederica and Sir Garfiel? Conjecture."

Emilia: "Yes, we are. But neither me or Subaru have any brothers or sisters, so we have no idea what to do. We've been asking around, but…"

Clind: "Being that Frederica's only issue is her appearance, I believe that issues pertaining to Frederica that are unrelated to her appearance will resolve themselves if left alone. But it seems that you may find this stance unsatisfactory. And so I offer. Proposal."

Both: "Proposal?"

Clind raises his finger. Subaru and Emilia tilt their heads in unison.

For the first time that day, Clind smiles.

Clind: "If you are concerned about them, then ought you not speak to the person closest to them? Not Ram, but another? Opinion."

Emilia: "Closest to them…oh!"

Emilia claps her hands, her eyes shooting open as she finally hits upon this idea. Subaru reaches the same conclusion, but something is bothering him first. Which is,

Subaru: “Not Ram? I’m pretty sure we only mentioned her ages ago, Mr. Clind, how long’ve you been listening to us talk?”

Clind: “It is because I am the butler entrusted with the peace and chores of the Milord household. Declaration.”

It kind of sounds like an answer and also kind of doesn’t.

Subaru scrunches his face up while Clind bows respectfully.

His conduct as a subordinate is so perfect that it overwhelms any observers.

All Subaru can do is shut his mouth, and look sour.

Chapter 3:
Pretty Girl, Pretty Lady, Pretty Granny

1

Subaru: “And thus we hastened to speak with Miss Ryuzu who we figure knows them best.”

Ryuzu: “I’d call yer approach conscientious, all told. I don’t mind yer relying on me…but I don’t gert much I can say on the topic.”

Subaru: “Meaning?”

Ryuzu: “Meaning I agree with Ram and Lil’ Clin’. Their problem ers their problem. It’s not something outsiders need ter get too involved with.”

It doesn’t look like Ryuzu is too interested in Subaru’s proposal as she sips her tea. However, she is undeniably a key figure in this whole affair. Subaru is sticking his neck into their business with too little frivolity to back down that easily.

Subaru: “I get that their circumstances are an annoying mess. Since I’ve been involved in it if only tangentially.”

Ryuzu says nothing.

Subaru: “But I don’t think it’s something to just leave alone. I mean maybe it will resolve itself in time…but it’s aggravating both to them and to onlookers how they’re trying settle things, but it just isn’t working. If a third party can do something about it, then they should.”

Ryuzu: “That sounds like a load’erv hard-nosed meddling.”

Subaru: “Well I do have a reputation for being shameless and dense.”

Subaru puffs his chest out in pride although it likely wasn’t a compliment. Ryuzu smiles wryly at him.

The two of them are in a corner of the large room given to Ryuzu, sitting across from each other at a table as they sip from their cups, silently wetting their throats with tea. When,

???: “Excuse me, guys?”

A voice calls to them from a short distance away.

The speaker narrows their amethyst eyes, their gaze akin to glare as it pierces Subaru.

Dissatisfaction laces the voice of the speaker, unincluded as she is in the conversation, Emilia.

Subaru: “What’s up, Emilia-tan? I mean you’re cute when you’re angry, but your forehead’s getting all wrinkled.”

Emilia: “If you think so, then shouldn’t you come and help?! Geez! You’re so mean, Subaru! You ninny!”

Subaru: “Who says ninny anymore?”

Subaru smiles at Emilia’s proficient and adorable use of outdated language as he sets down his teacup. He looks again at Emilia, and tilts his head at the situation she faces.

Subaru: “You can really call this a spectacle. A fantastical drama unfolding between a pretty lady and some pretty girls.”

Ryuzu: “Yer gonner make me blush, saying that.”

Subaru: “You mingle too and it’ll be a drama between pretty girls, a pretty lady and a pretty granny.”

Ryuzu: “Yer gonner make me blush, saying that.”

Subaru: “Seriously?!”

It shocks Subaru that, just when he expected her to grumble at him, she accepts it. Ryuzu’s cheeks as she watches on with Subaru are faintly red.

The two of them gaze at a bunch of Ryuzu's identical to the blushing Ryuzu, surrounding Emilia in a mob.

—They brought 26 Ryuzu doubles from the Sanctuary in total.

These are the subservient, non-sentient doubles who are not the representative Ryuzu. Though the camp has no tasks for them, they cannot simply leave them sitting there, so they present another issue for everybody to mull over.

And the biggest problem here is,

Emilia: "Don't just look, Subaru, come help me."

Subaru: "I'd love to, but they're not gonna listen to me. You and Garfiel are the only ones who can command them. Just gotta finangle them with some witty eloquent language."

Emilia: "I know, but…we only just had a terrible fiasco when I told them to STEP AWAY. Did you forget, Subaru?"

Subaru: "Nobody would forget a three-days-passed organized search effort that went all the way over the mountains."

Subaru thinks back on the debacle from three days ago.

Crystals in Sanctuary govern the doubles' command right. One had been installed in the tomb, and one in the laboratory, each of which recognized either Emilia or Garfiel as rightholders, and presently continue to do so.

Meaning that the doubles remain in a doll-like state, unable to act without Emilia or Garfiel's orders. They pay no heed to anyone else's instructions. Garfiel says that, if they leave them without any tasks, they will literally sit there doing nothing until they die and disappear.

The debacle from three days ago happened when Emilia, ignorant to the command right's limits, tried to have the doubles spread out a little distance from the mansion by telling them to 'step away'. The annoying part is that the doubles have their own personal differences, and interpreted the command in slightly different ways.

Some of them perfectly adhered to Emilia's intentions, some of them exited the mansion, and some of them sprinted far from the mansion into the distance. Were it not for Garfiel's nose and legs, they might not have retrieve them all. They can't just leave these cute, doll-like girls to walk around undefended. And it's problematic if people start questioning the doubles.

Subaru: "Twins or triplets is one thing, but nobody'd believe in twenty-sextuplets…"

Subaru doesn't remember what the Guinness World Record was, but it was probably less than ten.

There's no point even considering it; there is no way they can use the siblings excuse here.

And as for why they have to come up with excuses in the first place,

Ryuzu: "They were obviersly made using forbidden techniques. Frankly said, it'd be an uproar if people found out what we were."

Subaru: "Aaas figures."

Ryuzu: "Yer taking someone as a foundation point, and constructing mock-od of a similar nature to them to make them—essentially yer making infinite soldiers. There's people out there who'll want that."

Leaving aside the question of practicality there, they are useful for research. Since they're basically an infinite subject base. You can use the command right to keep them from rebelling, and they disperse into mana when they die so there's nothing to clean up.

Subaru: "Which is all absolute shit."

Ryuzu: "It relaxes us ter know yer think that, Lil' Su."

Subaru feels something indescribable as he watches Ryuzu smile thinly.

Repulsion that his acquaintance could be exploited, and aversion due to the ethical issue. Those feelings are why Subaru feels adverse to the concept.

But when he dispels those feelings, and considers the technique detachedly, how long will his resistance really hold against the sheer convenience of it?

Everyone, including him, pursues an easier and easier course. Hate being so weak, he thinks.

Emilia: “Okay! So what am I meant to do?”

Emilia yells, having been somewhat excluded from the situation, as she hits her limit.

The mob of Ryuzu’s isn’t doing anything, but the silent pressure they exert on Emilia isn’t sanitary for her mental health.

Subaru crosses his arms as he wonders what to do.

Subaru: “Maybe try pacifying them with an order they can’t misinterpret?”

Emilia: “Like? They went so far when I just told them to step away, so I don’t know what to…”

Subaru: “I think saying ‘sit down’ would work?”

Emilia: “…Subaru, you’re a genius.”

It’s nothing that brilliant, thinks Subaru while Emilia asks the Ryuzu’s to sit, and they each plonk themselves down on the spot.

It feels like Emilia is the teacher at a kindergarten now that all these little girls are sitting cross-legged around her, but actually the situation is more desperate than that.

They have to come up with some smart way to deal with this. Subaru has some relevant proposals he wants to make when Roswaal returns, so now it’s an issue of waiting for him.

Subaru: “Since there’s 26 of them, naming them after the letters of the alphabet might work to individuate and remember them all.”

Ryuzu: “Yer look like yer up ter some nefarious plotting again, Lil’

Su.”

Subaru: “‘Nefarious plotting’ makes it sound bad. All I’m doing is working my brain so everyone I know reaches a happy conclusion.”

Subaru gives her a big grin. Ryuzu sighs, looking astonished.

Did she find his efforts credible or not credible? Subaru decides optimistically that his smile just looked untrustworthy. When Emilia, freed from the swarm of doubles, approaches Subaru and Ryuzu. Subaru presents her with her teacup.

Subaru: “You did a good job, Emilia-tan. Putting in good efforts as always.”

Emilia: “Thank you. But compared to Garfiel, I’m barely doing anything. Garfiel does such good work, ordering them all whenever it’s mealtime…”

Emilia takes a sip and sighs as she looks at the doubles.

The people usually looking after these girls are the representative Ryuzu, and Garfiel, the other command right holder.

Garfiel especially is tending to the girls with exquisite care, ensuring that none of them starve to death or get stranded, grumbling about it all the way.

He’s had far more experience with them for he’s been interacting with them throughout his time in the Sanctuary.

Though that’s unlikely to console Emilia.

Subaru: “Well, just gotta take it easy. Garfiel’s doing some amazing stuff, but I think it’d be nice to have a more advanced solution.”

Emilia: “Advanced solution?”

Subaru: “I’ll tell you once Roswaal’s back. Until then, care to soothe my mind by freaking out some more in a herd of little girls?”

Emilia: “You are so mean!”

Emilia puffs out her cheeks in indignation, which is adorable.

Either way, his plans are still in the draft stage and thus unready for the public. He'll iron out more of the details before he reveals it and basks in the praise.

Subaru: "Anyway, how about we leave the Ryuzu double problem for a moment, and get back on topic?"

Ryuzu: "My answer's still the same. I'm not thinking ter do anything…much ter get them moving. I think they're trying ter keep from werrying me. They act like things're going reasonably well between them whenever I'm erround."

Emilia: "That is so saucy of them…"

Subaru: "Who says saucy anymore?"

Subaru averts his gaze to disregard Emilia's glare, and thinks about the wily siblings.

They are equally unwilling to make Ryuzu worry. And they've figured out how to compensate for it without actually discussing it with each other.

Though they know each other so well, they can't make that last step. The key reason for that has to be—

Subaru: "Yeah, it's because of their mother."

Ryuzu says nothing.

Emilia: "Their mother…you mean, the one who left them behind in the Sanctuary when they were little?"

Subaru: "I've only heard the second-hand story, and I haven't asked about what she was like. Actually no, Frederica told me she was extremely unlucky, but that's about all. I mean I figure it's a given, but you did know her, right, Miss Ryuzu?"

Ryuzu puts her teacup to her lip, letting the time drag on and on. But this is not enough to escape Subaru and Emilia's focused gazes.

She gives a long sigh, and without looking at the couple,

Ryuzu: “Their mother, Leashia Tinzel, isn’t a topic I perticulerly wanner talk abert.”

Subaru: “So she’s someone you’d rather not remember?”

Ryuzu: “I didn’t dislike her ‘er nothing. Liked her a lot actually. She had that friendly kind erv charisma, and…her circumstances were the unfortunate thing, which yer can see since the misfortune didn’t kill her. Her household was ruined and she wers sold inter slavery, then bandits attacked and destroyed the traders. The bandits took her home as their spoils, got her pregnant…it’s essentially the picture erv misfortune.”

Subaru: “…”

Frederica has told him all this before, but it’s still a horrible story. Emilia has no words for how heartrending it is. Though that final part of the tale may have eclipsed her understanding.

Ryuzu: “But Leashia didn’t end in misfortune. The bandits took a liking ter her so she lived and raise her child. Until another band of bandits destroyed the ferrst one, and they entertained themselves with her again.”

Subaru: “Most people wouldn’t recover after all that.”

Ryuzu: “But she did. The bandit group collapsed, she met Lil’ Roz on her travels and gained his patronage, entrusted Frederica and Lil’ Gar ter him, then left the Sanctuary ter search fer Lil’ Gar’s dad.”

Subaru: “—She did? Garfiel said he thought his mother abandoned them.”

Ryuzu: “…Thert’s probably his weakness talking. Since there’s hope in being abandoned.”

Subaru’s breath catches at the seemingly inappropriate word: hope.

Where in this tale is there any hope? Before Subaru can figure it out, Emilia lowers her eyes.

Emilia: “She isn’t coming back because she abandoned us…means that their mother might still be alive, is that the hope?”

Ryuzu says nothing.

Emilia: “If she promised that she was leaving for a purpose, but still wasn’t coming back…it’s too frightening to think about.”

Ryuzu shakes her head, looking miserable.

Ryuzu has told them the real reason why their mother left Sanctuary. And why had Leashia’s promise never been kept? —The question lends itself to a horrible answer.

Garfiel has seen his mother’s passing.

And that fits everything perfectly.

Emilia: “I wonder if they know.”

Ryuzu: “Leashia left them after Frederica wers old enough ter be self-aware. I doubt she’s fergotten it. And Lil’ Gar…well, who knows.”

Emilia: “I think Garfiel remembers…no, remembered too. Otherwise he wouldn’t look so joyful when looking at Subaru.”

It’s possible that Emilia’s thinking of something different from Subaru, but he figures that the happening in Garfiel’s past—his farewell to his mother—has been resolved and reached conclusion. The problem is that Frederica and Garfiel have not secured that closure equally. Frederica might still feel something very deep-rooted about the whole issue.

It does seem like Frederica is the one avoiding Garfiel. That’s the impression Subaru gets when thinking back on their exchange.

Subaru: “Incidentally do you know anything about what happened to Miss Leashia after that, Miss Ryuzu?”

Ryuzu: “…I never asked abert it. And that ain’t a lie. Sermetimes you just don’t want ter know the truth, and so it goes for me.”

Ryuzu averts her gaze, ignoring the truth that she has likely already grasped. Subaru is not heartless enough to call it weakness.

A ripple crests through the dregs of tea in the teacup on the table.

He watches the wave melt into nothing, a gloomy silence upon the scene.

2

Subaru: “I’m feeling that if this goes on, everything’ll end as us prying further and further into their affairs like a couple of nosy rubberneckers, but how’re your feelings on this Emilia-tan?”

Emilia: “Uhrm…I-I’d sooo rather avoid doing that.”

Subaru and Emilia leave Ryuzu’s room and walk down the hall as they consider their accomplishments, terrified that they may fail to produce any decent results.

They would rather this not end as them uncovering gossip and indulging in rumors. Naturally, their top priority is to improve Frederica and Garfiel’s relationship, but it’s just life that problems spring up when you’re dealing with problems.

Emilia: “But since neither talking to Ram or Miss Ryuzu went anywhere…maybe we’re out of options? Since Roswaal isn’t back yet either.”

Subaru: “If we’re assuming that we shouldn’t rely on the passive approach of ‘it’ll resolve itself over time’, then we can say that yeah the issue is probably family. But where their mom is…or rather, whatever happened to her after their goodbye, isn’t the issue. It’s their mental states back then compared to now, and the stances they held when they parted ways.”

Emilia: “Wouldn’t it be easier to just lock them in a room together?”

Subaru: “Here I am in shock at Emilia-tan’s unexpectedly barbaric plans.”

Subaru looks startled, but Emilia looks serious as she puts her finger to her lip.

Emilia: “I mean, right?”

Emilia: “I think what they need isn’t really time, but a reason to start talking. They’ve considered so many things over these ten years…so if they get the time to talk about it, I’m sure they’ll manage something.”

Subaru: “Hrnhmhm, but that feels passive too. It’s not really any different from the majority opinion of ‘it’ll resolve itself over time’. When people say ‘it’ll resolve itself over time’, they mean that the conversation you’re talking about will naturally occur during that period.”

Emilia: “So why don’t we make that conversation happen for them, unnaturally? I know my idea was pretty extreme…but I think it’s basically what Ram and Miss Ryuzu are saying. That we just have to leave it to them while they’re alone together.”

Emilia lifts her finger from her lip and gives it a wag. Subaru listens to her with his arms crossed and brows crinkled in deliberation.

Is that really all they need to do?

Subaru does understand what she’s saying. In fact it makes perfect sense. He’s just troubling himself over simple anxieties.

But is it really safe for their involvement to be so shallow? They don’t have to pre-arrange things in more detail for this to work out? Nothing will hit any kinks, and needlessly escalate in complexity?

Emilia: “Subaru.”

Subaru: “Nuh.”

When Emilia pokes Subaru in the forehead.

She looks up at him, brought back to reality.

Emilia: “I know you’re a worrier, and work so hard for everybody’s sake…”

Subaru: “You’re going to make me blush, saying that…”

Emilia: “But I worry as much about you as you do for us. You need to know that you don’t have take everything upon yourself like this. They’ll be fine.”

Subaru: “…I suppose.”

With everything dismissed by the word ‘worrier’, Subaru feels the weight fall from his chest.

The burden in his heart was that kind of intangible boulder—which he had gone shouldering upon himself.

Emilia: “It’d make me happy if you trusted me, and went along with my ideas too sometimes.” Subaru’s shoulders untense as he sighs.

Perhaps it’s not the conclusion he was after, but it seems like events are going to wind up according with the general consensus of opinion.

Subaru: “Okay. Then we’ll figure something out and—”

???: “—Goodness, if it isn’t Mr. Natsuki and Lady Emilia. What are you doing here?”

And just when he tries to adopt Emilia’s plan, someone intrudes.

A grey-haired young man carrying a massive stack of papers shows up before the two. Recognizing him, Subaru puts his hand to his chin in thought.

Actually, of all the important people in the mansion, there is only one they haven’t spoken to due to reasons other than absence.

With that thought, Subaru considers how useful this man will be for tackling the problem, and nods.

Subaru: “Okay. Then we’ll figure something out and make that happen.”

Man: “Do you mind me asking why it feels as though I don’t exist in this conversation?!"

The shout from the familiar voice echoes loudly through the Milord Mansion.

Chapter 4:
Birth of the Emilia Camp's Internal Affairs Minister

1

While working away at the massive mountain of paperwork, Otto listens to Subaru and Emilia who sit on the reception sofa.

He withdraws the needed documents from the pile, his quill pen occasionally darting over them. He scribbles formulas on a sheet of paper, does some kind of calculation before jotting them onto the paperwork, and references nearby documents while stamping the first with a seal.

With how smoothly his work progresses and how frantically his eyes move it's questionable whether he's paying attention to Subaru, but his occasional interjections suggest he isn't just ignoring them.

Emilia looks impressed as she watches Otto work, Subaru sitting beside her as he explains what they've been doing. He finishes his speech at nearly the exact same moment that Otto raps his pen into its holder.

Otto: "So you're looking to improve sibling relations, are you? … Then if you'd like to consult me, I could tell you—"

Subaru: "Where's this going?"

Otto: "You're seeking pertinent advice from someone with siblings, correct? Then I believe that instead of consulting this quagmire of only children, you'd be better off consulting me, what with my elder and younger brother, indeed."

Subaru finds himself overwhelmed by Otto's abounding confidence.

Subaru has never asked about Otto's family make-up, but apparently he's the middle brother in a series of three. So yes, Subaru and Emilia are indeed craving his advice. However, Subaru: “But weren’t you chased out of your house for being a bad son? It’d be one thing if you had good family relations, but advice from the black sheep isn’t exactly helpful.”

Otto: “Who are you implying was so poor a son that their parents disowned them?! I’ve never spoken even a single word of the like! My elder brother inherited the house, so I as the second eldest left to go trading of my own will! Perhaps it’s unexpected, but I do believe myself cleverer than my brothers, you see.”

Subaru: “What if you’re the only one thinking that and your family’s relieved the parasite’s gone?”

Otto: “Does it somehow displease you for me to be here?!”

Otto pounds his hands on the desk, his face red. Subaru shakes his head with an, “Of course not.” Merely the thought of Otto being absent is terrifying. It’s just that Subaru found himself insulting him before he could thank him.

Which is another one of Otto Suwen’s characteristic virtues.

Emilia: “But for some reason you feel really undependable, Otto. I wonder why that is? …Even though you did so much to help.”

Otto: “E-Lady Emilia too…”

Subaru’s thoughts express themselves vicariously through Emilia as she puts her hand on her chin, in thought. Apparently she is also a victim of Otto’s virtues.

This man’s aura of dependability correlates negatively with his actual capacities.

Subaru: “Look at how you’re tormenting Emilia-tan, you sinful bastard.”

Otto: “Utterly unjustified! What did I even do!”

Emilia: “So anyway, Otto. I’d really appreciate it if you could tell us what we should do about them.”

Otto: “And right into the topic! Now aren’t you two truly just master and servant!”

Otto spends a moment overreacting, before seeming to realise that his hysterics are utterly pointless.

The back of his chair squeaks as he puts his hand to his grey hair.

Otto: “Well, I believe the important thing to start with is their mutual feelings. From what I’ve seen, Garfiel doesn’t look to be the problem. His stubbornness is akin to a child’s, and I imagine that he’d like to reconcile as he loves his family.”

Emilia: “Mm, I think so too. Garfiel wants to make up. But Frederica’s having trouble approaching him.”

Otto: “Miss Frederica must be in a somewhat difficult position. She is the elder sibling, so as the superior she needs to let Garfiel have his way if they’re to reconcile. But from what I’ve heard, it doesn’t seem that Miss Frederica has erred. She may simply be exhibiting her sisterly generosity. If we consider her capacity to tolerate the younger’s tantrums as the crux of this affair…what’s the matter?”

Subaru stares at Otto as he neatly arranges his argument, and shakes his head when Otto complains.

Subaru: “No, you hit me with a way more serious opinion than I expected, and I’m stuck on where to throw in jokes…”

Otto: “It’s a serious matter that deserves serious consideration for a serious conclusion!”

Subaru: “Please forgive me. I’m too incompetent to play off your convoluted lead-up…”

Otto: “Are you trying to resolve problems or to encourage them?!”

Of course Subaru wants to resolve them, but it hurts to defy his primordial desires.

Otto and Subaru’s conversation aside, Emilia nods admiringly in reply to Otto.

Emilia: “Then…”

Emilia: “We have to address Frederica’s feelings first.”

Otto: “I believe so, yes. It doesn’t seem that Miss Frederica will exacerbate the situation by deeming Garfiel unpardonable. And honestly, I doubt anything so finnicky will be necessary for this. It’s one of those problems that time can res—”

Subaru: “We don’t want time to resolve it and that’s why we’re trying to hurry it along. Did you even listen to me all the way to the end? I swear.”

Otto: “I shouldn’t have to be hearing this!”

Sensing that Otto is reaching the exact same conclusion as everyone else, Subaru snorts somewhat mockingly. Otto is indignant, and Subaru harries him further with,

Subaru: “So where would you show off that older sibling magnanimity, if it were you? You mentioned a younger brother, so surely you’ve had a fight where you showcased your broad-mindedness. That’s the tale I wanna see, hear, sing.”

Otto: “If you’ll pardon me on the seeing and singing, yes, a tale. Honestly, my family was rather harmonious. My siblings were good people, my parents were kind, and…hold on, have we ever actually fought bef…”

Subaru: “Useless!!”

Otto: “Wh-Why on earth are you saying that! What is so wrong about a peaceful family! Are you suggesting that relationships are illegitimate if they never once involve fights? That’s ridiculous! What is there to complain about peaceful relationships with no great flaws!”

Subaru: “Well it’s the worst card you could’ve played in this situation!”

Just when it seems like Otto’s going to come up with something poignant and useful, he plays a zero.

Seeing that Otto can counterbalance even Subaru's ridiculousness, he probably never got so enraged that he started slinging curses and insults around pertaining to issues of family.

Or perhaps everyone in the Suwen family shares the same bullyable temperament as Otto. A home where life was peaceful, but only because no tormentors were around in the empty Eden.

Subaru: "This poor, sheltered young lad…"

Otto: "It feels like you are insulting me immensely but perhaps that's just my imagination!"

Emilia: "…Huhuhu."

Otto yells at Subaru, who lets his imagination spread its wings. When Emilia, watching the exchange, puts her hand to her mouth as she fails to suppress a smile. The two men fix their gaze on Emilia. She shakes her head.

Emilia: "No, I'm sorry. It's just that you look like you're getting along sooo well…kind of like brothers."

Otto: "I'm rather sure that my brothers were kinder to me than this…"

Subaru: "Don't say that, big bro. We always treated you like this, brother, you just didn't realize. Face the reality, my brother."

Otto: "Oh shut up!"

Otto has already exhausted the words and willpower needed to reply. Subaru pouts at him as he incessantly continues, "Brother mine, dear brother, broham, broski, bub-bub, broseph, Esteemed Brother My Elder," and so on. Emilia gives a clap of her hands.

Emilia: "Ah. What do you two always do when you reconcile? I think Otto always concedes, but figuring this out might bring us closer to the answer."

Subaru: "It's amazing how naturally that turned into Otto always conceding."

Emilia: “What if you try letting him win, Subaru?”

Subaru: “I…even supposing I yield to everyone else in the world… am absolutely never, ever yielding to Otto…!”

Otto: “Oh shut up!”

Barks Otto at Subaru’s atrocious little drama, rubbing at his temples as he thinks. It seems like he is seriously considering Emilia’s idea.

Otto: “Eerhm, what do I do when I argue with Mr. Natsuki, hrm…”

Subaru: “Give up usually!”

Otto: “The answer didn’t even bear thinking and now even I’m wondering what I’m doing!”

Otto cradles his head atop the desk as Emilia stands up and pats him consolingly. While jealous about Emilia’s kindness, Subaru judges that he won’t be able to get it himself in this scene and bats at his lap before standing up.

Subaru: “Well, that did help. We’ll try Frederica first, and depending how that goes we’ll judge how we’ll enact Emilia’s plan.”

Otto: “You realize that this is merely you fussing, and you may be breaking your back for no reason?”

Subaru: “I still think it’s a lot better than actually breaking your back. You disagree?”

Otto: “—Haah…”

Otto gives a resigned sigh.

The way his mouth relaxes into a smile is essential his answer to the question.

Emilia must also perceive the same thing as Subaru in Otto’s expression. She stretches easily on the spot, and gives Otto a smile.

Emilia: “Well, Subaru and I’ll be going now. I’m sorry we interrupted you when you were so busy.”

Otto: “No no no, I’m the one who invited you. Also I am surrounded by suffocating mountains of paperwork. The occasional breather helps to make it easi…”

Otto’s expression snaps into awareness.

Otto: “Hold on, why am I working so frantically on Margrave Mathers’s feudal paperworks? At some point I get asked to assist with some municipal tasks, and then am permitted to inspect even the territory’s administrative logs…I’m sure I was only trying to secure a quote for the prices of that oil…”

Subaru: “Oops, Emilia-tan. We stay any longer and we’ll be impeding Otto’s work. Let us vacate the room while happily holding hands!”

Emilia: “Huh? Oh, erm, yes let’s.”

Otto puts hit hand to his forehead, beginning to feel bewildered about his current circumstances when Subaru and Emilia abandon him. Subaru takes advantage of the moment to grab Emilia’s hand and exits OTTO’S OFFICE. And just when Subaru attempts to flee the room, his hand on the door,

Otto: “Oh, Mr. Natsuki—”

Subaru: “Hm? What. Just relax. You’re not sitting there because of any mistake or hypnotism or powerful suggestion. You have merely been beguiled by circumstances, conversational finesse, and…”

Subaru’s sentence cuts off halfway.

He cannot keep joking for he senses something grave in Otto’s gaze as he looks at Subaru. As though he is trying to talk about something important.

Subaru shuts his mouth, and Emilia tilts her head. Otto looks at the two while a mere microsecond of hesitation flashes through him.

But it all disperses when Emilia glances back.

Otto: “—No, nevermind.”

Subaru: “Come on, I’m curious now. If you’re gonna say something then say it.”

Otto: “I would like to say it, but…well, we’ll say that presently it would be like trying to hold a cloud. We’ll discuss it once things begin to look more hopeful. Since I cannot tell yet whether it would help you or just bring you unease.”

Otto scratches his head as he explains his hesitation.

Subaru tries to make Otto change his mind by silently staring at him, but he just seats himself and retrieves his quill.

Otto: “I’ll be returning to my work, so I leave Garfiel’s case to you. When the military cabinets are not functioning properly, the civil cabinets in the back are too anxious to work.”

Subaru: “—Got it. But when you can say whatever that was, do, Minister of Internal Affairs.”

Otto: “Why of course I w…civil, cabinet? Minister of Internal Affairs?”

Subaru: “Let’s go, Emilia-tan. We’ll just be bothering him if we stay any longer!”

Leaving Otto behind as he begins troubling over the change in his position yet again, Subaru hurriedly pulls Emilia along by the hand and leaves the room.

Emilia’s eyes dart about in confusion, and she glances back at Otto the moment before the door closes.

Emilia: “Ah, um, erm, Otto, good luck with your work!”

Unclear whether she’s worried for him or giving him a boot in the ass, Emilia calls out to Otto as she leaves the room.

2

Having left Otto's Office, Subaru and Emilia's course of action grows more definite. Or really they already had a defined course when the foreign element called 'Otto's opinions' butted in, and now they're moving ahead with a plan just as definite as before.

Subaru: "Thinking about it, that was a complete waste of time…"

Emilia: "Don't say that. Otto's story was, erm, well, it was…mhm, ah, erm, yes…it helped?"

Subaru: "Your unmaskable honesty shows in that question mark and it's adorable."

Emilia fails in her desperate attempts to back up Otto as Subaru praises her and focuses on searching for Frederica.

Anyway, the problem with the siblings is the sister. Garfiel's already made up his mind. Now is just to give Frederica impetus to make up hers, then—

???: "My, if it isn't Emily and Subaru. May I ask what you are doing?"

Subaru: "Ueg."

Emilia: "Ah."

A voice calls from behind them. Subaru's breath hitches awkwardly to a stop, and Emilia plainly shows her surprises as she glances back.

Their gazes land on a girl in a dress with her navy hair in a braid.

She is less than ten years old, even younger than Petra or Beatrice. She's identical to Beatrice in that she wears an extravagant dress, but hers is decorated more simply than the pigtailed girl. Unfitting to her youth, her eyes are stern and her face is dignified.

This girl's name is Anne-Rose Milord.

She is scion of the Milord family which is looking after Subaru's group, currently acting as lord of the manor in the true lord's absence, and the one receiving Subaru and the others.

While Clind and the other excellent members of this household attend to arrangements and the like, Anne-Rose is the one giving the orders, and she is suitably bold in her bearing.

A statesman's condescending mien—in the form of a child.

This is the Milord family of sorcerers, split from the main household of the Mathers family what belongs to Roswaal. Anne-Rose already has all the backbone needed to inherit this house.

Lovable childishness—is something she lacks, which is seemingly why Subaru has trouble with her. It feels like, when he's facing her as another individual human being, he is being far eclipsed in refinement by a girl about ten years his junior.

But regardless of all that, Emilia's reaction is very clear.

Emilia: "Augh, Anne. How many times do I have to tell you that I'm not Emily, I'm Emilia."

Anne: "Why do forgive me, Emily. Though you are at fault here for hesitating in your speech when you first introduced yourself. I find Emily an easier and cuter name than Emilia."

Emilia: "Really? I mean, I don't really mind it either, but…I guess there's no choice." And with that, Emilia permits Anne-Rose to use this nickname.

Emilia has got along strangely well with Anne-Rose since they met. Ask why, and they weirdly seem to just suit each other.

Anne-Rose's sentiments seem similar to Emilia's, as she displays not the slightest negativity even around the half-elf. She could be counterbalancing it with her mental capacities, but that in itself presents a problem when considering Emilia's age.

Anne: "Now what is it you're doing with Subaru, Emily? Having a tryst?"

Subaru: "Ah, does it look like one? Does it? Well oh dear, we've gotten so close that it looks like a tryst. You're allowed to blush when the shyness takes you, Emilia-tan."

Emilia: "No, that's not what we're doing at all. All we're doing together is some nefarious plotting."

Subaru: "You know exactly how I feel and you just cast it aside, geez!"

Anne-Rose looks extremely interested as she asks her question, and Emilia easily shakes her head in reply. It appears that Anne-Rose hadn't been expecting especially anything, for she looks condescendingly at Subaru with an, "I see," and breathes a sigh.

Her eyes are definitely mocking Subaru's ineffectiveness. But Subaru can't see himself as being at fault. He has constantly been flirting at Emilia, and she's just gotten better at ignoring it.

Anne: "I shall inquire into your nefarious schemes later, for have you seen Clind anywhere? I need him and he is utterly missing."

Emilia: "Mr. Clind was watching over Petra and Beatrice just a moment ago." Anne: "…Phrasing truly is the crux of matters, Emily." Anne-Rose grimaces, seeming to infer everything from that statement alone.

She's known Clind for a long time, so she must know full well his disposition. After all, his tenacious LOLI SOUL is usually fixed entirely on his master, Anne-Rose. There's no need to inquire about his resilience or keenness or hopelessness.

Emilia: "He said he bought sweets for them, so they should eat. I wonder if he bought any for me. It's kind of sooo bugging me."

Anne: "…I doubt that Clind would be so impolite, so surely there are some for you. He already visited myself and presented me with tea as well."

Emilia: "Ah, did he? I'm so excited."

Emilia clasps her hands together in joy while Anne-Rose pleasantly watches.

They are in the complete opposite positions to their heights and ages. It is a heartwarming scene, but Subaru has to tilt his head.

When Anne-Rose notices him doing this, and narrows her blue eyes.

Anne: “You seem to have time available, so I’m sure you wouldn’t mind. Would you care to accompany me for a request of mine?”

Subaru: “Hey now. We might look like we have free time, but we actually don’t. What’s actually happening with this apparent free time is that we’re using this period to substantiate a definite course into doing something productive for abating future troubles which…”

Emilia: “What’s your request? I don’t mind so long as it’s something I can help with.”

While Subaru starts spinning the long-winded excuses, Emilia thoughtlessly accepts. Anne-Rose gives Emilia a smile, looking at the pair with eyes so mature they could not conceivably be a nine-year-old’s.

Anne: “There is a man of whom I would like to shock, and a maid of whom I have long known who I would like to conciliate.”

Chapter 5:
Annerose's Trap & Brother-Sister Relations

1

Why are they readily going along with the nefarious plots of a nine-year-old?

Subaru watches the back of the small girl leading them down the hallway, annoyed at his own failure to prevent this.

—Anne-Rose Milord.

Being from a branch of the Mathers household that Roswaal heads, she shares many distinct characteristics with him. Such as her notably navy hair and blue eyes.

Her hair is in a crown braid, but since Subaru doesn't know what the hairstyle is called, he mentally refers to her as Braid Loli.

She possesses a keen intelligence unfitting for a nine year old. Her cleverness and wits do make her seem a relative of Roswaal's, but the thing most reminiscent of Roswaal shows through:

Anne: "Emily, would you care to hold my hand?"

Emilia: "Huh? Oh, sure, Anne."

Anne: "So I oblige. Also, Emily. Would you care to let me hug you?"

Emilia: "Huh? Oh, sure, Anne."

Anne: "So I oblige. Also, Emily. Would you care to carry me in your ar—"

Subaru: "Enough."

Subaru gets Anne-Rose, seeking hand-holding and hugs and upsy-daisies, away from Emilia. Emilia's eyes widen. Anne-Rose brushes off her lap, undeterred, before exaggeratedly patting at her shoulders where Subaru touched her.

Anne: “How brutishly you separate people who desire to touch one another, Subaru.”

Subaru: “Where’d you get those statistics? Questionnaire looked to be about walking the Milord estate alone to me.”

Anne: “Your limited your stature must be, Subaru, if you are unable to overlook a child’s endearing mischievousness.”

Subaru: “Except I would’ve kept my mouth shut if it was just childish mischief!”

Anne-Rose cooly attempts to justify her actions. Despite her words, she is still trying to grasp Emilia’s hand whenever the opportunity appears, so Subaru can’t get careless.

Anne-Rose is a blood relative of Roswaal’s, a prodigy beyond her nine years.

And her idiosyncrasy is—for some reason, she likes Emilia way too much.

Ever since the day that the group came to stay in this mansion and they introduced themselves, Anne-Rose has shown inordinate fondness for Emilia. Emilia is a gullible airhead so she may view it as a cute show of affection, but Subaru views it otherwise.

After all, she’s related to Roswaal. While his Demi-human Fancy has been overthrown by his actual Echidna Fancy, it may not be the same for his relative.

Many of the servants in the Milord household are demi-humans. Ones that Roswaal assembled from all over his lands who have apparently suffered persecution, and are effectively taking asylum in the Milord residence by Roswaal’s will.

Considering that Anne-Rose was born and raised in this environment, demi-humans are a familiar presence for her. So, while she isn’t prejudiced against Emilia the half-elf, her friendliness is excessive.

Put simply, Subaru is trying to keep Anne-Rose from stealing Emilia. And Anne-Rose is trying to keep Subaru from monopolizing Emilia. Making them rivals for Emilia's affections. Although,

Emilia: "Come on, Subaru. I don't know what's rankling you, but you can't be mad at Anne like this when she's still so little. You're being immature."

Subaru: "Who says rankling anymore? …No I mean, nevermind that, look Emilia-tan. Plainly said, Anne-Rose's gaze isn't the kind you can dismiss as her still being young and…"

Emilia: "No excuses! I'm so sorry, Anne. I think Subaru's still flustered from being in someone else's mansion."

Subaru: "…and it still applies even when you act like I can't settle into unfamiliar beds!"

Subaru and Emilia have disparate stances toward Anne-Rose, so whenever the topic gets onto how they feel about her, it turns into one of these fruitless arguments. Why can't Emilia notice how cloying Anne-Rose's gaze is?

Subaru: "I bet that it's one of those things where only people aiming for Emilia-tan's affections can notice when others are doing the same yes that's definitely it!"

Anne: "Emily. Subaru has just confessed that he lusts for you. How indecent."

Subaru: "Your word choice's the indecent thing here! How are you only nine?!"

While Beatrice is only superficially offensive, Anne-Rose actually is offensive. Subaru could dismiss that 'indecent' as a simple riposte, supposing it came from Beatrice's mouth, but somehow it feels like a real insult when Anne-Rose says it.

Emilia: "How come you two can't get along? It's sooo baffling…"

Subaru: "It's because we both l…"

Emilia: “You both?”

Subaru: “—Mhn, nh.”

Emilia tilts her head. Subaru cannot get the rest of the sentence out.

He’s stated his fondness for her countless times, but voicing it around other people makes it feel cheap. Also he’s saying it unintentionally while running off momentum, which makes it both cheap and embarrassing.

In the corner of his eye, Anne-Rose smiles victoriously.

Anne: “Now then, I will refrain from teasing Subaru further. For let us speak inside my room, which we have reached.”

Says Anne-Rose to pure Emilia and red-faced Subaru.

Abruptly, Subaru realizes that they have walked down the whole of the hallway, and indeed stand before an overly ornate door. It’s Anne-Rose’s room. Apparently Emilia has been invited here many times before, but this is Subaru’s first venture here.

Anne-Rose takes Emilia’s hand and easily moves to welcome her into the room. But Subaru intervenes and pulls the breaks on that.

Subaru: “Wait. ‘Anne-Rose’s room’ is such a fishy series of words so I’m going in first.”

Anne: “—Huu. Very well, proceed. You are free to do what you wish.”

While she does seem bothered at first, Anne-Rose concedes to Subaru with a sigh. Subaru puts his hand to the doorknob and, slightly tense, enters the room. Where,

Clind: “I have been awaiting your presence, Master Natsuki. Tea and biscuits have been prepared. Please do find yourself a seat and relax. Powwow.”

Clind welcomes him with a formal bow.

Stunned speechless, Subaru glances back, to see that Anne-Rose looks utterly unfazed.

Emilia: “Huh, Mr. Clind? But I thought you left to go eat with Beatrice and Petra?”

Clind: “So I did, Lady Emilia. However, it appeared that the Mistress found it in her mind to hold a tea party in her room, and thusly, I attended to those preparations. Urgency.”

Emilia: “You’re right, Anne did say something like that.”

Clind: “Indeed, the Mistress so thought of me. Perceptiveness.”

Emilia peeks her head out from beside the frozen Subaru as she speaks with Clind. But it seems their conversation doesn’t quite mesh.

It’s almost like Clind said ‘thought of me’ instead of ‘asked of me’.

Anne: “It shall drive you to lunacy, should you attempt to rationally comprehend Clind’s peculiarities. It is best for the mind that you simply accept it.”

Clind: “I am always vigilant to remain one step ahead of my summons. Objective.” How the hell does vigilance achieve that.

…Is what Subaru’s thinking, but Anne-Rose and Emilia seem unbothered as they start taking their seats. While mentally tilting his head, Subaru joins the tea party too.

Anne: “Seeing that Clind has prepared the tea, we may proceed with our conversation.”

Clind: “The one regarding the bettering of Frederica and Sir Garfiel’s relationship. Conciliation.”

Subaru: “Mr. Clind, are you one of those butlers where there’s actually several of you?”

Clind: “That position has already been filled by Lady Ryuzu. Rehash.”

Clind seems to think that his inclusion in the conversation will just stymie it. He readies tea and biscuits for everyone, before going to a corner of the room where he stands as still as a statue. His gaze locks onto Anne-Rose, but she ignores it, long used to it.

Anne: “Now, Clind’s assessment is correct, this regards our mutual interest in swiftly bettering Frederica and Garfiel’s relationship… would be a valid thought?”

Emilia: “Yes, that’s right. We’ve been racking our brains trying to do something, but we haven’t really come up with any wonderful ideas. It’s been a real kerfuffle.”

Anne: “You’re adorable when you’re stressed, Emily. —Then, now that you have ventured about the mansion to discuss the issue, and found yourselves at a standstill, you have come to me.”

Subaru: “Stop subliminally throwing your ulterior motives in there.”

Anne-Rose, nonchalant, looks utterly unaffected by Subaru’s jab.

Either way, she seems to understand Subaru and Emilia’s situation, which saves on the exposition.

Subaru: “But anyway, you’re looking to have them make up too? What’s the occasion? Everyone else just insisted to let time resolve it.”

Anne: “Perhaps because I am less inclined to resignation, and less accustomed to waiting? I must say that the people you spoke to are largely of that disposition.”

Subaru: “Frank, aren’t you. …No but, we also asked Otto.”

Anne: “Then I amend that to include those ignorant to success.”

Subaru: “Harsh!”

And how sad Otto is that Anne-Rose has managed to get this impression of him, when they’ve only known each other a week.

But it’s best that Subaru keep silent, considering that he can’t refute her.

Anne: “I cannot deny that time will resolve the issue. A divide of ten years separates them…given another decade, the issue shall resolve itself. But that is far too protracted. Why, ten years, that’s the same length of time since my Mother and Father last kissed!”

Subaru: “ggggggggn?”

Halfway through an unchildlike screed, she abruptly hits a childlike conclusion.

Subaru groans, unable to keep up with the sudden shift in gears, prompting Clind to put his finger to his mouth in request of silence.

Subaru doesn’t have a complete grasp of the situation, but perhaps her knowledge in those topics actually is that of a nine-year-old. Though he’d rather not probe into it, since Emilia is right here and also under the exact same misapprehension.

Anne: “Care to explain that bizarre groaning of yours, Subaru?”

Subaru: “It’s nothing. Just some phlegm and despondency stuck in my throat.”

Anne: “I see. What tribulations puberty brings. …Regardless, I have no intentions of making them wait for a decade.”

Emilia: “We’re thinking the same way. But, do you have any ideas, Anne?”

Anne: “What were your thoughts on the issue, Emily?”

It’s replying to a question with a question, but regardless Emilia furrows her pretty brows and puts her finger to her lips.

Emilia: “Ermm…”

Emilia: “I think they do want to make up. I feels like Garfiel’s trying to make time so they can talk, and though Frederica’s uncomfortable, I think she does want to talk.”

Anne: “I see, understood. And so?”

Emilia: “And so I’ve been wondering if it’d be easier to just lock them in a room together.”

Subaru: “Sure are going for the barbaric plans, huh, Emilia-tan?!”

While Subaru has no better ideas, it’s shocking to hear it coming from Emilia’s mouth. Also he does endorse the idea, but there are some questions to be had with it. Particularly,

Subaru: “I mean we could throw them in a room, but those two can bust out of basically any room when working together. I’d prefer we didn’t destroy half the mansion doing this. So instead of a busted mansion we have a week to get them hanging out together, what is this, a speedrun?”

Emilia: “Then what should we do, Subaru? Should I use ice to make a room that we can lock them in?”

Subaru: “I don’t think we need to use such extreme conditions to revive their family love, no! Just, look! Something like, have them go into a room while sharing the exact same goal!”

Emilia: “The same goal…?”

Emilia tilts her head, puzzled.

Subaru manages to get away from any criminal ideas, but his proposition doesn’t go any further than that.

He’s conceived of making them share a goal, but has no concrete idea of what it would be. Should they defeat some monster that they can only take on together?

Where exactly are they going to find such a convenient monster?

Anne: “In truth, my thoughts are identical to Subaru’s.”

Subaru: “Huh? You know where to hire Cyclopes and Chimeras?”

Anne: “Nevermind.”

Anne-Rose gazes scornfully at Subaru, who apologizes by poking out his tongue and donking his head.

The nine-year old sighs while Emilia's cheeks grow flush, eyes lit with expectation.

Anne: "We share the same thoughts, when it pertains to making them share a goal. But I expect that what we know about them differs, and so differs the ideas we conceive, Emily."

Emilia: "What we know about them?"

Anne: "For you have greater knowledge of Garfiel than Frederica. While I have known Frederica for surpassing eight years. That fanged face has been familiar to me ever since I've been aware."

Subaru more or less understands what Anne-Rose is trying to say.

Her relationship with Frederica means that she can supply the information needed to fill the gaping hole that Subaru couldn't address—that is, what common points could lead to a common goal between Frederica and Garfiel.

Subaru: "You're sure this'll work?"

Anne: "Provided that I may secure helpers, yes. Now, Frederica presents no issue, but Garfiel does."

Subaru: "Garfiel does?"

Anne: "Should Garfiel's personality be exactly what I have observed over this handful of days, then we should see no issues."

Subaru doesn't know how intensively Anne-Rose has paid attention to Garfiel's attitude, but as far as he can tell, Garfiel's been entirely himself during his stay here.

He isn't being pointlessly stubborn like he was in the Sanctuary, or trying to hide his fourteen-year-old immaturity. Subaru can assure that much.

Subaru: "Garfiel's being entirely genuine, so no issues there."

Anne: “Excellent. Next is the issue of helpers…perhaps we might enlist help from Miss Ryuzu, their family.”

Subaru: “From Miss Ryuzu?”

She’s who you’d name first if listing people most related to them.

But she didn’t seem entirely cooperative, and it’s unknown whether she’ll entertain this. Regardless, Anne-Rose seems to think otherwise, and gestures her butler over.

Anne: “Clind.”

Clind: “We may delay preparations for this evening’s dinner by two hours and use the kitchen. Proposal.”

Anne: “I see. Very well. Do inform whoever’s tending to dinner of that.”

Clind: “As you command, I swiftly shall. Haste.”

After that quick exchange, Clind silently exits the room. Subaru and Emilia watch on in surprise while Anne-Rose takes a sip of her tea, smiling.

Anne: “Now, let us see this issue quickly done away with. For others yet remain who must be tended to.”

She says, plunging Subaru and Emilia deeper into confusion.

2

The second that Garfiel enters the kitchen and spots that UNFAMILIAR STATURE, he sighs, recognizing that he’s been caught in a trap.

Garfiel: “…Fuckin’ everyone’s gettin’ so over fuckin’ involved.” Despite his cursing, a smile arises on his face.

Garfiel’s nose is custom-made. His sense of smell is so strong that it bares no comparison to the average man’s, and he caught the scent before he even entered the room.

That he nevertheless kept himself unaware is Garfiel's final speck of stubbornness, or perhaps his pride as a man.

???: "Garf?"

Garfiel scratches his head while the woman glances back, and calls to him in unfamiliar voice. Before Garfiel stands a woman with long, lustrous blonde hair. She is taller than him, and her build is assuredly robust. The horde of fangs decorating her mouth, combined with her powerful frame, makes her seem somewhat savage and violent.

Were it not for her gentle voice and the tender gleam in her eyes, people would constantly be getting the entirely wrong impression of her.

Frederica Baumann. Is how she's been introducing herself, or so Garfiel Tinzel hears. Tinzel is the name of their mother, and Baumann that of her father.

Garfiel doesn't know why Frederica insists on using her father's surname, and has opted not to think about it.

He doubts that those who devised this meeting took those complicated sentiments into account. Or perhaps Garfiel is just exaggerating the whole thing, and to outsiders it doesn't look like a big issue.

Garfiel: "Ain't often I see ya here, Sis."

Frederica: "And I could say the same. To think that you would find yourself here…dinner has not yet been prepared, you will find nothing here to pilfer."

Garfiel: "I ain't here fer food. Stop treatin' me like a damn kid."

Frederica: "But is it not childishness to balk when treated as a child? And I suspect that you are still young enough that you would desire such babying, Garf."

Garfiel: "Nah, 'm fourteen 'm over that hump. Who th'fuck's a baby here?!" Feeling pricked, Garfiel howls in rejection.

Frederica shakes her head at Garfiel's overreaction and returns her gaze to the front—to look into the kitchen.

Frederica: "I'm occupied with a task at the moment. Garf, I cannot devote all of my time to relaxation as you can."

Garfiel: "Ain't like I'm spendin' all my amazin' time playin' 'round either. And I ain't here t'kill time. …Think 'm here fer th'same reason 's you, Sis."

Frederica: "The same reason?"

Garfiel: "Looks like yer got asked by someone else tho."

By those words alone, Frederica seems to figure it out.

Frederica: "So that's it."

She mutters in comprehension.

Frederica: "I did think it peculiar. Out of nowhere, Lady Annerose began saying that she would die should she not have one of my meat pies."

Garfiel: "How th'hell did that manage t'trick you, Sis."

Frederica: "What did they say…no, what did Grandmother say that brought you here?"

Garfiel: "Sh'said if she ain't gettin' one'v my amazin' meat pies she's gonna go more senile."

Frederica: "I also must wonder how you managed to find credibility in that statement."

Garfiel shuts his mouth.

Hearing her say it does make him question it, but he had been sincerely worried so there's nothing to do.

Garfiel: "Well maybe y'just can't understand seein' as yer gave up on lookin' after her. Ain't weird t'all fer 'er t'show up askin' 'f dinner’s ready yet even after sh’just ate. ‘Course I’d fuckin’ worry.”

It’s actually a sad misunderstanding coming from the fact that, when the Ryuzu personality changes her rotation to the next one, the new Ryuzu doesn’t inherit memories so extensively as to discern whether dinner happened or not. But Garfiel will never notice that and neither will Frederica. The siblings’ concern for Ryuzu’s mental health compounds.

However, Garfiel’s statement pricks Frederica in a different manner than described. Because, although unintentionally, he struck on the issue of her decade-long absence.

Frederica: “…Indeed. I never returned to the Sanctuary even once over that decade. And you’re the one who protected the Sanctuary during that period. …I have no right to speak as if I know what happened there, or what has come of Grandmother.”

Garfiel: “No, I…that ain’t what I was meanin’ t’say with that. I w’s just…”

Frederica: “…”

Frederica glances back, forcing Garfiel to face her again.

Her face remains unfamiliar.

It’s been a decade. During all that time, Garfiel’s mental image of his sister remained constant from ten years ago.

Even though he’s had this reunion and spent some time with her, he is having trouble accepting it. And the situation’s the same for Frederica. She must be viewing him with trepidation, just as he views her.

But it bothers Garfiel. Why is her trepidation casting waves as intense as his own?

What was it that he made her feel?

Garfiel: “…Oh.”

With that gaze upon him, Garfiel breathes a sigh.

The answer thunks into his heart.

Got it.

Crap, he got it. He knows exactly what the emotion in Frederica's eyes mirrors.

It's the same look that Ryuzu would occasionally have, back in the Sanctuary. The same look that Garfiel would see on his own face, reflected upon the water.

Which means that it's melancholy. Combined with apology.

Garfiel: "'Course it'd be."

Garfiel had assumed that the events from ten years ago had been resolved.

Inside the tomb, he remembered the goodbye with his mother from when he was young. He now understood what his mother felt as she left them, and that resolved the issue for Garfiel. He assumed it had been equally resolved for Frederica.

But it's not.

What happened in the tomb only affected Garfiel.

Garfiel came to understand his feelings for his sister, and his mother's love. He never told or informed his sister of them, distant as she was.

And so Frederica gazes at Garfiel without any resolution to what happened a decade ago, unsure of what to say.

Even though she has matured, her gaze is identical to what it was ten years ago.

Garfiel: "Sister."1

Frederica: "—!"

Garfiel: "'M sorry I didn't say anything. But 's okay. 'M okay. I know what happened with mom, and with you."

Frederica: "Garf…"

Frederica's eyes grow teary and wet in the wake of the violent emotion.

What should he say? While frustrated at himself for his lack of eloquence, Garfiel searches for the words that will convey his feelings accurately.

He searches his head, and all the books he has ever read, for the words he must say.

Garfiel: "I get why you left Sanctuary, and why you never came back after that…ain't what I'cn actually say but, I am trying t'get it. So it's…well, y'know…"

Frederica: "You are…ready to forgive Mother?"

Garfiel: "—What's there t'forgive?"

Garfiel's mouth relaxes into a smile as he replies to Frederica with a shake of his head.

Exactly. What's there to forgive?

The love and hatred that Garfiel kept in his heart this whole time had been misaimed. He knew nothing of the truth, didn't even know his own feelings, lashing out in anger at the impenetrable darkness—all a tantrum and nothing more.

Now that he knows the truth, it's all insignificant.

There was nothing to forgive or resent.

Garfiel: "I know now that mom loved me…that she loved us."

Frederica: "…"

Garfiel: "So there ain't no point tryin't'keep me 'way from what happened. Ain’t got nothin’ t’do with my amazin’ self. So how ‘bout we get t’talkin’ ‘bout somethin’ a li’l less crap, Sis?”

Garfiel’s speech pattern returns to normal as he rubs his reddened nose.

Frederica give a long, deep sigh. She wipes the tears from her eyes.

Frederica: “Garf…you truly have grown.”

Garfiel: “Fuckin’ sarcasm! I ain’t grown a damn inch compar’d t’you! The hell happened t’yer! How’d you get so damn—ghhhah?!”

Frederica: “We may be family, but that is no excuse to say such things to women, Garf you idiot.”

Frederica grabs him by the leg and slams him to the ground, the back of his head banging against the floor.

Garfiel’s eyes spin as he stares up at the ceiling, Frederica standing in his view above him. Her face is back to a smile.

Frederica: “Come now, stand up.”

Garfiel: “Yer th’one who fuckin’ flipped me over.”

Garfiel takes her offered hand. Gets back to his feet.

He lightly brushes himself off and peers over at the counter that Frederica had been using.

Garfiel: “So? How far yer got with yer meat pie, Sis?”

Frederica: “I have gathered the ingredients and had just begun to chop them. Though, it impresses me that you remember how to make it, considering that you only ate it when you were young.”

Garfiel: “‘S ‘cause some persnicket left th’recipie behind so I could make it after she left. ‘Kay, my amazing self’ll knead the dough.”

Frederica: “Then I will do the chopping.”

Garfiel stands before the ingredients as he wraps a towel around his head, prepared. Frederica brings out the cooking utensils for him as he does so, smoothly passing them over to him.

The siblings begin working in conjunction, no decade-long divide in sight, as they easily attend to the familiar work together.

Chapter 6:
Just One More Left

1

Subaru: “But seriously I wonder if it’ll work out…”

Emilia: “Really? But I thought our plan was sooo good. I bet Anne and Miss Ryuzu’s acting totally fooled Garfiel and Frederica.”

Subaru: “You sure? …Honestly I found Miss Ryuzu’s hamminess and Anne-Rose’s last-second stage fright absolutely shocking.”

Anne: “Silence yourself, Subaru.”

The three of them sit at the dining table, waiting to see how their plan worked out, when Anne-Rose interjects on Subaru’s musings. Her cheeks burn bright red in embarrassment, which makes her look her age for once.

Anne-Rose’s plan to remedy their sibling relations was extremely simple.

The topic was Emilia’s proposal, combined with the part that Subaru couldn’t figure out—that is, how to throw Garfiel and Frederica in the same room while sharing the same goal. Anne-Rose utilized a memory shared between the two of them to easily overcome the issue.

These meat pies that Frederica occasionally cooked had been her specialty ever since her time in the Sanctuary. They couldn’t be certain that Garfiel also knew how to make them, but,

Anne: “Frederica often mentioned it. That her Grandmother taught her how to cook this, and how she remembers that her Mother cooked it for her. Naturally, Garfiel must have also been raised on this cooking, and I believed it highly likely that he inherited the recipe from Miss Ryuzu. From what I’ve seen, Garfiel is something of a nanna’s boy.”

Subaru: “I’ve got nothing against all that. My issue’s not with how you insightfully figured this out.”

Anne: “Hrmp.”

Anne-Rose puffs out her cheeks, but Subaru won’t let that erase her mistake.

They managed to successfully catch Frederica and give her an excuse to get her in the kitchen without any problems. The issue is how they dispelled Frederica’s suspicion and the motive they gave her.

Subaru: “It’s with this affliction where you die without pies. Apologize to the pie.”

Anne: “It was merely a slip of the tongue. There is nothing that necessitates me to apologize to…”

Emilia: “He’s right, I’m kinda unsure about that too. Okay, I’ll apologize with you.”

Anne: “I-I suppose I have no choice! When Emily says so I suppose I have no choice!”

Anne-Rose’s face flashes bright red as she readily agrees with Emilia.

Subaru averts his gaze from the charming yuri and looks at Ryuzu, who sits meekly at the table.

Subaru: “Miss Ryuzu, looks like you’re feeling some guilt that you snagged Garfiel in your trap so perfectly.”

Ryuzu: “Erv course not…nononono, wait! Explain that, that phrasing yer using to erksacerbate my guilt. Yer quit that, that stuff pains the heart.”

Subaru’s mean-spirited statement does bring back some of Ryuzu’s usual attitude. Then she notices that Subaru had said what he did to energize her, and, Ryuzu: “So late, after so merch has happened. I’m sterll not sure if I’m glad I did that. I do wernt them ter reconcile, erv course. But…”

Subaru: “You don’t have worry yourself over it. They would’ve wound up the same as ever saying we just left them to themselves. So the outcome stays the same. All we did is make said constant outcome happen a little earlier. …I think it’s best that things happen sooner when they can.”

Ryuzu: “Why’s that?”

Subaru: “Otherwise it’s a waste of time when you could be having fun. Humans are certain to die, so we better take action while we still have sand in our hourglass, right?”

Ryuzu: “…”

Ryuzu’s eyes widen, and she gives a powerless sigh.

Ryuzu: “Yer one erv those, errn’t yer, Lil’ Su. A guy who don’t second-guess his life principles fer a second.”

Subaru: “Nope, that’s not it. You barely get anyone who gets stuck second-guessing minuscule things the way I do. I just try not to ruminate over it by telling myself that it’s okay not to, and I’m hoping to stick to that precept.”

Ryuzu: “It’s okay, nert ter ruminate.”

Subaru: “Yeah. We have people we want reconciled, and the reconciliation makes everyone happy. So it’s fine not to ruminate, let’s get them reconciled. When there’s someone you wanna be with, save the worrying for later and go over to them with an ‘EMT!’. Is what I’ve been considering lately.”

Though of course, he can’t apply it to everything.

Subaru truly is a weak person who agonizes needlessly over trivial things. While having limited time and only a handful of available choices.

He would at least like remove his second-guessing about the choices he does make.

Ryuzu: “Yer right. When yer get old as me, yer’ve got so many things ter teach and ter learn it’s overwhelming. Doubt I wouldder thought anything like this if I stayed in the Sanctuary ter my end.”

Subaru: “You don’t usually get bored of being alive when you live life. But I expect everyone’s figured that one out without my input?”

Ryuzu: “Then I gerrss I better enjoy myself in my limited time, too. I’ll start by getting excited fer my cute grandchildren ter make up, and come looking fer me ter spoil ‘em.”

Subaru: “Honestly I can’t really imagine them just accepting anyone spoiling them.” Frederica is serious to a fault, and Garfiel is a contrarian.

Neither of them are going to nicely accept their grandma’s pampering. But since the two—no, the three—desire family love more than anything else, they all make for something quite charming.

???: “I apologize for intruding on the discussion. Rudeness.”

When the voice of a butler who silently appeared in this room whispers at Subaru’s ear.

Subaru’s eyes shoot open in surprise as Clind takes his place to stand beside Anne-Rose.

Anne: “What’s happened, Clind? I will tell you that I was enjoying a blissful moment with Emily just then.”

Clind: “It pains me to so interrupt you. Heartache. However, I am required to inform that Master Roswaal has made his return. Notice.”

Anne: “He has? Another return from him timed so perfectly as to be calculated…” Mutters Anne-Rose in dissatisfaction, her brows furrowed.

While Subaru weeps silently at how even Roswaal's relatives feel this way about his habits, Anne-Rose stands from her seat.

Anne: "It appears that my uncle has returned, so I shall be excusing myself to welcome him. Emily, Subaru, and Miss Ryuzu, I request you relax as you wait here for the siblings to return. …Particularly Emily and Subaru. You will be busy."

Emilia: "Erm? Okay, got it. I'll wait here."

Emilia gives an earnest nod, and Anne-Rose gazes at her with affection. Then she glances to Subaru, piercing him with her gaze and negative aura.

While Subaru frowns at the disparity in their treatment, Anne-Rose exits the room with Clind. Which is when Subaru notices the cups of tea assembled before himself, Emilia, and Ryuzu, and nearly squawks.

Subaru: "Did anyone see Mr. Clind set this tea?"

Emilia: "No, I didn't. Mr. Clind did excellent work as always."

Ryuzu: "Mhm, a real professional. This tea is cooled erkzacktly ter my taste."

Subaru: "I mean my tea's at the perfect temperature for me too but…how about you, Emilia-tan?"

Emilia: "I like it hot, so mine is sooo hot."

Subaru: "What the hell is Mr. Clind?"

Anne-Rose said to just accept it, but Subaru is having difficulty. Perhaps this is the fundamental difference between living in a parallel world, and being born and raised in one.

…Is what he figures as he glances at Emilia and Ryuzu, who also look to feel overwhelmed by Clind. What, so he's a deviation after all. When,

???: "Hell, so here's where all th'masterminds been fuckin' lurkin'."

A few minutes after Anne-Rose and Clind leave, a blond tiger-man opens the door and makes his entrance.

He looks to have noticed that Subaru and the others were obviously behind the trap, his expression extremely complex. Either way,

Subaru: "Looks like someone found out we're the villains."

Garfiel: "C'n tell yer that y'fuckin' got me good, I looked so frickin' lame."

Emilia: "How'd it go how'd it go? Did you talk?"

Garfiel clicks his fangs as he comes over, when Emilia excitedly accosts him. Ryuzu tucks her head in, awkward, while listening intently for Garfiel's next words. Garfiel looks at the two ladies, and sighs.

Garfiel: "Yeh, thank yer fer yer excessive unneeded meddlin'. Sis n' me…sure, we had our talk. Y'ain't gotta worry none."

Emilia: "Really? Then how come you didn't come here together, holding hands?"

Garfiel: "Y'think we're capable 'v that embarrassing crap! Maybe they made up, but that don't mean a bro n' a sis're gonna hold hands so easy. Don't even joke."

Emilia: "But I don't think it's embarrassing, I think it's wonderful."

Emilia looks not to be teasing, but to sincerely think this, quite unfortunately. Garfiel has nothing more to say to her as he instead look at the hesitant Ryuzu.

Garfiel: "Granny."

Ryuzu: "…What's it, Lil' Gar?"

Garfiel: "'M sorry for makin' you worry. 'M fine now, 'n Sis's fine too. Y'don't have't worry."

Garfiel rubs his nose as he talks, and Ryuzu falls into silence. Her mouth relaxes, and an aged smile unfitting to her youthful looks arises on her face.

Ryuzu: “I see. That ers a relief. Yer can’t put ter much stress on yer elders. Makes them meet their end quicker.”

Garfiel: “It ain’t a damn joke when you say it, granny, better watch out.” Ryuzu regains her casual demeanor. Garfiel snorts.

Garfiel: “Anyway, Captain. N’ also Lady Emilia, ‘m sorry fer makin’ yer do that.”

Subaru: “Don’t worry ‘bout it. Me and Emilia-tan were just killing time by improving the interpersonal relations in this mansion. Nothing that deserves an apology. Right?”

Emilia: “Subaru, you were only killing time? This was a serious issue for them, you have to take it more seriously. Hpmf!”

Subaru: “Whah?! My face-saving modesty backfired?!”

Emilia fails to notice Subaru’s roundabout consideration for Garfiel. Or so he thinks, when a smile etches itself onto Emilia’s face and,

Emilia: “Heehee, just kidding. I know what you’re doing. You’re not honest at all, Subaru.”

Subaru: “My god…EMK (Emilia-tan Maji Koakuma) strikes, and her mystique compounds…she must be trying to kill me…”2

Garfiel: “The fuck did yer just do t’my apology, oi.”

Says Garfiel, stunned. Subaru and Emilia share a glance, before facing him again and,

Both: “—We were happy to help.”

The two give their reply to his apology.

Garfiel frowns in dissatisfaction as Ryuzu shrugs in exasperation. Subaru shoots Emilia a thumbs up as she happily watches the two.

Subaru: “Also, Garfiel. What happened first with the reconciliation, but also with the supposed trigger for the whole thing, the meat pie. Honestly I was really looking forward to it.”

Garfiel: “Yer don’t make a pie that fuckin’ easy. Th’trick’s t’cook it in th’oven good n’ slow t’get that sumptuous taste. SUMPTUOUS ENOUGH TO PUT A BAUMBEM TO SLEEP ‘s a damn good saying here.”

Subaru: “The hell’s a Baumbem. Is it like a baumkuchen? But I’m pretty sure if you leave baumkuchen unattended for too long it goes bad before it gets sumptuous.”

According to Garfiel, it will take two hours before the pie is ready.

Which means it’ll coincide with normal dinnertime, and probably wind up as a dish there.

???: “—Which I must say soooooounds quite convenient.”

Having lost any way to distract himself from his hunger, Subaru redirects his attention to how to kill two hours of time—when a familiar voice speaks up.

The four glance over to the speaker, unanimously sour-faced.

???: “Myyyyyyy goodness. I leave the mansion to attend to business, and whaaaaaaaaaat an unwelcoming hello aaaaaaaaawaits me.”

Subaru: “Not that I’m not thankful for your work. But can you please just rationalize this as you reaping what you sow, this thing where we reflexively make this expression? Also me and them are still being nice. Look at Garfiel, he’s gonna burst a vein.”

A vein bulges on Garfiel’s forehead as his eyes begin going bloodshot.

This is the arrival of man whose refreshed expression remains stable even before Garfiel’s glare—easily deduced from his characteristic speech pattern, Roswaal L. Mathers.

Roswaal was the mastermind behind the events in the Sanctuary, and having confessed so, has suffered a drop in amicability from basically everyone. Garfiel's rage burns particularly hot, and it's impossible to predict when he'll explode.

Subaru also feels mixed emotions about Roswaal. And after hearing postface to Roswaal's confession, his uncertainty has only peaked.

Subaru knows that Roswaal is not responsible for everything that happened in the Sanctuary and the mansion.

For some reason, Roswaal has only revealed this information to Subaru. Subaru doesn't know why this is, but feels no urge to purposefully reveal the truth to everyone else.

The onus lies entirely on Roswaal—or at least, 90% of it does. The remaining 10% lies on some other party.

Subaru would rather not encourage any unneeded anxiety at the moment.

Emilia: "Subaru, are you okay? The face you're making is sooo weird."

Subaru: "Seriously? What's it look like?"

Emilia: "Umm well, it's like your eyes gweenked nastier, like this."

Subaru: "Seriously? My face looks that cute?"

Emilia: "But it's not cute!"

Emilia's fingers pull the corners of her eyes upwards as she mimics Subaru's expression. Even when she's trying to emulate something so awful, her cuteness overrides it. Such is her charm.

Emilia pouts while Garfiel angrily seats himself. Subaru watches Ryuzu prepare tea for Garfiel as he speaks to Roswaal, the only one left standing.

Subaru: "Anyway, welcome back. Did you finish what you went out to do?"

Roswaal: “Ahhaaaaaa, how keenly I dooooooo feel Subaru’s kindness. And yes, without issue. I visited several villages within my domain, and our new domicile.”

Subaru: “Nevermind the domicile, you went around the territory? For what?”

Roswaal: “Beeeeeeecause of the ruckus from the territory’s Lord’s mansion buuuuuuurning down. Should I fail to demonstrate my good health, some rapscallions may begin deeeeeeeevising plots. I make it a rule to attend thoroughly to my land’s peace aaaaaaaaand safety.”

Subaru: “Thoughts on the land’s Lord being the worst rapscallion devising the worst plots?”

Roswaal: “Hoooooow harsh. My citizens suffered no harm, and the villagers of Earlham are ignorant to the truth. Do you not think that this persistently thorny attitude of yours will hinder us iiiiiiiiiin the future?”

Subaru: “Ghnngh.”

Never misses a beat.

With that sharp jab of criticism, Roswaal regains his previous composure. If Subaru publicly reveals that Roswaal was the one behind this whole affair, then it only disadvantages them, both in regards to the Royal Selection and management of the territory. And so even the people of Earlham Village still believe that Roswaal is a good Lord.

Only Petra, who knows the truth, holds a different opinion. But she understands her current circumstances, and that the only thing to gain from revealing the truth is self-satisfaction. So it’s doubtful that she’ll do anything extreme. Cleverness does occasionally force people into making cruel decisions.

Subaru: “But that doesn’t make it fine for you utilize this. You forget that, and once Emilia-tan’s on the throne you’re getting the guillotine.”

Roswaal: “Terrifying. Hoooooooowever, even then I maaaaaaaay have a chance to fuuuuuuulfil my goal.”

Garfiel: “We ain’t fuckin’ talkin’ ‘bout yer meeting yer goddamn goals. Gonna make Ram cry ‘f yer keep comin’ up with more bullcrap ideas, y’piece of shit.”

Surprisingly, Garfiel cuts in to stop Roswaal’s provocations. Roswaal’s brows shoot up in surprise and he casually raises his hands.

Roswaal: “Goodness, aaaaaaaalright. I don’t paaaaaaaarticularly wish to fight with you all aaaaaaaaanyway. Why must this escalate into an argument, when I oooooonly came here to show my return? I must find this all raaaaaaaather unproductive.”

Emilia: “It’s because you’re saying things to make Subaru and Garfiel mad. And I can tell you’re doing it on purpose. Enough of that, stop provoking people. You’re not a child.”

Roswaal: “…”

Roswaal attempts to condescendingly resolve the issue, when Emilia presses down on him from further above, her hand to her hip. Roswaal’s eyes shoot open in surprise while Emilia continues.

Emilia: “You don’t have to be so anxious, we all remember what you did and what you promised. There’s no point in purposefully acting bad and worrying everyone. You are just so hopeless.”

Emilia sounds like she’s scolding a disobedient child.

But it seems impossible to dismiss her statements as incorrect or misplaced, and Roswaal remains silent without any rebuttals. In fact, the way he narrows his eyes and grimaces awkwardly makes it feel like Emilia hit the bullseye.

Though Subaru doesn’t actually believe that Roswaal is seriously operating off such childish sentiments.

Subaru: “That really did clear the air though. As we expect from Emilia-tan.”

Emilia: "…? Mm, thank you. Also, there had to more reasons for why you went around the domain than just that. What else did you do, Roswaal?"

Roswaal: "Ahahaaaaaaa, you've grown more perceptive. I patrolled the region for reasons as stated, to demonstrate my health, and…to prepare the residents of the Sanctuary for their migration."

Garfiel: "Th'preparations to move!"

Those words keep Garfiel from staying silent. Ryuzu hurriedly returns to his side as he slams his palms on the table.

Garfiel: "That means prepping where they're goin', yeh?"

Roswaal: "Assuredly. Their time as refugees means that Earlham Village is the best place to aaaaaaaccept them. But there's a limit to what the village can hold. Should their population double from its original number, they won't be able to sustain themselves. They could expand the village, of course, but that runs into the problem of the barrier."

Garfiel: "Barrier? Y'fucker, you fuckin' laid more'v those fuckin' things all over th'fuckin'—"

Subaru: "No hold up, Garfiel. We're not talking about a barrier like the Sanctuary's. There's a whole bunch of witchbeasts lurking in the mountains around there. So there's a barrier around the village to keep them away. That's the one Roswaal's talking about."

That barrier is what spurred the whole witchbeast debacle.

It's entirely infeasible to coexist with the witchbeasts, and being that the village needs this segregation, it's difficult to expand Earlham Village.

Roswaal: "Subaru explained it perfectly, theeeeeeere's the issue. Whiiiiiiiich means that the people of the Sanctuary must be distributed partly to Earlham Village, and then iiiiiiindividually to other contenders. Regardless of where welcomes them, they cannot stay together as people of the Sanctuary infinitely. I do feel the heart-wrenching sorrow, as I watch them leeeeeeeeave the nest."

Ryuzu: “Impudence and prattle…”

Ryuzu cannot hold in the insults as Roswaal feigns tears.

Roswaal crafts a smile and continues,

Roswaal: “Aaaaaaand so, I made a quiiiiiiiiick rounds of the territory. Though for interests of distance and time, Iiiiiiiiii merely visited the neeeeeeeearby locations. I sent messengers to the other townships, seeeeeeing as we have an abundance of issues that need resolution.”

Subaru: “Yeah seriously. You don’t get back to your office quick, and Otto’s gonna die from karoshi. It’s where you die crushed between the weight of responsibility and work.”

Roswaal: “What a novel way to die. Veeeeeeery intriguing.”

Subaru agrees, but doesn’t pursue the topic.

Roswaal’s back, so Ram should be more lively. …Is how far Subaru thinks before he tilts his head, feeling something awry.

Emilia: “Actually, Anne said she left to welcome you, but…she’s not with you?” It seems that Emilia hit upon the same question. Roswaal raises his finger.

Roswaal: “That’s because I had a reeeeeeeequest for her. I was thinking to address one of those issues requiring resolution.”

Emilia: “Issues requiring resolution?”

Roswaal: “The one in the banquet hall. I believe that you have already prepared yourself for it, Lady Emilia.”

Emilia: “—!”

Emilia’s shoulders jerk up in surprise.

But the shock only lasts an instant. Her expression immediately turns serious, and she glances at Subaru with strong volition in her amethyst eyes.

He savors the tingle down his spine as he tilts his head, questioning.

But nobody gives him a clear answer.

Emilia: “Okay. Is it starting right now?”

Roswaal: “We can start the instant that you are ready. And we still have time before the pie is done cooking. I would say that now is the perfect time for it.”

Emilia: “This is such an important thing, but doesn’t this all feel sooo sloppy?”

Roswaal: “It’s presently difficult for us to schedule any designated times. Considering that you’ll be occupied from tomorrow onwards, should we not take advantage of this opportunity?”

Emilia: “Yeah…okay. I’ll do it.”

Roswaal nods, entirely satisfied.

The two of them look to have reached an agreement, but Subaru has no idea what they’re discussing. Garfiel and Ryuzu must also be in the dark.

Subaru: “Hey, stop going off agreeing to things by yourselves. What are you talking about? You better not be trying to make Emilia-tan do anything funny again.”

Roswaal: “That would be a teeeeeeeeeerrible misunderstanding, Subaru. And do relax. This issue not only involves Lady Emilia, but very much yourself aaaaaaaaas well.”

Subaru: “What do you mean I’m also—”

Involved? Before he can finish his sentence, Roswaal draws his face near. Subaru unwittingly backs away, his back hitting the wall, and Roswaal’s finger landing on his nose.

Roswaal: “—We’re discussing the ceremony for your cherished knighthood.”

2

Subaru: “You know! Usually you don’t keep the details of an important event a secret from the people involved! Do people throw surprise weddings for the bride and groom? Are surprise funerals ever a thing? No they are not.”

Having been dragged into a room to get changed, Subaru complains while taking off his track suit.

The news from Roswaal in the dining room was an absolute shock to him.

—Knighthood.

The ceremony where the master acknowledges their subordinate as their Knight, and all others recognize their change in status.

It comes with extensive formalities and etiquette, which surely differ by the country and by worldview. Subaru has witnessed many such ceremonies in manga and anime, but it’s inconceivable that he’d remember what they had in common and what diverged.

And of course he can’t be expected to know the etiquette for a Lugnican accolade.

Subaru: “Expect they all went and fucking prepared everything like that’s the obvious thing to do. Maybe that damn Anne-Rose was jealous about how I’m all over Emilia-tan and’s trying to humiliate me!”

Otto: “I’d surely think not? While naturally the star of an accolade is the knight who receives it, their master is the one obligated to inform them. If Lady Annerose acted out of such pointless bullheadedness, it would humiliate not only yourself, but Lady Emilia. Do you believe that someone as clever as her would do that?”

Subaru glances over to Otto, who is assisting with his change of clothes. You may ask how do you possibly assist with a change in clothes, but these ceremonial outfits have various modes of dress. That Subaru doesn’t know.

Clind: “Master Natsuki. The correct way to wear this requires you to begin with this undervestment, and proceed with these lowers. Advice.”

Subaru: “Ah, thanks. Or no actually these clothes fit me so well it’s creepy, how long has this ceremony been planned exactly?”

Clind: “It was raised in discussion instantly following your arrival in our household. And once decisions were made to hold the ceremony after Master Roswaal’s return…I assure you that Lady Emilia has studied and rehearsed the ceremony thoroughly. Report.”

Subaru: “The report’s late! And why was Emilia-tan keeping it a secret too?!”

Otto: “Perhaps because it would be awkward? Anyway, you truly don’t know a single step of the process? That would present something of a problem…”

Subaru puts his arms through the sleeves of the clothes that Clind gives him, lost on what to do. Otto perceives Subaru’s genuine discomposure, and seems to start seeing the obstacles impeding this ceremony.

Subaru: “Right? It’s doomed. I’m glad Emilia-tan feels this way, and it’s crazy how honored I am to receive a knighthood, but we’re screwed if this ceremony fizzles out aren’t we? Yeah okay I better get on my hands and knees and beg for this to be postpo—”

???: “Y’step forward when yer called, and kneel before Lady Emilia. Then y’draw yer sword from its scabbard and pass it t’her. Lady Emilia takes the sword and puts it to yer neck, she speaks the oath…then you accept the oath in return. Thassall.”

Subaru: “…What, seriously?”

Mutters Subaru in shock.

Everyone in the room gazes at Garfiel, who crosses his arms.

Garfiel: “What. Y’don’t believe me?”

Subaru: “It’s not that, it’s that I’m shocked that you know this. How out of character is it for you to be versed in formal events like this…?”

Garfiel: “No, Captain. It ain’t that I know anythin’ ‘bout formal events.”

Garfiel waves his hand in astonishment, but that doesn’t eliminate the fact that he just outlined the formal process of an accolade. Subaru furrows his brows questioningly, and,

Garfiel: “‘S just that knighthoods ‘re awesome so I memorized it.”

Subaru: “Oh, okay. Got it.”

The reasoning is so convincing that Subaru instantly agrees with it.

His mighty chuuni mind offers assistance even here. Of course Garfiel would know about accolades! …Is the persuasiveness of this argument.

Otto: “Does that account align with your knowledge, Mr. Clind?”

Clind: “I am only scantly versed in the topic, but my knowledge does coincide with what I heard. I bow my head before Sir Garfiel’s mastery. Succinct.”

Otto: “But that makes it sound as though you also know the procedure…no, nevermind. Disregard that comment.”

Otto’s life is one of opening cans of worms to find demons inside.

Nobody who witnessed the mysterious gleam in Clind’s monocled eye would criticize Otto for his retreat.

Either way, Subaru smooths the wrinkles out of his clothes, puts on his jacket, and begins adorning it with the required ornamentations.

Subaru: “This outfit is crazy. It took me ages to get used to the butler uniform, but I don’t think I’ll ever own this look.”

Otto: “You won’t be granted enough opportunities to wear it that you could say that you ‘own’ it. It would be another case, were you entering nobility…though, I suppose it’s yet unclear what your future will bring.”

Subaru: “Meaning?”

Otto: “Lady Emilia is on the social ladder. Being that you are following her, I suspect you will attend more than a few events in this vein. This outfit was specifically tailored, after all.”

While feeling admiration for Otto’s piece, thoughts of the future depress Subaru.

He imagines these formal events, and his heart shivers, inept as it is at remaining stoic. Though these worries are only to be had if he safely gets through this upcoming ceremony.

Subaru: “Goddamn Roswaal, bet he hid it on purpose to make a laughingstock of me…”

Garfiel: “Sulkin’ ain’t gonna help yer none, Captain. Now repeat what my amazin’ self said t’make sure yer don’t forget it.”

Subaru: “I kneel, draw the sword from its scabbard, give it to her, and say the oath. I mean I’ve gone through two graduation ceremonies, I can at least memorize this much.”

Except he attended those ceremonies after properly practicing for them.

Subaru: “I know it’s way late in saying but if this’s an accolade then all the imperial knights must’ve done it.”

Otto: “Not only the imperial knights, but everyone who holds the title of Knight. Though I believe it’s rare to disregard all these requirements and pledge directly to a master. Usually you would swear fealty to the nation before selecting a master.”

Subaru: “So it’s the difference between serving the country and serving an individual. I think it’s right to be serving an individual.”

Either way. He can say ‘I am a Knight’, but it doesn’t feel true.

Subaru has proclaimed himself as Emilia's knight multiple times. Insisted it.

Even though he knows his false title is gaining legitimacy, he cannot exactly accept it. He also questions how exactly being recognized as a Knight will change him, too.

Subaru: "All this after you dressed me in these actual clothes. Seriously this fits me perfectly, when did you take my measurements?"

Clind: "Daily, interspersed between breaks in your awareness. I had already confirmed that it fit, but it elates me to see you dressing. Splendiferous."

Subaru: "I'm unsurprised about the measurements, but when did you check the fit? Have I somehow been dressed in this outfit before?"

Clind gives no reply as he smiles, and brings Subaru, who has finished dressing, over to a mirror.

As Subaru stands reflected in the full-length mirror, his breath catches.

He wears a black ceremonial outfit that clearly exceeds his standing, opulently but not outrageously decorated. No matter how Subaru poses, the captivating clothes make it look good. And when he holds himself soberly, indeed this is an outfit for formal ceremonies.

But, yeah, it definitely feels like Subaru is inferior to the clothes.

Something feels off, like he's attending Shichi-Go-San, or something.

Even so—

Otto: "Mm. It looks better on you than I expected."

Garfiel: "Does feel like th'clothes're wearin' you, but they ain't totally defeated ya. Y'c'n relax, Captain."

Clind: “Indeed, it suits you well. Lady Emilia’s impression of you shall surely climb to even greater heights. Amicability Rising.”

Subaru: “You sincerely think that? You all sincerely honestly think that?”

Subaru readjusts his collar times upon time as she glances suspiciously at Otto, who despite his frankness, failed to mock Subaru’s appearance.

But Otto’s expression remains perfectly stable, and he gazes at Subaru with pride. Not even Subaru can possibly reply to that.

Garfiel: “Here, take this, Captain.”

No amount of fiddling will invite any dramatic change.

Subaru sighs as he turns around, and Garfiel supportingly hands him his knightblade. Subaru reflexively accepts it, when the slender thing makes him swallow his breath.

Clind: “It would be best that you used your own favored blade, but being that you possessed none, our household provided this. You may keep it should you so fancy. Gift.”

Subaru: “A knight’s sword…huh. And it’s real, naturally?”

Otto: “I doubt you would ever find a wooden sword with such excellent craftsmanship. Only a child would would find joy in something like th—hm? Am I sensing a new business opportunity…?”

While witnessing the potential birth of wooden swords in parallel world souvenir shops, Subaru feels the weight of the sword in his hands.

This is not his first time holding a sword.

Last was during the witchbeast affair in Earlham Village, when he went into the mountains with Ram to search for Rem. He accepted a sword from the village’s men’s brigade, wielding the thing with barely any thought.

The sword broke before he could use it to fight any witchbeasts, so while it didn't manage to be anything decisive, it did provide Subaru with his first experience in stabbing a living creature with a blade, which he has never done since.

This knightblade should be thinner and lighter than that previous one.

But the weight he currently feels in his hands is beyond compare.

Subaru: "…"

He unconsciously clicks his throat, a constricting feeling in his chest.

The weight from that sword and this sword are entirely different.

And Subaru knows that the entire purpose of this ceremony is to recognize that fact.

Otto: "—Mr. Natsuki. I'll come and call you before it begins. I'll do the final inspection of your dress then, so please make sure to keep it orderly."

Subaru: "…Understood."

Otto must have seen the shift in Subaru's expression, and sensed how he was beginning to properly face the ceremony.

With those words, he and the others leave the room.

Subaru: "…"

Left by himself in the room, Subaru drags over a nearby chair and seats himself before the mirror.

With the sword in his hands and his visage in the mirror, he submerges himself in thought.

Knight. The weight of the title presses down on Subaru's shoulders.

Had Subaru ever seriously considered the significance of this word he so frivolously used? Naturally, he had been entirely serious back then. He would not use this as armor to conceal his rashness in proclaiming himself as Emilia's knight. However,

Subaru: "Julius, Reinhard."

Subaru thinks of the upper echelon of knights in this country.

One is the Knight Of Knights. One is the Knight Impeccable.

They are the pride of knighthood, and the emblem of anything knightly.

When Subaru called himself a knight, ignorant to those facts, Julius sternly beat the truth into him.

Subaru: "What a knight needs is power and fealty…I think was it."

If those are the requirements, then Subaru is still unfit to be a knight.

Subaru's feelings for Emilia are nothing as majestic as fealty.

He is incapable on his own, and fails to meet average capabilities even with Beatrice's help.

Both his power and his fealty are as insufficient as ever.

But now he has the will that he previously lacked.

It's not fealty, but it's comparably strong.

He might lack power, but he has the spirit and resolve to compensate for what he lacks.

He can't change that he seems too awkward to be called a knight, but that's what makes it Subaru.

Like hell Natsuki Subaru is suited to anything so magnificent as chivalry.

???: "What. Seems that I didn't need to visit after all, in fact."

It happens as Subaru faces himself in the mirror, having resolved one point.

He sees a small silhouette standing beside him, hunched forward as he is. The girl reflected aside him in the mirror, with her long, extravagant pigtails, is Beatrice.

Subaru: “I’m getting dressed. You dirty loli.”

Beatrice: “You’re already dressed, I suppose. And I was asked to come here to do something since you looked so persistently uncertain, in fact. So I had to come here to give you a slap on the back, I suppose. —But it seems that I didn’t need to, in fact.”

Subaru: “Those guys…”

Who was the meddler here? Otto? Garfiel? Perhaps even Clind? Or maybe it was all of them, and Subaru has to smile bitterly at how probable it is.

Indeed. There is no one more suited to give Subaru a pep talk at this moment than Beatrice. She is the best choice. So he’ll impose on her care.

And accordingly uplift Beatrice’s expression, as she regrets the needlessness of her presence here.

Subaru: “My back.”

Beatrice: “…?”

Subaru: “If you’re gonna slap me, then please do it. I do feel like I’ve sorted some things out…but I’m still looking for that final push.”

Beatrice’s eyes widen in shock.

Her expression is so incredibly darling that Subaru has to keep himself from chuckling,

Subaru: “Come on, please.”

Beatrice: “You don’t have to worry yourself…I know I’m not worried myself, I suppose.”

Subaru: “I’m not saying this out of worry. I just think that, no matter who gives you that slap on the back, that winds up being the final push. So if I’m choosing who that person is then I want it to be you.”

Beatrice: “…”

Subaru: “I want you to slap me on the back and be the final strength I need to be Emilia’s knight. It feels more like me that way.”

He might just be saying it for peace of mind, but that’s great, what’s so bad about peace of mind? Perhaps it’s just an issue with how he’s feeling. But that just makes it more legitimate; of course he should have her make him feel better, then.

Because the heart always expresses itself with the simplest language.

Beatrice: “Y-You hopeless fool, in fact. You’d be absolutely lost without Betty, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Yeah, I would. I’m utterly useless without you. And when I’m with you I’m normally useless.”

Beatrice: “Which means you’re still useless, in fact! Sheer discourtesy, I suppose!”

Subaru: “And now this useless fool’s gonna be Emilia’s knight and gradually stop being so useless. So whenever I do start bordering on uselessness, I’m putting my hopes on you.”

Subaru lifts himself from the chair and pats Beatrice’s head.

Beatrice looks dissatisfied with his vigorous manhandling, but makes no motion to stop him, and voices not a single complaint.

Subaru: “…”

After sating himself with Beatrice pats, Subaru slowly turns to present her his back.

And surely she understands what this means.

She takes a faint breath, readying herself.

Beatrice: “—Hiyaah, in fact!”

Subaru: “—!”

With an adorable shout, the noise of her palm peals through the room.

The impact from her small hand stings more than Subaru expected. And an even greater shock runs from his back into his whole body.

Subaru: “Man you’re surprisingly strong.”

Beatrice: “I didn’t walk around carrying big, heavy books every day for nothing, I suppose.”

Beatrice’s bragging makes him think back on her time in the Archive.

Why yes, Beatrice was always reading books sizeable enough to conceal her small frame. Today is where she showcases the effects of constantly bearing all that weight.

Though he doesn’t know if muscle work-outs actually do anything for spirits.

Subaru: “So we’ve unexpectedly uncovered a muscle magician. Massive Beako.”

Beatrice: “I suspect you just used an incredibly terrible epithet on me, in fact.”

Subaru: “Just your imagination. And man that fired me up. Thanks.”

Beatrice: “…You’re my Contractor, so of course I’d do this, I suppose."

Blushing slightly, Beatrice averts her gaze from Subaru.

It makes him want to pat her again. But before he can reach out to her—Clind: "—Master Natsuki, the time is near. Preparations." —Clind knocks on the door and peers in, summoning him.

With the seconds looming in closer, he gulps from the tension.

But his limbs and face feel less rigid than he expected. The pent-up tension loosens him up in a good way, and he quietly sings the praises of Beatrice's unexpectedly effective slap.

Clind: "A seat has been prepared for you as well, Lady Beatrice. As I shall also be humbly attending, I would hold the greatest of appreciation supposing that you may accept my presence. Understanding."

Subaru: "Okay, got it. Please don't laugh if I mess up."

Clind: "As you command. Solemnity."

Clind waits outside the door to escort Subaru, who gives a sigh and clicks his neck. He glances back to Beatrice, unsure of what to say,

Subaru: "Well, I'm off."

Beatrice: "As you should be, in fact."

It's a simple exchange, but it's enough.

Her words and actions have already given him more than enough.

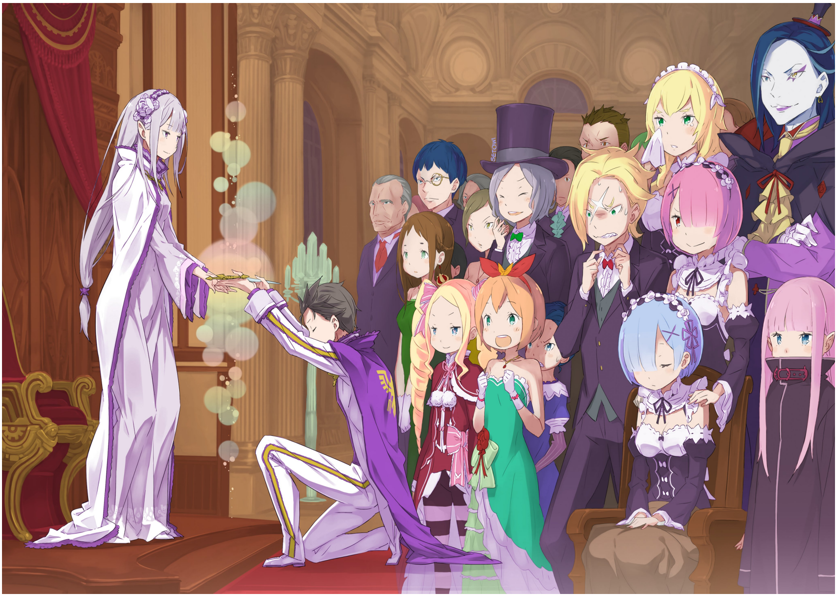
Beatrice: "—Subaru."

But at the very end of the end, Beatrice halts Subaru one last time.

Just before he leaves the room, Subaru glances back to a red-faced Beatrice,

Beatrice: "That outfit looks great on you, I suppose."

And with that, she supplies him with the last bit of confidence he needed.



Final Chapter:
A Nonsense Dance, Under the Moonlight

1

—Subaru has been in this hall before, but it looks nothing like how he remembers it.

Candelabra line the red carpet. The flickering of their crimson flames steeps the room in further formality, prompting everyone in attendance to straighten their posture.

Almost all of the important people of the mansion stand evenly by the wall. Which means the main players of this story, but also includes some attendants from the Milord household.

Assembling only people relevant to Subaru means monopolizing the assembly with his ingroup.

Even he understands that many more people must play witness to this event.

But, having said that, should they truly have brought all of the Ryuzu doubles along?

Ryuzu nodded at him, telling him not to worry about it, but of course it's going to nag at him. Although he knows that the girls are harmless unless directed, the uncertainty over what they might possibly do unsettles him.

Though, everyone else must share that same anxiety, except about Subaru.

There are so many points worthy of ridicule among the people here.

All the main players are primly dressed in formalwear, which is hilarious.

Nevermind Roswaal and Anne-Rose, who seem accustomed to the outfits: Otto and Garfiel look even more awkward in their getups than Subaru. And disregard how Garfiel scrunches up his face, irked by his stuffy collar, Otto hasn't even noticed how blatantly awkward he looks. Guy's a riot.

The servants include Frederica and Clind, who are always in formalwear. Subaru does have some qualms about Ram, who stands with them in her maid outfit as if this is entirely reasonable. But once he sees what is beside her, his breath catches.

A blue-haired girl, seated in a chair.

Her eyes are closed. Naturally. She is still asleep. Subaru resents how considerate Ram was to bring her here, and have her attend the ceremony. He resents how Ram smirks at him, announcing that she was the one who proposed this.

Subaru looks further along to find Petra gazing at him, finely dressed as he is, with pride. Her dress amplifies her splendor, and she shines brightly enough to match Anne-Rose and Beatrice. She's meant to be a simple village girl, so how do you explain her composure here? Beatrice wears the same outfit as always, but her expression towards Subaru is gentle. Her flushed cheeks remind him of their exchange in the dressing room, which starts making Subaru embarrassed as well.

And standing before him—

"…"

—Is a silver-haired girl, waiting.

In her ceremonial outfit, Emilia enchants Subaru with an utterly new kind of brilliance.

Her silver hair shimmers like moonlight, and her amethyst eyes glimmer like jewels. Her face is tantalizingly beautiful as she purses her lips, apparently tense about this vital ceremony.

The outfit amplifies the purity that Subaru usually feels about Emilia, hallowed as a priestess' vestments, lined with sublime gold that keenly announces the nobility and seriousness of this ritual.

The instant that Subaru sights her, everything in his head falls hush.

The last vestiges of his bubbling emotions disperse, and everything except Emilia disappears from his mind.

He is absolutely not going to make a mockery of this ceremony, or of the people watching.

What does he need to do? Who does he need to be looking at? Where is his heart sitting? No need to tell him. He already knows.

"…"

Nobody instructs him; his feet take the step forward.

His footsteps make no sound upon the rich carpet. He forgets the weight of the knightblade at his hip, focused with passion holding him aloft, but calm as a resting sea, as he approaches Emilia.

Even through the storm of onlooking gazes, his heart remains unshakable.

The only thing to cast ripples in Subaru's heart, in this instant, is

Emilia.

He draws near to her, close enough to touch her.

She stands on a dais, her tantalizingly beautiful cheeks rigid. Subaru kneels before her.

With his knee to the ground, he bows his head.

All the ceremonial customs that Garfiel told him about take instant command of his body. He keeps his eyes closed as her intense gaze stares down at him.

He could almost forget to breathe in this atmosphere. Pleasant stress plays on his skin as he looks up, and he takes the sword from his waist.

He reverently lifts the weighty blade, unsheathing it horizontally before his chest.

Light from the candles washes over the steel, lighting Subaru and Emilia's eyes equally bright.

"…"

The beauty of the unsheathed blade burns itself into Subaru's eyes as he presents it to Emilia.

She sees the sword cast before her. Her lips tremble with some form of sentiment.

But she instantly asserts control over the words before they can spill, and she holds herself firm beneath the surge of emotion.

Her pale fingers touch the sword. She slowly lifts the heavy thing, until its tip points to the ceiling.

Emilia is beautiful as she holds the sword aloft. Subaru restrains his desires to witness the sight, bows his head, and closes his eyes.

What is presented to Emilia is the sword, the pride of the knight, alongside his being and his neck, which are those of the knight.

"…"

A Knight devotes their life to their Master.

Subaru's posture illustrates this vow, making Emilia's lips and eyes waver. But her hesitation only lasts a moment. Her pursed lips and focused gaze carry not the slightest indecision.

The point of the sword descends upon Subaru's left shoulder.

She rests the flat of the blade on his shoulders, and the weight almost makes him cry out. The pressure bearing on him is nothing physical, but mental.

Perhaps this sensation is the one that every knight must bear, that thing called 'pride'.

In this exact instant, Natsuki Subaru finally understands it.

The point of the blade moves to his right shoulder.

He feels the weight identically, but the coolness of the blade remains with him this time.

Of course. This is where the ceremony's most important moment begins.

"…"

"…"

Silence falls upon the hall.

No. The hall had been silent so far. The silence until now had been steeped in a strange tension, ardent and loud.

But the silence in this instant carries a new fire.

Absent of tension, absent of zeal, absent of anything, this silence is legitimate.

A quiet that falls equally upon the heart of Emilia, of Subaru, of everyone in attendance.

Only one person is granted the right to shatter it.

"—To the sun that gazes over the radiant world, to the stars that watch the realm in its sleep. To the winds, to the waters, to the earth, to the light, to the spirits residing in everything."

The silence shatters.

Emilia's lips sing the ceremonial rite.

"—To the grand world that received you, that nurtured you, that delivered you."

Trembling. His heart is trembling.

His teeth don't feel to sit right. What is his heart having trouble with?

It irritates him to even question his mental turmoil.

All he wants to do in this moment is drown in the chime of that bell.

"—To the pride that supports you, that you built, that you fostered."

He feels the heat in the gaze upon him compound.

The passion burning inside him is ready to combust.

His heart thumps wildly, maniacally, as he regardless waits for the question.

"—To everything that watches over you, to the world that raised you, to the pride that supports you, let your way cast no shame. Without fear, without dread, without doubt, be as you are in your heart."

The rite ends.

The question is coming.

This will end the ceremony. Not even Subaru knows the answer to this question. However,

“—With your will always strong, and as everything that surrounds you does, will you swear to protect me from this moment forth?”

—His heart does know how to answer Emilia’s question.

“To the sun, to the stars, to the world, to my pride—and.”

He will announce his gratitude and determination to everything stated in the rites.

Before he makes the pledge, he thinks of people who he assuredly must thank.

And so the words come naturally from his lips:

“—To my mother and my father, I swear.”

“…”

“I will protect you. I will realize your wishes. —My name is Natsuki Subaru.”

He raises his head.

The sword remains at his right cheek. But its gleam fails to catch his eye.

The only thing he sees is the brilliant amethyst, gazing back at him.

“Emilia. I am your knight.”

“—Mm.”

He says the words, and she gives her answer.

Emilia’s eyes flood with emotion.

But she manages to keep anything from spilling as she lifts the sword from Subaru’s shoulder.

She fixes its alignment and presents it back to him.

He respectfully accepts it in both his hands, and sheathes it in its scabbard.

Subaru returns the blade to his hip as he looks up at Emilia, still kneeling.

He sees Emilia give a slight nod, and stands up.

Where he,

“Also Emilia-tan you look mega sexycute in that outfit.”

“You dummy.”

—Shattering the seriousness of the ceremony, Emilia pokes out her tongue, red-faced.

2

Many dishes line the table in the banquet hall.

Social standing and class present no issue as everyone present at the accolade chats with each other, turning the buffet into something of a get-together.

Subaru: “I just went through one of the most stressful things of my life, and look at you, having all the fun.”

He watches the banquet from the terrace outside, bathed in the night wind.

A plate of food from the table and a drink rest on the nearby railing, but the swell from before hasn’t passed.

He’s having trouble getting any food or drink down his throat.

The hot flush from his neck upwards isn’t going away.

His stomach tells him that he’s hungry, but his chest is too full for anything to get through.

Subaru: “…”

In the corner of his eye, he sees Petra dancing at the head of the hall in her dress. It's the kind of dance they do during festivals in Earlham Village, but with Petra's take on it, and with her proficiency in it, it is certainly fit for a noble's mansion.

She pulls a blushing Beatrice along with her, forcing her into a shoddy dance. Though she tries desperately to stay apathetic and expressionless, Subaru spots how her ears and nose tremble, unable to hold it in.

As always, it's Petra dragging helpless Beatrice into it.

Subaru's cheeks relax as he takes his glass. He's managed to secure enough composure to at least wet his tongue. Though, he's not ready to reach for Garfiel and Frederica's pie just yet.

???: "—There you are, Subaru."

Subaru leans on the bannister, staring up at the sky, when a voice calls him. He looks down to find a moon pixie, her beauty only embellished beneath its light.

Subaru: "Or no it's Emilia-tan. Thought it was an angel."

Emilia: "You're saying weird stuff again. Are you drunk?"

Subaru: "I'm still underage so no I'm not drinking. If I'm drunk on anything, then it's on the atmosphere and my own ego."

Emilia: "See, so you are drunk."

Emilia giggles, and Subaru has to furrow his brows at that.

He sees her pale skin peeking out from beneath her neat dress—and the flush on her neck and cheeks, which makes him agree with her current state.

Subaru: "The heck, Emilia-tan. You go asking me if I'm drunk, when it looks like you're who's been drinking."

Emilia: "I haven't been. They just gave me some punch. I never drink alcohol and go all funny."

Subaru: “Man you’re cute.”

Emilia pouts, completely forgetting the seriousness from the ceremony.

Meaning that this right here is just a completely normal adorable girl.

Emilia: “So, Subaru. What are you doing alone out here?”

Subaru: “Well, I already told you. I’m drunk on the atmosphere and my ego.”

It’s a frivolous reply, but not a completely inaccurate one, either.

What is there to call this but going out into the night alone, moping, unable to vent? Not that he can divulge his feelings to anyone so easily.

Emilia: “Do you regret it…?”

Subaru: “Absolutely not. Gonna be hearing none of that, Emilia.”

Emilia: “Mm, I’m sorry for that. Sorry. But I’m happy too.”

Her cheeks still flushed from alcohol, Emilia takes a step closer to Subaru.

She leans on the bannister beside him. Their shoulders are close enough to touch, and even with clothes between them, Subaru’s body flares hotter.

Emilia: “Subaru. I apologize that the accolade came out of nowhere. I’d been ready the whole time, so I thought you knew about it too.”

Subaru: “No I’m probably just an idiot for not realizing. Thinking back, you did keep asking me if I’d practiced, but I just came up with bullshit answers to brush it off every time.”

Emilia assumed that Subaru knew, and had been regularly checking on his progress.

Subaru had simply never realized it, getting through the conversations with frivolities as they came, never understanding what Emilia was trying to say, while devoting himself to other things. And anyway this whole accolade thing was,

Subaru: “Roswaal’s fault. Actually almost everything’s been his fault lately. Is he trying to humiliate me? He’s been going seriously overboard this last while.”

Emilia: “I kinda think Roswaal’s always been like that…but, yes, it does feel like he’s been provoking you more than he used to. Maybe he wants your attention.”

Subaru: “That’s terrifying, Emilia-tan.”

Subaru’s attention will only make Roswaal an even more hopeless person, so let’s not have that.

Subaru grimaces at the surprisingly possible idea, and Emilia laughs, waving her hand easily.

Emilia: “I’m just joking. I don’t think Roswaal knows how he should act now that we know about his plotting. I’m sure that, in a bit, he’ll go back to being like before.”

Subaru: “If he goes back to ‘being like before’ it sounds like he didn’t learn anything, but…well, it’s better than him changing on us and leaving us lost on how to respond.”

It might seem like a half-hearted decision, but Subaru will agree with it for now.

With that part of the conversation over, Emilia takes a sip from her glass. She’s had it with her the entire time, and if Subaru’s guess is correct, then it’s the alcoholic kind of punch.

It feels like Emilia is getting more intoxicated, which both scares and interests him.

Emilia: “Say, Subaru.”

Subaru: “Hm, what? The alcohol’s heating you up so it’s time to get undressed? Better not do it here. Okay, let’s find somewhere else. Off we go.”

Emilia: “Sorry. I’m not entirely sure what you’re saying. No, we’re staying here.”

Emilia shoots Subaru a slight glare. It makes him shrink back and lower his head, when she jerks her chin toward the banquet hall.

Emilia: “They look like they’re having fun.”

Subaru: “Erryeeah, they do. It’s a noble mansion but even the servants are welcome, feels really cozy. As a member of the lower-middle class peasantry, I’d say it’s basically the ideal.”

Emilia: “Mm, I agree. I think it’s sooo wonderful.”

Subaru notices the affection and desire in her amethyst eyes.

Subaru and Emilia might not be witnessing the same picture. Emilia is surely seeing a peaceful scene, absent of any class- or race- based discrimination.

Subaru only perceives the superficial layer of things. Their viewpoints differ completely.

They see the same thing, but think differently.

And Subaru thinks the discrepancy is fine.

Emilia: “What’s going on, Subaru? You look sooo peaceful.”

Subaru: “I wonder. Maybe I’m just happy that I’m here, seeing the same things as you, Emilia-tan.”

Emilia: “Really? Then I’m happy that you’re seeing things the same way.”

Subaru: “I don’t know. I might not be. But I think it’s alright for us to differ.”

Emilia glances at Subaru. He feels her gaze but keeps looking straight ahead, his cheeks relaxing into a slight smile.

Emilia notices him smiling, and nods.

It happens right when they reach their understanding that,

Subaru: “Oh, goddamn Otto. He’s overdoing it, doubt he can even hold his liquor.”

In the middle of the hall, Garfiel challenges Otto to drink a full glass of expensive-looking alcohol in one go. Otto slams the glass back down to the table, having beautifully chugged the whole thing, to the applause of the onlooking crowd.

But Otto’s face flushes bright red before swiftly paling dead white. Following this transformation, Garfiel immediately shoulders Otto and goes rushing out of the hall.

Subaru: “Guess they’re going to the toilet.”

Emilia: “Will Otto be okay? Um, he kind of looked like how the dogs in the forest do when they eat poison mushrooms, just then…”

Subaru: “You should know what’s up now that you’ve drunk yourself to your limit and hit adulthood, Emilia-tan.”

Emilia: “Is that how it works?”

Subaru: “No I mean I don’t know.”

He’s underage.

And how expensive was that liquor that Otto just drank, and is probably regurgitating? Doubtful that anything cheap or mass-produced is going to be included in this banquet.

Subaru shoots Roswaal a glance. Perceptive as he is, Roswaal catches the look and raises his glass to Subaru. The Margrave in his clown make-up easily drinks the same alcohol that defeated Otto. Either his dignity is winning, or he’s just used to the liquor.

Emilia: “…Subaru. I want to tell you something.”

Subaru: “What a coincidence. I want you to tell me something too.”

Breaking the silence that falls between them, Emilia whispers quietly enough to Subaru that only he will hear. He nods, and while still leaning on the railing, adjusts his posture.

Emilia turns to face him too, leaving them gazing at each other within breathing range. Subaru reflexively steps backwards, but,

Emilia: “No running.”

Emilia’s hand grabs him, stopping his retreat.

The step he took winds up as a half-step, putting them even closer than before. Subaru stumbles forward and bumps onto Emilia’s forehead.

He hurriedly tries to draw back, but Emilia’s grip on his ceremonial dress prevents him.

Subaru: “E-Emilia-tan? I’m happy about this situation but, it’s sorta a little tense for a conversation…”

Emilia: “I’m tense too. This is my first time having such an important talk with anyone. So we’re even.”

Subaru: “N-No I think I’m winning here…”

He desperately tries to smile and brush this off, but Emilia won’t let him go.

Emilia is warm against him as he attempts to at least ease his own stress, and awkwardly moves to hide Emilia from the banquet hall.

It is obvious that they’re hugging when they’re horizontal like this. If Subaru shuffles over a little, then it should just look like he’s got his hands on the railing, staring up at the night sky and waxing poetic.

Subaru: “Ok so those worries are dealt with, now tell me anything.”

Emilia: “…Okay, here’s a talk between me and my Sir Knight. It’s about why Roswaal invited me to participate in the Royal Selection."

Subaru: "…"

Emilia has never discussed this with Subaru before.

And it must have something to do with the Trial, that so consistently discouraged her.

Subaru swallows his breath and looks down at Emilia.

Their gazes crash into one another. Seeing himself reflected in Emilia's eyes, Subaru nods with determination.

Emilia: "Before Elior Forest was frozen, I used to live there with my Mother and…with the other elves."

It's a tale of happy memories, a tale of sorrowful memories.

While it comes with its hiccups and pauses, Emilia sincerely tells Subaru the story.

Emilia didn't know her parents. Fortuna loved Emilia in their place. The villages kindly accepted them when they had nowhere to go. And then there was the organization called the Witch Cult, secretly helping the village, and this character named Geuse.

It was a limited world, but one that showered Emilia in love and kindness.

And it was all ruined on the day that Elior Forest froze.

The With Cult acted brutally as the witch named Pandora and the Archbishop appeared. The arrival of the Witchbeast Blacksnake, and Fortuna and Geuse's tragedy. Emilia kept her mother's problems, and so lost both her and the village. Then came Puck, who she met upon awakening after a long time in the ice.

Emilia: "Puck said he'd always been waiting for me, that he'd always been looking for me. Then he stayed with me, protecting me, just like he said he would. Even now, he's inside this magic stone, waiting to be woken up. …I can tell.”

Subaru: “But you can’t speak with him, can you?”

Emilia: “He’s still asleep. But it’s not because he’s denying a Contract with me. I don’t think this magic stone will work as his anchor if he’s awake. It needs to be a higher grade, colorless magic stone. If I can just find one, and then something to trigger it…I know he’ll come back.”

A blue magic stone hangs on a pendant around Emilia’s neck.

It’s a piece of the massive magic stone that sealed Ryuzu Meyer. It proves insufficient for holding Puck, and the sleeping spirit cannot communicate with the outside.

As if his help during the Garfiel fight was really, truly his final contribution.

Subaru: “I understand what’s going on with Puck. But, about the Royal Selection?”

Emilia: “Me and Puck spent all that time in the frozen forest. Sometimes I went to the nearby towns too, but they weren’t really very welcoming.”

Subaru cannot even imagine how alienating that ‘weren’t really very’ was. And it’s doubtful that Emilia ever anticipated that she would speak of it.

Emilia: “Then Roswaal came…I think, not even a year ago yet. But it was so sudden that it left me and Puck sooo shocked.”

Subaru: “Well I’d be shocked too, if a guy in clown make-up popped up outta nowhere.”

Emilia: “That’s true, but what shocked us was that he was in this inaccessible forest. I was on my way back from the village, and he was just standing there waiting for me. And he was playing dumb like always, like, ‘weeeeeeeeeeelcome back’…”

Subaru: “Well…”

That’s certainly surprising.

It’s too late to be commenting on Roswaal’s mean-spiritedness, but Subaru can imagine the shock it gave Emilia and Puck at the time.

Emilia: “Puck got so cross…he went from morning to night, just fighting with Roswaal. Thinking back on it, it’s a good thing he didn’t freeze Roswaal solid.”

Subaru: “I mean your smile’s adorable, but that’s not really something to smile about.”

Emilia: “I guess. Anyway, Puck and Roswaal told each other what they wanted while they were fighting, and they managed to start a discussion…”

Subaru: “And Roswaal lured you in by proposing to melt the forest.” Emilia’s eyes widen. Subaru smiles wryly at her reaction.

Subaru: “It’s obvious from how the story was going. And I happened to hear something along those lines before. But, y’know…”

But there’s been a shift in Emilia’s awareness since then.

Before, she said that she was incapable of freezing Elior Forest. That she was unable to thaw the ice, even with Puck’s help.

However,

Subaru: “If you froze the forest, can’t you unfreeze it?”

Emilia: “…Mm, I had that thought too. But I doubt I can.”

Subaru: “How come?”

Emilia: “I just can’t reach the same power that I had in my memories.”

It’s an anxious, but confident statement. Subaru furrows his brows.

‘The power I had in my memories’. If what Emilia’s said is accurate, then that means power beyond human knowledge. Not even this witch Pandora could find an opening in Emilia's assault. So how come Emilia doesn't have it now?

Subaru: "But you fought the Sizeable Hare without backing down an inch."

Emilia: "I don't need Puck or the minor spirits' help to cast magic any more. But that's all. I still can't draw that power out."

Subaru: "…"

Lamenting her powerlessness, Emilia clenches her fist and weakly shakes her head.

Her expression, ashamed of her inadequacy, instead shames Subaru for feeling dejected.

Emilia, of all people, is frustrated about herself. Subaru knows this, so he should not be capable of casting any criticism on her.

And it's not even that he wants Emilia to be strong, really.

Subaru: "OK, no more self-blame. Back to the topic. We'll agree that you can't melt the ice…so how is Roswaal thinking to do it?"

Emilia: "…"

Subaru: "If you can't do it and Puck can't do it, then Roswaal shouldn't be able to either. Maybe he's an amazing magician, but he can't be ten or twenty times stronger than you. So, how?"

Emilia: "It's not that Roswaal himself is melting the ice. But Roswaal knows something that might melt the ice…all he did was tell me about it."

Subaru: "Something, that might melt it?"

Something that can thaw the forest that not even the Witch of Glaciation could melt, not even with a spirit's help, and not even with ultimate magical power. What on earth could it be?

Emilia: "Dragon's blood."

Subaru: "…"

Emilia: "The blood of the Dragon, that grants bountiful harvests upon the land, and cures deviant earth. He said it could definitely thaw the forest."

Subaru: "Emilia, but that means…"

Killing the Dragon. Doesn't it?

She means to sacrifice the Dragon, which has always protected the Kingdom of Lugnica, for the sake of her forest?

For an instant, the incredible question rushes through Subaru's mind. But,

Emilia: "No, Subaru. I only need one drop of blood. And the Dragon's blood has been used to revitalize the soil during a famine in Lugnica before. I read that in a history book, so it's definitely true."

Subaru: "What, so…no, that seriously freaked me out for a second. I mean if we did something like kill the Dragon…"

Would that not free the Witch, sealed by the Dragon's power?

Subaru: "…"

Anxiety clenches in Subaru's chest, and he forgets to breathe.

The witches he met at Echidna's tea party. And the Witch of Envy, who saw him off at the end.

Subaru has not forgotten her.

He will never forget his resolve from their last instant of goodbye.

But she must not be let free.

She must not be loosed on the world.

His instincts assuredly tell him so.

Emilia: “The royalty of Lugnica get a chance to talk to the Dragon when they form the covenant. And some drops of the Divine Dragon Volcanica’s blood have been kept in the palace, from back then. When I’m Ruler, I want to use that power.”

Subaru: “So that’s why you’re participating…”

Emilia: “…I told you before. The reason I’m participating is sooo selfish. And there my selfish reason is.”

He can hear a smile in her words, but it’s an uneasy one.

And her eyes do waver with anxiety as she looks up at him.

She looks scared of what he will say, and what he will think of her resolve.

It seems he’s allowed to believe that he is such an implacable fixture to her, that he can make her feel this unease.

Subaru: “Don’t worry, Emilia-tan. I’m not gonna get disillusioned over something like that.”

Emilia: “…Subaru.”

Subaru: “You say it’s self-centered, but you’re not looking for your own gain. You know how to save people you want to save, and instead of dirtying your hands with something like theft, you decide to use legitimate methods. There’s nothing to criticize about that.”

Subaru gives her a reassuring smile. But her expression remains anxious.

Subaru knows. This isn’t what she wants to hear.

If he’s going to give her something closer to what she’s really looking for, then:

Subaru: “Are you shrinking back because you think your motivator is inferior to the other candidates’?”

Emilia: “—Hic.”

Subaru: “That’s a case of grass’s greener on the other side. Crusch’s an amazing person with an amazing goal, yeah, but think about Anastasia and Priscilla. Their rationale’s are nothing praiseworthy.”

Greed and ego. That’s what motivates them to participate.

Subaru wasn’t there to hear it, but what venerable reason could Felt give to be participating in the Selection?

Emilia’s desire to save people is not in any way inferior.

Subaru: “And no matter what you wanted at the start, it’s something different now, isn’t it?”

Emilia: “…How can you tell?”

Subaru: “Because you were looking so peacefully at the banquet hall.”

Unfolding in the Milord banquet hall is a sight where humans and demi-humans, nobles and servants and commoners, all interact without any division between race or class. Subaru called it the ideal, and Emilia gazed at it with longing.

Subaru knows exactly how the fire in Emilia’s heart is kindled.

Subaru: “If your goal’s to see that again, I’m helping you. I agree that it’s wonderful. No one’s gonna stop you from adding that onto your list of reasons for trying.”

Emilia: “You’ll…really, help me?”

Subaru: “What do you think I just swore to you? Stop worrying, I want you to rely on me first. When you want help I’ll help you, and when you’re unsure we’ll solve the problem together.”

Emilia: “…”

Emilia swallows her breath, her eyes wavering

What should she say? Her trembling lips cannot clearly state what she feels.

Emilia: “—Mm.”

So she mutters only that.

And smiles.

—That’s all I need, thinks Subaru.

Subaru: “Alright, my doubts are all vanished.”

With that, Subaru drinks what’s left in the glass on the railing. Then he grabs his thoroughly-cooled meat pie, tosses it in his mouth, chews.

The cool cannot degrade this flavor, and the pie just melts in his mouth. Indeed this is a masterpiece that lives up to Garfiel’s boasting.

Emilia: “Subaru, you’ll choke if you eat so quickly.”

Subaru: “I’ll savor every bite if you feed it to me.”

Emilia: “I feel like I’ve done that somewhere before, when you were exhausted…”

Subaru grins somewhat wryly in response, and leads Emilia by the hand to the hall.

She looks up at the sky once, before accepting Subaru’s escort and entering the hall alongside him.

The party is still underway, and heats up with the star guests’ return.

After bringing back a drunk Otto, Garfiel blacks out at the hands of Frederica and Ram’s joint sneak attack, denying him his attempts to drink alcohol.

Petra and Beatrice’s uncoordinated dance reaches its climax. Sweat drips from Petra’s brow, and Beatrice is determined to put in an equal effort.

Anne-Rose looks displeased that Subaru has returned with Emilia, but Clind pokes his master's puffed cheeks, aggravating her.

Ryuzu and Roswaal stand side by side, toast to their repaired relationship, and sip from their glasses.

Subaru: “It's wonderful, Emilia-tan.”

Emilia: “Yes. It's exactly what I want to see. I'll always remember it.”

So let's have a night to always remember.

They intrude on the two girls, dancing in the most conspicuous spot in the room.

They don't know a single step, but they enjoy themselves all the same.

Through a sea of smiles and confusion, the Knight and Witch—the new master and servant—begin their nonsense dance.

Special I:
Intersecting Hopes

Crusch: “Your Highness, your humble servant will now be departing. Please take care.”

A woman respectfully bowed her head, her green hair swaying slightly, and exited through the door being held open by a few attendants. Accompanying the sound of the closing door came her sigh.

Crusch: “My apologies for troubling you, but please take care to make sure that his Highness is not uncomfortable.”

After hearing the replies of the attendants, the woman, who seemed to be suppressing her emotions, turned and strode down a red-carpeted stairway into a grand hall.

Ferris: “—Lady Crusch.”

Waiting in the hall, calling to her in an urgent tone, was an effeminate young man with round yellow eyes, cat ears, and a sly demeanor. His name was Felix Argyle, or, to most people, Ferris. He was the woman’s long-time trusted companion, as well as one of her knights.

Ferris: “Welcome back. How is Prince Fourier’s situation?”

Crusch: “Not very optimistic. His previous liveliness is entirely gone. Today, he suddenly mentioned wanting to go outside and walk in the sun. It was… painful to watch.”

Crusch Karsten shook her head, and Ferris responded with a dejected slump of his shoulders. Seeing the reaction of her flax-haired companion, Crusch spoke up again.

Crusch: “There is no need for you to feel guilt. This illness is a puzzle that the best healers of the country still cannot solve. It is not your fault.”

Ferris: “But, it’s because of Ferri’s own weakness that I cannot meet Lady Crusch’s expectations… I am deeply sorry, Lady Crusch.”

Ferris seemed less remorseful about his inability to cure the illness and more remorseful about Crusch’s grief for Fourier. As usual, he snuggled close to her, and Crusch allowed him to do so.

Crusch: “Does the course of his Highness’s… does course of the Royal Family’s disease remain unchanged?”

Ferris: “Yes, it’s the same as the previous diagnosis, although, as a healer, I don’t want to say this lightly.”

Ferris lowered both his voice and head, but continued to speak without hesitation.

Ferris: “—It is the poison of the Black Serpent. The cause of such a mysterious illness could only be from the creature we don’t know anything about.”

Crusch: “If so, then where is it now…? No, the situation at hand is more pressing. What will happen from here on?”:

Ferris: “The worst case scenario is… the death of the entire Royal Family.”

Crusch: “…”

Although she had already reached this conclusion, no matter how many times she heard it, it would still be difficult to accept.

Crusch took a deep, calming breath. This was an unprecedented situation. If she lost her cool and let her feelings run loose, the crisis would never be solved. In such chaos, the only reason the Kingdom had been clinging to stability was because Crusch and the Council of Wise Men had been working with the high aristocracy to lead the kingdom forward.

The blood of the Royal Family of Lugunica was, at this very moment, facing termination.

The first victim of the disease had been First Prince Zabinel

Lugunica. Originally, his illness had been diagnosed as fatigue caused overwork, but Zabinel's condition worsened severely in just a few days. Soon afterward, more members of the Royal Family fell ill in a similar fashion, and thus the anomaly of the disease was discovered.

Only those who carried the royal blood of Lugunica were affected. Upon realizing this, the castle collapsed into fierce commotion, only brought to a stop by various members of the Council of Wise Men, whose members resided in the Royal Castle. Crusch, and especially Ferris, the latter known within Lugunica as the one who sat at the peak of healing water magic and held the title of Blue, were also instrumental in this stability.

The various members of the Royal Family were taken to one location, where they were diagnosed and prepared for instant treatment. There, they found that no one, not even Ferris, could cure the disease.

In only a few days, the long-standing lineage of the Royal Family of Lugunica had been brought to the verge of extinction.

Currently, a number of leading healers were gathered, attempting to extend the lives of the Royal Family with magic, but it was merely a temporary solution. The situation of the Royal Family had been hidden from the public, but this pretense of normalcy could only last for so long.

Pondering the severity of the situation, Crusch thought of the person she had been visiting, the Fourth Prince of Lugunica, Fourier Lugunica.

Fourier and Crusch were close together in age, and Crusch, the daughter of a Duke, had been acquainted with him since childhood. Fourier, as a Prince, had difficulty finding friends of the same age, and so Crusch could be counted as one of his closest friends.

Crusch was the same way, never disliking his presence.

Fourier frequently visited the Karsten household, and liked to bring with him a number of troublesome problems to share with Crusch.

His real intent was to garner the attention of the girl he liked, but Crusch had never noticed.

She had always merely regarded him as dear, kind-hearted friend who she had not minded.

Fourier, along with the rest of Lugunica's Royal Family, had no great talent as a politician. Even so, his eagerness and virtue were apparent. He was far from succeeding the throne, and his future position would probably not be one of great responsibility. And yet, he was burning with the enthusiasm to do his best at his given role.

Seeing him lying in bed, on the verge of death, tortured Crusch's heart endlessly.

Ferris: "Lady Crusch…"

Crusch's expression remained unchanged, but her eyes were filled with pain. Seeing this caused Ferris's own heart to seize as well.

Using the length of their relationship with Crusch as a criteria, Fourier had known her longer than Ferris had. Of course, Ferris, as Crusch's follower, held a greater amount of loyalty to her. Ferris was content just watching Fourier and Crusch, while burying his feelings deep in his chest.

Therefore, for Ferris, Fourier was a person who evoked several complicated emotions.

Of course, Ferris's feelings would not in any way impact Fourier's treatment or diagnosis. It would compromise Ferris's pride as a healer, as well as serve as a betrayal to Crusch, who trusted Ferris more than anyone else. However, his inability to live up to that trust and save Fourier weighed heavily on Ferris's heart.

Striding through the castle, both the master and the knight walked with heavy footsteps. Crusch thought of the past and of Fourier, while Ferris thought of his incapability and his master.

In any case, today, in the castle, neither of them could do anything. Thus, together, they prepared to leave the castle and return their residence.

???: "—Lord Bordeaux! That is different from what you'd said before!"

Crusch and Ferris, on their way to the castle gate, looked up in the direction of that sound. A little ways from the main gate was a garden, lined with a trimmed lawn and trees planted left and right. The nearby argument disrupted the peace of the quiet scenery.

Crusch couldn't help but look back at the argument occurring in the corner of the garden, between two people, one facing her and one turned away. She immediately recognized the one whose face was visible. He was a tall, bald man with a strong physique named Bordeaux Zergev, a member of Lugunica's Council of Wise Men. The Council of Wise Men consisted of senior aristocrats who were responsible for the majority of the affairs of the state in Lugunica.

A post in the Council of Wise Men was gained through election, and each candidate's knowledge, heritage, contribution to the kingdom, and overall ability, would be evaluated carefully. Represented by Miklotov, they were now acting as the skeleton of the kingdom.

Bordeaux had once been a battlefield hero, and even on the Council of Wise Men was an outspoken, heavily opinionated man. He was known for his radical remarks and his attitude was enough to be ridiculed by Ferris as "always in a rage". Crusch, upon immediately succeeding her position, had been countlessly subjected to his remarks.

Perhaps it was because he always wore such a bullish attitude that his gloomy, withdrawn demeanor immediately caught Crusch's attention.

Ferris: "What an unusual expression for Lord Bordeaux."

Having noticed what Crusch also had, Ferris offered his own commentary. Crusch gave a nod and attempted to figure the situation out. If it were just a verbal struggle, there was no need for her to interfere, but even for a modest quarrel, the timing and place were poor.

The soldier standing by the gate, also having heard the shouting, had come to investigate as well, and upon seeing Crusch bowed his head to her, as if accepting her judgement of the situation. Crusch passed her gaze over the guard as well as Bordeaux, who had noticed that people had gathered around him.

Bordeaux, seemingly possessing the intent of leaving the field, nodded bitterly at them. Searching for the right words, he moistened his lips slightly. While watching the gesture, Crusch finally examined the person standing in front of Bordeaux.

Crusch finally realized why the other man had failed to enter her perception.

Crusch: "…"

He was a figure dressed in rags.

The true identity of these rags wrinkled and slightly dirty dark blue coat, hanging from the shoulder of a tall body and reaching to the bottom of his waist. His white hair, and the earlier sound of his voice, indicated elderliness. However, from his abundant hair, to the muscles in his back, and the broadness of his shoulders, there was no trace of the weakness associated with old age.

Despite being so prominent, the man had escaped Crusch's attention until just now. The reason was his perfect stance. His movements were naturally elegant, and he wasted no motion. As soon as she noticed, Crusch was mesmerized.

As a warrior wielding a sword, Crusch had an ideal to strive for. The man in rags in front of her eyes embodied her ideal, serving as proof that with continuous effort and training, that ideal, that of the "apex of the art of war", could be reached.

Ferris: "Lady Crusch?"

Crusch, who had been unconsciously drawn into a trance, was brought back by Ferris's call, but she could not recover her previous unaffected state.

Who was that old man?

Bordeaux: “I am deeply sorry to breach our agreement, but our current situation is too dire. I hope you will understand.”

The conversation between Bordeaux and the man resumed, with Crusch standing at a loss. Bordeaux spoke with an air of finality, as if hoping to leave the conversation.

Bordeaux: “If people gather here, the situation will be made public, and trouble will occur.”

Old Man: “Wait… How can I be satisfied with those words? Why… Why did you suddenly change your mind? We’d clearly reached an agreement, and…”

Bordeaux: “It’s not your fault, it’s just a matter of the timing. We will need to delay it for a while. Again, I am sorry.”

Old Man: “But…!”

To the desperate man, Bordeaux’s words came off as hesitant and empty. The reason for Bordeaux’s secrecy was caused by a need to keep the condition of the Royal Family secret. That had taken precedent over Bordeaux’s agreement with the man, and their promise had been, at least temporarily, voided.

However, although the truth could not be spoken, it was clumsy of Bordeaux to not formulate a convincing cover-up story.

Or perhaps something in their agreement left Bordeaux unable or unwilling to lie to the man?

Was hiding facts or telling lies more dishonest? In any case, Bordeaux was unwilling to lie to the man. Bordeaux stood tall and presented his words, but the man in rags could not accept them.

Old Man: “I’ve heard the rumors of the worsening relationship with the Empire. If you are hesitant to leave the country because of that, please at least send a messenger…”

Bordeaux: “It’s not that, I would ask you to refrain from asking too much. Once things have settled down, let’s choose a different place to set up a discussion. I don’t know when that will be, but…”

Old Man: “Then it will be too late! Like I said, next month, I will have results coming in, so we will have conclusive evidence… please at least look at this and consider it.”

In response to Bordeaux’s determined attitude, the words of the man in rags became more desperate. He drew something out of his pocket, a large bundle of papers. The edges were wrinkled, and the papers themselves yellowed and speckled with dirt and blood. How important were those papers to him? Seeing how his fingers shivered while grasping it, anyone could tell at a glance. But—

Bordeaux: “—Enough!”

Bordeaux waved his hand at the papers that were held to his chest. Was it because the man had not been expecting it, or had Bordeaux added unintentional force to it? Perhaps it was the overlap of both. Whatever the reason, that action had led to a result.

Old Man: “…”

The bundle of papers left the old man’s hands and scattered across the garden. The wind, although weak, easily swept the pieces of paper through the air like white petals and scattered them over the garden.

Crusch unconsciously reached out toward them, and Bordeaux’s eyes flashed with a trace of regret. However, neither could react to the man’s immediate response.

Old Man: “Bordeaux!”

With a shout, the man in rags seized Bordeaux’s lapel and shoved him against a wall. The latter released a pained breath from the impact. Although he had been pressed against the wall, raising his large body with one arm was no small feat of strength.

Witnessing the scene, Crusch should have immediately called for assistance.

However, the aura given out by the man in rags overwhelmed her and delayed her reaction. The atmosphere seemed to turn dry, and Crusch felt her skin tingle.

As was, the man in rags drove his sharp gaze into Bordeaux.

Ferris: “Guards! Don’t just stand there, come over here! Quickly!”

A voice rose and cried out for guard, stirring Crusch back into action. Looking back, she saw that Ferris, who had watched the situation deteriorate, had raised his hands to wave the guards at the gate over, who had been frozen in shock.

Granted, they had never seen a Wise Man in danger before. Three of the guards rushed to the scene with swords drawn and surrounded Bordeaux and the man.

The atmosphere seemed to spread, and the situation grew tense, but,

Old Man: “—Apologies.”

With a word of apology, the man abruptly released Bordeaux. Bordeaux collapsed against the wall, stifling his coughing with a hand on his throat.

Although the gate soldiers were watching vigilantly, the old man widened his hands to show no resistance and stepped back slowly.

Guard: “Empty your hands and listen to our instructions!”

The guards, still recovering from their earlier embarrassment, resumed their duties and surrounded the old man. According to the law, the old man would be detained and placed under investigation.

Bordeaux: “Wait… There is no need to conduct this so formally, you can release him.”

Guard: “Milord, I am not qualified to say this, but that will damage the reputation of the guards. Can the guards who protect the royals release such a suspicious person?”

Bordeaux: “In that case, restrain him for one night and then release him.”

In response to the old man’s words, Bordeaux delivered a new instruction in a regretful tone. The guards listened obediently. The old man, being escorted by the guards, turned to Crusch.

Old Man: “I am most grateful.”

At the volume he had spoken, he had been only intending for Crusch to hear those words. The old man’s clear blue eyes housed a shadow. Although curious, Crusch decided it would be too rude to force the guards to linger for their dialogue.

As the old man left, Crusch turned to Ferris.

Crusch: “Your quick response just now was a great help. I apologize for not reacting in time.”

Ferris: “No, no, it was nothing at all. I’m just glad the situation didn’t escalate. By the way… Lord Bordeaux?”

Ferris, who humbly put his finger on his lip as he turned the topic back to Bordeaux.

Bordeaux, who had recovered from his previous shock, was crouched on the ground, picking up the scattered paper. Crusch also picked up several fallen pieces near her feet and handed them to Bordeaux.

Bordeaux: “…Thank you, Duchess Karsten. I apologize for that unsightly scene.”

Crusch: “Not at all. Seeing a serious Bordeaux is so rare that I should have paid a viewing fee. That said, could you answer something?”

Bordeaux: “…”

Bordeaux, rearranging the collected papers, responded with silence. Judging that to be an affirmative reply, Crusch looked towards the direction in which the old man had left.

Crusch: “That man just now, was he an acquaintance of you, Milord?”

Bordeaux: "—He's an old friend. No, more like a battlefield comrade. A former battlefield comrade, that's what he would accept."

Crusch: "It is not my place to pry, but if you cherish this relationship, you should aim to repair it as soon as possible. Although, you should choose a better occasion next time."

What had caused trouble here had been the time and place. It was the old man who had attacked Bordeaux, but it was Bordeaux's poor choices that had caused it. Seeing the Wind of Regret blowing by Bordeaux however, Crusch did not hold him in disregard.

Bordeaux: "…I do not know if I can face him again, although I do not consider choosing my loyalty to the throne of Lugunica over my gratitude and debt toward him a mistake."

Crusch: "I see."

Crusch was well-aware that Bordeaux would not listen to her advice, so there was little disappointment. Rather, his clumsy stubbornness was even a little admirable. If she said so however, she would certainly anger him like usual.

Bordeaux: "Did you visit his Highness?"

Crusch: "I am returning from visiting his Highness Prince Fourier. Ferris's diagnosis is not optimistic."

Bordeaux: "That is as expected… While you are here, I should warn you that Leip Barielle is plotting something, although it probably will not amount to anything major. Still, be on guard."

Crusch: "Baron Barielle… I will keep that in mind."

She nodded at Bordeaux's advice. It was distraction from the main topic, but even if she kept pursuing, she knew Bordeaux would not reply. As the conversation ended, Bordeaux held the bundle of collected paper to his chest and left the garden.

Together, Crusch and Ferris breathed a sigh of relief.

Ferris: “Ahhhhhh~, that was a really tense atmosphere. We saw a really rarely seen side of the always tough Lord Bordeaux, though. He would be so much cuter if he were always like this.”

Crusch: “That would be inconvenient, since Lord Miklotov, always calm, and Lord Bordeaux, always in motion, are quite adept at handling the Council of Wise Men together, but…”

The commotion just now, what had been it about? Of course, Crusch wanted to know the details of it, but what had caught her attention more was the old man who had been taken away.

If she could, she would like to learn his true identity.

Ferris: “Anywayyyyy~! Lady Crusch, Ferri would rather not say it himself, but I think that I’m the one that knows Lady Crusch better than anyone else.”

Crusch: “Hmm? That was abrupt… There’s no need to mention such an obvious statement. You are irreplaceably important to me, so why suddenly bring that up now?”

Ferris: “Hearing that evaluation, I think I can go one step further today.”

Ferris stuck out a red tongue with a mischievous expression. Crusch could not tell what he was thinking or planning. The Wind blowing by Ferris was smoky, as if covering up his true feelings, and Crusch had always been unable to discern them.

Crusch Karsten’s Divine Protection of Wind Reading allowed her to see the flow of the Wind. That Wind caught the ripples of feelings of others, and, in general, Crusch had no issue interpreting it. However, in rare cases, she encountered those like Ferris, who were skilled at hiding their emotions.

In Ferris’s case, due to their long association, Crusch could read the Wind to a certain degree. There were others, like the Wise Man Miklotov, who could hide their feelings easily due to their many years of experience. Crusch labelled her negotiation technique as a type that was useless against experts at maintaining their composure.

As usual, Ferris did not let Crusch read his emotions, so once he put on that air, Crusch had no choice but to hold her hands together and wait for his answer, per their norm. But she was certain that she could put her full trust in Ferris. And, this time, the trust that their bond had created had again demonstrated its strength.

Ferris: “I’m thinking that Lady Crusch is surely wondering about the old man from just now.”

Crusch: “Hmm.”

Ferris: “I’ve already prepared this for you.”

Watching Ferris, who was smiling, and seeing what he was holding in his fingertips, Crusch widened her eyes, then suddenly loosened her lips into a smile.

Crusch: “You are truly the one who knows my heart best.”

Between the faintly smiling Ferris’s fingers rested a single piece of paper, one that he had neglected to hand Bordeaux, one that was waiting to be received while being shaken by the wind.

Special II:
The Day Before the Selection

1

Crusch: “My deepest apologies, but I have read your secret report.”

Crusch, gazing across the iron bars of the cell, felt as if she were looking somewhere incredibly far away. The old man sat in the center, legs crossed and posture erect.

The rags which he had worn in the garden were neatly folded and placed on the ground. From his posture, Crusch could see that her initial assessment was correct; he was a highly trained warrior. However, his hollow cheeks and faded hair also gave a sense of unhealthiness.

Old Man: “…”

Crusch: “It’s a document assessing the pros and cons of… Oh, excuse me. My apologies for beginning so abruptly without first introducing myself.”

Meeting his silent gaze, Crusch placed one hand on her chest and straightened her posture. The dusty air in the prison seemed to stir with her movements. This change in atmosphere was rather eye-catching nature, and the eyes of old man’s gaze changed slightly in nature.

Crusch: “I am the head of the Karsten family, Duchess Crusch Karsten. Earlier, I had come across you and Bordeaux in the palace garden, and I was curious about your argument.”

Old Man: “Duchess… Karsten?”

Upon hearing Crusch’s introduction, the old man’s expression changed again, this time to one of simultaneous comprehension and confusion.

Old Man: “Should the head of the Karsten family not be Sir Meckart?”

Crusch: “Meckart Karsten is my father. Two years ago, father passed the position to me, and now I hold the position of Duchess. However, you seem privy to some of our internal affairs… But what you know is probably from several years ago. I am afraid that the reason for the earlier dispute may stem from here.”

Old Man: “Were the officials too lacking and so I must be properly investigated by the Duke?”

Crusch: “In truth, I have no intention of prying into the dispute between you and Lord Bordeaux. That is just the pretext I used to convince the guards to let me down here.”

In the face of the old man’s ironic expression, Crusch could only smile bitterly.

Currently, they were at dungeon near the Royal Knights’ barracks, which was located in the immediate vicinity of the castle. Crusch’s investigation had led her here, and she had devised a suitable excuse for the guards to let her in. Right now, Ferris was probably still chatting with the guards, stalling for time.

Old Man: “You used the term excuse, so is there another reason you are here? Is this about my disrespect to Lord Bordeaux?”

Crusch: “…Of course not, Lord Bordeaux would never allow me do so. He is a firm believer in taking responsibility for his own actions, and, as such, you will be released tomorrow morning. However, if what happened today happens again, it may not be so easy to cover up.”

Old Man: “Those reckless actions will not happen again. The dispute in the garden happened due to my own immaturity, but this cold dungeon has cooled my head down.”

The words were intoned with a smile, but the old man’s expression did not change. Even so, that self-aware admission was completely sincere. The man felt no anger toward Bordeaux, only self-deprecation. However, in that self-deprecation, Crusch saw an unusually dense, almost overwhelming emotion being carried by the Wind.

—Anger. That feeling was undoubtedly anger.

The rage that had taken root at the old man's heart was strong enough to melt even steel. With a sober, razor sharp gaze, the old man looked at Crusch. And, the cause of that all-consuming rage,

Crusch: "—The White Whale."

Old Man: "…"

Crusch: "The expression in your eyes has changed."

The moment he heard Crusch's whisper, dark anger flashed through the old man's eyes. It disappeared quickly, without leaving a trace, but it did not escape the gaze of the expectant Crusch. She presented the paper she had taken into the prison, the same paper that had been scattered and left uncollected in the garden, and stepped over the metal fence to continue the conversation with the old man.

Crusch: "Like I said at first, my apologies. I have already read through this part of your report. The rest I handed the Lord Bordeaux. This is only a missing piece of it."

Old Man: "…Lord Bordeaux is disagreeable as always. I pointed out a long time ago that he should watch his attitude, it does not seem like he has listened at all."

Crusch: "That is merely a part of his nature. It's difficult to imagine a perfect Lord Bordeaux, after all."

Old Man: "It's just as you say."

For the first time, Crusch and the old man, having stumbled upon a common topic, shared a laugh. Although this was at a bald old man's expense, Crusch was glad to have shared this moment. She breathed a slight sigh and focused on the document once more.

Crusch: “Although I only have one portion of the report, it is a very relevant portion indeed. Its contents are really quite interesting to me, and, if they are all in fact true, then this is a fairly extraordinary discovery.”

Old Man: “…”

Crusch: “Appearances of the White Whale in recent years has been summarized in here. This report also contains information from Gusteko, Vollachia, Kararagi, and several small countries. The date and time of appearance and disappearance is recorded in every summary. I only have this one document, but I am sure the full report takes it to an even greater extent.”

Old Man: “…”

The old man voiced no reply.

Mirrored in the old man’s eyes, Crusch grew ever more fervent in her narration. Of course, reading this report would cause most people to react with burning passion.

The White Whale. A Witchbeast which had hounded the world since the days of the Witch. A malicious presence that had ruined countless lives and yet still roamed free. In the past, many soldiers had been assembled to subjugate the White Whale, but the crusade had ended in failure, a black spot in the dignified history of the Kingdom of Lugunica.

The damage suffered then could never fully be recovered from, and most did not know of the full extent of the crusade’s loss. That was the most despicable property of the White Whale; that those who suffered trying to stop it would be forgotten.

Crusch was far from the only angry one. Everyone who knew about the White Whale hated it with a passion.

Crusch: “But you put your anger to use, and the results were fruitful. If we can use your information to defeat the White Whale, it will come to save a great many people.”

Everyone walking in the streets, from businessmen and pedestrians, were constantly exposed to its threat, but due to the White Whale's unpredictable appearances, it was impossible to protect everyone.

Crusch: "The victims of the White Whale will be greatly reduced, thanks to your valuable actions."

Old Man: "…"

Crusch: "—«So what of it?», is what your expression says."

Old Man: "…"

The old man's expression had changed for the first time since Crusch had delved into the contents of the document. Color returned to his cold eyes, and his gaze on Crusch intensified, as if saying "what do you wish to say?". To the silent old man, Crusch responded.

Crusch: "I understand your goal, Sir. To spend so much time and effort to track down this beast, to have the spirit to keep pursuing it, and to then give up it? You could never do such a thing."

Old Man: "…So, what should I do?"

Crusch: "Your aim is doubtlessly to punish the White Whale. To find a pattern to its appearances is for no other purpose than to track it down and end it with a sufficiently prepared force. You are a swordsman, and what swordsman would throw away the sword and choose the path of escape? Ridiculous."

With the pieces she had, Crusch could puzzle together the arrangement between the old man and Bordeaux. Together, they had been planning to scope out and attack the Witchbeast, but, due to the Royal Family's illness, Bordeaux, busy with his duties on the Council of Wise Men, could no longer assist with the plan. And so, the danger of the White Whale was left unaddressed.

Crusch: "You mentioned sending messengers to Vollachia. Then, the next appearance of the White Whale will presumably be there?"

Old Man: "If the appearance in Vollachia is confirmed, then it will come to the Kingdom of Lugunica in six months' time. Yes, if that confirmation is obtained, then soldiers could be sent out, and…!

Crusch: “This is surely why Lord Bordeaux is troubled.”

Old Man: “Why… Why?! Why, now, are you going back on your word? Have you not talked at length about your grudge against the White Whale…? You too, you too were angry at having something precious being stolen from you! Have you forgotten Theresia, Bordeaux?!”

The wrathful shout tore through the air of the prison and pierced into Crusch’s ears. The old man slammed a fist on the ground and biting his lip. It was anger directed toward Bordeaux, who had broken his promise, and directed toward the White Whale, which had taken something precious from him, but, above all else, it was anger directed at himself, for being too weak to do anything.

Old Man: “I am already running out of time… If this appearance is missed, several years will pass until the White Whale returns to Lugunica. By then, my body will weaken, even more than it has already… This body still continues to die, so if the attack is postponed, my hope at vengeance disappears…”

Crusch: “…”

Weeping.

The old man’s voice was soft and contained little trace of tearfulness. However, his spirit seemed on the verge of vanishing. This weeping, shaking the old man to his core, was more than enough to carve scars on the hearts of those who heard it.

Theresia. The name spoken by the old man was a familiar one.

And rightfully so. No swordsman in the Kingdom of Lugunica could not have heard of the name of the Sword Saint. Theresia was the hero who had ended the civil war plaguing the entire Kingdom. She was beautiful, strong, and the sword loved her more than it loved anything else.

And, in the end, she had been killed by the very White Whale she had been sent to subjugate.

Crusch: “Ah.”

Immediately after the mention of Theresia’s name invoked, another existence was invoked in the recesses of Crusch’s mind.

A person with close ties to Theresia, a person who had reached the pinnacle of swordsmanship, a person who made Crusch tremble. There was only one such man in her memory. The legendary man was one who had followed the way of the sword, one who had also been one who could end a war with a sword. He had also loved the woman who was loved by the sword.

He had been a demon who had taken Theresia from the sword god.

Crusch: “The Sword Demon, Wilhelm van Astrea.”

This man was legend upon legend, with a story so fascinating that it was remembered by song. Crusch herself, had too loved that song in childhood.

Then, in front of her was the ghost she had long admired.

Wilhelm: “I abandoned that particular name. I cast off my title and house, van Astrea.”

Crusch: “I see. What name do you go by now?”

Wilhelm: “Trias. The name of a fallen noble house, once located in the outskirts of Lugunica, which was destroyed decades ago. The last head of house loved his people dearly, even though he lacked the power to defend his territory. The current me is merely wandering between worlds, unable to even restore righteousness to the house of my birth. I have only my family name left.”

Crusch: “Wilhelm Trias.”

Wilhelm: “Yes. This is the now shameful name of former Sword Demon.”

Placing a fist on the cold floor, the old man, Wilhelm, made a respectful gesture toward Crusch.

That attitude toward a member of the nobility would typically be marked as disrespectful, but Crusch did not notice this at all. In fact, this display could better be said to have fascinated Crusch so much she could hardly remember to breathe.

Crusch: "Dedicating so much to track the whale… are you aiming to avenge his wife?"

Wilhelm: "I have no other goal… No, I have no other reason to live."

In his clear eyes, there rested no sign of hesitation.

Crusch had finally arrived at the point where she fully understood Wilhelm's intentions, and understood the goal he had dedicated a decade to.

—And also understood that, considering the current situation, that goal would not be fulfilled.

Crusch: "—I have understood your wish, but you must understand that that wish cannot be fulfilled as is."

Wilhelm: "…Why not?"

Crusch: "If you rely on Lord Bordeaux, Lord Bordeaux will not be able to act in time to apprehend the Whale in half a year's time."

As long as the Royal Family was ill, no matter what fate would become of them, the Kingdom would surely enter into an unprecedented state of confusion. The Kingdom and its people would be completely shaken, and everything would be subject to change. The senior aristocrats would try to manage, but, in the end, it was the role of the Council of Wise Men to guide Lugunica back into stability.

Wilhelm: "…"

Wilhelm remained silent. However, his mind was evidently nowhere near as calm as him expression and attitude would suggest.

Crusch could see crushing, overwhelming anger emanating from Wilhelm. Yes, pure, blind rage.

Right now, the only emotion that remained in the Sword Demon's ghost was wrath.

—Regret.

That was the emotion that Crusch felt toward Wilhelm, and endless regret. Regret, resignation, pity. Such emotions emerged one after another.

Choosing to be bound to a way of life, life choosing a path for one to be bound to. They seemed similar, but, in essence, they were completely different.

Being her real self, acting the way her soul desires to, was how Crusch had decided to absolutely live. Living as if bathed in Wind, that was what Crusch had regarded as the most perfect, the most beautiful way to live.

Therefore, the path of the Sword Demon, who had been bound to his way of life, was too sad, in reality. With unbearable burning anger in his heart, even after a decade, the Sword Demon's blade had stayed honed, and kept its sharpness. If his long-cherished wish could not be reached, then his sharpness could do nothing but tarnish.

Crusch was overcome with the desire to help him, but the same responsibility that had bound Bordeaux bound Crusch as well. Crusch finally believed she understood the meaning of Bordeaux's bitterness in that garden.

Or, rather, to Bordeaux, the name of Theresia would be more meaningful. The Wilhelm who spoke of Bordeaux without a distant title, and the Bordeaux who had called Wilhelm a friend and comrade. Crusch, in this moment, could not measure up to the relationship between them.

Wilhelm: "I must thank you for your precious time, but it seems as if further dialogue between us will no longer be significant."

Although Crusch's face presented no obvious emotion, sometimes, eyes were more eloquent than words. In Crusch's amber eyes, Wilhelm found an answer. Even without relying on a Divine Protection of Wind Reading, with experience, an ordinary person could discern what they needed to.

Having been seen through, Crusch did not commit a dishonorable behavior such as trying to hide her intent.

Crusch: "After this, what will you do?"

Wilhelm: "My plans have not changed. If I cannot depend on Lord Bordeaux, I will find another influential person to collaborate with. Before this corpse I call my body decays, it must fulfill its purpose of finding revenge."

Crusch: "…"

Wilhelm was in a dilemma.

Only the senior aristocrats had the power to return an answer to Wilhelm's request. But those senior aristocrats were now struggling to quell the confusion resulting from the royal illness. If he found a family of lower aristocrats willing to lend a hand, their house would likely lack the ability to subjugate the White Whale.

If he looked to a sponsor outside of the aristocracy, there would be further complications. A powerful businessman, such as the old fox Russell Fellow, who was based in the Lugunica, would be more concerned with using the White Whale's subjugation for commerce than for crusade.

That said, Wilhelm becoming a target for assassins would be not unlikely. Before Wilhelm had left his family, the prestige of the Astrea family would have protected him. However, now Wilhelm called himself Trias. He could no longer consider himself an Astrea. And so, if any unfortunate situation ever came about,

Crusch: "Do not lose yourself to rage. The only one who can protect you is yourself."

Wilhelm: "I understand. The inability to achieve my goal because of such frivolity would bring me a greater shame than anything else. Thank you for your heartfelt advice.”

Although he spoke politely, Wilhelm’s thoughts were already far removed from Crusch. Crusch could only think that the old man had already carefully considered each of her ideas on many sleepless nights.

If there was one thing that he had not considered due to his lack of knowledge, it was the calamity plaguing the castle. And that information could absolutely not be leaked.

Crusch: “Sir Trias… No, Lord Trias, I apologize for making you speak of that past that you do not mention lightly. Although I wish there was more I could do, I sincerely hope that your desire will be fulfilled.”

Wilhelm: “Those are wasteful words.”

Closing his eyes, Wilhelm clearly had no intent of speaking again. Crusch had also arrived at this point, where more words would be meaningless. Both sides were speechless. Crusch turned her back to Wilhelm. Her long green hair cut through the air of the prison, and seemed to propel her to its exit.

Ferris: “The conversation went smoothly? By the looks of it, it did go smoothly.”

Climbing the stairs, holding back a sigh, Crusch heard a soft shout. It was Ferris, sitting in the entrance of the guard barracks, rocking back and forth on his chair, causing a creaking sound.

He tossed the cards in his hand on the table and smiled at the two losing guards he was competing with.

Ferris: “Well, since my master is back, that’ll be all for today. I’ll send a knight by later to collect my winnings, so please be prepared.”

Crusch: “What on earth are you betting on this time?”

Ferris: “Ferri would feel really embarrassed saying it, but, but, if Lady Crusch really wants to know, Ferri will bite back his shame and. Lady Crusch?”

Ferris’s fidgeting, blushing expression changed as he approached Crusch. His fingertips brushed Crusch’s cheeks, and the two naturally met their gazes.

Ferris: “Your complexion isn’t so good, is something wrong?”

Crusch: “I still cannot hide anything from you… It is just like the situation with Prince Fourier. My troubles feel overwhelming, which makes me angry at my own powerlessness.”

Ferris: “But, even so, Lady Crusch hasn’t stopped moving forward.”

Ferris gently wrapped a hand around one of Crusch’s, which was painfully tense. The touch caused Crusch’s shoulder to relax a little, and she returned Ferris’s smile.

Crusch: “Really, I can never win against you. You seem to know me better than I do.”

Ferris: “Of course, I already know everything. Inside and outside, there are hardly any places of Lady Crusch that I haven’t touched yet.”

Hearing Ferris’s colorful and rather dramatic words, Crusch was unsure of why the two guards behind them had reacted with confusion. While curious about the reaction, Crusch nodded in agreement.

Crusch: “I will withdraw today, but tomorrow will be different, and tomorrow’s tomorrow will also be different. Right.”

2

In the days after encountering Wilhelm, Crusch passed her time as she had expected.

The Royal Family’s health continued to decline, and the liberated Wilhelm fruitlessly searched for another collaborator. Crusch was nigh buried in her work in the Kingdom’s affairs and had needed to shamefully request her retired father's help in governing the Karsten territories.

Of course, neither those problems were Crusch's fault alone, but as long as she was involved in them, she would be frustrated at her inability to help.

This almost arrogant sense of responsibility was a part of Crusch Karsten's creed. Those cloudy, seemingly endless days eventually came to an abrupt end.

—The King of Lugunica, Randohal Lugunica, passed away.

And following him came the rest of the Royal Family, Fourier Lugunica being no exception. Fourier expired with Crusch holding his hand until the very last.

And only Ferris had seen the tears streaming down Crusch's face.

Leip: "The Dragon History Stone has new writing carved upon it. I'm sure everyone understands what this means."

In the parliament where the senior aristocrats met together, an old man was unable to hide his excitement. He was Baron Leip Barielle. Although he was the Lord of the Barielle territory, he was also a person who had been entrusted with a special task by the Royal Family. And his role was,

???: "A change in the Dragon History Stone… Is there a new prophecy concerning the future of the kingdom?"

Leip: "This is exactly the case. As is my duty anointed by His Majesty, I will convey to the assembled Lords about the change in Dragon History Stone. Please listen carefully."

He knelt and offered a respectful salute to the members of the parliament. Leip's rank was not so high that he should be part of a meeting of senior aristocrats. Still, they all paid Leip the same respect. This was the influence of the Dragon History Stone.

The Dragon History Stone—it was one of the sacraments given as proof of the Covenant in place between the Royal Family and the Divine Dragon Volcanica. Like the Blood of the Dragon that would bring plentiful harvests to the land, the Dragon History Stone was treated as a sacred artifact, and was kept secure in a room within the Royal Castle, limited to the Royal Family and some like Leip. Only those with qualifications could enter to read it.

The Dragon History Stone appeared to be a square black plate, made of an unknown mineral. Much of its function was also not understood. The only certain thing was that when the Kingdom approached a crisis, the Dragon History Stone would describe the method to overcome it.

In the past, Lugunica had been saved many times from crisis due to the writ of the Dragon History Stone, and its reliability was more or less guaranteed. However,

Bordeaux: “Wait… Although the prophecy comes from the Dragon History Stone, are we certain we can trust it?”

Interrupting Leip’s description of the Stone’s content was a bald old man, Bordeaux. His severe, glaring expression looked down on the smaller Leip from above. Leip frowned and stared back up at Bordeaux.

Leip: “Trust? That should not be a question, Lord Bordeaux. The Dragon History Stone has never been wrong. As a member of the Council of Wise Men, surely you would be aware of this?”

Bordeaux: “I will acknowledge that it has saved the Kingdom many times, but this time is different. If the Dragon History Stone had served its purpose and tried to save the Kingdom, why did it not react to the illness of His Highness and the rest of the Royal Family? Surely the correct path would have been to save them!”

Aristocrats: “…”

Bordeaux’s phrasing was rough, spoken in a loud voice, and the majority of the assembled aristocrats seemed to agree with him.

Crusch, who was also seated in the parliament, nodded her assent. She firmly believed that if the Dragon History Stone had wanted to help Lugunica, the Royal Family should have been saved.

The strength her hand possessed as it held Fourier's had vanished, and a shadow came over her face.

Remorse, that was all she felt.

Leip: "—Concerning that, there is something I must tell everyone."

Bordeaux: "…Yes, what is it?"

Leip: "I did not mention this at first for a good reason, and I hope that everyone will be well-aware of it soon. Please listen carefully."

Bordeaux: "Clearly state what you want to say!"

Leip: "The prophecy that appeared in the Dragon History Stone did so before His Majesty passed away."

Bordeaux was stunned by Leip's words.

But that reaction was not limited to Bordeaux. Every aristocrats seated at the parliament, watching over the exchange, opened their mouths in shock.

Crusch was also lost for words. She fixed Leip with a look of disgust.

Leip: "Everyone must be wondering why I kept silent, so let me first clarify that I have not turned my back on His Majesty."

Bordeaux: "You bastard, have you forgotten your duty? Not only have you forgotten to fulfill your duty, you brazenly say it! To neglect to mention the guidance of the Kingdom engraved on the Dragon History Stone…!"

???: "Did the content of the Dragon History Stone implicitly suggest that His Majesty and his family would all pass away?"

Bordeaux: "What…?!"

Crusch exhaled sharply as that bomb was dropped on the conversation. Bordeaux, face severely reddening, turned to search for the source of those words. When,

Miklotov: “Hmm… Lord Bordeaux seems to have calmed down a little. Count Leip, can you discuss this in greater detail?”

Leip: “As you will.”

The old man who had interrupted Bordeaux stroked his long, white beard.

The representative of Council of Wise Men, Miklotov, kept a calm composure as he prompted a change in the course of the conversation.

Leip: “Ten days ago, when His Majesty was still alive, was when I first found the prophecy… I should have consulted with His Majesty, or with the assembled Lords… but instead I kept this knowledge to myself at my own discretion.”

Miklotov: “Hmm… Why did you do so?”

Leip: “The prophecy was as follows—«When the Royal Family’s line ends, the Kingdom shall find five candidates, chosen by an emblem, to tie a new Covenant as a Dragon Shrine Maiden». I did not have the heart to tell this to His Majesty while he was on his deathbed.

Aristocrats: “…What?”

Hearing Leip’s words, the senior aristocrats all sighed.

What a cruel prophecy. To tell the desperately struggling Royal Family and aristocrats that the disease could not be cured, to kill off all hope. Leip’s feelings, in this case, could not be dismissed.

Aristocrat: “The Dragon History Stone… Not existing royalty, but a new Ruler? What do you mean by five people?”

Leip: “There is an Insignia. A jewel that has been handed down by the Royal Family of Lugunica, informing them about the Covenant with the Dragon. At of the moment of His Majesty’s demise, and the bloodline of the Royal Family ended, it lost its light, but… It will shine brightly in the hands of a new, worthy person.”

Aristocrat: “You want us to find five people… who can make this insignia shine?! Preposterous! It will not be possible to determine who shall sit on the throne in such a way!”

Leip: “So you will ignore the writ?! If we cannot select a Shrine Maiden capable of bearing the Covenant, the history of Lugunica will end here! And the same is true of its bond with the Dragon!”

Those who attempted to deny this were met with Leip’s fierce words. Those who refuted him with their common sense were all forced to keep their mouths shut.

Crusch: “Would you mind if I speak?”

Leip: “Please, do you have any opinions you would like to share, Duchess Karsten?”

Crusch: “It is nothing that important. It is only natural that negative opinions arise, but first we should determine the accuracy of the writ. Could you bring out these Insignias?”

Leip: “I have prepared one for this moment. Bring it.”

Nodding to Crusch’s words, Leip gave a signal, and the doors of the parliament opened. Some servants wheeled in a cart, the Insignia of the Royal Family of Lugunica on top. Priority was given to those with strong ties to the Royal Family, such as the Royal Knights.

A black triangular stone, with a dragon carved on it in gold. and a red gem in the center. Before the Royal Family died, the red gem would always shine as a sign of the Royal Family’s prestige, but now it grew dim in the face of the King’s demise.

Aristocrat: “It will happen when this thing glows again, correct?”

Leip: “That is correct. If you have what it takes.”

The Insignia in the hands of the servants, each person surrounding the round table was lined up. Some were washed by cold sweat, others’ breaths were taken away, all as they looked down upon the Insignia.

If it shone while held by one’s hands, it would mean that person would have opened the way to the throne. Some cracked under that burden, others cracked due to their modest ambition.

Aristocrat: “What about Baron Leip?”

Leip: “If I were to make the Insignia shine after having withheld the information about the prophecy, it would only invite suspicion. The Stone would never have chosen something that would cause such discord.”

Leip shook his head at the question, but to what extent was that a serious denial?

Snorting, Bordeaux took the initiative to pick up the Insignia; however, its glow remained non-existent. The insignia, apparently, had not chosen him.

Other members of the Council of Wise Men, including Miklotov, also picked it up, held it in their hands, and shook their heads. As time went on, everyone seated at the round table picked up the insignia, and faint gasps and small sighs spilled out, one after the other.

But then…

Miktolov: “…What?”

A rare look of surprise on his usually calm face, the first to speak was Miktolov. However, that must have been a reflection of the feelings of everyone who had gathered upon this place.

The dazzling brilliance of the Insignia made Crusch look at her own palm, and nod.

Crusch: “Apparently, even those who are unworthy can do something for the Kingdom as well.”

Saying so with surprising calmness, Crusch held out her palm, raised her head, and closed her eyes. And looked upwards.

With her eyes closed, she felt that she could see Fourier's last smile.

3

—There was subsequent confusion over Crusch's position. Thanks to the prophecy of Dragon History Stone, to Crusch's existence, the contents of Leip's words were proven real.

And thanks to this, she was now not only a Duchess, but a provisional candidate for the throne, which bestowed her significantly more power in parliament. And,

Ferris: "From the first time Ferri saw Lady Crusch, Ferri thought the she would be destined for something much greater than just a statesman!"

Having heard of Crusch's new position, Ferris clearly felt a great amount of joy, which Crusch had not even associated with her circumstances until now.

Ferris: "Lady Crusch, why are you stroking my head? I'm happy, really happy, but my ears are really weak!"

Crusch: "You always serve me loyally. From now on, I'll be asking even more from you."

Ferris: "Yes, understood. Ferri is more and more captivated by Lady Crusch with each passing day."

Crusch's praise made Ferris blush and his tail swayed from side-to-side. Then his expression sobered slightly.

Ferris: "So, what is Lady Crusch's position now?"

Crusch: "I will be a provisional candidate for the throne. There are four other candidates who are yet to be found. If I win, I will become a Shrine Maiden for the dragon."

Ferris: "But even with a prophecy from the Dragon History Stone, how much of that absurd story can you believe? Although you'll have a chance to confirm it with the Dragon."

Crusch: “Lord Bordeaux also has some feelings of suspicion. He thinks that this may be a story concocted by Leip Barielle… I, too, am a little concerned about Count Leip’s attitude. And, Margrave Mathers was also suspiciously quiet.”

The eccentric Roswaal L. Mathers had also been in attendance at the parliament meeting, dressed in his typical clownish makeup and outfit. Crusch found it curious that someone who rarely attended important discussions on the affairs of the Kingdom had been so intensely interested in the Royal Selection, and that, furthermore, he had not acted upon his interest.

Crusch: “Either way, pondering upon too many unanswerable questions is a waste of time. There is nothing that I nor Lord Bordeaux can do regarding Count Leip. And I’m sure that I look suspicious as well.”

Ferris: “Hmph. Are there really such ungrateful people who would suspect Lady Crusch?”

Crusch: “Even I found my timing in that incident more suspicious than just a coincidence. I could not have predicted the situation.”

Ferris: “But even with the timing, hadn’t Lady Crusch considered that she might be a candidate at all?”

In reply to Ferris, Crusch smiled bitterly. Ferris truly knew her heart better than she knew it herself.

Crusch recalled the emotions she had felt during that meeting. When Leip mentioned the Dragon History Stone, Crusch was just as surprised as anyone else. She had agreed with Bordeaux’s argument, and had felt anger at Leip’s reply.

But when asked to try the Royal Insignia, Crusch had done so without hesitation. And upon sighting the red gem of the Insignia shining so brilliantly, Crusch had felt no trace of surprise. There was only the sound of the Wind blowing from her soul.

—She had finally been given the opportunity.

Fourier’s wishes, his hopes for the kingdom, which he had told only her. She had found the opportunity to answer to them. To have Fourier's death become a sacrifice, to let his demise be a steppingstone to fulfilling his dreams.

Crusch Karsten calmly accepted this opportunity.

And this very opportunity had presented her with an answer to another problem that had been plaguing her.

Crusch: "Ferris, I have a favor to ask."

Ferris: "I have already confirmed his location. I will be sure to transmit Crusch's message."

Ferris had immediately understood Crusch's intent. Seeing this, Crusch smiled a slightly bitter smile, and expression that was already becoming familiar.

Crusch: "Summon the Sword Demon—We shall have a discussion at the estate."

4

Wilhelm: "To be summoned like this, I cannot help but feel slight trepidation."

Wilhelm, kneeling and offering the most respectful salute, had been personally invited and received by Crusch. They met in the reception room of the Karsten Estate.

Crusch: "You do not seem to have changed much since the last time I saw you."

Wilhelm: "Indeed, Karsten-kyo also seems to be in the same state of well-being as last time."

During their social routine, the two surveyed each other carefully. Crusch's investigations had told her that since their previous meeting, Wilhelm's actions had been fruitless, and had fully been expecting him to accept this invitation.

Ferris: "It seems that neither party is engaging in dialogue."

Wilhelm: "«I will be hearing the truth today», is what your messenger told me, so I would appreciate it if you would directly discuss the main topic today."

His gaze turned slightly to Ferris, who was standing next to Crusch, holding her wrist. Today, Ferris was wearing a short dress, through which his tail extended.

Cunning, but skilled at prompting discussion, a skill that benefitted a member of the nobility. Better than herself, at the very least. Crusch gave this mental evaluation of Ferris. Setting that thought aside,

Crusch: "The «truth» being referred to is the reason why Bordeaux was unable to assist you in subjugating the White Whale."

Wilhelm: "Indeed, no matter who I ask, I never receive a straight answer. What on earth is so grave that no one is willing to say it? Please inform me."

Crusch: "Once you know, there is no going back. Knowing this, do you still want the answer?"

Wilhelm: "If this is an obstacle in my quest for the vengeance of my wife, I will overcome it."

Steel's nature was one never to bend.

Hearing Wilhelm's reply, Crusch exhaled deeply.

It was the answer she had been expecting, as well as the answer she had been hoping to hear. But giving a reply was difficult.

What Crusch was about to discuss was information that could only disclosed to a limited number of people in the Kingdom. Leaking it to Wilhelm, an exile from the house of the Sword Saint, was not something that could be done lightly.

She braced herself and revealed her information in one beat. But that was all it took.

Crusch: "His Majesty Randohal has passed away."

Wilhelm: “—!”

Wilhelm’s eyes widened, and his expression became one of understanding. But the surprise was not over.

Crusch: “It is not just His Majesty. The entire bloodline of the ancient Royal Family of Lugunica has come to an end.”

Wilhelm: “Absurd! Such a thing cannot happen!”

The kneeling Wilhelm looked up, bared his teeth, and raised his voice. Those words were far too absurd and had brought fury to the old man. It was completely expected, after all Wilhelm—

Crusch: “Is it a shock to you, one who formerly led the Royal Knights of Lugunica?”

Wilhelm: “…”

Crusch: “This is the truth of the matter. His Majesty and his relatives were struck down by an illness which seemed to affect the blood of the Royal Family solely. Although the best healers in the country were summoned, the Royal Family did not survive.”

Wilhelm: “The entire Royal Family… Their bloodline has been disrupted… such a thing, how could it possibly…?”

Wilhelm fell shakily onto his hands as Crusch made the cold announcement. In truth, he understood.

The abrupt change in Bordeaux and the reason why no one would hear his appeal. Something major, something affecting the very existence of the Kingdom—something enough to turn even the White Whale into a mere triviality.

But Wilhelm’s anger was not shallow enough for him to be able to discard it.

But to whom did he hold this anger toward? Where should he direct it? What should he do about it? Even Wilhelm did not know, and so he pushed a fist against the floor and attempted to stifle it. The fist on the floor trembled, the floor cracked, and his blood flowed. He closed his eyes and bit his lip, trying to summon the last bit of reserve he had left.

But this could not be.

This should not be.

Crusch: “This is not the place that you should be directing your anger toward.”

Wilhelm: “—What…”

Crusch: “Your situation has not changed, except that the clouds have cleared and that you have found your answer. Now that you know the answer, what are your thoughts?”

Wilhelm: “There is no need to humiliate me further. You… What do you understand…?!”

Crusch: “I certainly do not understand anything, and I do not have the capability to even try. Currently, I am merely attempting to insert myself into a story whose characters I admire, who are on the verge of resigning themselves and stopping.”

Wilhelm’s still contained fury, however, the fire had died down slightly. Because it was a fleeting, swaying flame, one which had lost sight of a future. It was far from the intense flame Crusch wanted to see, but it was a flame, nonetheless.

Crusch: “I told you, Wilhelm. After hearing the truth, there is no turning back. This is a matter concerning the future of the kingdom, and you are now just an old tree of an experienced swordsmen.”

Wilhelm: “…And why do you want to belittle this dying, weathered tree?”

Crusch: “No, you misunderstand me, Wilhelm. What I want from you is just one answer. It is your turn to answer. I have been asking you from the beginning, first the encounter in the prison, and now here. Even if we meet again, I will continue posing the same initial question.”

Wilhelm: "…"

Crusch: "Wilhelm Trias—Are you truly okay with the way this affair will develop?"

A sigh of relief.

The old man's eyes, which had fallen into a murky depression, shot open. In there, was a blue that reflected the sky.

Crusch nodded.

Crusch: "In front of you, is the Duchess who is currently one of the most important people in the Kingdom. Prior to this, the senior aristocrats who could lend a hand to you denied you, and those who were willing to assist could not provide the necessary strength to defeat the Whale. Others who could assist would choose to use the subjugation as an excuse for personal gain."

Wilhelm: "You… What, exactly, are you trying to say…?"

Crusch: "It's the same question I have asked you, and I will keep asking. Other than the answer to this question, between the two of us, there is nothing more to discuss."

Wilhelm: "…"

Wilhelm fell silent and tried to look deep into Crusch's heart.

But, Crusch's heart was not something that Wilhelm could see through. Even Crusch herself had difficulty adequately expressing what she felt. Perhaps, Ferris was the only one who could see though her.

And that Ferris, ignoring the heat between Crusch and Wilhelm, leaned closer into Crusch, his face showing no sign of worry or anxiety. Because he knew that his role was, above all, to provide Crusch with support. And Crusch, perhaps more than anyone else, understood Ferris and what actions meant.

Therefore, Crusch Karsten continued to question Wilhelm relentlessly.

Crusch: “Wilhelm. Shall you continue like this, soon your path will be cut off. And, with that path, your quest for vengeance on the Witchbeast cannot be fulfilled. And you will continue to waste away.”

Wilhelm: “…You are willing to lend me a chance to continue to swing my sword?”

Crusch: “I will say it again. Wilhelm, the one posing the question is me. The one who must answer is you.”

Wilhelm: “…”

Crossing her arms, Crusch threw those words at him. Hearing them, Wilhelm exhaled deeply and closed his eyes.

Then he fixed his posture, adjusted his pose on the spot, and opened his eyes.

The blue flame dwelling in his eyes caused Crusch to tremble unconsciously.

Wilhelm: “—In slaying the White Whale that killed my wife, I would like you to lend me your power.”

Crusch: “…I am just the same as the senior aristocrats that refused all your proposals. Why appeal to me?”

Wilhelm: “Duchess Karsten, can you forgive the White Whale and allow it to continue to wreak havoc upon Lugunica?”

Crusch: “I will not forgive it. Certainly, I could never forgive such cruelty, such barbarity, such violence, such ruthlessness. But—”

Pausing, Crusch gazed at Wilhelm and closed her eyes.

Crusch: “What I find most unforgivable is that the existence of the White Whale made so many people change their way of living. Unable to be themselves and act as their soul desires, their souls are defiled and become dim… That is what I find unforgivable. So, Wilhelm. What I cannot forgive today is your attitude.”

Wilhelm: “…I am a most unworthy figure, aren’t I?”

Crusch: “Yes, unworthy. I cannot bear to look at you. Such humiliation is not something that should be experienced. Therefore, the man-eating fiend causing it is also unforgivable.”

Wilhelm: “…”

Wilhelm raised his gaze to meet Crusch’s eyes. Crusch unflinchingly faced his sharp, piercing gaze.

Crossing gazes, the two simultaneously relaxed their mouths, and smiled as one.

Wilhelm: “What will you ask of this weathered, old tree, my Lord?”

Crusch: “It has been decided. All I wish to see is true, bright, unashamed soul of the Sword Demon, Wilhelm van Astrea. There is little aside from that.”

Wilhelm: “I cast off the title Sword Demon and the house Astrea a long time ago. As long as the White Whale lives, I do not intend to reclaim either of them.”

Crusch: “Then, allow me to prepare the victory ceremony for you. We will one day recover your name, Wilhelm.”

Wilhelm: “—Yes.”

He nodded solemnly as a response to Crusch’s words and accepted them. Seeing his gesture, Crusch nodded, satisfied, and approached Wilhelm, detaching the sword that hung at her waist.

Crusch: “Receive it.”

Wilhelm received the sword as if it were natural, and unsheathed it in a single smooth flowing motion. Turning it around, the sword was presented to Crusch. Upon receiving it, Crusch moved it to lightly touch Wilhelm’s left shoulder with its tip, then repeated the motion on his right shoulder.

Crusch: “I hold only one expectation toward you, Wilhelm. As long as you live up to it, all will be well.”

Wilhelm: “My sword shall be devoted to you. My body shall be indebted to you. My own soul shall make an Oath to you.”

Crusch: “—Mhm. That is good.”

In response to that oath, Crusch pulled the blade, and held it out in front of Wilhelm. Presenting the sword to Wilhelm again, Wilhelm received it, sheathing it back into its scabbard, and raised it in reverence. They nod at each other in understanding.

Crusch: “Keep this sword. As a swordsman, holding a sword is necessary, no?”

Wilhelm: “But…”

Crusch: “I want to see you wielding this sword, with the attitude of a swordsman.

In the face of Crusch’s expectation, Wilhelm blinked and stood. Then, the tall old man with that treasured sword bowed to Crusch, attached his new sword to his waist, and straightened up.

In that moment, Crusch felt her previous state of confusion and anxiety blow away.

—Here, the Oath between the Duchess and the swordsman was made.

To fulfill Wilhelm’s wish and to fulfill Fourier’s dreams. If the heavens had chosen Crusch Karsten for this task, she would live up to their will.

To follow the guidance of one’s soul and to act the way it was desired. In this regard, Crusch would take up all that she could carry and stride toward a tranquil, cherished, distant future.

—On this day, the Sword Demon found his greatest ally in his quest to subjugate the White Whale.

This was the real beginning of the unity of Royal Selection’s Crusch

Camp.

5

Ferris: “Ahhhhh~, seeing you two would make anyone jealous.”

Wilhelm, who had found a path to fulfilling his ambition, and Crusch, who had established a connection with the one she had admired so much. Seeing how the two had laid down their worries and were now embracing in joy, Ferris bounced on his heels.

Ferris: “Lady Crusch jumped into the main topic way too quickly.”

Originally, Crusch had meant to first relay the story of the King’s death, before denouncing the White Whale and finally persuading Wilhelm to join the camp.

Even so, a fiery passion had entered Crusch, and she had jumped straight into recruiting Wilhelm. Although Wilhelm’s blindness worked in their advantage, Ferris’s heart was pounding like he had just successfully walked off a tightrope. He did not want to see a despondent Lady Crusch who had failed in her task, especially since the one she had been trying to recruit was the Sword Demon who she had admired so much.

Ferris: “Lady Crusch really does make people anxious… But, that’s also a very moving quality.”

Becoming a King Candidate and aiming to garner support by hunting the White Whale. Ignoring the preliminaries of conversation and immediately bringing up the main topic, Crusch had been clearly eager to free Wilhelm, in turn clouded by his frustration and desire for revenge.

Ferris, too, would stand by their side and support them through their hunt. He too was well-aware of what the White Whale had done to so many families, and as one of the country’s leading healers, Ferris believed in removing as much weakness as possible in the Kingdom.

Ferris: “Seeing this charming Lady Crusch, Ferri doesn’t want to take his eyes off her for even a second.”

Quietly narrowing his calm yellow eyes, Ferris regarded the old man who had just shed away a heavy burden and gained the weight of Crusch’s expectations.

A person who Crusch had taken a personal interest in. What would happen if he betrayed her expectations?

Ferris: “There are some things that I dislike thinking about.”

The young man’s words were so quiet that they dissipated in the wind before they could reach anyone’s ears.

—Six months after that evening, when the Royal Selection was well under way, the dream of the subjugation of the White Whale became a reality.

Short Story Compendium 3

Frederica and Petra’s Maid Days I
(Volume 10; Melon Books)
(Translation Pending)

Frederica and Petra’s Maid Days II
(Volume 11; Melon Books)
(Translation Pending)

Frederica and Petra’s Maid Days III (Volume 12; Melon Books)

1

It was an event that happened during the rest period after a long day’s work.

Frederica and Petra were soaking in the waters of a warm bath after a hard day’s work.

“Sister Frederica, were you able to do everything without mistakes from the beginning?”

“Huh?” Frederica squeaked at the younger maid’s sudden question, her voice echoing off the bathroom walls.

In terms of her training to work as a maid under Frederica, Petra’s growth and ability to learn were truly remarkable. Her appearance as she listened was adorable, and she would always compliment those around her.

Frederica was in the middle of evaluating Petra’s efforts when she asked her that sudden question.

Honestly, she was surprised. Surprised, which changed into amusement. She certainly wasn’t perfect in the beginning.

“Sister Frederica? Why are you laughing?”

“Haha! It’s just so funny to hear that. I was actually around your age when I started working. And just like you, I couldn’t do anything at the start. No, I was worse than you.”

“What? No way. It’s not good to lie like that.”

Despite Frederica’s response, Petra decided to reprimand her in her own way, which only made Frederica smile even more.

"I'm happy that you think so highly of me. But there was a time when I was inexperienced and had to be taught the basics by my senior."

"…Sister Frederica's senior…" Petra made a complicated face as she struggled to imagine that.

Seeing Petra wear such a deeply concerned expression, Frederica rested her hand on her cheek. "Hmm, it's kind of embarrassing, but how about I tell you a story about my early days as a maid?"

"…! Yes, please! I want to hear about your awkward past!"

"D-Don't say it like that! Geez, this girl…"

The way she said it made it sound like Frederica was making a naked confession.

Although the two maids weren't wearing a single stitch of clothing, that wasn't quite the same thing.

And talking about her rookie days, comparing herself to Petra was in fact embarrassing.

"You don't have to act so excited. I'm starting to regret bringing this up…"

"Ah, no. You can't just get out of this now! You know all of my worst qualities, so this will make us even!"

"You'll definitely grow up into a troublesome maid. I'll have to tell Mr. Subaru about this later," Frederica decided, being defeated by the pushy Petra.

In any case, Frederica now had to satisfy the sparkly eyed Petra.

"Right then, where do I start…"

"Umm…Start from your senior! I want to hear about your senior. What kind of maid was she?"

"The person who taught me…"

Petra's idea saved Frederica from her initial struggle. But the new topic caused Frederica to struggle with her words.

A senior housekeeper. Just like Frederica was one to Petra, there was another who was one to her. But that wasn't something that was easy for her to speak of.

"Could we do this some other time?"

"Sister Fre-de-ri-ca."

"I-I get it. You don't have to look at me like that…" Frederica lost to the angelic, pleading eyes before her. "First, let me correct one thing. The person who taught me wasn't a maid. He was the steward of the mansion at the time."

"The steward?"

"A steward is someone that's in charge of the butlers and maids. A role that requires the ability and trust to look after a household. The Mathers household was my first workplace, and he was in charge of it."

Frederica tried her best to remove any preconceived notions that the sparkly eyed Petra had. But the harshness of her voice still came through.

"A man. The steward…"

"His name was Clind. He was the master's steward for a long time… And in fact, he was the perfect servant anyone could ask for. You could learn a lot from him. But stay away from him any other time."

"S-Sister Frederica? You're acting kind of scary…"

"Sorry. I wasn't trying to scare you. But, judging from what he likes, you're definitely his type, Petra. So stay away from him."

Frederica's face started to turn red, irrelevant to the water, while Petra looked on worriedly. Seeing that, Frederica lowered her eyes and reached out to touch Petra's cheek softly. "Listen, Petra. Clind is a very dangerous man. He may look proper, but his mind is dirty and twisted. He's a pervert that stares at young girls with a lewd gaze!"

"A-A pervert!"

"That's why he looked after me diligently when I first started.. And I believed that that was just kindness. But after a few years, his attitude completely changed…!"

Recalling such memories made her blood boil. It was right when she was going through her growth spurt: she quickly got taller, and her breasts got larger.

Her body was changing from a girl to a woman. And Clind's attitude towards Frederica had changed because of that. Seeing her steward suddenly become cold towards her, Frederica was worried that she'd done something to offend him. But that had shifted to resentment once she realized the truth of the situation.

And in the end, affection became resentment, and their relationship remained frosty to this day.

Petra watched silently as Frederica became red with rage.

And so she called out to Frederica and swam over to her, before leaping into her arms.

"I don't like the steward who taught you either!"

"R-Really? That's great…Wait, great isn't quite the right word I'm looking for. Accurate? Proper? Logical…? "

"Anyway! I don't like him! Now we're the same!" grinned Petra.

"Yes, we are… Then let's leave it at that."

Frederica was still worrying that telling her was a mistake, but seeing how Petra had become more guarded, she decided to leave it at that.

And besides…

"Sister Frederica, can I join you in your room? I want to sleep together."

"Oh, you're such a spoiled child. Okay. Alright, bring your pillow over."

Since Petra was so cute, it seemed fine as it was.

2

After hearing about the man called Clind, Petra came to a realization. At this rate, Frederica would one day be taken away by some man.

Petra had great respect for Frederica.

Though she'd only known Frederica for a few days, she still felt strongly protective about her, regardless of how little time had passed.

If time actually mattered, then her feelings of love would be considered shallow. But feelings could surpass time. Feelings of love… and of respect.

Although she conceded that time could make feelings stronger as well.

And by seeing Frederica like that in the bath, she realized that Frederica had strong, deep, and complex feelings towards a steward that Petra had never met.

It was similar to hearing her mother complain about her father. But her mother didn't hate him. In fact, they loved each other.

In any case, the human heart is complex. Even more so if the person didn't realize it themselves.

That's why Petra came to a clear conclusion. She would become someone that Frederica loved more than whatever she had felt for that man.

Petra knocked on the door and called in. "Sister Frederica, can I come in?”

“Yes, come on in.”

All live-in servants were given their own rooms. Petra also had her own room near Frederica’s, but she wasn’t yet used to sleeping alone in this large mansion.

And so ever since her first day, she’d been coming to Frederica’s room each night.

“Evening, Petra. You’re later than usual today.”

Holding her pillow, Petra was welcomed into the room by the familiar voice. Wearing her white nightgown, Frederica was a beauty to look at. With her long blonde hair loose, and her feminine curves hugged by her nightgown, she was like a princess straight out of a fairy tale.

And with her emerald-green eyes, she smiled at Petra, who said, “Yes. I was in the dining room. I was wondering if the food was gone.”

“Ms. Beatrice’s, you mean.”

Petra fidgeted silently.

On the dining room table was food that could be eaten even when it was cold. It was there so that the last occupant of the mansion, Beatrice, could eat it if she was awake during the night.

Petra knew of her existence. But she had never spoken with her, or even had proper confirmation that she was living in the mansion.

“But Subaru asked me to…”

“Mister Subaru, you mean.”

“Ah, sorry.”

Petra hid her face in her pillow over her mistake. Usually she would deliberately forget to call Subaru by his proper title in front of him, but this time it was actually a mistake.

“We can keep working on it. It took me a long time to get used to it as well.”

“You had trouble with it too?”

“Of course I did. I didn’t mention it before, but I have a hard time remembering things. I had a lot of trouble using appropriate language at work.”

Frederica had a very proper manner of speaking. And the impression of that was so strong that Petra couldn’t imagine her without it.

As if reading Petra’s mind, Frederica made a sour face. “I’m digging myself deeper again…”

“What kind of trouble did you have? Could you not remember proper language like me?”

“That’s, well… I wish it was just that…” Frederica twiddled her fingers in front of her bashfully. That piqued Petra’s interest as to what kind of secrets she had been hiding.

They stared at each other in silence for a bit.

“Normally, I would also talk to others without the use of sir this, sir that,” confessed Frederica. “But for formal occasions…I tried to speak with a certain decorum…”

“What do you mean?”

“W-Well I tried to imitate someone I knew well, a lady who raised me. And well… I ended up speaking in a really old-fashioned way.”

“Old-fashioned way?”

“Your lowly servant, Frederica Baumann, welcomes thee to Mathers Manor.”

Saying that was a serious looking Frederica dressed in her nightgown. But those words were so strange to hear that Petra froze for a moment.

But she quickly caught hold of herself and burst into peals of laughter.

“Puh, ha-ha-ha-ha! F-Frederica…! Thee…!”

“It was embarrassing… And it took a long time to fix.”

“Lowly servant… Thee…!”

“Geez! How long are you going to laugh for?! It’s night now, so don’t make so much noise. Come on, hurry into bed!”

Petra couldn’t stop laughing, so Frederica pointed to the bed sternly. Seeing that, Petra came up to the bed and dived right in.

Lining up her pillow next to Frederica’s she lightly patted it down. “I welcome thee,” she joked.

“Pe-tra.”

“Hee-Hee! Good night. Sweet dreams.”

Petra closed her eyes and pretended to be sleeping. Frederica sighed, blowing out the lights, and entered the bed herself.

“It’d be nice if the food was gone tomorrow morning,” Petra mumbled to Frederica with her eyes still closed. And hopefully during the night the food would be taken by a still-awake girl.

“Yes, I hope so too,” mumbled Frederica in response.

Upon hearing that, Petra cuddled closer in Frederica’s warm embrace and quickly fell asleep.

And so she wished to have another blissful day with her loved ones.

And for that Clind person to catch a cold.

END

Frederica and Petra’s Maid Days IV (Volume 13; Melon Books)

1

It was an event that took place while Petra was deep in her own train of thought.

“Hello, cute little lady, do you have a moment?”

“Who? Me?” A voice called out from behind her in the middle of town, and Petra turned around without hesitation. She didn’t recognize the voice, but she recognized the words. If there was anyone in the village who would be considered cute, it would be her. That wasn’t Petra’s vanity speaking, but rather her pride.

Petra Leyte, a ten-year-old girl, still believed that she could use cuteness to accomplish anything.

“Ah…”

And that cute Petra was a little surprised by the owner of the voice.

Before her stood a maid from the mansion near Earlham Village, dressed in a black pinafore. The dress was practical yet elegant and for Petra, who aspired to work with clothing, it drew her interest. Then there was the tall golden-haired woman wearing said dress who also drew her eye. Her long, slender arms and legs enhanced her femininity and her womanly figure increased her appeal. To young Petra, she possessed the ideal body. She was everything that she lacked. However…

She kept her jealous thoughts to herself and welcomed the lady with a smile. “Are you from the mansion? Do you need something?”

Being a beauty was not the same as being a cute girl. Cuteness was still capable of fighting against beauty. And so, Petra, wielding such potential, was prepared to stand her ground.

Honestly, whenever Petra remembered her past vain-filled self, her face would burn with embarrassment.

But the Petra of a few years ago knew nothing of the thoughts of Petra in the future. Even here and now, she believed that "cuteness trumped all," and used it without hesitation.

"That's right," the lady replied. "There is something I wish to ask." To Petra's winning smile, the woman calmly showed one of her own.

Most people would swoon at one look at that smile, but here it didn't work. Even the times it stunned them for a few seconds was proof of Petra's cuteness.

Since she wasn't getting the reaction she wanted, Petra doubled down against her tough opponent. "Something you wish to ask? I hope I can give you the answer you're looking for."

"Thank you. I wish to ask where the mayor's house is. The truth is, I haven't traveled here from the master's mansion much…"

"Does that mean you are new to the lord's mansion?" Petra clapped her hands together at the realization. "Ah, that's why. You're such a pretty person, I thought it was strange I've never seen you before."

"…Oh. You're very good at compliments."

Petra's eyes sparkled while the lady gently placed her hand to her lips and giggled. Elegant mannerisms, a mature composure. These were things she wanted to learn for her future.

"Will you be staying at the mansion from now on?" asked Petra.

"No, I happened to be summoned here today. But even when I come here to help out, the mansion and the master's needs are mostly handled by someone else."

“I see. That’s a shame.”

The lady’s eyes widened slightly at Petra’s words. “How so?” she asked.

Without any ulterior motive, Petra just stuck out her tongue bashfully and smiled. “It’s just, you seemed so wonderful—I wanted to become friends with you.”

“…”

“Miss?”

Seeing the lady pause quietly for a moment, Petra tilted her head at the perfect cute angle. It was a carefully practiced move, and when the lady saw it she gently cleared her throat. “N-No. It’s nothing. I’m very happy to hear you say that. If a chance arises, I would like to become friends with you too.”

“Yes, I understand. Ah, right, the mayor’s house. It’s this way.” Feeling slightly disappointed at the lady’s polite lip service, Petra pretended to remember her original request and began directing her to the house.

While leading her, Petra snuck glances at the lady’s uniform. Someday, when I have a job as a seamstress in the capital, it might make for a good reference, she thought, all the while thinking that she would love to wear such an adorable uniform at least once.

2

“I was really rude to you back then…” muttered Petra.

“I-It’s fine, Petra,” Frederica replied. “After all, you were still a young girl, and you didn’t know you were going to be working here.”

“E-Even a ten-year-old should be able to tell what’s okay and what’s not okay to do. I was such an idiot back then…” Even as her cheeks flushed with embarrassment, Petra bowed deeply and apologized profusely. Bewildered by the situation, Frederica gave a wry smile as she recalled that memory.

Frederica had been preparing breakfast when a docile-looking Petra had come up to her saying, “There’s something I need to tell you.”

Since Petra looked so sullen, Frederica was worried that the younger maid had made a mistake in her work and so stopped preparing breakfast to hear her out.

And as the senior maid, Frederica prepared herself for anything. But what Petra wanted to talk about was over something that had taken place two years ago, when the two had first met.

“I understand that you feel responsible and want to apologize…”

Honestly, it was something that Frederica had almost completely forgotten.

Two years ago, Frederica was working for the Miload family, a branch family of House Mathers, and had been called to Roswaal Manor for some work. There she had been asked to deliver a message to the mayor of the local village, and had asked Petra for directions.

Back then, Petra was just a simple village girl only ten years of age. It would have been difficult to act more maturely even when asked, and Frederica wasn’t so harsh as to ask that in the first place. However, even though it wasn’t an event that she had paid heed to, hearing Petra mention it herself made her realize that there was more to the memory than she realized. She realized that she had been taken in by Petra’s cuteness.

Having an unexpected attack from a blossoming flower in an unexpected place was immeasurable, especially to Frederica, who liked cute things. Especially at the mansion, where she had been treated coldly by a charmless junior servant. After that, there’d be no way one wouldn’t be moved by being treated with such kindness.

“Sister Frederica?”

“A-Anyway, there’s nothing to be worried about. And for you to apologize when there’s nothing to apologize for… I had forgotten myself.”

“I don’t think it’s good to try and cover up one’s rude actions even when others have forgotten about it.”

“Th-That’s right. You always seem to teach me something…” Receiving such a proper, straightforward answer, Frederica began to think less of herself. She rested her hand on her cheek and sighed, while Petra slowly raised her head. Seeing her act like a guilty criminal, Frederica smiled gently. “It’s not a big deal. And Petra, was everything you remembered so bad?”

“What do you mean by bad…?”

“I remember it, too. That time, you said that you wanted to become friends with me.”

“Ah.” Petra’s eyes went wide as she recalled her words.

“And then I replied, ‘If I get a chance, I would like to become friends with you as well.’ Seeing as how that promise has been fulfilled, don’t you think it’s fate?”

“Then, we were always destined to be sisters, right?”

Seeing Petra light up like that, Frederica resisted the urge to give her a big hug.

She’s just so adorable. Every day, Frederica found her resistance being gradually worn down by Petra’s endearing demeanor; but this would have to be restored by her dignity as the senior maid.

“R-Right… I…I was destined to be your sister.”

“I’m so happy to hear that. If you think like that, that means that I got everything I wanted back then.” Petra didn’t notice the fluttering in Frederica’s voice as she counted off her fingers. “I got to see your uniform up close, and I even got to wear it. I became friends with you, I got to learn to do this job…and I became cuter than before! Right?”

“Yes, you’re very cute,” Frederica immediately replied. It was normally something she wouldn't be able to say, given her position, so now she said it with force.

"Th-Thank you very much."

Seeing Petra bashful—her cheeks colored with embarrassment—Frederica felt satisfied. But then, she had a sudden thought. "This was quite sudden. Was there something that made you remember that time?"

"Hmm, nothing specifically." Petra fidgeted as she considered Frederica's question. She looked awkward as she considered whether or not to answer, before making up her mind. "The truth is ever since I've been with you, there was something that was bothering me. And it finally hit me."

"It hit you?" replied Frederica, subconsciously mimicking Petra's cute tone.

"It did."

In any case, Frederica wondered what the spark was. If it caused her to remember something, then it would have to be related to it.

"Ah, maybe…"

"M-Maybe what?! Did I make some major mistake?!"

"S-Sister? Why are you panicking?"

Frederica had just relaxed from the previous topic, so the new one made her panic in response. She hid her panic with a smile and shook her head slightly. "No, I'm not panicking. 'A servant must always be calm and composed'; that was beaten into me…by that man!"

"Sister? Sister?"

"R-Right. No matter who taught me, the lesson wasn't wrong. I am calm and composed." Shaking off the remnants of that man from her mind, Frederica took a deep breath. "So, what did you realize, Petra? Could you tell me?"

“Umm, it’s not anything big…” replied Petra, playing with her hair sheepishly at Frederica’s question. “Do you remember last night before we slept?”

“I remember that you were lonely and you crawled into my bed.”

“R-Right, but not that. Remember? What you said before we slept.”

Frederica racked her memory, but she couldn’t remember. She couldn’t recall saying anything special. She could only remember calling Petra cute.

“Hello, cute little lady, do you have a moment?” recalled Petra.

“…I’m sorry?”

“That’s what you said to me before we slept. And it was the same thing you said to me two years ago when we first met.”

“…”

“I’m sure that’s what made me remember. It’s embarrassing, though.”

Petra most likely added on those words to help play it off. However, to be using the same words, Frederica felt like she hadn’t grown at all. Or possibly, that her feelings of wanting to hug Petra hadn’t changed since they first met.

“…Well, you certainly are cute.”

“Ehe-he-he.”

Frederica gave up all resistance and gently patted Petra on the head, who accepted it with an adorable smile. Then her eyes suddenly went wide. “Ah. Sorry. I interrupted your breakfast preparations.”

“It’s fine. We shared a nice little memory together.” Frederica smiled at Petra. “Also, could you help me with some final preparations? If you do, then I’ll forgive your actions from two years ago.”

Petra looked a bit shocked before breaking into a big smile. “Yes, Sister Frederica.”

“There’s that cutie I know so well.” Seeing Petra’s smile made her blurt that out, and Frederica admired the person she was two years ago.

The Frederica back then had managed to maintain their composure enough to protect Petra’s memory.

なで
なで
なで
なで

Garfiel and Ram’s Complicated Love Affair
(Volume 10; Toranoana)
(Translation Pending)

Garfiel and Ram’s Really Complicated Love Affair
(Volume 11; Toranoana)
(Translation Pending)

Garfiel and Ram's Extra Complicated and Twisted Love Affair
(Volume 12; Toranoana)

1

—There was a place known as the Sanctuary, deep within the Lost Forest of Kremaldy.

Within it was only a small village and ruins with a deep history. The people there had gathered there for a very specific reason and were living together and supporting each other.

They were hybrids between humans and demi-humans—the ones that were called Mixed-Bloods.

Mixed-Bloods weren't in a good position in the Kingdom of Lugunica where people still feared the Witch of Envy and had scars left behind from the Demi-human War.

They used blood as a reason for their unjust discrimination, leaving behind a deep-rooted grudge.

The Sanctuary was also a place of refuge to protect Mixed-Bloods from the eyes of discrimination. Thus, those living there had acquired peace of mind, but only by turning a blind eye to a certain degree of inconvenience.

They all loved living in peace and were relishing in it.

And that was more of a reason why—

"—The hell is up with bringing so many outsiders here, haa?!" Garfiel said scornfully while receiving more than ten dragon carriages. He was a blond boy with his sturdy arms crossed and had a wild, dreadful aura. The earth dragon was frightened, and the people were cringing with fear at his angry gaze. But the gaze and the dreadful air that had made the people tremble was just a side effect of the thing that was directed towards his original target. Garfiel's gaze was directed at Ram alone, who was standing in front of the dragon carriage.

"…" Ram said something to the coachman after stepping out of it and boldly confronted Garfiel. As the people around watched with bated breath, she squinted her pink eyes and said, "Quite a welcoming reception, Garf, even though it's been so long since Ram has shown her face to you."

"Ha, my amazin' self feels like givin' ya a big smile and hug too, but things ain't gonna be that easy. Why the hell did you bring them here?"

"Ram wants to say that we're here on a small group trip, but she knows you won't believe something like that. —We are evacuating."

"Evacuating, huh?"

Garfiel crinkled up his nose at the not so peaceful word.

"Yes." Ram nodded at his response and pointed at the people behind her with her chin. "We traveled through the night, so everyone is tired. Let us rest for now. I'll let them inside the village right away, so kindly inform Master Roswaal and Miss Ryuzu."

"That doesn't explain much. My amazin' self hasn't heard anything about lettin' you guys in or not lettin' you guys in."

"Use your imagination and put two and two together. Royal selection, Witch Cult, evacuation, Ram is cute. That's all."

"Was that last part necessary?" Garf asked with doubt, but when Ram glared at him, he reluctantly nodded. However, before letting the dreadful air go, he looked once again at the group of dragon carriages behind her. "I'm tellin' ya. Even if you guys are with Ram, my amazin' self won't tolerate any shenanigans. Like they say, Kegeraine never draws a blank. Try ta behave yourselves at the very least."

Garfiel flashed his fangs, emphasizing them, then smacked them together, and with a light leap, he disappeared into the forest. He likely went to inform people about their arrival, following Ram's order.

"Lady Ram, will we be…safe around that person?"

It was the village chief who had asked that anxiously—she was an old lady who represented the refugees from Earlham Village. The old lady had asked her that in a faint voice so it wouldn't make the people around them anxious.

"Yes," Ram replied, nodding at the old lady's question. "You'll be fine as long as you behave yourselves like Garf…Garfiel said."

"Lady Ram, are you and that person close?"

"Ram is close…we've known each other for a long time. So Ram knows how to deal with him."

Ram looked in the direction Garfiel had disappeared to after listening to the words of the old lady that still sounded concerned.

Ram knows how to deal with him since she's known him for ten years. But even so… "Ram wonders how far Garf will go to protect this place."

2

—The Witch Cult was hiding in the vicinity of Roswaal Manor and Earlham Village.

That was the disaster that had recently befallen Ram and the others. That was the reason why she had come along with the refugees to the Sanctuary, which was under Garfiel's protection.

Around 100 villagers from Earlham Village had been evacuated. Half of them had followed Ram and come to the Sanctuary.

—The other half had more reason to worry.

"Lady Emilia is the Witch Cult's target… But then, Barusu will do something about that."

Ram stopped worrying about it after thinking of the boy whose intel had led them to evacuate.

The staff there should do their best to take care of things on their end. In return, Ram will do her best to respond to the trust Ram was given. For now, our priority is to set up a temporary dwelling—in the stone cathedral in front of us.

"The old hag told my amazin' self to, so it can't be helped, but I ain't welcoming them here. I'm just lending this place to y'all outta the goodness of my heart. Just be grateful."

"Alright, alright. Ram understands."

It was Garfiel, the self-proclaimed watchdog, who said that while watching Ram's work from behind.

The place was inside the village within the Sanctuary, in a cathedral that was a bit separated from the residential area. It was a building that was used as a meeting place, and it was large enough to accommodate a lot of people. They were in a situation where they would have to sleep together in the nave, but some could be given private rooms if needed. The representative of the village, Ryuzu, had lent it to them after they had entered the Sanctuary.

"Ram can't let the villagers return to the village until the situation is taken care of… Ram can't be too greedy."

They might have to stay in the Sanctuary for a few days or a few weeks.

Ram wants to lessen the villagers' burdens as much as possible, but we need to be prepared to survive.

For that, the men were taking the lead in unloading the cargo from the dragon carriage, but…

"Hey, hey, put more force into it, you won't be able to move it like that!"

"You are being persistently noisy while doing absolutely nothing. How about helping us out if you have time to complain?"

“Hah, don’t make me laugh. My amazin’ self is the watchdog. And I’ve told you this before, but while I care about you, I don’t give a shit about outsiders.”

Garfiel heckled and snapped his fangs provocatively at Ram, who was carrying the load. He had been interrupting them like that for a while now to crush their spirits.

“…” The expressions of the villagers from Earlham didn’t look good due to Garfiel’s harsh attitude. It was obvious that they would feel anxious if they were blatantly not being welcomed at their place of refuge. Ram started thinking about whether she should defeat Garfiel and win their peace, and while she was having such thoughts, her work screeched to a halt, and…

“Hey, hey,” Garfiel said, shrugging at her. “Aaah, too slow, too slow. The sun is gonna set at this rate.”

“…”

“The hell. Everyone is workin’ with a gloomy face.”

“…”

“If that’s the case then…it’s that…Aah.”

“…”

“Aaah! I can’t watch this anymore!” Garfiel, who had been continuously interrupting them and was being ignored, exploded out of nowhere.

He passed the silent Ram and hopped onto the back of the dragon carriage that was being unloaded, easily picked up a load that would take two grown men to lift, and then jumped out. The work of unloading the cargo from the dragon carriage progressed quickly and furiously.

“Garf,” Ram called Garfiel, who was making the work efficient, from behind.

Garf responded to that and waved his hand in the air. “Hah, no need to thank me. My amazin' self couldn't look at how sluggish…"

"How unmannered you are. If you wanted to help, you should have asked for permission first."

"How could ya say something like that in this situation?!"

Garfiel goggled his eyes at Ram's arrogant words and dropped the load he was carrying. It rumbled when it fell to the ground, and as the people nearby looked at them in a startled manner, Garfiel snapped his fangs. "Don't get too cocky, Ram. My amazin' self helped you out on a whim. You're gonna regret it since I ain't gonna help you out anymore."

"Alright. Okay."

Ram nodded at Garfiel, who had clicked his tongue, and extended her hands towards the cargo he had dropped. She proceeded to put force into her thin arms and tried to lift it up, but it didn't even budge. It didn't move no matter what she did. Next, she lightly rotated her shoulders and tried tackling it, but she just bounced back.

"Hey! Don't push yourself too hard!"

"Ram is working at the moment. You are distracting her and in the way, so go somewhere else."

"Alright! Let me help! My amazin' self will do it! Happy now?!"

"…It's, 'please let me help'."

"Don't get co…pl-please let me, help…!"

"'I beg of you, Lady Ram.'"

"Shut up!! I'm gonna move it now!! Don't bother me!! Drink some cold water and rest!!" Garf howled at Ram's needless talk and tossed a bamboo cylinder with water to her.

After Ram caught it, Garfiel started moving the cargo to the cathedral with ease. He then began to do the work of a hundred men, leaving the villagers dumbfounded.

“La-Lady Ram, is it really okay to…”

“If he wants to do it, then let him do it. It’ll make it easy for us,” she replied to the awe-struck old woman after bringing the bamboo flask to her mouth and taking a sip of the cold water.

Garfiel’s work speed was impressive now that he was focused on physical labor. He moved the cargo in no time and freed the villagers from the grueling labor.

“You guys can talk with each other and decide who gets which room. Ram has to take care of Master Roswaal, so she will be going to the village. You can use the private room as you like.”

“Oh, ok…”

“There ya go! How’s this! I am done nowwww!!”

The old woman’s puzzled reply overlapped with Garfiel’s shouts as he finished moving the final load.

Garfiel walked back with long strides and heavy steps, and Ram welcomed him. “Good job… You haven’t thanked Ram for letting you help.”

“That’s really not funny!”

An angry, desperate voice echoed through the sky of the Sanctuary.

3

—The self-proclaimed watchdog’s inhumane harassment went on without end after that.

“Aah, you don’t know anything. How much time are you taking to take the water to the kitchen!”

“You don’t know anything at all. There’s a huge water jar in the cathedral, right? If fill it with water, it should be more than enough for you guys to wipe your body. My amazin’ self will go fill it up.”

“Wait a bit. My amazin’ self will go ask the old timers. You guys need a sewing kit, right?”

“Listen here. The village’s food is limited. You can’t eat three times a day. Two is the limit. Tell me when ya don’t have enough. Huh? Shut up, my amazin’ self will go get some from our reserves.”

“Do you guys have enough blankets? If ya don’t, then let me know, since there’s a limit ta how many people can fit under one.”

“Lady Ram, is it really okay?”

“If he wants to do it then let him do it. It’ll make it easy for us.”

The living standards of the refugees were drastically improved due to the active intervention of the watchdog.

Needless to say, it was also due to Ram’s taking advantage of him.

The village chief must have understood the true meaning behind Ram saying, “Ram knows how to deal with him.”

Of course, Garfiel himself was prepared to take on the role of negotiator—a position that didn’t suit him—to avoid unnecessary friction between the residents of the Sanctuary and the refugees.

“Yo, Ram, I’m back. Is there anything troubling you?”

“Yes. Ram’s shoulders are stiff from the continuous physical labor.”

“Alright. Leave it to…wait, I’m not going to massage them! Don’t use me for your own convenience!” Garfiel complained with his spit flying at Ram, who had turned her back towards him. To be honest, it was a bit too late for him to be complaining about being treated like a tool, but of course, neither Ram nor the villagers watching all of that pointed it out. But—

“Thank you very much, Garfiel,” said the old lady. “I thank you on behalf of the villagers.”

“Huh?” Garfiel looked puzzled when the old lady bowed her head.

The old lady smiled slightly at his reaction and pointed at the cathedral that was completely ready to take in all of the refugees. “I can’t say that we aren’t feeling anxious since we are staying in a borrowed space. However, you have provided us a place where we can sit down and face our worries. That alone is a huge help.”

Garfiel became quiet after hearing the old lady’s words of gratitude. Then, after a few moments of silence…

“Hah,” he said, rubbing his nose with his finger. “Stop it, stop it, it doesn’t matter. This place has a lot of old timers, so I helped out a lil’. I don’t intend on getting friendly with outsiders though.”

“Then you can’t be friendly with Ram, either. Goodbye Garf…no, Mister Garfiel.”

“Don’t get formal on me!”

“It’s a joke.” Ram shrugged her shoulders as if saying he couldn’t be helped.

Garfiel started breathing heavily at her attitude and turned towards the old lady again, flashing his fangs. “My amazin’ self doesn’t need your gratitude, human. No way I’m getting along with you guys. I did a lot of things, not for you, but because it would’ve been bad for my heart if I didn’t.”

Garfiel bit off her gratitude and turned his back to the old lady and the others. Like saying he didn’t care about what was going to happen next, he started walking away.

“If so, then…” the old woman said before continuing her words. “Us thanking you for your kindness is because it would be bad for our hearts if we didn’t.”

After Garfiel heard it, he stopped and looked behind him.

He looked at the old woman’s mild-mannered, cunning smile, and clicked his tongue with a “Damn it,” as if he felt awkward.

"You've lost."

"Hush, I'm not good with old timers. Dealing with them is such a drag."

"That's the best compliment you could give, Garf."

"It ain't a compliment and it ain't the best, either. I saved that one for you."

"Haa…you are an idiot." Ram let out a deep sigh at Garfiel, who said that without embarrassment. She caught up to him and started walking slowly next to him, making him give a curious tilt of his head. "Garf, you are too twisted to even accept gratitude honestly, so Ram will reward you since you're so hopeless. Be thankful."

"Ohh, that's very kind of you. I like your tea, Ram. It's not just the tea though."

At Garfiel, who had chomped his fangs and smiled without any hint of malice, Ram said, "You're such an idiot."

Then she muttered, "—Dummy." under her breath.

A slight smile appeared on her face soon after.

END

Garfiel and Ram’s Extra Complicated and Twisted Love Affair Zero

(Volume 13; Toranoana)

(Translation Pending)

Elsa and Meili:
The Assassin Sisters’ Dark Diary, Kill 1
(Volume 12; Gamers)
(Translation Pending)

Elsa and Meili:
The Assassin Sisters’ Dark Diary, Kill 2
(Volume 13; Gamers)
(Translation Pending)

Elsa and Meili:
The Assassin Sisters’ Dark Diary, Kill 3
(Volume 14; Gamers)

1

The first time she laid eyes on her, it truly was a blood-stained sight.

Sitting in the middle of a red, blood-soaked field was a silent little girl. Her round, wide eyes—the wild and long, dark blue hair. Her childish figure was stained with dirt and mud, and the only thing covering her naked body was a tattered, dirty cloth.

That cloth, covered in dew and excrement, was the only thing remotely normal about what one could easily tell was a little girl. But what was truly strange about the scene was far more obvious.

Covering the little girl were the black stains of dried blood. But none of that blood had come from the girl herself. The source of the blood staining the field was the remnants of slaughtered bodies scattered all across it.

The field was part of a well-known witchbeast breeding ground.

Witchbeasts were the enemy of humanity, beings of destruction that existed only to destroy other living beings. Their danger was on another level from ordinary beasts, and some even held the potential to cast magic. And unlike beasts, they could never be tamed, and it was impossible to cooperate with them.

That’s why witchbeasts were the enemy of humanity, and why this place, which a herd of witchbeasts had settled in, became a place in which humans could never again set foot.

The entire area that the people had evacuated several years prior had become a den of witchbeasts. And in the forest their numbers multiplied, and any weak soul that entered would be eliminated. That’s why the numerous corpses surrounding the girl were not a strange sight, but in fact quite possible. What was strange, however, was that the corpses surrounding the girl were not of humans, but witchbeasts.

And the one who had made them that way was the girl.

“This is a much greater welcome than I was expecting. I don’t have any intention of harming you though.”

The little girl turned away from the field of witchbeast corpses. In front of her was a tall, pale girl with her hair tied into a braid. She looked to be about fifteen years of age, and her body was starting to form its feminine shape. And there was an immoral charm flowing from her that only an immature age could give.

Those deep, black eyes would likely bewitch many boys.

If it wasn’t for the knife she was holding in her hands, that charm would most likely get her mistaken for a high-class prostitute by many men.

However, the black-haired girl showed no interest in showing off her beauty, and at this point, it was all the same to the girl she was confronting.

The blood-covered little girl continued to glare in hatred at the girl who covered her in blood.

There was no sign of gratitude for eliminating the herd of witchbeasts. To the little girl, the witchbeasts were not enemies, though they could not be called family either.

At the very least, there was a strong emotion in her that could not be compared to the girl in front of her. In the little girl’s gaze, there was no friendliness, only sadness and killing intent.

In her heart was an overflowing urge to kill, in her eyes was an overbearingly animalistic gaze. These were proof of the tumultuous life this girl had, short as it may be.

Many would pity her for having such a life. But there was no such expression on the girl's face. There was no compassion in her, no fragment of pity to be found.

Ignoring everything they could have learnt about each other after having met, the two girls engaged.

"Are you angry that I'm trespassing on your home? Acting like that, you really do look no different from a witchbeast. You must be the queen of witchbeasts… No, princess seems more appropriate."

"Grr, grrr."

"If you can't talk, then you probably don't understand what I'm saying. Unfortunately, I've been ordered to bring you back. Even if you resist, I will bring you back alive. If you don't resist, then I can do this without hurting you."

"Aohh! Aohh!"

"So you can't understand. Well then, show me how you are going to resist."

The little girl screamed as if she would throw a tantrum, while the girl loosened her lips and lowered her head. The girl's braid slipped off her shoulder, and the little girl smacked her hand.

The next moment, a large shadow fell over the field as if it had been waiting for that signal. With a crooked horn and a lion's head, black fur, and massive claws, it was the unparalleled witchbeast, also known as the Black King of the Forest, the Guiltylowe.

"!!!"

With a thunderous roar, the air rushed past the girl like an explosion, carrying with it a foul smell. Gazing into the overwhelmingly dreadful appearance of the beast, the girl simply licked her lips. "Such a large friend you have there," she said. "Fabulous, simply fabulous."

Despite the danger to her life that was standing in front of her, the girl continued to remain calm. As if irritated by such an attitude, the Guiltylowe raised its claws and swiped at the girl to end her life in a single stroke.

With a force comparable to a hurricane and claws sharp enough to cut steel, the girl was split apart—or at least she should've been.

"That's no good. You have to be gentler with girls."

"…!"

The girl smiled gracefully as the front right leg of the fiend was sent flying. Its sense of balance lost along with its right leg, the witchbeast suddenly found itself the prey as it fell towards the girl. At that the girl jumped lightly into the air and prepared her blood-stained knife.

"A body incomparable in size to humans… What kind of insides will you show me?"

2

From the dreaded forest of witchbeasts, the Queen of Witchbeasts was born.

That story started a few months prior, when a merchant had escaped that forest with his life.

Entering the forest to escape the rain, he claimed he had seen a human girl leading the witchbeasts when he was chased by them far from the path. He was dismissed as making things up, but that story traveled from village to village and soon became a tale told around the table at the local watering hole.

That story was never proven either way and in a few months became a folk tale…

"And that's it, I suppose."

Just like the smiling girl declared, the fallen witchbeast had lost most of its lifeforce. It was completely one-sided. The howling beast struck with all of its might, but each and every attack was swiftly evaded by the girl, who would carve out pieces of the beast's flesh with every counter.

From the first strike, the witchbeast stood no chance. After the right leg was cut off, the tail, the back leg, and the center of the back vanished to her blade. And in the end it could only give a small whimper as it begged for death.

Of course, such an understanding could never be achieved between man and witchbeast, so the beast's wish went unheard. As a result, the witchbeast struggled until its very end.

"The strange color must be a product of its diet. Or maybe it's particular to this one? It smells terrible, but I would love to compare it to another one… Can you call another one?" asked the girl as she searched the freshly killed beast's stomach with her knife covered in its entrails. But the little girl did not respond; she just continued to look on in hatred.

Unfortunately, the little girl had nothing else to fall back on. No matter how miserable its end was, the Guiltylowe was her greatest weapon. And with it gone, she had nothing left.

"I see, so it is over… That's too bad."

Taking her silent glare as an answer, the girl stopped playing with the corpses. Seeing her start to walk towards her, the little girl stiffened. The knife in her hand had taken the life of a witchbeast that had ruled the forest, and in only a moment. And if that knife was targeted at her, then the little girl would have no means to protect herself.

However…

"…Ah."

"There's no need to worry, I did say I was going to bring you back. It's not like I have no interest in your body; it's just not enough to go against my orders. Relax.”

“Gao! Gaaoo! Aooao!!”

“…It’s not pleasant to be hated so much. My heart can’t heal such damage so fast.”

As she lifted her up, the little girl struggled with all her might. But because she was suffering from malnutrition, there was little she could do against her captor.

And so, the best that she could do to stop the girl was screaming as loud as she could.

“Gaoo, aooo!!”

“I understand wanting to kill me, but it’s impossible in your current state. Biting my neck only tickles… First you should focus on getting better.”

The little girl was biting her neck, but with her weakened jaw and teeth, it was doing little. Like the girl said, it was only tickling her. The girl continued walking, leaving behind the blood-stained field and the witchbeast forest in general.

During that whole time, the little girl continued to bite the girl’s neck. Her hatred running dry, her killing intent fading, she continued to nibble at the girl’s life with all her might.

And she would continue until her life expired.

3

“Aguu.”

“…Hm? What’s wrong?”

The black-haired girl, Elsa, tilted her head at the pair of lips being pressed against her neck. Her long braid tickled Meili’s nose as she pressed her face in.

Meili just made a strange face before replying, “Nothing. Just remembering the past a bit. About the time I just met you, and how I tried to kill you by biting you like thiiis."

"…Ah, such a thing happened, didn't it? But you were so small, it was like being bitten by a small dog. It just tickled."

"That was the best a kid could do. But you killed all my beloved witchbeasts, so I wanted to kill you in the worst way possible."

Puffing her cheeks out, Meili plopped herself down on the couch and hugged her knees. Seeing that protesting gaze, Elsa shrugged her shoulders uncharacteristically while lounging on the couch. "I believe I said at the start that I wasn't there to kill you."

"Who would believe that after seeing you chop up all of my witchbeasts? You really haven't changed since then, have you Elsa?"

"And you've changed quite a bit since then. You couldn't even speak before, but now you're talking so well."

"…It's not fair that you can speak so easily to people who are worrying so muuuch."

Elsa could only look on in confusion at Meili's pouting. For someone who was without the understanding of the human heart like Elsa, understanding another's feelings was impossible.

But Elsa's words were not wrong. In fact, when she had first met Meili, before she had been taken to human lands, Meili was closer to beast than man. It was not that she hadn't learned human words, it was that she had forgotten them.

The little girl back then had lived in the wild without the help of anyone. For that to be possible, what was needed wasn't words but power. And luckily for her, that had been with her since she had been born.

Whether that was her salvation or her damnation…was beyond Meili's understanding.

"If that hadn't happened, then I wouldn't have been punished by mama all the time.”

“But if it wasn’t for that, then I would have never met you. You would’ve been all alone.”

“I think I would have been eaten by witchbeasts first. You really are an idiiiot, Elsa,” giggled Meili.

“Oh, such a foul mouth. But that’s a twisted way of looking at the past.”

“Reallyyy? Then what other ways would you suggest?”

“If I hadn’t gone to retrieve you, then I would have never met you. That would be terribly lonely. You’re like my sister now. That’s why taking orders from others isn’t always so bad.”

Meili’s eyes went wide at hearing such an unexpected answer from Elsa; all she could do was look at her in bewilderment.

Elsa in return could only look at her in confusion. “What’s wrong?” she asked.

“…Our first meeting was crazy, and now you’re saying things like this. You really are a strange person, Elsa.”

“I’m well aware I’m not normal, and it’s because I’m not normal that we can be like this. You and I are birds of a feather, strange sisters together.”

“That’s so stupid,” Meili spit out as she turned her face away.

Shrugging her shoulders at Meili’s attitude, Elsa reached out and softly touched her blue braid. “You’ve gotten better at braiding. Your hair used to be all over the place before.”

“That was the one thing you taught me well. Shouldn’t you stop leaving it to me when we’re together?”

“What’s wrong with that? You’re better at it than me.”

“Keep showing me your neck like that and I might bite you to death.”

Meili puffed out her cheeks as she let Elsa play with her braid.

“It’s fine. You won’t bite anymore, right?”

“I just bit you.”

“That was just a jest, not like it was back then.”

“…What about you? Do you ever want to open up my stomach?”

Those words were meant to be revenge, but it was still a strange question.

Elsa pondered for a little bit before replying, “Let’s see, I still have some interest in your insides. But not enough to destroy what we have here. Don’t worry.”

“…Hmmm, I see… Hmmm.”

Meili did her best to respond with little emotion and replied with only lazy responses. But she sat a little closer to Elsa on the couch and continued with the directionless conversation.

From a distance, without the smell of blood that lingered on them, it looked like just a pair of sisters chatting peacefully.

END

Elsa and Meili:
The Assassin Sisters' Dark Diary, Kill 4
(Volume 15; Gamers)

1

In front of the charred remains of the mansion stood alone a girl with her hair in a braid.

The ashen air blew through her blue hair as her gaze swept across the blackened ruins. She wasn't looking for anything; her eyes just wandered around aimlessly.

"…Ya ain't gonna find anything searchin' like that."

A voice called out from behind the girl. The voice was rough, but contained a trace of concern. Because of that, the girl didn't turn around. She simply relaxed her lips. That concern was laughable to her.

After all, the girl and the owner of the voice were recently involved in a battle to the death. It had only been a day since the battle, yet the person was already showing concern.

"…Hey, don't even think about doin' anything stupid. Try anything and my fangs will rip right through ya, child or not."

"I think that's a big bluff, coming from you."

"Huh?"

"Mister, you're kind to women and children, aren't youuu? That's why I believe you wouldn't even think of being merciless to a girl like me."

The boy bared his fangs at her in dissatisfaction. Whether it was because she was correct, or because it was pointless to argue, or possibly neither.

Meili watched as the boy struggled to make up his mind and found it endearing.

“Don’t worry. I’m not going to do anything. It takes time to gather witchbeasts, and if I called for them, you’d kill me instantly.”

“Heh, don’t “Legend of Alosya’ me, like ya understand everything.”

“Despite your attitude, you’re the one that’s here with meee.”

“That’s because there’s no one I trust to watch ya besides my amazin’ self.”

Revealing his lack of allies and strength, the boy Garfiel, kicked the ground with crossed arms and squatted in the scorched remains of a garden.

And like the girl he looked towards the burnt ruins of Roswaal’s former mansion. Spotting a quick flash of emotion in his jade eyes, the girl smiled sweetly and giggled.

“Mr. Tiger, you look really uncomfortableee.”

“That’s because… Dammit, ya already know. Stupid kid.”

“That’s mean. And besides, you and I aren’t that different in age. That’s what the man with scary eyes said.”

“Dammit Captain, what’re ya doin’, talkin’ with a captured enemy?” he muttered to himself.

Sitting down on a patch of burnt grass, Garfiel made a bitter face. In his mind he saw the black-haired boy’s carefree face, while with his eyes he saw the girl’s detestable smile.

That was that, then.

“…The agreement was to let ya see this.”

“Yes, that’s riiight.”

“So? Do ya feel any better doin’ this?”

The boy’s concern lingered, though masked by his agitated words. At those blunt yet touching feelings the girl simply pursed her lips again. “Who knooows?” she murmured.

She realized after saying those words that she might have subconsciously tried to imitate her sister. And so Meili Portroute, a sentimental girl, smiled and closed her eyes. Within the charred ruins, the person she was looking for was nowhere to be found.

Although she should’ve known that from the beginning.

2

“Elsa, are you immortal?” Meili asked, resting her elbows on her knees with her hands on her cheeks.

In response, the listener furrowed their eyebrows as they wiped blood off their cheek. “That’s quite a question to ask suddenly.”

“I don’t think it’s that sudden. I mean, you were surrounded, covered in blood, and stabbed with a spear. And yet you seem fine.”

Meili pointed towards the other girl’s stomach, where there was quite literally a spear sticking out. It had entered through her stomach and made it all the way through, leaving the end to poke out her back. Any internal organs in the way had been pierced, and the amount of blood pouring out looked particularly deadly. Anyone could tell that it was a lethal wound.

And yet, despite receiving such a wound, the black-haired girl seemed almost calm… No, she wasn’t quite calm. Her cheeks had flushed and her breathing heightened.

She felt every moment of pain and every drop of blood. But this excited Elsa.

“That’s unsanitary ,” Meili remarked.

“Oh, that’s harsh coming from someone who surrounds themselves with witchbeasts all the time.”

“I make sure that they clean themselves. And this isn’t about the cleanliness of the body, but of the mind… Hurry up and pull that out! It hurts just looking at it.”

Elsa complied with a grimacing Meili and pulled out the spear from her stomach. The wet, sloppy sound echoed as Meili looked around their blood-stained surroundings.

In the dark, dirty shack there were the unidentifiable remains of about twenty bodies scattered all over the room.

That day, Meili and Elsa had gone on a job together to eliminate some people for reasons unknown. Thus the sea of blood around them.

Meili was to be the rear-guard, while creating the rivers of blood was Elsa’s job. Those were the roles they’d always stuck with. Considering the two of them, it was the obvious choice.

“I barely know anything about you, Elsa, despite working together like thiiis.”

“I wasn’t hiding it. If you ask then I’ll answer.”

“Then I’ll ask. How has that stomach wound already healed?”

Elsa stood in front of Meili, having obeyed and pulled the spear from her abdomen. Rubbing her bloody hands across it, there was no wound, just pure, soft, white skin.

“That’s just unnatural.”

“True, I’ll admit that it’s not normal. This is…the result of a curse.”

“Curse?” Meili echoed.

“There are countries that would try and claim that it’s a blessing, though.”

Elsa’s voice was uncharacteristically harsh as she rubbed the spot where the wound would have been. Meili realized that this was a topic Elsa didn’t enjoy discussing.

She didn't want to cause Elsa any further pain, but she simply couldn't hide her curiosity.

"So it could be called a blessing or a curse. Does that mean you were born with it?"

"No, I wasn't. When I was about your age, I still had a normal human body. But after I was caught stealing back in my home country, I was sold as a slave."

"And then?"

"The person who bought me was a bit of a strange one. He didn't have much interest in girls…but the biggest issue was his skill in curse arts."

At this, Meili looked down behind her eyelashes at the term. As a Witchbeast User, many witchbeasts used techniques similar to curse arts. Curse arts, however, were techniques fundamentally designed to end a person's life.

It was difficult to associate them with Elsa's undying body.

"In Gusteko, there's a curse art called the curse doll. Have you heard of it?"

Meili shook her head at the unknown term.

"Simply put, it's a curse art designed to harm a person. You choose the target you want to kill, then you carve the curse into the one who will be the curse doll. Once you activate that curse, the person who became the doll is unable to die until the target is killed. They'll be an undying doll."

"…Isn't that something amazing? I mean, you can create a bunch of undying people. That would put us out of a job," Meili commented.

"Yes, that's true. But there's no curse art that is that convenient."

Elsa smiled somberly at Meili's innocent brutality.

"First, the person who becomes the curse doll loses all sense of self and can only act in ways that help it kill the target. Second, once the target has been killed, then the curse doll dies."

"Ahh, then they wouldn't be a good paaawn…huh? But, wait…"

Meili pursed her lips as a strange contradiction came forth from Elsa's explanation. According to Elsa's story, she was one of these curse dolls. But also according to that explanation, she should have no self and only act to kill a target.

"But you can talk normally, Elsa… Or is it because you're insane? That would make sense."

"It hurts if you think that makes sense… I'm…an exception to a curse doll."

"What do you mean?"

"I told you. Whoever bought me was eccentric and had a talent for curse arts."

Elsa didn't want to speak more of her former "owner," so she cut off the explanation there. She played with her braid as she continued, "There are others like me with undying bodies. And those girls tried several different methods to kill themselves… They stabbed their hearts with stakes, they drained other people's blood. People started calling them vampires."

"An undying curse doll…"

Meili felt a chill upon hearing those words. She had asked 'Are you immortal?' Elsa responded that she was unable to die. It was just a slight difference in words, but Meili felt like there was meaning behind her choice of words.

"Do you also want to die? Like those other girls, Elsa?"

She had to ask that question. Elsa had been slashed with swords, stabbed with spears, burned her insides. Perhaps she just wanted to die like a normal person.

At Meili's question, Elsa just looked confused. "Why?" she asked, tilting her head.

“That’s what you meant, wasnt it?”

“Really? Then I’m afraid you’re mistaken. I have no wish to die. I might not want to live as long as those ‘vampires’ though… Mostly though, this body has its own many advantages.”

“Advantages?”

“The smell of blood, torn flesh, of insides, makes me feel alive. And this body gives me lots of opportunities to feel that. I’m happy with this body.” Smiling gently, Elsa dropped the spear she had been leaning on, and walked towards the sitting Meili. “That’s why you don’t need to look so worried.”

“Worried? Me? For you?”

“Yes. When you asked if I wanted to die, you looked so sad. You really are a lonely girl, Meili.”

“D-Don’t say such stupid thiiings!” Meili shouted, turning red as Elsa patted her head.

Part of it was at being called lonely, but it was also because Elsa’s hand was covered in blood and messing up her hair. That was something that Elsa never learned to be mindful of.

“Come on, you’ll get my hair dirty. Your hair is a mess, too… Ah! How could you leave it like that? Unbelievable!”

Meili grabbed Elsa’s braid that had come loose in the fighting. She had done the braid just before they started work so that they would match.

It was hard to believe that someone with such a proper appearance could care so little about their looks.

“Even if your wounds heal, a sloppy appearance won’t get fixed so easily. Make sure you take care of iiit.”

“Yeah, but, you know. Since you’re always with me, you can worry about it. That way I can focus more on the job at hand.”

“Don’t try to play this off!”

Trying to braid hair in such a bloodstained environment was next to impossible. Especially since it was after a job. Elsa’s wounds had healed so they should have been focusing on leaving.

Standing up, Meili grabbed Elsa’s hand and started walking. If she didn’t, then her partner would just end walking into a crowd of people.

That was all there was to it. There was no deeper meaning in holding hands.

“You need to stay focuseeed. If you don’t, then I’ll end up dying before you with your undying body.”

Those words, spoken without facing each other, were meant to be half-comeback and half-teasing. And for a moment, Elsa’s eyes went wide before returning to her usual smile.

“Well, who knows.”

3

“Stupid Elsa… I was supposed to die fiiirst.” She recalled the exchange while pushing back the pain from her wounds.

Deep within the burnt ruins of Roswaal Manor, Elsa had been crushed and turned to ash by the flames.

As far as Meili knew, Elsa had survived being stabbed, having her neck broken, and having her heart crushed. But she had yet to be turned to ash. Elsa had wished for a place to die, not that she was aware of it herself.

To feel alive in the death of others meant that you lost the sense of being alive yourself. That’s what she thought now.

Thinking along those lines, that would mean that Elsa dying here was a blessing for her. At the very least, she wasn’t the type of person to cry and struggle when faced with her death.

“Mr. Tiger, we’re done. Thank you. I’m satisfied now.”

Rather than become a captive, Meili had come to the ruins to burn Elsa’s final resting place into her memory. That was her duty as Elsa’s sister in arms.

That much had been done. And so the next step was…

“Whatever, I don’t care.” Sitting in the burnt garden, Garfiel kept eyeing Meili with a somewhat irritated expression. “If you wanna cry, I ain’t gonna stop ya.”

Taken aback by such blunt words, Meili tried to smile in response. Only she couldn’t. Finding a burning sensation in her eyes, she quickly wiped them and looked up at the sky.

And so, with her face hidden, she opened her mouth towards the sky. Garfiel said nothing as the emotions came pouring forth from her lips. And then quietly, the two mourned the black-haired girl in that blackened garden.

—And the two would never again speak of what happened that day.

END

Elior Forest Team: Waiting for the Thaw (Volume 14; Toranoana) (Translation Pending)

Kremaldy Forest Team:
Days Forever Lost
(Volume 14; Melon Books)
(Translation Pending)

The Emilia Camp’s Great Evaluation Meeting (Volume 15; Toranoana) (Translation Pending)

The Witch's After Tea Party (Volume 15; Melon Books)

1

As the sun bathed the white snow in its rays, making it look magical as it reflected off its surface, she exhaled a misty breath.

The light, too bright to look at, made her slightly narrow her eyes. She put her hand against the towering tree next to her, feeling the rough sensation of the bark on her palm. This isn't an illusion, it's the real thing, she thought.

She clenched her fist tightly, closed her eyes due to the glare, inhaled some icy cold air into her lungs until she could take in no further, and then let it all out.

"Just as I thought, a lot of things feel different from how they used to when you acquire a new body after many centuries," the girl grumbled in a way that made her seem older than she appeared, her peach pink hair fluttering in the refreshing wind.

She was a charming, dainty looking girl. She had azure eyes, which shone with intelligence, and it ought to be stated that her lovely features exuded a sense of elegance and grace.

With but a single glance, anyone could tell that the girl gave off a certain, extraordinary aura.

Her young, undeveloped body was wrapped in a white robe with naught an undergarment to speak of. The sight of her treading upon the bare ground with her tiny, bare feet, made her look extremely vulnerable.

Her vulnerability was not only the kind where she was vulnerable to being seen by people, but also one where she was even more vulnerable to the climate at the same time. Since the girl was walking around a snow-covered forest, her body was losing heat as each second passed, and thus was shivering all over.

To be honest, the girl’s travel attire was a huge mistake, as she hadn’t really considered this when she chose it.

“And after all that work, haaa. Would it not be comical if you froze to death due to the cold? Huuu.”

And then, suddenly, the bewitching, slothful voice of a woman echoed inside the trembling girl’s mind.

It naturally couldn’t have been the girl’s voice, as it sounded entirely different from hers. It hadn’t gone through her ears, but directly to her mind. The girl heaved an inconspicuous sigh, scrunching up her well-shaped eyebrows.

“That’s not a very pleasant thing to imagine. There is nothing to worry about in that regard, however. If I truly needed to, I could generate enough firepower to burn the whole area to the ground. You should not presume to look down on me.”

“Sooo even though you went through great pains to sneak out in the dead of night, you’ll throw it all away and get found out by making a lot of noiiise?” Is that an ideal scenario for you, Dona-Dona?”

“…”

“Cut, it out…Daphne. E…chidna…doesn’t, mean anything bad by it…or, maybe just a little? Mm, see, she must just be, relieved, to be alive again, prob…ably.”

She heard cynical remarks spoken with a sweet voice quickly get followed by faltering words of defense. The two differing voices did not belong to the girl, and they were different from the slothful voice of the woman who’d spoken first.

The three differing voices had taken turns speaking to the girl. However, all of the voices being directed towards the girl were laced with an equal amount of familiarity and complex emotions.

At that, the girl—no, the Witch who had changed her form, Echidna, relaxed her lips.

The form of the Witch with white hair and black eyes who was known for her black and white beauty had been lost. She was now using the girl’s body as a vessel for her soul, having managed to pull off the improbable act of reviving herself.

It was clear she had put a great deal of effort into her revival, and this turn of affairs was greatly troubling for her, but Echidna had maneuvered through it all and accomplished what she’d set out to do.

I’m not really one to get emotional, but I’ll give myself a rare pat on the back for a job well done in this matter. However…

“When you spend over 400 years as a spirit, you sort of forget what it’s like on the outside…”

“You got a little over-excited there. Dona, you’re such a child. Not good with stuff at all.”

“I’d rather you not refer to me as a child, but… I suppose there’s nothing I can say to that now.”

Echidna responded to that childish voice resounding within her mind, but she knew her words wouldn’t have any persuasion. In any case, I would rather not freeze to death right after my revival.

Thinking of something she could do as a last resort, and not having any other choice, Echidna snapped her fingers.

Her fingers that had grown numb produced a delicate, faint sound, and around her arose spots of crimson light. A small fireball the size of her fist flickered and swayed, manifesting an amount of firepower larger than one might think. It drove away the coldness of the snow-filled forest, which in turn banished the danger of freezing to death.

“Though the Gate seems different, the use of magic doesn’t seem to be an issue. In that case…”

“You’d be a laughingstock if you made a mistake with your use of magic this time and burned the whole forest down as a result.”

“It just doesn’t end… How dare you all keep spouting unending sarcasm at me. After working so hard to enact this plan, I'm starting to regret bringing all of you out."

Echidna sighed at the voice of the fifth person that rang in her head, as it marked the last one.

She unconsciously stretched her hand under her robe toward the object tied around the base of her bare neck—where an imposing blue glintstone necklace hung.

Echidna contemplated for a while, running a nail along the glintstone's hard surface. A person with a trained eye would be able to tell that it wasn't just your average object, but something that held great power.

It was an extremely high-grade magic crystal of the highest level of purity. It had an extraordinary ability to store magic energy and was currently storing overwhelming power within it, making use of its entire capacity.

Even a thousand high-level magic users wouldn't be able to use up the stored mana. And while it was extraordinary that such a small fragment could hold so much, using it all up would be quite an extraordinary feat as well. Your average person could never even imagine doing something like that.

And would anyone actually believe it was currently being used to store the souls of five people?

I went through great pains to secure this magic crystal and the vessel for my own soul. I spent 400 years as a spirit, and slowly put this plan into action over the course of 10 years—and finally, the moment has…

"Echidna! Earth to Echidna! Did you even hear a word I said?"

"—. I did. You're yelling right into my ear… No, would 'ear' wouldn't be the right word in this case? Could you not yell in my mind so much? It's seriously giving me a headache."

"This isn't the time to be having a leisurely conversation! Look beside you. Look!"

"Beside me?"

She pulled her consciousness out of the sea of thoughts by following the voice, then looked dubiously to her side. Thereupon, she saw a bright red light and many trees engulfed in flames, and the fire spreading from one tree to another.

Taking a quick glance, Echidna realized her single fireball had made the trees catch fire and was the spark that had started this forest fire.

"Oh dear."

"You seem quite composed, haaa."

"Well, you see, it's important to remain calm and not panic in these situations. And while it is certainly true that this inferno was unexpected…"

As Echidna finished speaking, she pointed her palm towards the burning trees and closed her eyes. "Extinguish!" she cried, emitting words of power from her lips as she opened her eyes.

"It still hasn't gone out…"

"Heeey, Daphne has some thoughts on this… That place seems to be different frooom Dona-Dona's Dream World, so will she even be able to interfere with it just by using words?"

"That would certainly be a problem."

"A b-big mis…calculation, isn't it?"

"Dona, did you start the fire? Are you a bad person, Dona? Are you Typhon's enemy?"

"This isn't the time for talking! Hurry up! Hurry up and put it out! Look!"

"Of course. I shall do it posthaste…guh."

As she tried to reign in the Witches having a shouting contest in her head, Echidna attempted to put the raging forest fire out with a spell but was hit with dizziness instead. Her spell had fizzled out mid-cast and failed to activate.

While the Witches were wondering what had happened, Echidna swiftly grasped the situation. “I’m not familiar enough with this body yet to create a flood using magic.”

Which is to say…

“I can’t put the fire out.”

“Then you need to get out of here right now—!!”

Not only had she been at risk of freezing to death, but now she was faced with burning to death on top of that. Echidna hit the ground running, as if that angry voice had whipped her into doing so.

The forest fire is spreading, and soon there will be nowhere to escape to. I need to get out of here.

Though she was unfamiliar with this body and hadn’t lifted a finger in over 400 years, Echidna ran like her life depended on it, gasping for air as she did so.

“The harshness of the outside world, is a little, different, from what I imagined,” Echidna lamented while panting, her body feeling heavy as the cold air took it into its embrace.

Although I feel like my body is about to break, when I consider the fact that I haven’t felt like this in several hundred years—

“No, that still won’t make this any easier… Hic.”

2

Fortunately, thanks to her desperate escape, Echidna managed to avoid burning to death.

The flames that were burning the forest down were quite powerful, but by guiding them however I pleased with wind I’d created with mana, I managed to secure an escape route. I wouldn’t have gotten out of there without it.

Now that I have escaped the dangerous forest fire, I can go back to traveling in these clothes—or rather, I was hoping things would have been that easy, but…

“Out of season heavy snowfall and a forest fire…and now after all that, I’ve found a girl wearin’ nuthin’ but rags. Are my eyes actin’ weird because of the miasma?” said a man.

“Don’t worry, I’m seeing the same thing…as long as this ain’t a dream or somethin’,” another man added.

“Hm…” While sitting on a tree stump, Echidna placed her hand on her chin as if she was thinking about something. Her appearance was that of a young child, but that pose suited her rather well due to the aura she exuded.

Thus, the man, no, the men, appeared confused due to the strange sensation, and were looking at each other. They were a group of fierce-looking men dressed like bandits that gave off dangerous auras. It looked like there were 18 of them at a glance, and with each of them holding a well-worn weapon, they looked rather comical surrounding a little girl. However, not judging things from appearances alone and following their instincts was their forte. You could assume that was the case due to how they looked and what their occupation was.

“I assume you’re here because of the Great Rabbit, yes? In other words…you gentlemen are Scavengers.”

“What?” a scavenger blurted out.

“Hm? Are you called by a different name in this age? According to his knowledge, you could be called looters, but that doesn’t suit you either… I wonder what I should call you?”

Echidna tilted her head a little, making the men make nervous expressions as if they’d just felt something ominous.

Scavenging—an occupation that also existed 400 years ago—was something that involved going through the homes and belongings of the villages and people that had been ravaged by witchbeasts and turning what was plundered into money. This was especially so if the site had been ravaged by the Great Rabbit since everything apart from the original inhabitants would remain untouched, making it an ideal site for Scavengers.

“Even if there are survivors, you can easily dispose of them and make it seem like witchbeasts did it. What a clever way to hunt. You gentlemen were just born to be hyenas.”

“Hyena? You mean… Hyena-people? What are ya even talking about…no.”

The man in the front shook his head and glared at Echidna with a machete in his hand. His fear for the mysterious child and a strong desire to harm her could be seen in his eyes. It was clear he was well aware of what he should and should not get involved with.

“I don’t know what yer story is, but our livelihood depends on it. For some reason, the rabbit’s trail disappeared without a trace. On top of that, there was a wildfire and…you appeared.”

“I see, do continue,” Echidna prodded.

“You’re an ominous girl, but ya don’t look bad. And you have those ears after all,” the man said, smiling wickedly as he flicked his ear.

His gesture brought Echidna’s current physical characteristics to light—which she had because the girl who had become her vessel was a half-elf.

It’s not as if they think of me as a half-devil. What’s important is the value of the product, not the purity of the blood. Whether I’m a pureblood or a half-blood, it’s all the same to them.

“Elves are treated like that in this age too?” Echidna wondered.

“Based on the way ya say things, are you an old hag who’s been hidin’ in the woods for a long time or somethin’?” Elves are scary since ya can’t guess their age by their looks. But yeah, that’s right. Even now, elves get sold fer a good price.”

"…"

"—Woa?" the man grunted. He'd felt like his skin was boiling for a second. The other men, having felt the same thing, were startled. They all started buzzing about it, wondering what could have happened. The only one who knew what had happened touched the glintstone on her chest and tried to calm the Witch of Wrath's rage.

"Hey, I don't know if yer a brat or an old hag, but whatever you do, don't get any silly ide…"

"Alright," Echidna said, cutting him off. "At this rate, we won't be able to reach a mutual understanding. You gentlemen want to capture me and make some money. On the other hand, I want to continue my carefree journey. So, I'd like to propose a compromise. What do you say?"

"A compromise? Do ya think you're in a position to negotiate?"

"I want you to give it some thought. That way, there will be a chance that both of us make it out of this safely," Echidna appealed with a smile, her head tilted.

The child's smile made the man gasp hard and take a step back, as if it had overwhelmed him. And then, the man, looking as if he couldn't believe he'd reacted like that, immediately said, "I'll give it a listen."

"I'm glad. My proposal is simple. 30 seconds is all I need. I'll go with you without fighting back if you are able to stand in front of me for 30 seconds without anything happening to you. Since it seems interesting too."

"Ha. What's up with that? Do you think something like that will be enough to scare us…?"

"—Well then, the 30 second countdown begins now."

The moment she perceived that they had accepted her terms, Echidna stroked her long-white hair, narrowed her dark eyes, and glared at the men.

"…"

All of the men looked like they had no idea what had just happened. In their eyes, it must have looked like the child in front of them who looked to be around 10 years old had suddenly turned into a beautiful girl with white hair. However, before the men could get an answer to their question, they started succumbing to the abnormality that assaulted them one after another.

"Kah…ku."

The man holding the machete fell to his knees. His eyes darted around all over the place, not focusing on any one thing, and then began foaming at the mouth. A similar phenomenon occurred not only to him, but to all the men surrounding her as well. The eighteen men in Echidna's line of sight were unable to resist her Witch's Miasma and thus in great agony.

The men scratched and tore at their necks, rolled their eyes back into their heads, blew foam out of their mouths, convulsed, choked on their tongues, split their own heads open with their weapons, buried their heads in the snow, and died in agony in various other ways.

"—Exactly thirty seconds."

Having finished counting the 30 seconds she'd promised them, Echidna looked around. There was nothing but men lying motionless in their own blood and vomit. Unfortunately, there hadn't been any among them who could endure the thirty seconds of hell and qualify to be the Sage that could reign over the six Witches.

"It was unfortunate for all of you, but a promise is a promise. I'll just continue with my carefree journey then. I don't think anyone will mind if I borrow some clothes and shoes," Echidna said, then took some clothes that could fit her from the fallen men and put them on.

By that time, her appearance had already returned to that of the child from before.

“It doesn’t last long, it seems. I suppose I’ll have to wait until I get more used to it. But still…”

Echidna looked back at the fallen men, then closed her eyes and thought of the boy with black hair, of the boy who remained unaffected while being surrounded by the Witches covered in miasma—though he probably didn't even realize how abnormal it was to be able to do that.

"I can't wait to get to a city now that I have a little traveling money. I'd like to think that the taste of tea has changed over the course of a few hundred years… Now then."

Echidna flipped the hem of her long clothes and once again set off on her journey without a destination. While leaving, she began feeling gratitude for the men who had provided her with clothes, shoes, and travel money.

"I was about to go out and make a terrible first impression with people by wearing nothing but a piece of cloth over my naked body. It was quite a terrible mistake—I will always remember you gentlemen as being my saviors."

She hadn't uttered words of deceit or anything; she'd been sincere. Echidna would never forget her debt to them, till her soul perishes, the men who worked as Scavengers, who met the Witch here and died.

"Aah. I know, I know. You guys are noisy. Spare me already."

The Witch slowly started moving forward on her journey as she responded to the voices in her head.

—The sky was high above, the wind was lukewarm, and the light seemed to be blessing the one who had returned after hundreds of years.

END

The Witch's After Tea Party:
The Witches' Evaluation Meeting
(Short Story Collection 6; Melon Books)
(Translation Pending)

The Loving World Seen Through Petra's Eyes (Short Story Collection 3; Melon Books) (Translation Pending)

Sword Demon Love Story:
The Bride’s Father
(Ex 3; Gamers)

1

—Anxiety was something that Wilhelm had never felt.

He could understand feelings of tension and caution, in which both the body and mind became tense, but such feelings were inseparable from the battlefield, and those who were not perceptive to them didn’t live for long.

Thus, Wilhelm was used to being under pressure. And that was why he couldn’t help but be surprised at how he was currently acting.

“…” Wilhelm’s limbs felt slightly numb, and he felt parched. Those sensations had come out of nowhere, and they were eating away at his mind and body.

“It seems like I, too, am a human being at the end of the day…”

“Wilhelm? Hey, Wilhelm, are you alright?” A voice called out to Wilhelm, who’d just loosened his collar and let out a hot breath. The person with that worried voice was looking at him with concern in her beautiful blue eyes.

Wilhelm psyched himself up after seeing her concerned gaze. He shook his head. “It’s nothing. I am just a bit thirsty.”

“Really? But you’ve been drinking tea this whole time… Are you perhaps nervous about something?”

Wilhelm held his breath when she asked that, as she was spot-on.

But the girl’s—Theresia’s—expression changed instantly when he answered her question with silence. “I see… So that’s how it is. Wilhelm, you’re nervous.”

Her concerned look became somewhat joyful, and he got caught in her mischievous gaze. Making him feel uncomfortable, he clicked his tongue.

“Oh, you clicked your tongue. Don’t do that when he is around. Me, Grimm, and the rest won’t care, but I think the people meeting you for the first time will care a lot.”

“I’ll do my best… What’s taking him so long?”

“Patience. He should be here soon…oh,” Theresia replied, hiding her mouth with a hand after Wilhelm looked away.

Right after that, the parlor’s door opened, and the person they were waiting for appeared.

“Mother, Father,” said Theresia, her eyes shining as she got up from the sofa.

The two on the receiving end of that had just entered the parlor. One was a graceful woman with her beige hair tied behind her head—a beautiful lady with clearly marked features. She was donned in a fluffy dress with long sleeves that suited her perfectly, and her eyes, which were sizing him up, caught his attention. The other person was a man with red hair and blue eyes—which matched Theresia’s—and it was clear at first glance that he had descended from a special bloodline. Those features were unique to the house of the Sword Saint, which had existed in the Dragon Kingdom of Lugunica for generations.

“…” Wilhelm also stood up—albeit a little after Theresia—after witnessing that. He bowed to the two who had appeared, being conscious of his body that had become stiff. He felt like it had become even heavier the moment they appeared. That was only natural, however. Since…

“Welcome back, Theresia. And thank you for coming, Mr. Wilhelm.”

The one who had said that was the red-haired man—whose name was Veltol Astrea, the head of House Astrea. But Wilhelm had a more appropriate way of addressing him.

“I heard you had something important to discuss… But what brings you here today, I wonder? I have no clue why you are here. None at all.”

While smiling gently, Veltol kept repeating the same thing, gradually making his tone stronger. Veins bulged on his forehead, and his blue eyes weren’t smiling at all.

Wilhelm—thinking him to be a tough opponent—felt slightly hurt as he sat in front of his future father-in-law.

2

Wilhelm and Theresia had traveled to the Astrea domain in the southern part of the Kingdom of Lugunica—and they were currently at Astrea Manor, Theresia’s home. For Theresia, she was just returning home, and for Wilhelm, he was just visiting the home of his beloved, but this trip was much more important than that. To put it simply, Wilhelm was there to greet Theresia’s parents and ask them for her hand in marriage.

In short, all hell was about to break loose.

“But I’m really glad that you chose Wilhelm. He seems like a sincere man. She has always been somewhat shy, so I was worried about what kind of man she would take a fancy to.”

“Geez, Mother… Don’t embarrass me like that.”

A table between them, Mother and Child were engaged in conversation. Theresia and her mother—Tishua Astrea—had been making small talk about the past and future, holding a cup of tea in one hand, since the first, simple greeting. Tishua seemed to be rather welcoming of Wilhelm. He hadn’t directly mentioned anything about marriage, but her joy was evident in every word she uttered. He honestly felt comforted by the fact that the mother of the bride was on his side.

However…

“So, Mr. Wilhelm. What is your status, what is the rank you hold?”

“…My apologies. I am a knight, though I was only knighted recently.”

“Oh my! So you’re just a knight! I see…so that is how it is.”

The one speaking as if he had a hidden meaning behind his words was Veltol, who was sitting in front of Wilhelm. The future father-in-law had a magnificent beard and regal features, and he was keen on finding out whether Wilhelm was a suitable partner for his daughter or not. And it seemed like he wasn’t the least bit happy with his title.

“Of course, becoming a knight without any sort of backing is no mean feat. I’ll give you that. But I think it happened far too quickly. I wonder who knighted you. I can’t wrap my head around why they would do such a thing…”

“Father, the person who knighted Wilhelm was His Majesty Gionis.”

Once Theresia added that piece of information in, Veltol did a complete 180. “As expected, His Majesty is wise! I can do nothing but admire his decision!” Looking distant, he then muttered something under his breath. “His Majesty shouldn’t have done that…”

But peculiarly, his voice was loud enough that everyone could hear.

He’s not very good at hiding things, Wilhelm thought.

Although they had only been together for an extremely short period of time, Wilhelm discovered several things about Veltol. That he loved his daughter a lot, that he wasn’t okay with his daughter getting married, that he wasn’t good at hiding things, that he was—anyway, he learned quite a bit about Veltol.

“…” He took a quick glance at the women next to them and saw that Theresia was somewhat nervous as she looked at them talk. As for Tishua, she baffled him with a gentle smile that was devoid of all emotion. To be honest, if she were the one that had disapproved of him, the unpredictable Tishua would have been more of a challenge. That’s why you could say it was a good thing that the predictable Veltol was the one who disapproved of him. Nevertheless, how the bride's father was treating him was abnormal, and there was something else that was making him uneasy.

—The nervousness that made him feel like his body was becoming numb was growing stronger by the minute.

"What is the matter, Mr. Wilhelm? It seems like you are, a bit pale?" said Veltol, expressing his concern for Wilhelm as he was being tormented by extreme thirst and stress eating away at his body. But there was no way he could tell him how he was really feeling.

If I do, he'll deem me a failure of a man who can't even control his own emotions.

What Veltol was saying wasn't wrong. Wilhelm had come emptyhanded. He didn't have a title, and neither was his future laid out for him. In fact, he had whisked away Theresia's future as the Sword Saint. That being the case, he needed to make something of himself and prove his worth.

Wilhelm began the conversation with a serious air. "Lord Veltol, Lady Tishua, there is something I want to say to you."

"You do not have the right to call me your father!!" Jumping to conclusions, Veltol tried to crush him right away.

"Honey, you are jumping to conclusions. Wilhelm has not called you that yet." Tishua pointed it out with a gentle smile. "But." She paused. "I am fine with you calling me mother anytime."

"Huh?! What the hell are you saying, Tishua?!"

Veltol stood up looking white as a sheet after hearing Tishua's words. His eyes darted to-and-fro, and then he looked at his beloved wife and beloved daughter.

"Our family is, our family is on the verge of breaking apart as we speak! How will we be able to protect Theresia from this scoundrel if we do not unite here?"

"Father! Stop calling him a scoundrel! Wilhelm isn't like that at all! If that's what you think, are you insinuating that His Majesty Gionis has poor judgement?"

"Yo-Your father has said no such thing! How dare you speak like that to me, Theresia! I will see to it that you are properly disciplined for this. I can't marry you off until then…" Veltol declared with an evil face.

"F-a-t-h-e-r!" Theresia ferociously shouted at him.

Wilhelm was a bit overwhelmed by their vigor.

"I am sorry, Wilhelm. These two are always like this." Tishua calmly apologized to Wilhelm before noticing that the cup in his hand was empty. "Oh my, your cup is empty. I do apologize for not noticing. Allow me to give you a…"

"—Hic! Stop, Tishua! I will pour it for him myself," Veltol declared suddenly, hurriedly standing up and bringing the teapot from the serving cart over to give Wilhelm a refill. As hot steam and the rich smell of tea leaves wafted through the air, Veltol stroked his beard proudly. "Go ahead and drink to your heart's content. Don't be shy. You must have been anxious since we took time to get ready, right? Do drink, do drink."

Wilhelm frowned after being pressured to drink more. Indeed, it had taken quite a while for Veltol and his wife to arrive at the parlor. Thanks to that, he'd spent quite a lot of time drinking tea and killing time, so much so that he became aware of his nervousness. As a result, he talked less and worried that his parents-in-laws had developed a bad impression of him. Maybe all of this anxiety and worry is what is making my body feel numb, he thought, and as he was about to bring the cup to his mouth…

"—Wait, Wilhelm. Don't drink that tea."

The one who had leaned forward and stopped him was Theresia. She snatched the cup out of his hand and looked at the tea by narrowing her blue eyes.

That made Veltol start panicking.

“Hey!” Veltol exclaimed with a husky voice. “Do not act so unladylike. If you want a refill, then tell me. It has been quite some time since your father has shown off his skills, and…”

“That’s right, it’s very rare. What on earth happened for you to be making tea for someone?”

“Oops!”

“Did you just say oops?” asked Wilhelm.

Veltol went pale, as if he wasn’t expecting to be questioned like that. On top of that, his face started to break out into a cold sweat, and it was clear that he was in a bit of a pickle.

“A-ha-ha…” Tishua looked down and quivered her lips after leering at Veltol’s situation. Her beautiful cheeks became red, and her moist eyes looked at her panicking husband alluringly. Although it was still hard to guess what she was feeling, it seemed like she was enjoying the situation.

Wilhelm vaguely understood what was going on. “You mean, Lord Veltol did something to everyone’s tea?”

“More like, he only mixed something into your tea. Father?”

“Eek! I’m innocent!”

Veltol, who was being glared at by his daughter, said a cliché line that people who did something bad say. Wilhelm looked at his tea as he listened to his words that almost sounded like a confession, and then things clicked. It was indeed unnatural. I felt thirstier the more I drank. My body felt strangely numb and tense. I thought it was due to the anxiety of visiting my lover’s parents’ house, but…

“Besides, it seems like I didn’t use the right ratio when I mixed in the drug. Since he looks completely unaffected even after drinking so much…”

“The person who drugged the tea shouldn’t admit to it like it’s nothing! What did you try to make Wilhelm drink? Could it be that, you poisoned…”

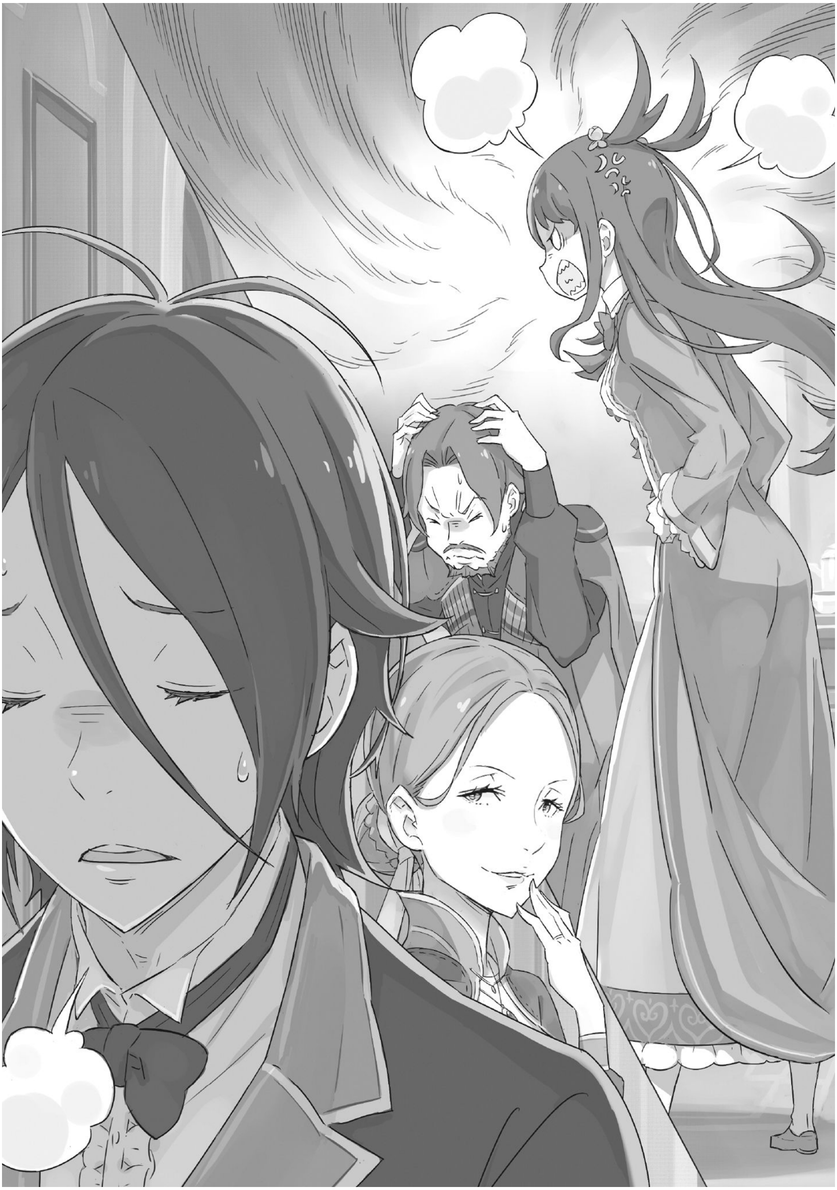
“I would never do something so horrendous! All I did was mix in a small amount of a drug that makes you lose control of your bladder…” Veltol confessed like a timid child, tapping his index fingers together in front of his chest.

The drug he had prepared was something that caused polydipsia. In short, no matter how much tea he drank, his thirst would never be quenched, and the urine filling his bladder would eventually leak out—

“You’re such a conniving man, Father! Even if Wilhelm peed himself because of that, I wouldn’t stop loving him! I would love both him and his pee!”

“What?! Are you serious, Theresia?! You’re fine with being with a man that peed himself?!”

“I didn’t pee myself…” muttered Wilhelm, a bitter expression on his face, but the father and daughter ignored it and started arguing again.



As they completely ignored the person at the center of their argument and argued about whether he had peed himself or not, Wilhelm lost the energy to intervene. Either way, the thing he needed to do was—

"The bathroom is right at the end of the hallway after you exit the room."

Sensing Wilhelm's intentions, Tishua briefly told Wilhelm where to go.

I wonder how much this lady knew about what her husband was up to.

"—Thank you for telling me the way so courteously."

Wilhelm felt like it was far scarier to ask about that, so he turned his doubt into words of gratitude upon standing up.

"Speaking of which, Wilhelm. —This is how our family is, so do you think you will be able to adjust?"

Wilhelm narrowed his eyes at her question. Veltol and Theresia were still arguing, and he didn't feel like he had the energy to join them, but…

"—I wonder, Mother. Father seems like a hard man to get along with."

"A-ha-ha, you get full marks."

Tishua evaluated Wilhelm's answer with a big smile. Looking at that smile, he was convinced that Theresia and Tishua were mother and child.

I feel like I'll be able to connect with Veltol, at least when it comes to being pushed around by our wives.

With such feelings in his heart, Wilhelm hurriedly stepped out of the door while listening to the argument between the father and daughter.

END

Sword Demon Love Story: Earth Dragon Capital Flanders (Ex 3; Toranoana)

1

“Eek… Woah, it’s really high up!”

The view had drastically changed when the crouched earth dragon stood up. Naturally, it was different from what she was used to, making her let out a gasp of excitement.

“The breeze up here feels so nice… This makes me feel like a princess.” said the beautiful young red-haired girl sheepishly while clinging on to the thick neck of the earth dragon. She was saying it jokingly, but if you were to consider her pretty appearance, you wouldn’t be able to laugh it off as a joke. At least that’s what Wilhelm, who was supporting her, thought. Wilhelm was riding on the earth dragon with the young girl and had his hands wrapped around her slim waist. The innocent attitude of the cheerful young girl brought a slight smile upon the face of the man known as the Sword Demon. His usually cold demeanor towards others melted away in the presence of the pretty girl.

“Hey, Wilhelm, are you listening to me?”

The girl turned her head towards Wilhelm. She pouted her lips, annoyed by his lack of response.

“My bad, I wasn’t listening. My breath was taken away.”

“You mean by the scenery?”

“No, by you.”

“—Hic, st-stop, saying things like that.”

He was just being honest about how he really felt, but the girl reacted dramatically to his words. She looked forward, turning her head away from him, her ears and nape of her neck turning bright red.

She probably doesn't want me to see her blushing as red as an abble. I don't know what I did to make her blush, but I want to see her adorable flushed cheeks.

Wilhelm removed one of the arms holding her waist and tried touching her cheek.

"No-don't…I don't want you to see my face, right now."

"I want to see it."

"You're so mean! Oh, honestly…"

Wilhelm became further amused when she looked down shyly and writhed uncomfortably. Then he leaned forward and gently grabbed the girl's chin, turning her around—

"—Leave it there, Trias."

A sharp and deadly sword-like aura struck Wilhelm from the side.

"…"

Wilhelm glanced around and saw another earth dragon running next to them. The sword-like aura was coming from the person riding it. It was a beautiful swordsman with blonde hair and green eyes, and she was directing her aura mercilessly—no, the tip of her long sword—at him. Wilhelm was amazed that she was willing to go that far and then spoke up while thinking so.

"I'm…no longer a Trias," he retorted tiredly, leaving aside the frustration of his expression of love being interrupted.

2

"Carol, you shouldn't be so quick to draw your sword. The people of the ranch also got really surprised, you know." The red-haired young girl scolded with puffed cheeks and her hands on her hips.

The person being scolded—Carol, the blonde female swordsman—lowered her head in deference. She was no longer emitting a murderous sword aura, so Wilhelm didn't feel in danger anymore, but…

"My apologies, Lady Theresia. I lost my composure at Trias's insolent behavior…"

"Don't make me repeat myself. The House of Trias is no more. I am no longer a Trias. And you don't seem sorry at all."

Wilhelm directed a harsh glare and harsh words at the still hostile Carol. She glared at him and opened her mouth to stir up the futile fight all over again.

However…

"Alright, that's enough! Both of you, no fighting!"

The one who came between and stopped the fight before it started was the red-haired girl. Wilhelm and Carol were considered to be formidable swordsmen of their own right, but the red-haired girl was undaunted by it.

If she couldn't handle a fight like this, then how could she have accomplished the great feat of stopping the Demi-Human War. Setting aside whether her unwavering bravery was a quality he wished for himself, Wilhelm could not have achieved such a great feat. The red-haired girl's name was Theresia van Astrea. She held the title of Sword Saint, which only the best swordsman was given, and was also a champion that had stopped a lengthy war. Nonetheless, she had relinquished her title and had just begun her life as a newlywed.

"Come on! Why does everyone keep getting in our way?" asked Wilhelm. "You know exactly what I'm talking about, don't you?"

"Don't get carried away, Tri…Wilhelm. I have been ordered by Lord Bertol to keep an eye on you so that you don't go too far with your insolent attitude towards Lady Theresia. I'm definitely not acting like this due to a personal grudge."

"The only reason you answered like that is because you feel that way…"

"Youuu guys are fighting agaaain!" Theresia shouted, stopping the two who were about to go at it again.

But Theresia, who usually had a soft spot for Carol, had begun to feel closer to Wilhelm during their time alone together. She put her hand on Carol's shoulder and said, "Carol, I'm happy that you are worried, but…we're on our honeymoon, you know? So please. Give us some space."

"But Lady Theresia…" replied Carol. "I'm worried."

"Yes, I know. But I have a really dependable husband."

Theresia, who had straightened her posture, leered at Wilhelm sitting behind her. It was a very seductive gesture and she was unaware that it was a bad move.

Seeing Theresia growing closer with the likes of Wilhelm was making Carol more and more hostile towards him. But, even so, Carol turned towards Wilhelm with a look of pain, saying, "Wilhelm, take care of Lady Theresia…"

"Does it really torture you that much to trust me to take care of her?"

It was probably after going through a lot of pain that she decided to trust me with Theresia, but she's really acting like she doesn't want me to be with her at all. And like—

"—She's just going to ride an earth dragon for the first time."

Wilhelm's sigh came out in vain on the plateau of the Earth Dragon Capital, Flanders. The rancher holding the reins of the earth dragon in the distance could be seen waiting with a lost look on his face for the three of them to settle their dispute.

3

Theresia had ridden dragon carriages before but had never ridden an earth dragon. She had unexpectedly told Wilhelm that on their journey to Flanders.

“We had earth dragons back at home and my eldest brother was a master dragon rider but…”

“But you didn’t have any talent for riding them?” inquired Wilhelm.

“No, it isn’t like that…it’s just that I was afraid of touching animals,” she replied with a lonely smile, holding her hands close to her body.

Her fear of touching animals was something that arose due to her divine protection: the Divine Protection of the Death God. How it created wounds that would never heal when she cut something made her sensitive and terribly afraid of wounding others. That was probably the reason why she had been hesitant about interacting with earth dragons. However, now that she had given up the sword and had better control of her divine protection, she felt like she had the right to give riding an earth dragon a try, something she wasn’t able to do as a child. And she was going to exercise that right of hers here in the Earth Dragon Capital while on her honeymoon.

“And then there’s this retainer here who won’t leave us the hell alone.”

Wilhelm cussed at Carol, who was trying to get in the way of their fun by complaining about everything.

Theresia smiled gently at Wilhelm’s words. “Forgive her, Carol is just worried about me. Thames…my eldest brother…was a lot like her.”

I’ve heard that two of her elder brothers and her younger brother were killed in action during the civil war. In short, it means that the overprotectiveness of her brothers are lodged inside Carol alone. I guess if I think about it that way I can see why she’s constantly interfering.

“Although forgiving her for that is a different story.”

“Hmmm, well, yeah, you’re right…”

Theresia smiled wryly and Wilhelm squinted looking at her smile. And then they heard the rancher. “We are ready to go,” he said.

I wonder if he was waiting for us to finish talking. We’ve really been troubling this kind-looking rancher for a while now.

While feeling sorry about that, Wilhelm held Theresia’s waist again and made the crouching earth dragon stand up.

“—Hic.”

Theresia trembled with a faint sensation of excitement as the view became higher instantly. She had been interrupted the first time while she was still trying to enjoy the view. This time, however, the pest didn’t get in the way, and Wilhelm, well aware of her feelings, didn’t do anything to ruin it.

Naturally, Theresia was in a position where she was looking down at the wind-swept plateau. She narrowed her blue eyes that looked as if a clear blue sky had been locked within them and gazed compassionately at the world below.

“Hey, Wilhelm, do you know? About the different types of earth dragons and where their names came from?” Theresia asked the silent Wilhelm out of the blue. Wilhelm thought about her question for a bit and then shook his head. There were several types of earth dragons that had adapted to their local climates and environments. To start with, there was the Flanna species, which was the most numerous and versatile. Next was the Eliq species, which had adapted to the cold regions of the world. Then there was the Agaress species, which were suitable for desert environments. And lastly there was the Diana species, which were said to have the most superior blood of all. These are some examples of existing earth dragon species.

But apart from their species, I’ve never really thought about where their names came from.

“Flanna, Eliq, Agaress, Diana…it’s said that all of them were flowers that existed long ago,” Theresia explained. “All earth dragon names adopt the names of flowers.”

“The names of flowers…”

“Yes. Isn’t that wonderful?”

I’m not sure if it’s wonderful or not, but I can’t stop thinking about the fact that earth dragons are named after flowers. I don’t know who named them, but I wonder why they named these friendly and loyal creatures after flowers.

“…It’s just as I had heard, they don’t try to harm people at all,” muttered Theresia while riding the earth dragon with Wilhelm and rubbing the scales on its neck. The initial wave of nervousness melted away from her expression, and she seemed to have fallen into a sense of ease riding on the earth dragon’s back.

In fact, a lot of people who get on top of earth dragons are surprised by their calm temperament and their consideration for the riders and come to trust them.

This reminds me of my own first time. I was a child, and it was before I started learning swordsmanship. I think my brother was the one who helped me.

“…”

Wilhelm also had two older brothers. Both were now deceased, however. He had carried his grief, accepted it, and overcame it. He thought he had gotten over it, but doing this with Theresia reminded him of the past, and—

“Wilhelm?”

“My two older brothers were no good when it came to the art of the sword. Though they were both bookworms, and reliable individuals, so dad and mom gave the domain to them.”

Theresia hadn’t anticipated Wilhelm’s response to her call. Nonetheless, after widening her eyes once, she immediately closed them and listened to what he had to say.

“…”

It was Wilhelm’s first time telling Theresia—no, anyone—about his family. Everyone involved in the war knew that his family, House Trias, had perished in the midst of the Demi-human War. Theresia knew it, too. That’s why neither she nor people close to him asked any questions that might open up old wounds. He then came to the sudden realization that he had been taking their kindness for granted. Unable to keep quiet now that he was aware of that, the memories he had of his family flowed out of him unreservedly.

I was scolded often by my eldest brother. I always fought my elder brother. My father lamented my behavior that it wasn’t befitting for an aristocrat, and my mother often hid my sword. But my eldest brother patiently tried to talk to me, and my elder brother always came to help me even if my foes outnumbered me. My father instilled in me the customs and the manners of the aristocrats saying that I’d never know when and where it would come in handy. My mother often hugged me whenever I did anything reckless.

That’s the kind of people they were. —We were once that type of family.

“…I see.” Theresia replied in a faltering voice after Wilhelm had finished speaking.

—But he felt that he was able to truly mourn the family he had lost for the first time.

4

“Hey, Carol! Over here! Hurry up!”

“La-Lady Theresia! Please slow down… Wait for me!”

Carol, who was unable to speak properly, yanked on the reins and chased after the excited Theresia. The two earth dragons ran like the wind, and Wilhelm watched it from a distance and was impressed by Theresia’s skills, who had improved by leaps and bounds in a matter of just a few hours. As one would expect, she improved immediately after she got the hang of it. Perhaps it was down to the earth dragon’s considerate nature, but now Theresia’s riding skills had surpassed Carol's who was a veteran rider. Wilhelm would also be in danger of falling behind if he didn't practice.

"The madam is riding wonderfully," muttered the smiling rancher next to Wilhelm while watching Theresia try to do a difficult maneuver like trotting.

We made this man, a rancher in Flanders, accommodate us a lot since it's Theresia's first time riding an earth dragon. I want to repay his kindness somehow, but…

"That earth dragon has become completely attached to the madam, so…how about that one?"

"…"

He's good, Wilhelm thought, narrowing his eyes, before observing the yellow earth dragon that Theresia was riding. The bright color of its scales matched well with her red hair.

"What's its name?" Wilhelm asked.

"Yes," answered the rancher, smiling gently and rubbing his hands together, "the name of that earth dragon is…"

Wilhelm gazed in wonder after hearing his reply. And then he laughed out loud, which was something he rarely did.

—Since the name of that earth dragon was also a flower that held a lot of memories for Wilhelm and Theresia and was very precious to them.

END

Sword Demon Love Story: The Other Side of The Honeymoon (Ex 3; Melon Books)

“Over here, Carol, come on.”

“Lady Theresia, you’ll hurt yourself if you run off like that.”

With that, the girl frowned and chased after the young girl rushing ahead. Despite the slight commotion they were causing, no one raised an eyebrow at them. After all, when it was a pair of great beauties producing such a ruckus—as the two girls were—it was considered less of a disturbance, and more of a spectacle, as though they were watching a scene in a play.

Theresia and Carol, unaware of their surroundings, walked through the streets of the merchant city of Picoutatte—marking the interlude of the honeymoon. Though the two stood on good terms, they were not newlyweds. Theresia was linked to her beloved husband, Wilhelm, and Carol was their attendant on the trip. However, Wilhelm was currently unable to enjoy his honeymoon. Because…

“He’s a fortunate man to survive a wound of that magnitude,” sighed Carol after catching up with Theresia and linking arms with her. Her gaze moved towards the clinic on the other side of the street. Two of their companions were hospitalized at said clinic, one of them being Wilhelm.

Wilhelm was on a trip, but for reasons unknown had been forced to a duel with a powerful enemy, and in exchange for reaching his goal, he had been seriously wounded and was charged with bedrest.

So, Theresia and Carol found themselves strolling through the commercial district…

“Yeah, he’s caused me a lot of grief,” began Theresia, “but he has such bad luck… That’s dad for you.”

“That’s not what I…!” cried Carol, the color draining from her complexion. “Lady Theresia, I wasn’t referring to Lord Veltol…”

“I know. I was just kidding,” Theresia said, flashing Carol a mischievous grin.

Along with Wilhelm, the other person who was also hospitalized was Theresia’s father, Veltol. In truth, his condition was at one point critical and the fact that they were now able to laugh was by virtue of a string of miracles. One being Wilhelm’s efforts, and the other being…

“Oh?” Something caught Theresia’s attention, causing her to stare in wide-eyed wonder.

She has the most exquisite sky blue eyes, thought Carol. No matter how long I stare into them, I never grow tired of them.

Following Theresia’s gaze stood a man buying sherbert from a street vendor. He was a lanky fellow dressed in a white surgical gown. His eyes narrowed in displeasure due to what seemed like nervousness, but as Carol watched him devour the frozen treat her impression of him completely changed. Maybe that’s how he always looks. There’s only one person who scowls like that.

“Oh, it’s you two.” The familiar face also seemed to have noticed Carol and her friend standing on the street.

Carol and Theresia returned the bow of the man holding a bowl of sherbert. “Are you taking a break now, Dr. Galić?” asked Theresia.

“Yup,” replied the man in the gown with a spoon in his mouth. “I can finally take a breather after dealing with all those people who fell into the river.”

He was refreshingly ill-mannered, but strangely enough, she couldn’t bring herself to complain. It was no wonder then, that Veltol’s miraculous recovery was in no small part a consequence of the doctor’s efforts. Without Wilhelm’s brave fighting or Galić’s efforts, Veltol wouldn’t be alive today. For this reason, Theresia lowered her head in respect. “I’m sorry to have created more work for you, Doctor," she apologized. "We completely destroyed that bridge, and it looks like a lot of people got caught in the middle of the commotion…"

"What? They were just onlookers at the duel," said the doctor. "They were prepared to get a little roughed up. I'm sure you were too. Fortunately, no one was seriously hurt, though some of them might catch a cold."

Theresia's apology referred to the duel that resulted in Wilhelm's hospitalization. The duel, which took place on the city's main bridge, ended with the adversary escaping. In doing so, they collapsed the bridge, resulting in many of the onlookers falling into the river. If one were to believe in Galić's recounting of the events, it sounded like no one was injured, but Theresia felt strongly remorseful all the same.

"Lady Theresia, please don't feel too upset by it," said Carol. "The responsibility lies with the miscreant who collapsed the bridge. It wasn't your fault."

"But…"

"In that case, your father will pay for the bridge repairs, as well as the treatment of any onlookers," Galić assured her. "No one will complain then."

Carol wanted to ease Theresia's guilt as much as possible and was grateful to receive support from Galić. Although the doctor in question didn't seem to have such intentions, on the contrary, he had said the exact right thing to Theresia. This was perhaps due to an overlap in his inconsiderate manner and her honest character.

"Thank you, Dr. Galić," Theresia said. "That makes me feel a little better."

"That's great… In that case, while you're thanking me, I'd like to ask you something."

"Me?" questioned Theresia, tilting her head in puzzlement. "What can I do?"

Galić, happily tucking into his frozen treat, frowned and said, “The thing is, your father refused to listen to me when he recommended me for a position in the royal capital. I wonder if you could somehow get him to reconsider.”

“My father?” Theresia looked back with wide eyes at the sour-faced Galić’s request. Then she glanced at Carol, who was standing next to her. “Is it a bad thing to be recommended for such a position…?”

Carol thought for a moment and shook her head. “No, it is a great honor. Lord Veltol’s recovery is partly because he is now free of the ring’s curse, but also in a large part due to Dr. Galić’s efforts. I’m sure Lord Veltol appreciates your work, which is why he recommended you.”

“But I’m saying that I don’t want to go…”

Galić appeared reluctant to further discuss the topic.

Perhaps he didn’t aspire to push his career in medicine any further.

In fact, despite his overbearing personality, Veltol, the head of the Astrea family, held a high degree of influence. With his recommendation, it would be as good as guaranteed that Galić would prosper in the royal capital.

“Does that mean you’ve put roots down here?”

“It’s not that I don’t want to go to the royal capital. It’s more to do because…the mother of my son lives there,” muttered Galić bitterly.

“Huh?” Question marks hovered over the confused Theresia and Carol.

That’s a funny way of putting it. So that means she’s…

“Your wife?”

“No, she is just the mother of my son. He’s mine by blood, but I’m not married to his mother. A contractual relationship would be a more accurate way to describe our connection.”

"Um… What do you mean by contractual relationship?"

"To put it simply, I was asked to give her my seed," replied Galić matter-of-factly.

"!!!" Theresia and Carol both blushed at the unexpectedly radical confession.

Registering their shocked reactions, Galić put his hand to his head and said, "Sorry, I didn't mean to shock you two. But that's my current situation."

"W-We should be the ones who should be apologizing for asking about such personal matters… I guess that means you don't want to meet the mother of your child?" asked Theresia.

"I think it would be better for everyone involved if we didn't see each other. I can't say I've been a good father and it's hard to imagine she's doing a good job as a mother. So…"

"I think this is up to your son to decide." Theresia, shaking off her embarrassment, shot Galić a serious look. "Happiness is ultimately a choice and one that we can only make for ourselves. It's up to you, Doctor, if you don't want to see your son, but…please don't jump to conclusions as to what your son will feel. "

"…"

"I've been through a lot too, but I can proudly say that I'm happy now. Even if you think that you haven't been a good father, maybe things will be different from now on."

Clearly, Theresia had given the delicate situation a great deal of thought.

Standing next to her, Carol couldn't help but feel proud and loved her all the more. Look at her, she thought. I want to stand at the top of the world and exclaim, "Take a look at this fine young woman."

"Well, this is amusing. Your companion holds herself in a more dignified manner than you." Looking at Theresia and Carol, the sickly-looking Galić laughed.

The scrawny healer laughed, tilted the bowl of now melted sherbet, and poured it down his throat. He exhaled a chilled breath. “You’re right,” he said. “Happiness is up to the individual. I pretended it was for my son, but I was just making excuses. I should be ashamed of myself.”

“Doctor, that’s not what I…”

“Well, I’ve made up my mind. I won’t go to the royal capital because I don’t want to see him.”

“Huh?”

Theresia’s eyes widened in disbelief. Her attempts at persuading the doctor resulted in the opposite of what she was expecting. Galić flashed a toothy grin.

“If my happiness is up to me to decide, then I choose to not go to the royal capital. It’s not as simple as whether my son wants to see me or not… But now is not the right time.”

“Oh, well I can’t argue with that… Carol…” replied Theresia.

“It’s unfortunate,” began Carol, “but you have managed to make Lady Theresia’s honest intentions work in your favor… “

In truth, Carol had never conspired against others before, and the same was true for Theresia, who couldn’t wrap her head around the doctor’s train of thought. As they metaphorically raised a white flag, Galić puffed his nose in a good mood and said, “I’ve made up my mind and I have you to thank, my lady. Now, all we have to do is to convince your father to throw in the towel.”

“Um, about that…”

“Yeah?”

Theresia covered her mouth as Galić cleared his throat. She then looked over at Carol, who nodded in agreement. They may have lost this battle, but they still had Veltol to win the war. He was known to be childish and absolutely relentless.

"Who would've thought there would come the day I'd hope to see Lord Veltol act in a less than graceful manner…" Carol admitted.

"Let's see which of them can turn the tables in their favor," giggled Theresia.

"What a pair of sinister grins…" said Galić, looking at the two girls.

Carol had known Veltol for a long time, so she and Theresia were confident in their victory. But even so…

"What kind of person is she? The woman who um…isn't your wife…" asked Theresia.

"I can't speak for others, but she's an eccentric woman. She has excellent abilities, but is difficult to handle," replied Galić. "I'm not sure if her decision to bear my child was because she wanted to or…she desired the genius of a healer for her child."

"That's an unusual mindset for one to have. It's not something one sees much in this day and age."

Marriages were a way of introducing superior bloodlines and preserving them. It was much rarer nowadays, but it was much more common hundreds of years ago. There were select families such as House Astrea that were so strong that regardless of new blood introduced to the lineage, it could not dilute it, and so the concept of pedigree was lost.

"She had an old-fashioned mentality, but it didn't feel that way to me," explained Galić. "When push came to shove, I couldn't keep up with her fiery passion…plus she was a real beauty."

"Men are such simple creatures…" Theresia gave a look of disdain at Galić's impertinent manner. Carol also shot a similar look of disgust and Galić roared with laughter.

He laughed in such a manner that could strike a nerve in others. "That's why," he said, "you may advise your father to not be concerned with an immoral man like me. And don't worry about your husband straying away. I know a fastidious man when I see one."

“It pains me to say it, but I agree with him on that one,” said Carol, reluctantly siding with Galić.

“Oh, Carol…” Theresia flushed at their affirmation, which Carol grudgingly had to admit was adorable.

Wilhelm thought the world of Theresia with his whole heart and soul. That was why he fought in that duel with no regard for his own life. He was met with fortune and successfully accomplished his goal. It was a feat that Carol herself could not have accomplished, to her shame.

“But that doesn’t prove that my feelings are worth any less than that man’s.”

“Um, Carol? Why are you suddenly so enthusiastic…”

“You have no idea how much I’ve been thinking about you, Lady Theresia. And my feelings are no less than his. You know that!” Carol was so stirred up that she clutched Theresia’s hands with her own.

Feeling overwhelmed by the momentum of their conversation, Theresia gawked back in astonishment. She looked away. Her pale cheeks blushed slightly, her lips quivering. “Oh, um Carol… I appreciate how you feel, but…”

“Yes!”

“It can get pretty packed here with people, so don’t get too excited… Ok?” cautioned Theresia with a gentle smile.

Carol quickly came to her senses and felt startled by what she saw around them. The eyes of the entire street were on her, who up to that point had been boldly expressing her feelings. Her cheeks turned into a shade of vermillion red, causing Galić to chuckle at the sight. “As a healer, I would advise you to get something cold for those hot cheeks. I highly recommend the frozen treats they have just over there.”

“Um, er… Well…” Carol bit her lip in frustration at the doctor’s teasing manner.

Theresia tugged her sleeve. “Don’t mind him,” she told her. “Alright then, we’ll go with your suggestion. I’ll treat you to a bowl of sherbert, Carol.”

Then, whether this was what Galić had in mind or not, Carol let out a pathetic cry. “L-Lady Theresia…” But in the end, Theresia’s allure was too much for her to resist and so she staggered along behind her.

“Hehehe! All the best, you two!” chortled Galić as he turned around with a smile.

Biting back the urge to lash back at the doctor, she held herself for a moment. At least, she hoped that her time with Theresia would make up for her humiliation and green-eyed jealousy of Wilhelm.

“Hey, Carol, what flavor do you want?”

However, such a feeble wish was nothing compared to the smile of the girl standing next to her, so Carol ran to join her mistress’s side.

END

Re: Starting Life in an Endless Summer from Zero (Shibuya Marui 2017 Event) (Translation Pending)

Re:Zero Ex:
I Can Hear the Festival Music
(MF Bunko J Summer School Festival 2017)
(Translation Pending)

Memory Snow Prequel: Liar Days (Emilia Birthday Event 2018) (Translation Pending)

Bonds of Ice Prequel:
Frozen Days
(Emilia Birthday Event 2019)
(Translation Pending)

An Ordinary Day (Special Bonus)

“Hm? What are you two doing?”

“Oh, Subaru.”

“You’ve finally returned, I suppose. Betty got tired of waiting.”

Subaru widened his eyes at the unexpected sight across the opened door.

The place was Roswaal Manor, in Subaru’s private room. The people waiting for Subaru, who had returned after finishing a small errand, were Emilia and Beatrice.

It isn’t that much of a surprise that those two are together. The Emilia Camp became more united since the Sanctuary incident got resolved. Not only the new members, but the relationships among the old ones, including Beatrice, have changed a lot.

“In a good way though, of course. And looking at you two together is something that fills me with joy.”

“A-ha-ha, Beatrice told me she wants something from you and wanted me to wait here with her for you,” Emilia said.

“Well, that much is common courtesy. And on top of that, Betty was getting tired of being alone,” Beatrice replied in a prissy manner with a standoffish straight face next to the smiling Emilia.

Her attitude is in between that of an honest person and a twisted person, but she’s become pretty mellow now, Subaru thought as he gazed at Emilia, who shared his feelings of adoration for her level of progress.

“So?” Subaru said before continuing. “It’s nice that you guys were waiting for me, but why were you two sitting in the same chair? If you want to flex that you guys are close, then I want to be a part of it."

"I don't know what flex means, but we were drawing together, in fact."

"Drawing? That's a bit…" Subaru looked at Beatrice in surprise, as her reply had been completely unexpected.

His adorable contracted spirit then picked up the notebook on the table. "It was enough to keep Betty occupied a bit, I suppose. It's quite a masterpiece, in fact."

"Yeah, it's a masterpiece," Emilia confidently added after Beatrice's self-evaluation.

Subaru took the notebook that supposedly held their masterpiece and gasped. It made him recall the snow statue that Emilia and Beatrice made during the snow festival not too long ago when Roswaal Manor and Earlham Village got covered in snow because Puck was in his Magicletting Period.

I do admit that they are hardworking and diligent, but their artistic sensibilities are nonexistent, so the possibility of it being reflected in their drawing is highly likely.

"No, but Emilia-tan and Beako have a lot of potential. After all, I am Emilia-tan's Knight and Beako's Contractor, so I should believe in…"

"Look, we both drew Puck first. It's drawn well, isn't it?" Emilia asked.

"Yeah, I like your bold use of colors," replied Subaru as he was cheering himself up, but when he turned the page, his hopes were instantly dashed.

However, it wasn't like the snow statue that gave him a headache just by looking at it. It was just purely the work of a child whose skills couldn't quite capture what was in their head, which relieved him.

"Yeah, both of you have used colors boldly and that's nice. You guys just need to look at the real one and… Oh wait, the real one isn't around."

"…Betty has been lonely, I suppose. That's why she's been drawing Bubby and distracting herself."

"Hmmm, I see. I'm not confident that it would help, but…"

Subaru looked at Beatrice lowering her eyebrows in grief and pursed his lips, then began smoothly drawing the Puck in his head on an empty part of the page.

Come to think of it, I've carved Puck on potato stamps for radio calisthenics classes in Earlham Village. I've carved cute-looking Pucks the most in this other world, so if I make use of this experience—

"—Woa… It's amazing, Subaru! You are reaaally good at drawing! Right, Beatrice?!" Emilia's eyes sparkled with great joy when she saw the impromptu illustration of Puck.

Next to her was Beatrice, who peered into the notebook with widened eyes while grabbing it with both hands. "…Betty is proud to have contracted with Subaru as of this moment, I suppose."

"And you are saying that now?!" Subaru exclaimed. "I'm sure there will be an occasion where you'll feel like that in future, so I kinda want you to save that for then!"

"It's just a joke. But it's true that Betty is impressed, I suppose." Beatrice stuck out her tongue and playfully apologized to Subaru for startling him.

Subaru was relieved after hearing her words, but Emilia, whose excitement hadn't cooled down, agreed with Beatrice. "That's right. Not to mention your potato drawing, you have a lot of special skills, Subaru. Hee-Hee, I am reaaally happy that I have such an amazing knight."

"…"

"—Hm? Subaru? What happened?"

"Nothing, it's just that my heart almost gave out because you said something really cute. Hey, listen to me, Beako. That person over there is my master."

"Sorry, I have no idea what you're trying to say," Emilia replied.

"And besides all that, you also have the title of being Betty's pa-pa-pa, pa-pa, partner!" Beatrice shouted at him with a red face as Emilia tilted her head at Subaru, whose face was melting like butter.

While witnessing their responses that came from both extremes, Subaru didn't feel bad since his drawing skill was praised. Of course, he wasn't in a position where he could remain happy.

"It's because I did some drawing here and there. Though in my case it was more of an expression of my otaku side than an actual interest in art. But in the end, I kind of failed."

"Failed…even though you are so good at it?"

"People become good at what they like. I was satisfied with myself when I reached a certain level. But if I had gotten successful as an artist, then I wouldn't have met you… No! Even if I had become an artist, I'd still seek you out and draw you, Emilia-tan!"

"Is that so? I feel like I would be happy to meet with you no matter what the situation is," Emilia answered with a smile at Subaru's rather idiotic words.

Filled with happiness due to her compassion, Subaru involuntarily pulled on Beatrice's cheek, thinking he must have been dreaming.

"Hey, why are you pulling on Betty's cheek! Pull on your own cheek, in fact!"

"I wanted to touch your soft cheeks while joking around. Don't make me say it."

"Um, umm… Ah well, you're such a hopelessly clingy boy, I suppose."

Believing what Subaru had told her, Beatrice didn’t move while he pulled on her cheek. He was going to enjoy her lovely cheeks since he had gotten her permission to do so.

“—Oh, hey Subaru. Can you draw me and Beatrice if it’s fine with you?” asked Emilia after suddenly striking her palm gently with a fist as she gazed at them.

She carefully extended her hands, then hugged Beatrice and sat on Subaru’s bed.

“It would really be some nice eye candy for me, and it would make me happy, but…but what about the business you had with me, Emilia-tan?”

“Huh? Oh yeah, this is what I wanted to do. I had some free time, so I wanted to talk with you.”

“Beako! Did you record that?!”

“Record? You’re using words that Betty doesn’t understand again…”

Even though Beatrice looked as if she didn’t want to do it, she didn’t move from Emilia’s lap. Subaru understood that it was what the girl who was bad at relying on the goodwill of others truly wanted.

So, Subaru responded to her request and set himself up in front of the two girls sitting on the bed. “It’s going to take a while, is that ok?”

“Yeah, it’s alright. —It’s reaaally an amazing time for me even if we aren’t doing anything,” Emilia replied with a gentle smile.

“I suppose,” Beatrice agreed.

“Alright.” Subaru got pumped up after hearing their replies and then rolled up his sleeves.

—An ordinary, pleasant, and happy day went by slowly as the sound of him working hard as he ran his brush over the paper was accompanied by laughter that occasionally rang out from the room.

Comic Alive Collection 3: Translation Pending

Short Story Collection 3

My Fair Bad Lady

1

“Emilia: “Hey, Subaru, did you hear? A “Wandering Genius Chef” is coming.”

Subaru: “…What?”

In response to Emilia’s statement, her eyes sparkling, Subaru tilted his head greatly, and he asked another question.

They were at the Roswaal mansion’s garden, and it was still early morning before breakfast. What jumped at him in this clear, morning atmosphere were Emilia’s look of anticipation and her statement, forgetting to say her greetings.

She had good looks, amethyst eyes with jewels, and she did give off a brave impression at a glance, but her gestures full of charm and cuteness changed the feeling she gave off noticeably.

Frankly, even though she had a beautiful face, she was cute. She was an angel.

Emilia: “Subaru, did you listen to me properly?”

Subaru: “Of course, EMT. So, uhhh, what was it again?”

Emilia: “Jeez, you didn’t listen to me after all! Like I said, a “Wandering Genius Chef” is coming. Doesn’t that sound reeeeaally exciting? Doesn’t it?”

The silver bell like tone was also colored with her joy, not hiding her cheerful and lively mood.

It was a cheerful mood that he’d always watch, but he got interested when he heard Emilia say “Wandering Genius Chef”, so it couldn’t be helped.

Subaru: “A wandering…genius chef? Who is that again? That person with a dimwit sounding title.”

Emilia: “Ah, you can’t say that. Umm, it kinda seems like it’s a person who’s reeeaaally skilled with cooking, and so apparently their cooking is known to be so good that “Eat a bite, and your body will be captured. Eat two, and your heart will be captivated. Eat three, and your soul will be trapped.”

Subaru: “Is that slogan not a curse?”

The cheerfully told reputation had too many details that made it sound like it’d be a first and last time experience, so he couldn’t accept it easily.

Anyhow, disregarding the exaggerated reputation, it seemed to be an event where the so called rumored chef would display their skills, so it sounded good. The news not getting to Subaru was a mystery, but he said

Subaru: “Well, it is Roswaal, so it’s very likely that it’ll be a surprise show. Emilia-tan, when did you hear about this?”

Emilia: “A little while ago.”

Subaru: “Ah, then there’s no doubt about it.”

Roswaal, the head of the mansion, was a strange one that always had his eccentric outfit and his clown makeup on him. Him saying things like wild statements and suggestions was an everyday thing, so Subaru easily understood how he was the link to this time’s matter too.

Subaru: “Either way, I wanna hope that the person doesn’t fail to live up to their name.”

Emilia: “Yeah! I’m reeeaally looking forward to it. I don’t really get it, but even in a sense of foreseeing my future, it’s something necessary, so I’ll look forward to it.”

Subaru: “Emilia-tan’s future?”

Emilia was in high spirits with Subaru, as he expressed his agreement, but her phrasing somewhat bothered him. However, even he didn’t know what exactly was bothering him. Without finding out what was the cause of his discomfort in the end, he said

Subaru: “Well, oh well. Alright, then let’s start doing radio calisthenics. Doing them energetically, carefreely, and enjoyably, that is.”

Emilia: “Okay, got it. Then let’s do the stretching exercise and stretch our arms outward~!”

Emilia, someone who got completely accustomed to a different world’s custom, let out the standard yell, and the radio calisthenics commenced. Subaru also focused on those calisthenics while listening to that comforting voice.

2

Rem: “Subaru-kun, did you hear? Apparently, the “Chef That Can Make the Dragon Howl” Dias Lepunzo Elemanso Oplane Fatsbalm VI-sama is coming tomorrow."

Subaru: "…What?"

Rem starts talking to Subaru like that, her eyes sparkling, as he returned from his duties after his morning radio calisthenics. She was a girl that would usually keep in mind having a stiff expression, but her unhideable excitement turned into passion, and it all poured out from her body.

Rem: "Yes, like I said, the "Chef That Can Make the Dragon Howl" Dias Lepunzo Elemanso Oplane Fatsbalm VI-sama is coming! Isn't that amazing?!"

Subaru: "Ahh, sounds kinda amazing in various ways. Is it really okay to call the person a chef? Not something like an adventurer?"

Rem: "What are you saying, Subaru-kun? Isn't it obvious? Dias Lepunzo Elemanso Oplane Fatsbalm VI-sama is a peerless chef."

Usually Rem would have completely positive opinions in regards to Subaru, but for some reason she acted displeased and rebuked him, perhaps having to do with her heavy infatuation with the chef.

Subaru: "So it's the cook that's coming tomorrow. Uhhh, I heard about it from Emilia just now, but is it a famous person?"

Rem: "Of course! It's a chef that can make the dragon howl, seeking for unknown supremacy, blessed by the food goddess, and the person has mastered all the styles of tastes in the world. They're famous for their "Eat a bite, and your body will be captured. Eat two, and your heart will be captivated. Eat three, and your soul will be trapped."."

Subaru: "That slogan sounds dangerous no matter how many times I hear it…Rem seems to be very knowledgeable."

Rem: "I am incompetent, but I do cook, after all. I respect and aspire to be like those who are at the top of that road. That's why I'm really looking forward to this."

Rem would show him her rare smiles carefreely. Just looking at it would make him have such a fine smile that his cheeks would loosen, but when he thought about how an unknown person had made her bring it out, he wasn't very amused because of his male instincts.

It was Rem's surprising fangirl tastes that came to light during the visit from the bard Liliana.

Rem: "What's wrong? You seem to look a little angry."

Subaru: "…Noo? Rem and Emilia-tan seem to be obsessed with that Dias VI person, so don't mind me. I'm meant to just lick plates at the corner, anyways."

Rem: "Haha. Subaru-kun, don't just say weird things please. Ah, but…"

Rem smiles at Subaru, who pouted and fell into servility, and in the middle of it, she made a face that indicated she had remembered something.

Rem: "Even though you licking plates was a joke, it is said that Dias Lepunzo Elemanso Oplane Fatsbalm VI-sama is very strict with manners and demands certain decency, so…"

Subaru: "Any world's workers will have an abundance of people that are hard to please. I'll ask just in case, but are they the type of people who take away the cooking when you have bad manners?"

Rem: "No, it's said that they turn you into cooking."

Subaru: "They're that type of people?!"

He asks about the type of person of the busy restaurant, and Subaru had chills run down his back. However, he immediately saw Rem bursting into laughter, and he understood that it was one of her jokes.

Subaru: "Jeez, spare me from jokes that are hard to laugh at."

Rem: "Sorry. Subaru-kun believes me too easily, so I just sort of did it. However, manners truly are important. Although, I don't think there's anything that strict. Especially for me and Subaru, people of lower positions."

Subaru: "Ahh, right. If the hurdle for that isn't lowered, then…"

He couldn't stand being judged the same way regardless of if he'd been receiving education or not. Subaru felt relief that this world didn't have comparable table manners—he tried to feel relieved, but once again, something bothered him. Well, what could it possibly be?

Rem: "Since it's a special occasion, I also want to learn something from tomorrow's cooking. Subaru-kun, you remember my flavor today, because tomorrow, it'll definitely be somewhat different."

Subaru: "Mm…o…okay. Alright alright, I'll be judging it properly. Look forward to it."

In response to Rem's words, her expressing motivation, Subaru put aside his discomfort, and he nodded. He pats Rem's head even with the situation being like that, and he resumed the servant work with her as she purred.

At any rate, he was looking forward to tomorrow.

3

Ram: "Barusu, do you know? The "Lustful and Womanizing but Legendary Chef" Dias Lepunzo Elemanso Oplane Fatsbalm VI has been invited to the mansion by Roswaal-sama for tomorrow. Make sure to behave yourself."

Subaru: "…What?"

He finished his share of early morning duties, and he sought to clean the mansion's east wing, having teamed up with Ram, and she suddenly brings up that topic from behind him.

When Subaru turned around, who had already tilted his head three times today, he meets the eyes of Ram as she had her arms folded, snorting her nose very pompously.

Ram: “Like I said, tomorrow the “Lustful and Womanizing But Legendary Chef” Dias Lepunzo Elemanso Oplane Fatsbalm VI will be displaying their abilities at the mansion. I do feel pity for Barusu, you not being able to participate, but behave in a way so that you don’t hurt Roswaal-sama’s honor.”

Subaru: “Wait Wait Wait Wait, hold up with all that. Who’s coming again? Dias-san?”

Ram: “Dias Lepunzo Elemanso Oplane Fatsbalm VI. Apparently it’s a person who gets grouchy when you don’t go through the trouble of calling them by their full name. Barusu, you make sure that you absolutely do not make a mistake in their name, too. Also…”

Subaru: “Wait a second, seriously wait.”

Subaru interrupts Ram’s words midway, as she pressed for an answer, and new pages for the “Chef Information” that started with Emilia began to add one after another. What exactly did it all mean?

Subaru: “That Dias Lepunzo…-san, is that the same person Rem was talking about?”

Ram: “I don’t know what Rem told you, but I heard about it along with my talk this morning with Roswaal-sama, so maybe it’s concerning the same person. So?”

Subaru: “But there are some unresolved differences between that and the personality Rem told me about.”

According to what Rem happily said, the visiting chef had a reputation of being the type of worker that can be hard to please, but even if she was as wrong as possible, the person shouldn’t have been a lecher.

Subaru: “What’s more is that, just like that, I’ve become unable to participate in eating, but what is the meaning of this?”

Ram: “I told you it was a lustful womanizer, didn’t I? The person mastered any and every delicious food. That Dias Lepunzo Elemanso Oplane Fatsbalm VI chooses their customers, displaying their abilities, which is obviously limited to women only. Disgusting."

Subaru: "If that was the case, then Roswaal wouldn't be able to eat, either. Isn't that odd?"

Ram: "Roswaal-sama has a certain position. He won his seat after proper negotiations. There's no seat for Barusu. Deal with it by licking someone's leftover plate. Roswaal-sama's is a no go, and forget about Emilia-sama's. Rem is an absolute no, and if you lick mine, you can go die. …Licking Beatrice-sama's leftover plate would be fine."

Subaru: "Licking plates seems like it could happen, but what kind of punishment game is this?!"

Once he was even set up to lick Beatrice's used plate on top of not being able to eat, he couldn't help but raise his voice.

Subaru: "No matter how you look at it, this is too much. Where is Ros-chi? I'ma have a talk with him!"

Ram: "Unfortunately, Roswaal-sama went out to see Dias Lepunzo Elemanso Oplane Fatsbalm VI right now. He'll be back during dinner tomorrow…in other words, just before the cooking starts. There's nothing you can do about it."

Subaru: "This is hopeless—!"

It was the flow of a conversation that made it seem like it was prepared only to set up Subaru.

Subaru: "Besides, why is it that even you guys are being notified the day before and not just me? This is too sudden."

Ram: "It's a chef that travels. The person is very hard to get a hold of, and it was also hard to get them to agree this time, too. But, they got interested when they were told that there were four beautiful looking girls."

Subaru: "It's a lustful chef!"

The reasoning that satisfied the demand was so agreeable that it was unexpectedly convincing.

Emilia was of course beautiful, and Rem and Ram were the incarnations of beautiful girls too. Beatrice also had the cuteness of a doll if she stayed still.

Subaru: “Can I…can I really forgive such oppression…?!”

Ram: “Deal with it. Besides, having expectations as a servant would be a presumptuous honor. Also, the food this time is more than just a meal…no, this is irrelevant.”

Ram didn’t even give any consoling words to Subaru, who was regretful as he broke down. Ram was going to say something at the end, but she ended the conversation and quickly went back to work.

In the end, Subaru did not know what Ram was starting to say, being knocked down. And that is how the morning slowly went by with him having his feelings crushed.

4

Beatrice: “Come to think of it, have you heard? Apparently the successor Dias Lepunzo Elemanso Oplane Fatsbalm VI the “Decapitating Cook” is coming.”

Subaru: “Wait wait wait wait!”

It was an interaction that happened four times today, but the impactful way she started the conversation caused Subaru to forget the standard reaction he had up to this point, and so he raised his voice as much as possible.

The person who frowned unhappily at Subaru’s state was this girl who tried to bring up a topic with a rarely seen smug face, Beatrice. She snorted her nicely shaped nose with a “Hum” as she glared at Subaru.

Beatrice: “You must have some nerve to interrupt me, I suppose. Besides, you shouldn’t be so noisy in the library. You’ll stir up dust, and you’ll hurt the books’ feelings, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Ignoring that airhead-like insistence of you understanding the books’ feelings, what did you say just now? Can you repeat it?”

Beatrice: “Right. The successor Dias Lepunzo Elemanso Oplane Fatsbalm VI the “Decapitating Cook” is coming tomorrow.”

Subaru: “Yes that! That’s it! What is that super dangerous nickname?! Decapitating?! I never heard of this!”

It was a chef whose name would always change whenever he asked about it, but all of them should’ve been barely out of the chef category so far. However, if a bizarre image was added after coming here, then of course Subaru couldn’t be obedient like a willow swaying in the wind.

Subaru: “First of all, the person just needs one cool name! In fact, having so many feels threatening, or rather, that so called important something is faint! What does “Wandering Genius Cook”, “Chef That Can Make the Dragon Howl”, “Lustful and Womanizing but Legendary Chef”, and “Decapitating Cook” all mean?! There’s too much mess displayed! Is there really someone with so many names?! If there’s more people like that, tell me! I’ll give them a scolding!”

Beatrice: “Roswaal seems to be called stuff like “Demi-human Lover”, “Clown Nobel”, “A Good and Bad Pervert”, and “Top Royal Magician”. I suppose.”

Subaru: “When he gets back, I’m gonna give him a scolding!”

Subaru scratches his head recklessly at all the names he was told while he resented how it was one of his friends.

Beatrice lets out a clear sigh at Subaru, and she said

Beatrice: “I don’t get what’s irritating you, but it doesn’t seem to be a big deal, I suppose.”

Subaru: “There’s no way it isn’t a big deal. Decapitating sounds beyond scary. The person did something, got that nickname, and still continues to be a chef.”

Beatrice: "…Ah, I get it. You're misunderstanding me, I suppose. They're said to be a "Decapitating Cook", but the reason they're called that isn't because they actually do cut heads off."

Beatrice's shocked way of shrugging her shoulders didn't match her appearance. However, Subaru felt relief from the behavior of the girl who had a mismatched impression for now.

Subaru: "Oh, is that so? Well, that's right. That is right. There's no way a person that decapitates the heads of people they don't like should be able to continue carefreely as a chef…not to mention, even more so when it's a famous chef."

Beatrice: "Of course. However, it's said that when Dias Lepunzo Elemanso Oplane Fatsbalm is at a dining area, the people they end up not liking somehow lose things like their positions and jobs, and there's a lot of times when they get ruined."

Subaru: "A "Decapitating Cook" in a sense of human resources?!"

He clearly understands the truth of the nickname that didn't pop up until now, and Beatrice's explanation had credibility.

Anyhow, if they really didn't cut heads off, then he'd be relie—

Subaru: "No, wait…"

Subaru was going to think that, and then he pulled back his heart that seemed like it was going to be relieved.

Something, yes, something bothered him.

The information collected up to this point and the discomforting thing that made him worry several times—its identity arrived, and it was appearing and disappearing on the other side of his doubts.

Emilia's testimony, "Wandering Genius Cook". Rem's testimony, "Chef That Can Make the Dragon Howl". Ram's testimony, "Lustful and Womanizing but Legendary chef". Beatrice's testimony, "Decapitating Cook".

He joins all of those together, steps into the core, and he grabs onto the truth—.

Subaru: “The foreseeing of Emilia’s future. Annoying manners. Lustful and womanizing. And then, decapitating cook.”

The worrisome words pile up, and Subaru finally arrived at a single answer.

And it was nothing but a cruel plan that was too villainous.

Subaru: “No way…no, if it’s Roswaal, then it might be done.”

Roswaal L Mathers was Emilia’s biggest supporter, and you could even say that he was this girl’s unique supporter, as she had few allies. However, completely letting your guard down and believing all of Roswaal’s actions were sincere and friendly would be a mistake.

Roswaal was a man that could come up with certain clear solutions. If he couldn’t, then he wouldn’t be able to continue living with a high position as a Margrave among the nobles.

Therefore, surely Roswaal also demanded that severe lifestyle from Emilia, too.

It was also a sort of method he couldn’t imagine Emilia doing, as she was kind and pure.

Subaru: “…I have to…do something.”

Emilia’s smile, lively voice, and the fingertips he touched shined inside his memory.

That smile, voice, and touch, he had to protect all of it.

Subaru: “I’ll do it. I will be on your side, I swear.”

Subaru renews his determination, lifts his head, and he clenches his fist.

In his heart, he decides that he had to do it. Which meant that the only thing he had to do next was run.

He was already receiving his reward everyday. Just that was enough.

Beatrice: “Oiiii. …No good, I suppose. You aren’t listening at all. Whatever, I suppose.”

Subaru gets completely lost in his thoughts, and he forgets about Beatrice being there.

Beatrice raised one knee and looked away to pout, as she was being ignored.

None of them said what they were thinking, which would cause a tragedy in the distant future—at the time, these two had no way of knowing that.

5

Subaru: “Puck, did you know? The “Wandering, Womanizing, Legendary Decapitating Chef That Can Make the Dragon Howl” is coming to the mansion tomorrow.”

Puck: “…Was it really like that?”

The fifth interaction was something that had seemingly similar form, but it was definitely different than all of the ones he had up to this point.

Subaru, someone who had been the listener until now, became the speaker.

Subaru calls out to someone at the mansion’s rear garden, having a secret talk, and he sharpens all of his senses to take caution.

Then, the one who tilted his head at Subaru’s topic was a gray haired kitten spirit floating in the air.

It was Puck, who was Emilia’s contracted spirit as well as someone who called himself her guardian.

In response to Subaru’s words, he lifted his tail as high as his body, and while playing with the tip of his paws he said

Puck: “Lia told me about it happily, so I do know a chef is coming. However, I feel like they didn’t have such a strange name. I feel like it was a more simple and shady one…”

Subaru: “Well, it sure was a bit off. There’s actually a lot more names, but it’s all a mess. But it’s fine. That’s not important right now.”

Puck: “Hm~, if Subaru says it’s fine, then okay, but I don’t understand what you’re getting at. What do you need?”

Subaru: “It’s a request for you to come with me alone. Of course, Emilia-tan can’t hear about it, since it’s something that involves her.”

Subaru lowers his voice, and he spoke to Puck while looking at the situation around him.

Afterwards, the round eye-balled kitten stiffens his expression, and he comes down slowly to match Subaru’s eyelevel.

Puck: “If it’s about Lia, then I’ll listen to anything. I’m all ears.”

Subaru: “Right. But, make sure you don’t reveal this to Emilia-tan. I don’t want to cause any unnecessary worry for her…besides, if Emilia-tan finds out and notices, it probably won’t work.”

“…”

Puck squints his eyes, and Subaru felt something cold running down his back.

The small spirit in front of him changes his mindset after hearing it was something important related to his precious, beloved daughter. That was the only thing the petty human could feel a tremendous difference in.

Subaru: “About tomorrow’s chef…the dinner is a trap set up by Roswaal.”

Puck: “What do you mean?”

Subaru: “He’s not trying to inflict harm and such. The cooking the chef will bring out will probably be really delicious. It having a scrumptious flavor also is guaranteed.”

It made Rem’s heart flutter that much. Dream-like food was certainly going to appear at tomorrow’s dinner table with definite form. However, there was a trap.

Subaru: “What Roswaal and the chef will be wanting to see…is manners.”

Puck: “Manners, like table manners? Why is that a trap?”

Subaru: “You don’t get it? Think about Emilia-tan’s future position. She’s a candidate to be king, and from here, she’ll be invited to a lot of parties and dinings. In those times, there will be many occasions when she’ll be tested for appropriate behavior.”

Puck: “—! In other words, tomorrow’s dinner is for testing out Lia’s manners.”

Subaru: “Yes, it’s a trap. The “Decapitating Chef” curses the future of those with unacceptable manners. People who get judged negatively by that chef will never be able to hope for success. Up to this point, there seems to be no end to the number of people that lost their future in exchange for temporary happiness from getting involved with the chef, despairing as they ended themselves. This is what Roswaal’s trying to do.”

Subaru listened to Beatrice, and in the forbidden archives he realized that plan.

Initially, his feelings of not wanting to believe it were the strongest, and he sought to deny it in disbelief. However, from Roswaal’s perspective, it was a logical decision. Was there a measure as appropriate as this one that would be a test for the future harsh battle that is the royal selection? No, there wasn’t.

Subaru: “But, for Roswaal to do such a thing…no, if it’s him, then it’s possible……!”

Puck: “Then what should we do? Lia believes in Roswaal, but I feel bad for her."

Puck's ears fold weakly, and his eyes were clouded with sadness in his depressed look. Subaru understood his feelings so well that it hurt, and he hit his chest. He did it strongly, and it was if blue veins stood out on his forehead.

Subaru: "That's why I called you. Emilia will be saved by you and I."

Puck: "Me and Subaru? How?"

Subaru: "Easy to explain. Tomorrow, Roswaal and the others will try to test Emilia's manners. Emilia having her meal without knowing about it…that's what we should help out with!"

Emilia didn't have to know about the cruel reality. If Roswaal became aware of how Emilia noticed it, then that devil like man would surely come up with a different plan again.

However, this time Subaru and Puck recognized that devilish trick beforehand. They were also on Emilia's side, no matter what. They could struggle secretly and openly for her sake.

Subaru: "Let's do this, Puck. You and I will save Emilia."

Puck: "—Yeah, I'm up for it. Got it. I'll put a bet on your feelings."

When Subaru held out his hand, Puck landed on his palm, having only thought about it for a second.

It looked different than a handshake, but both of their intentions were able to be united.

Puck: "So, what do we do tomorrow?"

Subaru: "There can be some interferences. That's why first we need countermeasures for that. After that, let's meet up to follow up according to the situation. In other words, we won't be getting sleep tonight."

They both had the same goal and were acting to protect the girl that was important to both of them.

Subaru and Puck prepared for tomorrow as they watched for an opportunity to destroy the evil scheme, polishing the nails and fangs while they had smiles on their faces that would look exactly the same to an outsider.

6

That day, Ram was in a bad mood since morning.

Of course, she wasn't so crude to show that displeasure on her face. That's why her behavior was as mannered as usual, and on the surface, she appeared to be dignified. However, her heart wasn't at peace.

Ram: "So damn unsightly, Barusu."

If she slipped up, she would let out the irritation she had towards the servant that had a frivolous look on his face.

Normally, as a servant of a mansion, similar to Ram and Rem, all of the duties would—today visitors had also arrived, and Natsuki Subaru was in the position of needing to keep up with all of the work.

Just for this crucial day, he wouldn't appear being in what you would call bad shape, which he'd have since morning.

Rem: "Nee-sama. Subaru-kun is tired from doing all this work he's not used to. I'll do my best to work too, so let him get some good rest, please."

Only Rem, Ram's younger sister that was equal to her with half her body, noticed her irritation that wasn't shown on her face and followed up.

However, Rem spoiled Subaru, the target of Ram's anger, and the burden being put on her only caused Ram's impression of Subaru inside her to worsen even more.

Ram: "Barusu, you better prepare yourself for when this day ends."

Ram decides on how she would let out her accumulated anger, as she suppressed her discontent and devoted herself to her work.

Like that, it was in the afternoon when the master Roswaal brought home the guest Dias Lepunzo Elemanso Oplane Fatsbalm VI.

???: “I’m honored to be invited, I say.”

……”

He had a fat belly, an oily face, and he looked at them with a belittling look while having a really vulgar smile.

He had gray hair, and he was a large fatso, big both vertically and horizontally. They guessed he was around 50 since he had somewhat thin hair and a mean look. To the side, he brought along petite luggage holders who had cloaks that completely covered the body up to their heads. It seemed like the servants were there so that the luggage would be minimal, allowing him to travel.

Roswaal: “Meeting up took sooooome time. Sorry for returning late. However, this is the person that was talked about. Be as respectful as poooossible.”

Having returned, Roswaal expressed his warm welcome at the side of the legendary chef with two people. Ram and Rem respond to those words by bowing with dignity as they said

Rem and Ram: “Welcome, thanks for coming.”

in unison. The fat man responds by breathing heavily and trembling as he said

???: “Morniiiin, I can’t handle this, I say. The beauty and the loveliness of you two increases your charm even more than the fact that you guys are twins, I say. Nice tastes, I say.”

Roswaal: “Well well, thaaaanks.”

The somewhat aroused man says that, and Roswaal gives a vague reply.

While listening to him, Ram imagines slapping the fat man, kicking him in the stomach, and bouncing him like ball, clearing the rage inside of her.

???: “Woops, can’t do that. Sorry for being so sudden I say, but would you mind guiding me to the kitchen, I say? I want to fulfill my wish, I say.”

The luggage holders sighed as they nudged the back of the man who seemed like he would continue chatting vulgarly from beginning to end. His expression changes, having noticed it, and he asks about the kitchen with a serious face.

Rem: “Understood. I shall guide you.”

Rem takes the initiative and offers to guide him, and she walks with the two of them towards the kitchen. That’s when Ram noticed the man looking at Rem’s butt as she walked in front. However, the follower saw the master bow his head repeatedly for his impoliteness, so she held back on saying anything.

Roswaal: “Soooorry sorry. Did he offend youuuu?”

Ram: “…No. No way. I would never harbor ill feelings towards a guest Roswaal-sama invi…”

Roswaal: “And your real feelings?”

Ram: “By any means possible, I want to crush those eyes that look at my little sister indecently.”

Even now, remembering that low-life look horrified her. If it was that bad, then Subaru’s was better. Even if his looks were suspicious at times, she believed in his incompetent point of being self-restrained.

Ram: “Rem doesn’t worry about it, and Emilia-sama and Beatrice-sama wouldn’t even notice. So I thought it wouldn’t be a problem.”

Roswaal: “Yeeeah. By the way, I haven’t seen Subaru-kun. Where is he?”

Ram: “My apologies. Barusu’s been in bad shape since morning, so he’s sleeping in his room. I actually wanted to throw Barusu at…I wanted to leave dealing with the guest entirely to Barusu.”

Roswaal: “Oh, that’s too baaaad. Tonight’s dinner was going to have a flavor that would make you see things differently.”

Roswaal really said it regretfully, so Ram looked down quietly and said

Ram: “Shall we talk to Barusu so that he can show up tonight?”

Roswaal: “We shouldn’t be forceful. If it seems like he can come, then he’s welcome to do so no matter how sick he looks. There’s no point in just worrying about Subaru-kun.”

Ram touched his shoulder gently, and she felt heat. Roswaal smiles at Ram, her having slightly blushed cheeks. He closes one eye, and he charmingly says

Roswaal: “Ram should enjoy herself, too. It’ll definitely turn out to be a night that has that beneeeefit.”

7

—He definitely saw it with his eyes from the opening between the curtains of the closed room.

Subaru: “Target spotted. No doubt about it. It’s the real deal.”

Puck: “…Which means that we should also confirm the trap theory.”

Puck folds his arms, and he gives an acknowledging gesture with his chin at the boy who looked back at the darkness. The boy agrees by shrugging his shoulders, and he squinted with his sanpaku eyes that tended to slant.

The atmosphere was different. The kitten sensed it, and he let out a sigh.

Puck: “We’re really doing this, right?”

Subaru: “Yeah. Whether we do it or not, I’ll definitely still have regrets. If that’s the case, then it’s much better to regret after doing it. That’s what I feel right now.”

Puck: “I might’ve misunderstood you. Got it. If you’re that ready, then I’ll help out as much as I can. I’ll do it all for my cute, beloved daughter.”

Subaru: “For her. —Yeah, that’s right. You said it.”

The two quietly exchange words in the quiet atmosphere.

They settle on a target, and their intentions unite. They no longer had any hesitation or doubt.

The boy adjusts the position of the chair he sat on. He holds onto his breath, and he looks down on the tool in front of him. He was never familiar it, but it wasn’t his first time touching it, either. He never expected a former mallet handle to be useful this way. You’ll never know what will be useful in life.

With the little strong emotions and the readiness to go further in his chest, the boy tackled the battle.

8

Four hours after the arrival of Dias Lepunzo Elemanso Oplane Fatsbalm VI, the dinner preparations were set up, and Ram went to call Emilia and Beatrice.

It was a person that was said to be a supreme chef. Rem was sent to observe the chef, and although she didn’t show it on her face, she had clear expectation and excitement coming from her body. Meanwhile, Ram had to handle the majority of the afternoon chores.

Ram: “Screw Barusu.”

Having made it in time safely for dinner, Ram let out a sigh with her fatigue while accumulating gouges of anger onto each step of her duties. When she did, she summoned Emilia and the others, who were waiting for dinner time.

Emilia: “He was looking forward to it so much too. Subaru is reeeeaally unlucky. …Wonder if we can leave something for him. Can I ask?”

Ram: “I think Roswaal-sama has taken that into consideration. Emilia-sama, you’re probably fine to enjoy the dinner without thinking too hard about something petty.”

Emilia: “Yeah, got it. Will do. Thank you.”

Emilia appeared to be disappointed with Subaru’s absence. However, she was better off worrying about herself, rather than another person. There was a “reasonable significance” behind inviting Dias Lepunzo Elemanso Oplane Fatsbalm VI and having dinner, although Emilia didn’t realize it.

Emilia: “Speaking of disappointing, Puck also hasn’t shown up. He should be somewhere in the mansion, but he’s not in the crystal stone. Ram, have you seen him?”

Ram: “Nope, I haven’t seen him. Besides, with him having the form of a Great Spirit, being at the dining table during dinner with the chef would be a little…”

Emilia: “I guess there’s a problem with that. Even though he’s always kept clean…”

Even though he just looked like an animal, a being like that having dinner with them would not be a desirable situation.

In response to Ram’s indirect wording, Emilia also accepted the situation reluctantly, and she sat at the dining table.

Beatrice: “Even so, he’s also a very disappointing man, I suppose. It showed clearly in his behavior.”

The next person she called, Beatrice, also mentions that, in regards to Subaru’s absence.

Unlike Emilia, she didn’t say sympathizing words, but it was completely clear that she was acting worried, so from Ram’s perspective, it looked more pleasant.

Ram: “Yes, I agree. Although, Beatrice-sama may be lonely.”

Beatrice: “…Wait a second, I suppose. I don’t get how you came up with me being lonely out of that. Answer me, I suppose. Big Sister. Hey, Big Sister!”

She soothes Beatrice, her getting angry with a red face, and she also arrives at the dining table.

Just when she did, Roswaal and Rem also arrived at the dining table. When Rem noticed her, she ran up to her with short steps and said

Rem: “Nee-sama, I’m sorry for leaving you with the afternoon work. Did it work out?”

Ram: “It’s just extending normal work, so of course it wasn’t a problem. How about you, Rem, did you enjoy it?”

Rem: “Yes! Nee-sama, thank you. Look forward to tomorrow and so on.”

From Ram’s perspective, Rem being prideful and appearing to have learned a lot was lovely as she would usually be reserved. When she pat her head unconsciously, the younger sister squinted her eyes while feeling ticklish.

Ram: “Does Rem having returned from the kitchen mean it’s aboouut time for the meals to be brought out?”

Rem: “Yes. There wasn’t any more help needed for setting the table, so I went to the dining room. Nee-sama, let’s sit down, too.”

Ram: “Yes yes. No need to be in that much of a hurry. It’s improper.”

She gets her hand pulled by Rem, frolicking like a child, and Ram also sat down at the dining table.

Then, the dining room door opened, and the supreme chef, who had a major role in tonight’s feast, made his appearance, as if having chosen to show up at the same time the five of them sat at that place.

???: “Sorry to keep you waiting, I say. Is everyone here, I say?”

The man shakes his fat body, and he looks around the dining room. When he did, he checked on the beautiful girls with lovely looks gathered at the dining table, and he breaths heavily as he nodded approvingly.

???: “Certainly certainly, I say. It’s just like you said, Margrave-sama, I say. Well then, since the preparations and confirmations have been done, let’s bring in the cooking.”

Emilia: “Yes. Please treat me well.”

He stared particularly at Emilia with his lustful eyes. Emilia waved at the chef carefully with a smile without knowing how exactly he was looking at her.

???: “—May I join in as well?”

It was a voice that somehow sounded unconcerned and was hoarse. Everyone gets surprised by the unfamiliar voice and the sign of a new person, and they turn towards the dining room entrance. To the side of the fat man, what showed from the crack of the door was a person with a brilliant, black dress.

She had long, charming brunette hair, and a jet black dress that covered a lot of the body for a woman. Her pulled back lips had somewhat thick lipstick, and her eyeliner and long eyelashes increased the charm of her eye power. She had a thin scarf on her shoulders, and it looked like she had a terrible way of walking gracefully with her heels tapping.

Everybody was absorbed with that person’s entry, and they lost their breath.

Natsumi: “Is something wrong? It’s me. Natsumi Schwarz.”

That person gracefully tilted her head while being looked at by everyone in silence, and she unabashedly names herself as she did a curtsey that was so perfect that it surprised everyone.

Ram: "…"

Ram recovers from the initial shock, and she was unsure of what to do next. Ram, someone who tended to have snap judgement, showed rare hesitation, as this type of situation was beyond her imagination.

She felt an alluring power in the intruder that made it hard for her to look away, but she frantically looked towards Roswaal. Just what kind of decision would the master make as the person in charge of this occasion—?

Roswaal: "I aaaaam sorry for this, Natsumi-sama. Go ahead, take a seat. I'm sorry, but adding one more guest can't hurt, perhaaaaps?"

—Continue dinner!!

Roswaal's reply that guaranteed hospitality was completely and clearly talking about that reality.

When the young woman that gave off a weird vibe smiled, the fat man with an overwhelmed looking face nodded excitedly, and like that, he left the dining room to bring in the cooking.

This meant that in an instant, the leading role was transferred pitifully from the chef to the young woman. After the young woman sent off the man, she naturally went towards Emilia's side with elegant footsteps.

Natsumi: "Do you mind if I sit here?"

Emilia: "Um, go ahead. Madam? Goodness Roswaal doesn't tell me anything."

Emilia chats with the young woman nonchalantly without hiding her surprise.

When Ram looked at people other than her, she saw that Rem and Beatrice had varied reactions—Beatrice had a frown with curved lips, while Rem looked at the young woman with eyes of an affectionate mother. And above all, there was Roswaal bending his body, and while shaking his shoulder, acting on an unbearable impulse, she said

Ram: “I…I did not th-think it w-would come to this…”

Ram fights desperately against her laughter, and she decided to abandon questioning in this situation for now.

The young woman Natsumi Schwarz—although Natsuki Subaru’s cross dressing left some traces, he had Emilia fooled with a body that was pretty much the same as a woman’s, and it was so perfect that it was terrifying.

9

He accomplished his disguise successfully, and having acquired the seat next to Emilia, Natsumi Schwarz—Natsuki Subaru, who became a fictional woman, secretly made a firm fist, as he got the response he had hoped for.

Puck: “But, this is just the beginning, Subaru.”

—I know, I won’t reveal our motive.

While smiling with his face that had make-up, Subaru whispered and gave an acknowledging gesture with his chin at Puck, who was hidden.

When they recognized Roswaal’s objective, they shared the information on the chef they obtained beforehand, and Subaru boldly decided that he had no choice but to crossdress to protect Emilia.

Fortunately, this also wasn’t the first time he crossdressed. The memory he had from before was not good in any way, but just reopening an old wound was nothing to him if it was for Emilia’s sake.

Also, the truth was that Subaru had reached such a high level of perfection with his crossdressing skills that it was sad.

Eyeliner and eyeshadow to disguise his sanpaku eyes and nasty look. He temporarily acquired double-edged eyelids through the use of fake eyelashes and tools, and his skin color was vividly brought out through the contrast between his lips and his makeup. The long brunette wig was borrowed from the clothing room, and the dress that concealed his body’s constitution also was found at the same place. There was a maid with a similar constitution that had worked there before, so he was right with his idea that there would be her outfit left behind. And then if he could disguise his appearance, acting as a woman with gestures and behavior would be easy for Subaru, being the clever one that he was.

The one thing Subaru couldn't cover up by himself was his natural voice—which was what made his past crossdressing a completely bad memory, and it tormented him this time too as well. However, he overcame that, too.

Subaru: "You sure are looking forward to the food, Emilia-sama. Are you confident in your manners?"

Subaru's voice, which he talked to Emilia majestically with, was not a manly, low-pitched one. It was one that had no hint of its sex, thick with androgyny. There was only one person in the mansion that had this type of voice.

It was Puck, Subaru's teammate, the cat spirit that called himself Emilia's guardian. He was in his chest hidden by a scarf, and he was speaking from there.

If you had to describe it, this would be a two-person haori—together, Subaru and Puck were a single Natsumi Schwarz.

"…"

He felt strong looks coming from Ram and Beatrice. Based off their reactions while having clear frowns on their faces, they probably knew that Natsumi was truly Subaru. However, it was not a problem with the quality of his cross dressing; it was definitely a more different factor. Rem was looking at Subaru for the same reason, but her look was no different from the gentle one she usually had. He didn't know what they thought of him, but for the moment, they didn't intend to blow his cover.

Roswaal seemed to be simply enjoying Subaru's idea, being in female clothing. Subaru hit the bullseye with his assumption that Roswaal would not act cold.

Unexpectedly, Emilia, the person of concern, really didn't notice anything, so he wanted to highly influence her with this current force.

Dias: "—Thank you for waiting, I say."

Dias blah blah blah, the chef that returned, politely set the table in front of Subaru and the others, one plate at a time. The silver lid on top of the white plate—when the cloche was removed, they saw that it was cooking that probably prepared whitefish.

The fragrant smell was captivating.

Dias: “It is Lauté Roy’s Pozzo, rag dish sauce.”

It was white fish with its exterior broiled lightly, and sauce that was a vivid yellow and green. The smell rising from it arrests his senses immediately, casually grabbing onto his stomach, and he drools heavily.

Puck: “Subaru!”

Subaru seemed like he was going to unconsciously become a slob, but then he came to his senses with Puck calling him. He just narrowly avoided having all this crossdressing efforts go to waste. After he suddenly looked to the side, Emilia also widened her eyes as she looked at the food, and everyone else had the same sort of reaction, more or less.

It was too evil to combine the temperament of forced table manners with this violent type of delicious feeling.

The shell called humanity comes off, and the power that uncovered his wildness was included in the scent. Subaru swallows his saliva that was coming up, and he reached for the fork and knife before anyone else.

Natsumi: “Well, it looks quite delicious. It’s too good to eat.”

Puck matches Subaru’s lips as he lets out those thoughts at this time. While focusing on that voice, Subaru paid close attention so that his plan wouldn’t backfire, and he challenged the cooking in a way that wouldn’t be grabbing the cutlery rudely.

He holds down the whitefish with a fork, breaks it down with a knife, and eats it. It was cooked beyond perfection, as the cooking broke down just from the fork touching it. Combined with the sauce, the visual taste violated his brain. He holds his breath while looking like he was going to get knocked out, keeping his sense of smell away from the delicious food's premonition.

If he got overwhelmed now, he wouldn't be able to come back. He was far from being able to show a path for Emilia, rather, Subaru himself was most likely to be the first one to be captivated by the cooking.

Steel self control, and his feelings towards Emilia. He'd use those as weapons, and he'd challenge the cooking.

He opens his eyes upon renewing his determination, and he slowly brings a mouthful towards his mouth with a fork.

"…"

The flow of the processes, appearance, conduct, all of those various things polished to beauty—the instant the food entered his mouth, the result of his hard work and will crumbled. He felt like he was going to faint.

The violence of the overwhelming taste hits him through his lips and tongue, and his working brain, the blood flowing throughout his body, the muscles that supported his body, his bones, his cells—Subaru's poor determination and readiness were destroyed.

He gets stepped on, assaulted, and knocked down, and when Subaru realized it, he collapsed.

???: "—What's wrong, I say?"

Subaru left his seat, tapped with his heels, and he walked up to Dias bla bla bla. In front of the puzzled man, he inhales, breathes out quietly, and slowly kneels as he said

Natsumi: "I completely underestimated you. Sorry!"

He rubs his forehead against the floor, and he declares a complete surrender.

It was Subaru's natural voice, in other words, a man's voice. Puck, hidden in his chest, said "Crap", as he held onto his head, but Subaru felt the unexplainable shock of his despondency.

That's why Subaru bowed his head to Dias bla bla bla while being moved and completely defeated as he said

Natsumi: "The cooking is ridiculously delicious. I thought to eat it elegantly. However, that was impossible. Anyone would definitely think the same. It's a given to eat food with good manners, and it makes sense. But, I thought to myself, why not comment on the cooking and eat while saying "it's delicious it's delicious"!"

Subaru piles up his words frantically while not being able to see the person's face. It was an excuse, and him being a poor loser after having their plan foiled. However, it was also unstinted praise that came from the heart.

Dias bla bla bla listens to that jumbled praise and excuses, and he kept silent. And then

???: "—Wahahahahahaha!"

He thought the silence would continue, but the sound of laughter suddenly echoed throughout the room.

After Subaru lifted his head at once, that voice from the dining room entrance—he realized that it came from the mouth of a short person that showed up there.

???: "My, I am surprised. I did not think there would be a clever person, who, despite having heard the rumors about me, would try to sum things up like that in the middle of eating a meal."

The person reveals her face that was hidden with a hood. The one who said that with an archaic way of speaking was this girl with childish looks. Subaru could not respond to the girl's intrusion, who appeared to be Dias blah blah blah's assistant. However,

???: "Although you've been completely defeated by my cooking, it's rare to see a Master that responds cheerfully. I see, the Margrave is a bad person, too. I guess this is the type of stuff you like."

Roswaal: "I thought it was the best, in terms of hoooonest impressions. On the other side, it seemed to be your personal favorite…well, ah well."

Roswaal agrees carefully with the girl who folded her arms and puffed up with pride. The situation makes Subaru widen his eyes, as he turned around and asked "What's going on?". Then

???: "There's a lot of rumors about Master that go around, but they're all nonsense. Master has this bad taste of messing with people where she doesn't deny the exaggerated rumors that are at her destination, toying with the people that believe in them like gems."

The one who came into the conversation and answered Subaru's doubt was Dias bla bla bla. No, based off what the man had just said, it seemed like he wasn't Dias bla bla bla. The real Dias bla bla bla was—

Dias: "It is I, Dias Lepunzo Elemanso Oplane Fatsbalm VI! Your meeting with the rumors, and the opposition against your taste, those conflicts were truly entertaining! Well done!"

The girl—the real Dias bla bla bla laughs cheerfully, and Subaru became dumbfounded automatically.

When he did, the real Dias bla bla bla held out her hand towards him, and when she helped him up, she slowly sat him on his original seat, and she pat his head softly.

Dias: "What a masterful disguise. This is also splendid! This means we too should respond by showing what we can do, not wanting to be outdone! Rodriguez, help me!"

Rodriguez: "Yes I say, Master!"

Dias bla bla bla leaves behind handsome words, and she rushed out of the dining room with her disciple Rodriguez.

The next course would probably be brought in like that, but it was a tempestuous event.

Roswaal: "Weeell then, the legendary chef's initiation has ended safely, so let's resume diiiinner. Suba…thank you for your valuable sacrifice, Natsumi-sama."

Ram: “Well done, Barusu…I mean, Natsumi-sama.”

Beatrice: “It was splendidly unsightly. Nii-cha was an inevitable enemy, I suppose.”

Rem: “Natsumi-sama is lovely. It’s okay to have confidence in yourself.”

Ram, Beatrice, and Rem grade the event in order. If there was an open hole, then Subaru would seriously want to be buried in it. Emilia taps Subaru’s shoulder while he had that type of mental state.

Emilia: “I don’t really get it, but can I ask one thing?”

Subaru: “…Go ahead.”

He waits for what Emilia would say, trembling from her reaction. That’s when Emilia tapped his cheek with her stood up finger, and while tilting her head in a lovely way, she said

Emilia: “Your voice sounds reeeeaally similar to Subaru’s. Who are you?”

That was how he was hit mercilessly with what was the biggest sense of defeat of them all.

10

Dias: “That turned out to be a pretty rewarding dinner, don’t you think?”

She completely puts away her tools , and she smiles while carrying a large bag. Roswaal smiles wryly at her words, having escorted her up to the entrance lobby, and he says

Roswaal: “I’m soooorry we all couldn’t come out to see you off. It was niiiice seeing everyone caving in and being captivated. To tell you the truth, I also want to lie down right away.”

Dias: “I’ll say it again. I also realized my own inexperience by seeing Margrave’s ability to be composed.”

Roswaal shrugs his shoulders, and Dias looks to her side, laughing heartily. She saw Rodriguez cowering. Dias sighs at her irritating disciple and said

Dias: “What’s the matter, Rodriguez? You shouldn’t have a dull look when setting off. Make it a majestic one.”

Rodriguez: “Master is fine with it, but I have some thoughts. Even though we didn’t do any ridiculous pranks, if we showed our skills normally…I wouldn’t have had to behave in a way that promotes weird rumors of me being lustful.”

Dias: “Wrong! Making them swallow the rumors and pulverizing composed looking people through flavor is the funnest! Besides, as long as you keep using that sort of ending with your sentences, the rumor of you being lustful won’t go away. No matter how many times I point it out, you don’t fix it!”

Rodriguez: “Ending of my sentences, what do you mean, I say?”

Dias looks away from her disciple that said that phrase unconsciously, and she raised her hand at Roswaal.

Dias: “Well then, it’s about the time to go. There are still many places we must visit. Being very popular is problematic, too! There’s too many people I want to tease.”

Roswaal: “Do you really not want aaaany payment? We made you show your skills so much, so I cannot bring myself to let you go unpaiiid.”

Dias: “No need no need! When it comes to earnings, I have plenty. To make up for not getting money, you’ve forgiven my selfishness. Besides, I saw something great today. I was also able to experience presenting a meal to a spirit.”

Dias makes a cunning expression that didn’t match her childish face, and she looks at the mansion across from Roswaal. Currently, the girls and the one boy that gave in to Dias’ cooking and had their consciousness wandering while being in a trance should’ve been in the dining room.

Dias: “That crossdressing boy was good. His honest impression excelled especially in all his praises. I enjoyed that too, and I truly felt it. So, I don’t need money. Besides…”

She doesn’t finish her sentence, and Dias reached for her head with her hand, and she removed the hood that covered it. Underneath it, she had beautiful, golden hair, and slightly long ears.

Dias: “You wanted to show that Half elf girl to me, as someone who is an elf, right?”

Roswaal: “…There’s definitely a possibility that she will change discrimination against elfs. If she did, then you wouldn’t have to hide the fact that you’re Dias, and you wouldn’t have to hide behind your disciple.”

Dias: “Don’t do too much stupid analysis, Margrave. I do this because I want to. I won’t give any special services to spread that girl’s reputation.”

Dias thrusts his finger at him, and after smiling with her teeth showing, she put her hood back on. Afterwards, she valiantly turns her back on Roswaal, and she walks outside majestically.

Dias: “Well, it didn’t feel bad. So if something comes up again, call me. If it’s related to me performing, then I won’t refuse.”

Roswaal: “Can I believe that to be a good connectioooon?”

Dias: “Do whatever you want. Jeez. Ah, right.”

Roswaal displays shamelessness by focusing on the future until the end, and so Dias looked back with a beaten look on her face, and she pointed at the mansion as she said

Dias: “I want to hear honest impressions next time, too. Until then, I would appreciate it if you don’t let go of that elf girl and the boy. How you interpret that is up to you.”

Roswaal: “Eeehhh, then I shall do so.”

Roswaal accepts her consent, and Dias departs with Rodriguez.

Roswaal sees them off, and when he let out a long sigh, he said

Roswaal: “I wasn’t sure what would happen in an hour, but with this, I’ve created a connection with Dias Lepunzo Elemanso Oplane Fatsbalm VI.”

Although there were some irregularities, it should probably be said that he fulfilled his initial goal.

There was a lot of matters that made him have stiff shoulders. However, he didn’t just have stiff shoulders today.

Roswaal: “Nevertheless…ahh, it was a masterpiece.”

What popped up in his mind, was a completely clear figure of Subaru crossdressing.

In that short period of time, he wasn’t bothered by teaseful jokes. It was a very worthwhile dinner.

That was because it was a time when his eyes, tongue, and memories enjoyed themselves.

Roswaal: “Pfft, ahahaha”

Having those thoughts, Roswaal laughed alone, being unable to handle it. With a face that he wouldn’t show to anybody, at a place that couldn’t be seen, he raised his voice without any hesitation at all.

The World Petra Saw
(Edited Machine Translation)

I

—For Petra Leyte, the world seemed very small and complete.

Petra was born into the Leyte family in the small village of Arlam, in the territory of Margrave Mathers.

Petra was neither blessed nor born into a wealthy family. She grew up healthy in a very ordinary village, to a very ordinary family, as one of the very ordinary village girls.

The village of Arlam was a typical ordinary and rural village in the world, with nothing to write home about.

Aside from the fact that the mansion of the Margrave, the lord of the territory, was located near the village, there was nothing remarkable about it. Compared to other places in the territory, there might have been more chances to see their lord in person.

It was a terrible thing to ask a young girl to understand such a unique opportunity.

The first thing to note is that this lord, Roswaal L. Mathers, was a strange man. His appearance did not match that of a typical nobleman.

As rumor had it, he liked to wear makeup like the clowns in fairy tales, and his outlandish and strange costumes were more bewildering than awe-inspiring.

—If the lord didn't do his job properly, the people under him would have a hard time.

It was an idea that Petra had vaguely kept in her mind from stories and conversations with adults. And even as a child, Petra knew that her lord was not a normal person.

In fact, the attitude of the lord, who occasionally wandered into the village for a visit, was strange.

He did not act like a lord, but he messed with the adults, annoyed the golden-haired maid with him by saying things she did not understand, and left nothing but confusion in his wake.

Petra couldn’t understand how adults such as Muraosa laughed and forgave such behavior, and Petra once complained directly to the lord. But—

Roswaal: “Oh, weeell, that’s harsh. But you are a very brave girl to tell me that. I hope you will remember that courage and take good care of yourseeelf.”

For some reason, Roswaal patted Petra on the head happily, Ignoring her indignant feelings.

Since then, Petra had given up on his eccentricities, thinking that it was useless to try and talk to the lord.

Having said that, the focus of the story returns from the village and the lord back to Petra.

As mentioned before, Petra had lived her life as an ordinary village girl in a village with no distinctive features. In the words of her lord, she could add the crown of a “very brave girl” to that.

As Petra grew up as a village girl, she became aware of something at the same time as she became older.

It was apparently a budding sense of self-consciousness that she was “a little cuter” compared to the other children in the village.

In fact, Petra’s appearance was more than gorgeous enough, even taking into account her young age.

She had large round eyes, light pink lips, long, slender arms and legs, and white skin. Her reddish brown hair was very fine and flowed softly and gently in the wind. Petra’s young but lovely appearance was so that the whole village was convinced that she would become a great beauty in the future.

Such self-awareness for a child is not easily trivialized by this.

In addition, Petra was not only good-looking, but she was also more intelligent than the other children. However, it was the kind of intelligence that could be called “cunning.”

Petra thought that being born with good looks was the same as being blessed with a Divine Protection or talent.

So it was only natural that she should use her good looks and utilize them to her advantage.

—When Petra broke something just for fun.

—When Petra stole a sweet Orage from the field.

—When Petra skipped taking care of the livestock and went out with friends.

In the face of angry adults, Petra used her cuteness in a powerful way.

If Petra got teary-eyed, looked down, and spoke words of remorse, it would be enough to prevent the adults from strongly scolding her, and they would leave it at that. It was only natural that they would not be able to scold the other children with her.

Her parents, who were the only ones in a position to scold Petra without such ties, were completely fooled by their beloved daughter, who acted like a good girl in front of them, and she grew up to be a little devil.

—With Petra, you could see the good in her eyes.

Even as a child, or perhaps because she was a child, she had no hesitation to jump on such advantages. Naturally, the children of the village would often gather around Petra, and as a result, Petra would grow more and more cheeky.

Doited on by the village boys, relied on by the village girls, and adored by the adults, Petra watered the flower of self-consciousness, and it blossomed.

It was around this time that Petra began to mistakenly believe that she was the center of the world.

Anyway, children, despite their misunderstandings, are a lovely thing.

Petra's growth did not go beyond the realm of being a mischievous child, and her actions with her friends were only minor incidents in a small village.

The center of the world, Petra Leyte —did not realize her misunderstandings and only learned a little bit about the size of the world until she turned ten, a few years after becoming self-aware.

It was a rare occasion when a peddler stopped by the village of Arlam to sell silk fabrics and miscellaneous goods.

It seemed that the merchant was on his way back from selling a variety of rare textiles to the lord, who liked to wear eccentric costumes. On his way back, he unpacked his goods in the village of Arlam along the way.

Merchant: "Kararagi to the west, Vollachia to the south. And it's all the rage in the Royal Capital of Lugunica."

Petra's world changed when she saw the items the merchant had laid out with his sales pitch.

The girl's eyes were drawn to the colorful, brightly woven fabrics, and she was instantly captivated by the fantasy.

With her natural charm, she was able to win over the merchant and her parents, acquire some textiles, and sat on her bed in her room and stared at them endlessly.

They became her irreplaceable treasures and made her dream of one thing.

2

—As the months passed by, Petra turned twelve years old, still keeping her dream alive.

At this age, changes come not only to the mind, but also to the body.

Gradually, she prepared to blossom not as a childish girl, but into a woman.

Petra, who was still just a budding flower, her prized cuteness still healthy and strong —If anything, it had become polished with self-awareness and poised to become more sophisticated and glamorous.

The twelve-year-old Petra was still the center of the children in the village and had a reputation among the adults for being cute and smart, but in her room, she puffed out her cheeks in frustration.

The reason for this lay in the dream that Petra had.

The repercussions of that chance event had grown in Petra's mind with the passage of time. Two years have passed since then, but her treasure remained carefully stored away, its color unfaded.

Her dim longing became concrete, and Petra had a dream in her hands.

—In the future, I want to go to the Royal Capital and work as a tailor.

She wanted to make pretty and fashionable clothing, decorated with beautiful fabrics as she desired. The admiration for the many textiles that had captured her eyes that day had made Petra dream of such a future.

Looking back, maybe the reason Petra did not like the lord very much was that she did not like the way he dressed. It was terrible. It was blasphemy against clothing, she thought.

Aside from her anger at the lord, Petra's frustration ran even deeper.

This was because the people around her were not very supportive of Petra, who was working hard to realize her dream by practicing her sewing.

The reaction of the children, especially the ones around her, was really depressing. Sometimes when Petra asked them about the future, she never got the answer she wanted.

Lucas would sniff and say he's going to take over his father's job as a lumberjack, and Mild's stomach would growl while thinking about something complicated. The brothers Dine and Cain would never stop fighting over who would marry Petra; when she would say she would be leaving the village, her younger friend, Meina, was adorable, but she would always start crying when Petra would tell her that she would be leaving for the Royal Capital.

Here, Petra was feeling completely alone.

The kids around her depended on her, but she had no friends to turn to. Even if she told the adults, they would just laugh as if her dreams were just a fantasy.

What a surprise. Being cute was so lonely.

This was an unbelievable reality for Petra, who had always been able to get by on cuteness alone. This was the first time Petra had experienced the frustration of a situation that could not be managed with cuteness.

As a result, Petra spent her days in agony, with dreams and worries in her heart.

In the future, when I grow up a little more and become prettier, it will all be solved.

For the time being, I'm pinning all my hopes on my future self.

At such a troubled age, the twelve-year-old Petra once again experienced a strange encounter one day.

She was on her way to a nearby riverbank to go krafish fishing with all her friends. Petra, who didn't want to get her clothes dirty, could only watch the fishing, but it was still fun to hang out with her friends. She was worried about her future —but that was a different matter.

???: “Hey, hey! Hey there, kids! You know where the person in charge of the village is?!”

Then, in a very familiar manner, a black-haired boy spoke to her.

He had mean-looking eyes and an incongruous face. He was a man who wore very formal clothes that did not suit him at all. His face was overshadowed by his clothes.

However, thanks to his ill-fitting appearance, Petra was soon able to surmise the identity of the person she was dealing with.

Petra: “Oh, are you the new servant in the lord’s mansion?”

Servant: “Oh, you’re right! As expected of Petra! So smart! So cute! The best in the village!”

Petra: “…Did I mention my name?”

Servant: “Ugh!”

The boy clapped his hands excitedly and groaned at the staring Petra.

Petra’s guard went up when she suddenly heard someone call her by name, even though the person was a stranger. There was also the feeling of resentment at being startled by his words. How in the world did he know her name?

Servant: “Oh, look, there she is, there she is! The most beautiful girl in the village! Speaking of Petra of the village of Arlam, her brave name is echoing high and low, even in Roswaal-sama’s mansion! See?”

Petra: “Oh… In the lord’s mansion? Oh no, I’m so embarrassed…”

Servant: “It’s true, it’s true! Rather, it’s inevitable! Oh no, the real thing is a hundred times cuter than the stories, haha!”

The boy, who was in a panic, was frankly relieved to see Petra looking down with her hands on her cheeks. Petra —pretended to be embarrassed by the boy, and was looking carefully for his reaction.

One should not trust someone easily just because their clothes look like they are related to the mansion. There was a man who used to come in and out of the lord's mansion and who used to stare at Petra and the others. He had a handsome face, and his clothes suited him, but his stare was unsettling.

And if one looked closely, one could see that that person and this boy were wearing the same clothes. Petra was surprised to see how different they looked depending on who was wearing the clothes, but one could never be too careful. Being cute could also be dangerous.

Servant: "My name is Natsuki Subaru! Long story short, I'm an apprentice butler! I'm a hard worker who's been taking care of Roswaal-sama's mansion since yesterday. I hope we can all get along!"

Unaware of Petra's suspicions, the boy —Subaru, boisterously introduced himself.

His greetings lacked the composure of an adult, and his behavior was not polite. There was a sense that he was looking down on the children; also, the way he closed the distance between them irritated Petra.

To put it simply, Petra had the worst impression of Subaru when she first met him.

However, Lucas and Mild, who were confused at first, quickly became friends with him, perhaps because they liked his attitude, which was neither adult-like nor childlike.

If that happened, Petra, who represented the children, would have to accept him.

Petra: "…So, you're looking for the person in charge of the village? What do you want with them?"

Subaru: "Well, I've been asked by my Maid-senpai to deliver something to them. So, I guess I'm running an errand!"

Petra: “Hmm. All right, I’ll take you to Muraosa.”

With Lucas on his back and Mild and Dine hooked around his waist, Petra guided Subaru with a forced smile. Petra thought that it was also a bit of a ploy, that he was not angered by the mischief.

Incidentally, the one in charge of the village was actually Mayor Milde, but she was deliberately avoided, with Subaru taken to her younger brother, Rathhum-san (Muraosa), who looked more like a village chief.

Petra was sure the people at the mansion would scold her later for this. It would be interesting.

The next day, the village was abuzz with rumors about the new servant who had joined the mansion.

It was a small village. Although there were no major incidents, even the slightest thing could easily become known. In particular, people from the lord’s mansion would frequently come to the village to buy groceries. It was only natural that rumors would start to circulate about the kind of person that one would be meeting many times in the future.

Petra: “Um, I’m not sure. But, he doesn’t seem like a bad person.”

When asked by her parents, Petra casually replied with a safe answer.

After the incident with the escort yesterday, there were quite a few people who came to Petra, who had met with Subaru, to find out the truth about the rumors. The other children were also asked, but Petra was still the one that the adults relied on.

Petra didn’t have a very good impression of Subaru, but it was not good to say anything different from the other kids. It was hard to keep the cute and cuddly wheels on track. Petra breathed deeply, having gotten through the barrage of questions.

Petra: “…Huh? Who is that girl?”

After escaping from the circle of adults to the outskirts of the village, Petra's eyes widened. There, she discovered a girl with light brown braided hair —for two days in a row, she had seen this unfamiliar girl.

Petra: "What are you doing out here all alone?"

Girl: "Oh…"

Unlike the previous days, Petra had no hesitation in calling out to the girl. The girl who turned around at her call was quite cute — even from Petra's point of view.

Her clothes were simple, and her hair was unadorned, but the quality of her face was quite outstanding. Petra was filled with an overwhelming desire to do something about her appearance.

Having worked tirelessly to improve her own cuteness, Petra was also keenly attuned to the cuteness of others. She especially disliked seeing cuteness go to waste, and she took care of her mother and Meina in many ways in that regard.

She had a tremendous desire to pour her own cute spirit onto this little girl.

???: "I'm Meili. Because of some circumstances, my family is sending me to this village for a little while."

The girl who said her name and smiled —Meili was a quiet girl.

She was quick to answer questions, but did not often talk to people on her own. She had a personality similar to Meina's, which made Petra feel like she had to lead the way like an older sister.

Petra: "Come on! Let me introduce you to everyone. I'm Petra! I'll be your friend!"

As soon as Petra took the shy Meili with her, Lucas and her friends immediately welcomed her.

As children, once they got to know each other, it was easy for them to talk. She quickly became one of the friends of Petra and the others, and that day they ran around the village to deepen their friendship.

Lucas: “Hey, come look. …This animal looks like it’s a girl.”

Meina: “Oh, wow, that’s amazing! Meili, it feels like you can talk to animals!”

In the midst of all this playfulness, Petra and her friends were especially pleased with the puppy that Meili had taken in. The dark brown-haired puppy seemed to have been brought by Meili and was very friendly. The children were completely enticed by the way it performed tricks, as if it could understand Meili’s words.

Petra: “Meili! We’ll definitely play again tomorrow!”

At dusk, as they parted, Petra grabbed Meili’s hand and promised to see her tomorrow. She nodded shyly, and Petra went home, satisfied.

Petra: “Today, I made a new friend. She was all alone, so I invited her to play.”

When Petra reflected on her day at the dinner table, her parents looked at her with admiration and praised her. This also helped to boost Petra’s self-esteem.

It was true that Meili was a good girl, but it was Petra who had reached out to her. Not only was she cute, but she was also kind. This felt like it would bring the Royal Capital closer.

Petra went to sleep feeling good, with a little bit of selfishness swelling her heart.

The next day, Petra woke up as usual, and went out to play as usual; an ordinary day —unaware that fate always masquerades as such.

Petra: “Sorry to keep you waiting. What are you going to do today?”

At the height of the Fire time, Petra met up with Lucas and his friends at noon, and then met up with Meili at the edge of town. As they were all talking about what they were going to do today—“10”

Lucas and friends: “Oh! It’s Subaru!” “Huh? Subaru!” “Yay! Subaru is here!”

Lucas’s face lit up, and he and the others started running at once. Then, standing in their path was Subaru, whose uniform did not suit him. He was surprised by their momentum.

Subaru: “Whoa! Hey! Bring it… Aaah!”“11”

He opened his arms and tried to catch them, but he couldn’t stop them at all. Lucas and Mild, and the brothers Dine and Cain, collided with them, and Subaru and the kids fell to the ground without a moment’s hesitation.

Petra: “Geez! Guys, don’t do anything dumb! Subaru, are you okay?”

Subaru: “Oh, yeah, I’m fine. I’m fine. I was overconfident in my abilities. How embarrassing.”

When Petra called out to Subaru, who had fallen on his butt, he laughed and scratched his head. Petra tilted her head at Subaru’s appearance and asked, “Huh?”. It was the first time she had seen him in two days, but the impression she got from him was quite different compared to that time. At that time, he looked like a fool who had no time to spare.

Petra: “Subaru, did something happen yesterday?”

Subaru: “What? No, no, no, n-nothing at all! It’s not like I borrowed the lap of the girl I have feelings for, cried my eyes out, and then went to sleep with a runny nose. Nothing like that happened at all!”

Petra: “Hmm…”

Petra was told to deny what she had not asked about. At any rate, it seemed that he did not fall asleep in someone’s lap, crying and sniffling. Though, there might have been something similar to that had happened.

Petra: “Well, okay.”

Compared to the Subaru of the day before yesterday, the Subaru of today was more likable to Petra. She did not know how Lucas and the others felt, but Petra felt like she should try to be a little more friendly with him.

Petra: “So, are you running errands today?”

Subaru: “That’s part of it, but right now I have free time. Why don’t we take a little tour of the village? …Hey, don’t get on my back! Don’t get snot on my back! Even if it’s not snot, that still wouldn’t be okay!”

Petra: “…Uh, do you need help?”

Subaru: “…Please.”

Petra felt a little bit sorry for Subaru, who was dragging the clinging Lucas and the others along with him. While accompanying him on his tour of the village, Petra somehow managed to introduce him to the adults in the village.

Rathhum-san, who was called Muraosa. Milde-san, the real village chief. Makizi-san, who organized the young people of the village and sometimes wore a mask.

And so, while Petra was helping Subaru introduce himself around,

Subaru: “Well… In this case, I guess It’s a good idea to gather the people of the village and have a chat with them so that I can get a better idea of things.”

Petra: “All at once?”

Subaru: “I’m going to give them a big old hello and say, “Let’s be friends from now on.””

Then Subaru laughed with the face of a mischievous little boy. Seeing that innocent smile, Petra took a liking to Subaru for the first time.

3

Subaru: “Victory!”

Villagers: “—Victory!!”

The good impression Petra had of Subaru was almost overshadowed by an unfamiliar dance.

The radio calisthenics drew in many people in the village. However, it greatly embarrassed the adolescent Petra. And yet, once again, Lucas and his friends loved it, and it spread to the adults as well. The offsetting favoritism worsened, and Petra began to dislike Subaru more and more.

Dislike may be an overstatement. But, Petra hated it as she was not good at it, and her clothes did not match the situation.

Petra: “You’re the only one who understands how I feel…”

Petting the head of the puppy that Meili was holding to her chest, Petra tried to understand with a fleeting smile.

On the way home after the “dance,” she caught Subaru and brought him to see the puppy, and to her surprise, the puppy gobbled up Subaru’s hand. Petra, who had been disappointed by everyone’s acceptance of Subaru, felt that she had finally found a friend.

Petra wanted to ask Meili to sleep over with her tonight. —This was because Petra was having feelings for the puppy that she would bring.

???: “Oh…!”

It was Cain or Meina who exclaimed in surprise. It might even have been Petra herself.

Suddenly, the puppy twisted around, slipped through Meili’s arms, and ran off. Everyone rushed after it, but it was impossible to catch up with the puppy. The puppy dove through the white fence on the outskirts of the village and ran into the forest.

Kids: “What should we do…?”

The puppy entered a forest on the opposite side of the road from where they usually played —into the forest that the adults had warned them not to enter. This was a place where the power of magic stones was used to create a barrier to keep dangerous creatures away. In other words, it was a dangerous forest.

If a small puppy were to enter such a place—

Kids: “Petra…”

The anxious children’s eyes focused on the confused Petra.

Petra was the center of the children. Whenever something happened, they turned to her first. And when they did, it was Petra’s duty to live up to their trust.

Petra: “Mei-, Meili…?!”

Petra was asked to do something, but she couldn’t say anything. In place of Petra, it was Meili who tried to go under the white fence. Meili stiffened her cheeks in nervousness, but she looked straight at the forest.

Meili: “I’ve got to go get her…”

Petra was shocked as if struck by lightning at the sound of Meili’s voice, which Petra felt responsible for, and she felt ashamed of herself for trying to stop her when Meili was so desperate.

Petra: “…”

Magic stones for the barrier were hung on trees at equal intervals to separate the forest from the village.

After confirming the location of the magic stones, Petra drew a map in her mind and wrote down evenly spaced boundaries on it, deriving an area where she could safely search for the puppy.

If one entered a dangerous forest and was attacked by something, one could escape to a ward. —Following this route, they could look for the puppy safely.

Petra: “I’m going into the woods with Meili. You guys…”

Kids: “Not so fast!” “Petra’s going, right?” “I’m going to die out there!”

Petra linked her hands together with Meili’s, then Meina’s, then Lucas’s, and so on. No one was scared to turn back.

Petra: “…Yeah. Thanks.”

Petra had always been relied upon by everyone. But at this moment, for the first time, Petra felt like she could be the one to rely on everyone. She might not have had the courage to do it alone with Meili.

But—

Petra: “—Let’s not lock our hands together; it makes it hard to walk, okay?”

Following the map she had drawn in her mind, Petra led everyone through the forest.

Petra: “…”

Stepping on branches and leaves, Petra’s heart was beating noisily in her chest as she made her way through the forest. Dusk was approaching, and the visibility in the forest was getting worse. “What if I take a wrong turn, or miss something?” Anxiety and tension made Petra’s forehead sweat.

An hour had passed since they had entered the forest. Even now, Petra regretted her lack of preparation.

Food to attract the puppy —no, dangerous animals might come. Calling out loud —that was also dangerous. Notifying the adults — they should have done that, even if they were afraid that they would have gotten angry. Bringing a crystal light —would it have been enough to turn back before it got dark?

Petra: "…"

In order not to lose their way, they scratched the trees with rocks that they had picked up, but it was only a small comfort.

Little by little, the expressions on Petra's friends' faces became more and more anxious. If one person broke down, it would spread all at once. The first person to do so might have been Petra.

Petra remembered the location of the barrier. But would she really be able to escape in time after they found the puppy? Maybe she was doing something terrible right now.

Her anxiety was growing bigger and bigger, and tears were beginning to form in Petra's eyes. After two or three more deep breaths, she would tell the others to go back. She would tell them to leave it to the adults.

And then—

Petra: "Everyone… We should go…"

Meili: "—I agree. It seems that the time is riiight."

Petra: "Huh?"

Closing her eyes tightly, she was about to tell everyone to go back when she heard a voice.

It was a voice that she had heard before, but it was filled with a tone of voice that she had never heard. When Petra opened her eyes to see what was going on, she saw Meili's face right in front of her.

The frightened and unsure girl —her expression was different, with a mature gleam.

It was no longer cute, and it had a creepy beauty to it that sent shivers down Petra's spine.

Meili: "I'm sooorry, everyone. But this is my taaask."

Just as she thought she saw a smile and heard a voice, Petra's consciousness was snatched away by a presence behind her. She hurriedly turned around. There was a huge, black dog. Petra heard it growl. She tried to scream, “Run!”, but she couldn’t speak. —Petra’s consciousness was cut off there.

4

—Petra’s consciousness did not return until the evening of the following day.

???: “Petra! …All she does is worry me!”

Slowly, Petra opened her eyes while lying in bed, and the first thing she saw was her mother holding her with a bright red face.

Recognizing the sound of her mother’s voice, her father immediately rushed into the room as well. Then he hugged Petra and her mother at the same time and started to cry loudly.

Father: “The people of the mansion rescued you guys when you went into the forest. Subaru-sama, in particular, had a tough time, but he brought everyone back.”

This was what her parents told Petra, whose eyes were blank as she tried to figure out what had happened.

It seemed that the puppy was a dangerous animal that lived in the forest —a Witchbeast, and Petra and her friends had been in real danger. Surprisingly, it was Subaru and a maid from the mansion who had saved Petra and the others from danger.

Petra: “Come to think of it… That might have happened…”

Listening to the story, Petra traced a vague memory.

It was a very painful memory. It was hard to breathe, and her body was hot. Petra was lying on the grass, surrounded by Lucas and Meina. Then, Subaru and someone else arrived. And, when Subaru talked to her, she asked about Meili, who was not there—.

Petra: “Yeah, that’s right. Where’s Meili? What happened to her?”

Father: “…The girl was brought back by Subaru-sama. Soon after, her worried family came to pick her up. So everything is alright, Petra.”

Petra: “…I see.”

Petra’s parents told her that Meili and her family had left the village of Arlam after saying goodbye. Petra somehow knew that this was a lie.

Petra remembered that just before it all had happened, Meili turned into a completely different person. If that puppy was a Witchbeast, then there must have been something wrong with Meili when she had first brought it here.

Even so, Petra wanted to exchange words with Meili once more if possible, but—

Kids: “Petra, you’re up!” “Petra, you’re awake!” “Wake up, Petra!”

Without allowing Petra to get any sentimentality, her friends came noisily stomping into the house.

Lucas and his friends woke up earlier than Petra, and it seemed that they received the same explanation as Petra. Moreover, they honestly believed the story and were sorry to hear that Meili had left.

Meina: “Why don’t we go to the mansion to visit Subaru?”

It was Meina, who was usually not very assertive, who suggested this. Lucas and the others agreed to her proposal with all hands on deck. Petra agreed with the idea, but she thought it was unusual.

Petra: “It’s unusual for you to say something like that.”

Meina: “Because if it weren’t for Subaru, I might never have met my brother or sister…”

Petra knew that Meina’s mother was pregnant. As an only child, Petra was a little envious, and when she learned that she was going to have a younger sibling, Meina would become an older sister.

Petra understood Meina, and that certainly made Petra want to thank Subaru.

Petra: “Well, let’s all go ask the lord of the mansion!”

Even Petra, as expected, was grateful to Subaru for saving her life. The strange dancing had taken a toll on his likability, but that could be made up for.

From now on, I’ll be a little kinder to him. I’m very understanding.

???: “A visit for Barusu? He is surely still asleep… Oh well. The only person who would be embarrassed to be seen with a dumb sleeping face would be Barusu, so that’s fine. Come, follow.”

Petra was nervous about visiting the mansion, but the pink-haired maid who answered her call was surprisingly kind. Her expression and voice were cold, but Petra could somehow see that it was not because she was distant, but because she was like that to everyone.

Petra: “Don’t you have to tell the lord first?”

Maid: “The mansion’s miscellaneous affairs are left to us. Unless, of course, you are an assassin who has come to take the life of Barusu… Are you assassins?”

Petra: “There’s never been a cuter assassin.”

Maid: “Right? So then, it’s okay.”

The maid did not deny that she was cute, and she guided Petra and the others with a prim face. The six of them were brought to a room with a magnificent door. They were nervous about going up to the mansion for the very first time.

Subaru must have been lying in that room. It was already evening, but he must have been a sleepyhead.

Maid: “We’re coming in.”

After knocking and making sure there was no answer, the maid opened the door.

There was a spacious room with a very large bed in the back. When she found a young man with black hair lying there, Petra entered the room with a sense of relief—

Petra: “Subaru, isn’t it already evening? You shouldn’t be sleeping this late…”

—Petra’s face and throat froze as she tried to smile and speak to him.

Petra: “…”

With a peaceful face, Subaru was sleeping, breathing gently. If one excluded his face, he might have just been a sleepyhead.

But, Subaru’s sleeping body was covered in scars and bandages, with white scars here and there.

—Petra understood that all of them were the marks of the beast’s fangs and claws.

Maid: “Keep quiet, so as not to wake him. Call out when you are finished.”

After saying this, the maid went out into the hallway. After the maid’s words, Lucas and the others anxiously walked up to Subaru’s side, but Petra was unable to move.

Petra couldn’t move an inch, and at the same time, everything that had happened to her came flooding back.

Petra: “—Ah”

While she was suffering in the forest, Petra had asked Subaru to do something for her. It was not just something. She had asked him to bring back the missing Meili. Her father told her that Subaru had brought back Meili. He said he brought all the children back, and was a little injured and had had a hard time. —How was this a little bit of an injury?

Petra: “Ah, ah…”

It’s my fault. It’s all my fault.

Petra brought Meili into the fold. She also loved the puppy that Meili had brought with her and let it run away into the forest. Petra took everyone into the forest where they weren’t supposed to go. They should have turned back, but she couldn’t bring herself to make that decision. Even in a daze, she asked Subaru to do something so reckless. As a result of his recklessness, she also inflicted indelible scars on Subaru.

Everything, everything, had been brought about by Petra’s hubris.

Kids: “Let’s write something on Subaru’s bandages…” “Write, write…” “A token of sympathy…”

Petra stiffened, and Lucas and the others turned the covers over and looedk at the bandages on Subaru’s leg. They wrote their own words on the bandages, showing some consideration and keeping their voices low.

And then, Meina shyly wrote a note of thanks.

Meina: “Petra?”

The last in line was Petra, and Meina, holding the quill, tilted her head. Finally, everyone else noticed Petra’s condition, and she could not accept the pen.

Her knees were shaking, and Petra could not look directly at Subaru.

Kids: “Petra?” “What’s wrong?” “Are you ok?”

Lucas and the others tilted their heads at Petra’s strange behavior. As they looked at her, it reminded Petra of the forest. When they had entered the forest, Lucas and the others had looked to Petra. At that time, Petra had summoned up what little courage she had left, but—

Petra: “—Hk!”

—Today, I can’t do it.

Stifling a sob in the back of her throat, Petra covered her face and ran out of the room. The maid in the hallway narrowed her eyes at Petra as she ran, but she didn't follow her, as if she knew straight away that Petra would head for the front door and run back to the village.

In fact, that was what happened. Petra ran away. She ran home, barged into her room, winced at the sound of her startled parents' voices, and just continued to shake with fear.

For the first time, Petra became aware of her responsibility for her own actions.

Petra: "It's all my fault… I did an awful thing…!"

It was late that night when Petra tearfully told her parents about it.

Petra knew that Lucas and his friends had come to visit her because they were worried about her running away from the mansion. Petra's parents were worried about their beloved daughter and kept calling out to her in her room.

She despised it all, pretended not to hear it, and locked herself away. But she couldn't bear the ever-growing guilt, so she stumbled into her parents' bedroom in tears.

Petra's parents were very surprised at first when they heard Petra's story.

She told them about Meili, the puppy, her request to Subaru, and the serious injuries he received. Petra told them that everything was her fault. Petra sobbed, wondering what she should do.

Mother: "It's okay. …Sure, you did some bad things, Petra."

Petra's mother put her daughter in the same bed and stroked her head as she spoke. Her father crawled in next to her, and Petra sniffled as she was sandwiched between them.

Mother: "If you do something wrong, you need to apologize. Put your heart into it, and do your best."

Petra: “…But even if I apologize, there’s no way they will forgive me.”

Mother: “Do you apologize because you want forgiveness? Or do you apologize because you want to? Which is it, Petra?”

Petra: “…”

Petra felt like she was being told something very important, and she fell silent.

Isn’t the purpose of an apology to ask for forgiveness? At least, up until now, Petra had used an apology as a tool for that purpose. Even though she felt bad and said she was sorry, she used an apology as a means to ultimately be forgiven.

Was there meaning in an apology for something that could not be forgiven?

Father: “Make sure you go tell Subaru-sama that you’re good and sorry. If you’re afraid to go alone, your mother and I will go with you. But, you are the one who has to apologize, Petra.”

Petra: “…”

Petra’s body was hugged tightly, and she rubbed her forehead against her father’s chest. Thinking about it, it was probably the first time since she could remember that she had truly indulged her mother and father in this way.

Even in front of her parents, Petra had always hidden her true feelings. So now, when she apologized to Subaru, she really wanted them to be there for her, but—

Petra: “—No, I can apologize properly, all by myself.”

—Petra said, thinking that she did not deserve to be pampered.

5

It was two days later that Subaru, who had woken up safely, came to the village to greet everyone.

Subaru: “Well, it was dangerous, very dangerous. But, I’m glad everyone’s okay!”

Subaru gave a thumbs up, although he was not dressed in his usual mansion uniform; it was a funny-looking black and white outfit that Petra had never seen before.

However, Petra judged objectively that he was dressed much better than he would have been if he had been in more formal clothes.

Kids: “Subaruu!” “Feeling better!” “Subaru is standing!” “Subaru is standing on the ground!”

Subaru: “Oh, oh, you little brats. I’m glad you’re all doing well. You should show me some gratitude.”

With an embarrassed look on his face to the grateful adults, but with his usual attitude to the children, Subaru proudly talked about his achievements. Both Petra and the adults somehow knew that this was a way to keep the people around him from worrying.

It was frustrating for Petra to notice that he was like that. What Subaru had done for the village and for Petra and the others was huge, but why?

Kids: “Subaru, let’s play!” “Let’s play, let’s play!” “Let’s catch some krafish!” “A big one!”

On the other hand, Lucas and the others were oblivious to Subaru’s condition and tried to pull him along in the same manner as they did before. When Petra saw Lucas reaching out to climb up—

Petra: “Lucas! What are you thinking! Subaru’s only just recovered!”

Lucas: “Uuwawaa”

Without thinking, in a loud voice, Petra scolded him, and a startled Lucas landed on his buttocks on the spot. The loud voice caused everyone to turn around at once and notice Petra, who was far from the circle.

Subaru, too, raised his hand to Petra,

Subaru: “Oh, Petra. Why are you over there…”

Petra: “…Hk.”

Subaru: “What is it?!”

The moment he spoke to her in a friendly manner, Petra turned away and ran. There was Subaru’s surprised voice, but Petra couldn’t stop herself.

Although she had decided that she would apologize, she did not. This was just like at the mansion.

Petra: “huff, huff…”

In the end, Petra ran straight to the other side of the village. Bending her knees and taking several deep breaths, she looked around and saw that she was on the outskirts of the village —the same place where she had met Meili and the puppy.

Petra: “Everything…”

???: “—This is where things got a little messy.”

This time, without exaggeration, Petra was so surprised that she thought her heart would stop beating.

When she turned around, Petra saw Subaru standing slightly behind her. Subaru exaggeratedly raised and lowered his shoulders as he staggered and leaned against the tree trunk where a magic stone hung.

Subaru: “B-But I am too injured… To run as fast as I can… Huff, I don’t know if it’s okay to be out sick… If you’re injured… But not sick…”

Petra: “Why…?”

Subaru: “As I thought, I can’t catch my breath fast enough… Or, maybe I just have too little stamina.”

Chuckling, he sat down there. Petra was simply bewildered, not knowing the true meaning of this. Gesturing to Petra, Subaru tapped his hand on the ground next to him.

Subaru: “Well, sit down, Petra. Let’s have a little talk.”

Petra: “—Okay.”

When asked, Petra didn’t have the courage to refuse.

Petra sat down next to Subaru. Petra looked over and glanced at him, stealing looks at his profile. He did not look angry. But, he had every right to be.

Subaru: “Uh, I’m not quite sure what’s going on here, but everyone told me to go after you, Petra. Is there something you want to tell me?”

Petra: “—! Oh… Well, that’s, that’s true.”

Apparently, this situation was orchestrated by those around her in order to make Petra apologize. In other words, the whole village was helping Petra to redeem herself. Lucas, Mild, Cain, Dine, and even Meina were all trying to get Petra to apologize.

If Subaru was set up like this, he would be able to blame Petra without hesitation—

Subaru: “I wonder what about. Ah, maybe, did you get hurt before I brought you out of the forest?! You might have gotten mercilessly bitten into by those dogs, and if that left a scar… then, I’m sorry!”

Petra: “Oh, what?”

Subaru: “The worst thing that can happen to a girl is getting a scar. Well if I recall, to prevent scars, you gotta keep it moist or something like that…”

Subaru, whose face had turned pale, became blatantly anxious that he might have hurt Petra. Petra was often taken aback by his wisdom, and wondered if it was a ploy to stir up Petra’s guilt —she soon realized that it was not intended to do so at all.

Petra: "…"

The boy in front of Petra really didn't think that she had done anything wrong. Rather, he felt bad about what he had done to Petra, and that was all he could think about.

That misconception, that misunderstanding, on the contrary, angered Petra.

Petra: "Subaru."

Subaru: "That's right! Petra, show me where you got hurt… Oh, no, I don't want to see it if it's in a weird place…"

Petra: "—Subaru!!"

Subaru: "Yes, yes, yes, yes, what's wrong?"

Turning around, Subaru finally looked up and made eye contact with Petra, who had shouted loudly. Petra's eyes were moist with large tears, and his unusual black eyes widened as he looked at Petra.

Petra's emotions were racing, and she wanted to scream. But, anger was not what she should have been voicing right now.

Petra "Sor-"

Subaru: "Sor?"

Petra: "I'm sorry…!"

As soon as Petra finished, tears began to flow down her cheeks. Subaru became more and more panicked at the sight, but Petra left her emotional breakdown to herself and just kept on going.

Subaru: "P-Petra! What's wrong? Why are you apologizing?"

Petra: "I'm sorry. I'm sorry…! I'm so sorry…"

In front of the panicked Subaru, Petra just continued to cry and apologize.

Petra: “—Like I said, everything is my fault.”

Confessing her sins, Petra kept her gaze down to the ground and clenched her hand tightly.

The tears were still running down her cheeks, but Petra managed to calm down enough to talk. As it was, Petra faltered and confided in Subaru about her sins, just as she had told to her parents.

She felt that everything was her fault: Meili, the puppy, the request to Subaru, and the serious injuries.

Subaru: “…”

After listening to the confession of her sins, Subaru quieted down with a difficult look on his face.

When she closed her eyes, the image of Subaru lying on the bed came back to her mind behind Petra’s eyelids. The way he was gasping for air after following her this far was also fresh in her mind.

The real Subaru, right next to her, with his sleeves rolled up, had many white scars on his arms. They were scars that would never go away. Just as Subaru was worried about Petra earlier—.

Subaru: “—You know, Petra.”

Petra: “…Yes.”

When Subaru called her name, Petra gnashed her back teeth, knowing that the time had finally come.

What would he say? How would she be rebuked? Petra, who had always been forgiven for every problem, had no idea how scary it was to not be forgiven.

So, when she looked up and saw Subaru’s troubled grimace, Petra forgot to breathe.

It was not the kind of face one would give to someone that they would never forgive.

Subaru: “Not that it’s your fault, Petra… You’re wrong. If you have apologized… It’s not.”

Petra: “Umm…”

Subaru: “Hmm, maybe this is it.”

Petra was upset as Subaru tilted his head and chose his words. Noticing Petra’s turmoil, Subaru nodded to Petra, his expression becoming one of understanding.

Subaru: “—I forgive you.”

Petra: “…”

Subaru: “Well, it’s true that you made a lot of mistakes, Petra. I felt it would be different if I irresponsibly just said “There’s nothing to be sorry for.” And so, when I think about what the best thing to say to this tearful, remorseful Petra would be…”

Petra: “…”

Subaru: “I forgive you, Petra. Don’t worry. I’m not angry. I’m just glad that you and Meina don’t have any scars. But not me and Lucas. A man’s scars are his badge of honor.”

Subaru then laughed with a face that was completely devoid of any sense of anger.

The look on Subaru’s face was the same as when Petra had first taken a liking to him.

Petra: “—Fuah”

Petra cried out, experiencing another breakdown, a shock quite different from the one she had experienced before.

6

That night, Petra was in bed in her room, alone with just her thoughts.

Why was Subaru not angry? Why was I forgiven?

Petra: “I am…”

Not because she was cute. Petra had already learned more than enough to know that there were some things that could not be helped by that. So, that was not the reason for why Subaru forgave her.

Sweet. Gullible. Simplistic —such was Petra’s assessment of the adults and children she had used her cuteness as a weapon to toy with them in the past.

It was none of those things. If cuteness was not a weapon, then Petra shouldn’t be allowed to use it.

Petra: “Be kind, because…”

Kind, as soon as that word came to mind, a sudden understanding dawned on Petra.

The reason for why Subaru forgave Petra was probably because Subaru was kind. The reason for why Subaru went into the forest to save Petra and the others, worked hard, did not complain when he was injured, came to show his face to the worried villagers, and patted the head of the crying Petra was all because he was kind.

Petra: “—Ah”

Immediately, Petra realized that she had been living her life in a very misguided way.

Petra thought it was because of her cuteness that the adults allowed her to play pranks, to take food, and to skip work. That was wrong.

What a misunderstanding. What a stupid misunderstanding. Those things were allowed to happen because everyone had been kind.

The reason for why Petra was overlooked was because she was spoiled by the kindness of the people who let Petra off with no proper self-reflection, no awareness of her own wrongdoings, or no vow to not do the same thing again.

Petra’s life had always consisted of indulging in someone else’s kindness.

At last, Petra realized this.

It was thanks to the greatest act of kindness ever that she finally realized it.

???: “Oh, Petra. You’re all dressed up today.”

The next day, Subaru met her in the village square and smiled at Petra’s appearance.

He never mentioned anything about yesterday’s tears. Petra thought that this was also Subaru’s kindness. She wanted to indulge in his kindness. That’s why Petra didn’t mention yesterday’s tears, either.

Instead, she picked up the hem of her skirt and twirled around adorably on the spot.

Petra: “Heh, heh. Right? Isn’t it cute? Isn’t it cute?”

Subaru: “Oh, you look super cute. Where did you get that outfit?”

Petra: “Umm, you know. This is. I didn’t actually buy it! I made it!”

Subaru: “You made it? Oh, I see! Oh, right, right, right. Petra, that’s awesome!”

Tilting her head slightly at Subaru’s reaction, which alternated between understanding, surprise, and satisfaction, Petra felt better about his honest response and puffed out her chest, her cheeks reddening.

Petra’s outfit today was a lovely and gorgeous dress —as she had told Subaru, Petra finished it from scratch herself. Two years ago, Petra dreamed of a treasure, and she worked hard to create it using that woven fabric. And, on this day, she showed it to the world for the very first time.

Subaru: “Petra, as expected, you have good taste. I’m sure you could open a store in the future.”

Petra: “…Really, you think so?”

Subaru: “Hm?”

The high spirits that Petra had been feeling up to that point suddenly faded away at Subaru's words.

Petra's voice was not cheerful, and Subaru looked a little confused. However, Petra was afraid of what he just said. It wasn't the first time Petra had told people that she wanted to work as a tailor in the future.

But the responses were always in jest, and no one took her seriously.

The adults laughed at her, and her friends didn't believe in her — Petra's dream.

What would Subaru think about that? Such feelings swelled up rapidly in Petra.

Petra: "You know, in the future, I want to go to the Royal Capital to work as a tailor."

Subaru: "…"

Petra: "This dress is practice for that… It's only one dress, but I'll practice more, and then."

Stuttering and speaking a little too fast, Petra spoke of her dream.

Not in the usual joking way, but in a wishful one, to someone who needed to hear it.

Upon hearing Petra's dream, Subaru—

Subaru: "That's a nice dream. I bet you will become the best tailor in the Royal Capital."

Petra: "—Ah"

Subaru, who usually would answer with a laugh, did not laugh at Petra's dream.

With a serious face and voice, Subaru patted the anxious Petra on the head and supported her dream.

—Subaru did not laugh at the dream that everyone else laughed at.

Petra: "…"

Why is this person so kind?

With that thought, Petra's cheeks unconsciously reddened as she looked at Subaru with her big round eyes.

—That face that only Subaru saw was the cutest Petra had ever shown.

At twelve years old, Petra Leyte had a dream.

—No, It's not necessarily about being a top-notch tailor and opening the best store in the Royal Capital.

Petra: "I love to make clothes. That's never going to change, but…"

As she gazed at the finished treasured dress, Petra thought back to the day when she first had her dream.

That day, Petra had been dazzled by the colorful woven fabric and dreamed of going to the Royal Capital. But now, Petra knew the true meaning of that inspiration.

At that time, Petra was not moved by the beautiful textiles. She was fascinated by something that did not exist in her own little world, by the impact of the totally new and unknown.

Petra mistakenly believed that she was the center of the world, based on the reasoning that she was cute and such.

Petra had been protected until now by so much great kindness. Learning this, Petra's world was once again knocked out by a shock that was as great as the colors she had seen back then.

That was why—

Petra: "Lucas is the heir to his lumberjack father. Mild is going to be a cook and revive the village tavern. Dine and Cain are… Yeah, there's no point in asking. Yes, yes."

While Petra was gathering with her friends and talking about the future in their usual way, the brothers Dine and Cain started fighting again. The topic of discussion was, of course, Petra's future husband.

Meina: "So, Petra? Do you still want to go to the Royal Capital?"

Perhaps it was because Meina had recently come to realize that she was going to be a big sister, but she no longer seemed as lonely as before. In response to this question, Petra's cheeks turned red.

Petra: "Let's see… It might be a little different now."

Meina: "Is that so? Then, what do you want to be in the future?"

When Meyna asked this, Petra stuck her tongue out at her. With a smile so cute that one could not help but admire it,

Petra: "—In the future, I want to be the wife of a kind husband."

END

The Loving World Petra Saw
(Edited Machine Translation)

1

???: “Hmmm.”

The girl groaned as she furrowed her shapely eyebrows and made a troubled face.

She was a pretty girl, and she was well dressed. She had reddish-brown hair that she wore above her shoulders and a big red ribbon that she wore on her head. Her clothes were made of simple materials, but she knew how to keep them colorful and fashionable, and how to bring out the beauty of her childish cuteness without using makeup.

Petra Leyte —that was the girl’s name, and she was also a beautiful girl who would be known in the future as the best-looking girl in the village of Arlam.

This was not just Petra’s ego, but an objective assessment as well. She did not rest on her laurels, but made every effort to improve herself.

At one time, Petra had a theory that “cuteness is all that matters.”

Now that she had changed her mind a bit, Petra came to realize that “cuteness is not everything,” but her cuteness was still a weapon. There was no way Petra could neglect it.

However, cuteness was no longer a universal weapon, and this was a blow to Petra.

Because—

Petra: “It’s hard to be noticed by Subaru if you’re just cute…”

For Petra, who was at that troubled age, the biggest problem at the moment was the love that resided in her small chest —the so-called problem of “first love.”

Petra prided herself on being cute, but she had never been in love before.

Arlam was a small village, and the boys of Petra’s age were her childhood friends. They were the same people she knew from back when she was sniveling and peeing the bed in her sleep. They were not romantic relationships, but more like family relationships, like those with siblings. However, the young men in the youth group, who were a little older than Petra, were like her father, if not her brothers. They were more and more difficult to fall in love with.

And for Petra, who had never known anything outside of the village of Arlam, love remained a distant thing.

Of course, there were some childhood friends who had feelings for the cute Petra, but she was so used to listening to them that she didn’t pay them any mind.

So, this was Petra’s first love, her first big show, her first big game. And Petra, who was not only cute but also cunning, did not sit on her looks.

Petra: “Even with a quick glance, I can easily recognize Subaru when I see him.”

Petra nodded repeatedly, recalling the name of the person she was thinking of and his uncomplicated goodness.

Natsuki Subaru —a servant who had taken up residence in the mansion of the Margrave who was the lord near the village of Arlam, was the person Petra had a fondness for.

His demeanor was casual and overly familiar, and his black hair and eyes were unusual. To Petra’s eyes, who was interested in clothing, his servant’s uniform did not suit him very well. However, if she put aside these initial impressions, Subaru had a very kind and gentle personality.

This was not to say that love was clouding Petra’s eyes.

Petra was aware of that; she was calm, even though she was suffering from the fever of her first love. Her natural competitive nature convinced her that she could not win this battle if she lost her cool.

Petra: “So, the first step is to know your enemy. If you don’t, you can’t do anything about it.”

Petra nodded vigorously as she made her plan.

—Do not sit on your laurels, do not neglect efforts to improve yourself, and do everything you can to know your enemy.

That was Petra’s conclusion and roughly the best mindset in this battle.

???: “…Petra, are you done thinking?”

Petra: “Oh, I’m sorry, Meina. I’ve kept you waiting.”

Meina: “No, I’m fine. But you were being so serious.”

It was actually Meina, who had been with her the whole time, who spoke to Petra after she had decided on a course of action after much deliberation.

She was Petra’s childhood friend. She was like a younger sister, but she was a little sad that Petra didn’t spoil her these days, as she would soon have a younger brother or sister.

Petra nodded her head in response to Meina’s words, and then said, “I see.”,

Petra: “I’ve got a fight that I don’t want to lose… and speaking of which, what did you write on the bandage on Subaru’s leg? Lucas and his friends seem to have written some weird stuff on it…”

Meina: “Me? I wrote, “I love you.””

Petra: “You love him?”

Petra’s eyes widened in surprise as she was struck from an unexpected direction. Petra's astonished reaction surprised Meina, and Meina shook her head and said, "Uh…yeah."

Meina: "I thanked him for his help… but everyone else wrote the same kind of thing, and Lucas and the others were writing so big that my writing was really small."

Petra: "O-Okay, so just tell me… how much do you love him?"

Meina: "How much?"

Petra: "For example, if it was Subaru or me, who would you choose?"

Meina: "Uhhh."

A difficult question was thrown at her, and Meina looked extremely troubled.

But Petra, who had asked the question, was trying hard not to let her inner impatience show on her face. If her sister's feelings were true, then a fierce battle would ensue that would be merciless and unforgiving.

Petra shuddered at the thought of such a thing happening. But—

Meina: "Comparing Subaru to Petra, I like you better…"

Petra: "Real…"

Meina: "Compared to Lucas, though, you're in trouble…"

Petra: "I see, Lucas and… What? Did you just say you like Lucas, Meina?"

Petra's eyes widened at the unexpected confession, and Meina's face flushed. Petra felt a hot fluttering sensation in her chest at Meina's unexpected reaction.

As it was, Petra hugged her cute friend and stroked her head with her hair tied up in twin tails.

Petra: “Meina, is cute! Cute, cute, cute… You’re too good for Lucas!”

Meina: “Oh, don’t say that in such a loud voice! Petra, you idiot!”

Petra, who had forgotten all about her last-minute fears, blushed as Meina shouted at her in such a way.

2

Petra: “I’m sorry that I ran out of the mansion without saying goodbye the other day.”

???: “—. It’s not something that you should apologize to Ram for. Ram will give you credit for apologizing, though.”

The pink-haired maid replied to Petra, who bowed politely, with an irreverent expression and attitude, but with an inscrutable kindness in her words.

This was right after she had learned of Meina’s love interest and was relieved that her friend was not her love rival. A blushing Meina had pushed her away, and as Petra strolled through the village, she saw a familiar maid’s uniform.

She was a maid in uniform who worked at the lord’s mansion. She had come to the village to do some shopping, and Petra had caused her a little trouble a few days ago. The apology Petra just made was for that.

However, the pink-haired maid, who called herself Ram, was not very friendly, and Petra, who was a bit braver than the others, could not hide her surprise. And then, instead of Ram, it was,

???: “Nee-sama, what is this girl talking about…?”

Ram: “The children once came to see Barusu after he had been bitten by the dogs. They couldn’t stand to see him so ugly then, so they left him alone.”

Petra: “I didn’t leave because Subaru was ugly…”

Ram: “A joke.”

When Petra protested, Ram shrugged her shoulders with a nonchalant expression. Petra’s lips pursed into an “Ooh” as she savored the disappointment in her attitude.

???: “Her mischievous side is also part of the charm of Nee-sama. But, it may be difficult to understand at first.”

And so, it was the person standing beside Ram who stepped in front of Petra. A girl dressed in the same maid uniform as her, this girl’s face was a perfect match for Ram’s.

She was another face Petra had seen many times in the village. She was one of the lord’s maids, though they had never exchanged words like this before.

Rem: “Nee-sama is my sister: I am Rem. What is your name?”

Petra: “Um… My name is Petra Leyte. Uh, I’m always happy to help the lord.”

When asked by the blue-haired maid, Rem, Petra was a little pressured, but she managed to reply. In response, Rem closed her pale blue eyes and smiled.

Rem: “Surely Roswaal-sama will be pleased to hear you say that.”

Petra: “…And thank you to Rem-san as well. I was told later that you and Subaru came to the forest to save us…”

Rem: “—. No, not at all. That all was because of Subaru-kun.”

At Petra’s words of thanks, Rem was humble and then boastfully puffed out her ample chest. Then, Rem seemed to be looking heartily proud at something.

Rem: “It was Subaru-kun who had figured out that you were in the forest and in that particular place. Rem only helped a little bit with that. And after that, Rem caused a lot of trouble for Subaru-kun and Nee-sama…”

Rem lowered her eyebrows and mentioned her mistake. However, Petra's attention was not on the subtle expression of remorse, but on the change of expression that she had just shown.

Reddening her cheeks, loosening her lips, lowering the corners of her eyes, and placing her palms on her hot face, Rem told her about that day— Petra felt a certain passion in her attitude.

And that passion had only one possible destination, based on the current trend of statements.

Rem: "Subaru-kun is…"

The smooth movement of Rem's tongue as she talked about Subaru with vigor. The bitter face of Ram, standing right beside her, proved the intensity of her words.

What surprised Petra, of course, was the passion, but also the sudden change of Rem's blushing cheeks.

Petra and Rem had been friendly with each other for a long time, even though they only saw each other from a distance. However, when she came to the village to get the necessities for the mansion, they never exchanged any friendly words. This was largely due to the fact that Rem had a cold impression of being inhospitable to others.

However, that cold impression had now melted away, and Rem had the loveliness of a girl with a heart and soul. This made Petra smile, even though she was younger than her, but at the same time, it made Petra feel a sense of danger.

Because, it was obvious that Rem was feeling something special about Subaru.

Petra: "Stare…"

Quietly, Petra let the initial shock sink in and quietly observed Rem.

She had short, silky blue hair; clear, jewel-like pale blue eyes; and a face that was not beautiful, but rather cute and well-shaped, with a wealth of expressions that changed from one moment to the next. —Her slender white arms and legs, large breasts, and revealing modified uniform made her a formidable opponent.

Ram: “Ram has nothing to do with this.”

On the other hand, Ram, who had the impression of sharp and dignified beauty compared to the softer Rem, answered that way ahead of Petra’s eyes that were assessing her enemy. It was as if she had read Petra’s inner thoughts, which made her nervous for a moment, but it was probably just an accidental remark.

In any case, Ram’s attitude toward Subaru was not that of anger. In other words—

Petra: “Once again, I am Petra. It is nice to meet you.”

Rem: “—? Yes, thank you for your kindness. Rem is Subaru-kun’s Rem.”

Petra’s offered hand was squeezed back, and she stared at Rem, who smiled softly, with a strong determination. Rem tilted her head with a face that didn’t match the cute hostility of such a young girl.

That is, in only having introduced herself, did she not hide her thoughts and feelings in the slightest.

3

???: “One, two, three, four. One, two, three, four.”

The shouts of radio calisthenics stretched up into the sky around the square of Arlam Village.

Radio calisthenics had become a morning ritual for the villagers, and Natsuki Subaru was the one who got up early and moved his body in front of the villagers gathered in the square, calling out to them.

Now that he had recovered from the wounds that he sustained in the Witchbeast incident and was again in good health, Subaru visited Arlam Village every morning and spent time with the villagers in relaxing radio calisthenics.

This was a great opportunity for Petra to be able to see Subaru every day. The truth of it was, doing radio calisthenics was embarrassing for her, but it was worth it.

Petra: “Without this, I would lose out to Rem-san, who he sees every day.”

Acknowledging Rem as her love rival, Petra spent her days unilaterally vowing to fight the good fight. Without this strong awareness, the advantage of Subaru’s coworker, Rem, was undeniable.

Of course, the frequency of seeing someone is not an essential condition to make love come true, but it’s hard not to develop feelings for them. It’s a natural desire to see the person one loves every day, win or lose.

So, radio calisthenics was convenient for Petra. It was worth the effort of waking up all the adults, including her parents, and even Muraosa, for this. Eventually, it became a habit, and now everyone was gathering together without Petra having to wake them up, and a pleasant morning came.

Subaru: “Alright, Victory! Let’s gather! See, there’s a reward for being here today!”

After a final shout, an enthusiastic Subaru raised his hand and gathered the villagers together.

What Subaru held in his hand was a sweet potato stamp with a picture engraved on the cross-section of the sweet potato. It was made by the dexterous Subaru, and the villagers who participated in the event would receive a stamp as a prize for their participation. There was nothing to be gained by collecting them, but many people looked forward to them because there was a different sweet potato stamp every day.

Petra was one of them, and she loved everything Subaru did for the most part.

Subaru: “Oh, Petra, you did a great job of keeping your arms and legs moving this morning.”

Petra: “Hehe, really? Was it cute? Was it Cute?”

Subaru: “Oh, it was cute, it was cute. And for such a cute Petra, I’ll give you a bonus, and…”

When it was Petra’s turn to have her potato stamp card pressed, Subaru’s hand slipped in response to Petra’s excitement. When he tried to regain his grip, the potato stamp fell to the ground and rolled around.

In a panic, Subaru scurried off to pick up that potato stamp, and then—

???: “…Yes. Don’t panic. You’re just scatterbrained.”

Subaru: “Who even says that these days.”

???: “Don’t make fun of me.”

Before Subaru was able to, a person had reached for the potato stamp, picked it up, and handed it to him. In response to Subaru’s comment, the other person poked his forehead with their finger.

It was a person wearing a white robe with a hood covering their head. The tone of her voice and their thin appearance led Petra to believe that it was a woman. Petra wondered if there was such a person around here.

Petra: “Hey, Subaru…”

Subaru: “—. Mm, oh, oh, I’m sorry, I’m sorry. Okay, let’s resume. Let’s stamp it!”

With a pop, a potato stamp was pressed on the participation card, but Petra couldn’t pay attention to the pattern. Petra’s eyes were glued to Subaru, who was in front of her, the whole time.

Just before, Subaru was looking somewhat happy, stroking his poked forehead and relaxing his lips. To Petra’s eyes, Subaru looked too happy.

Girl in robe: “…Huh? You dropped this. Here.”

Petra pretended that the participation card had been taken by the wind, and deliberately sent it flying at the feet of the girl in the white robes. The white-robed girl picked it up and handed it to Petra with a casual gesture.

Petra’s eyes widened, peering at the shape of such an opponent from directly below.

This was a woman with jewel-like amethyst eyes; long, beautiful silver hair; and a well-shaped face that made Petra tremble —a formidable foe, indeed.

Petra had decided that her strongest lifelong love rival would probably be Rem. Victory over her was the condition for Petra’s first love —it would be a fierce, hard-fought battle, even for the cute and unrivaled Petra.

However, here an enemy suddenly rose on the board, much to Petra’s dismay.

Girl in robe: “—? What’s wrong?”

Her gesture of tilting her head slightly, without malice, was also charming, and the other party curiously gazed at Petra. Petra did not know how the woman herself felt about Subaru.

However, it was clear that Subaru had special feelings for her, just as Petra had for Subaru.

And Petra, struggling with her first love, was unable to find a good way to fight back—

Petra: “—Bleehh!”

Girl in robe: “Eh?! Why?!”

The other party was surprised by her childish behavior, and Petra snatched the participation card from their hands. She decided to declare war on them with such a childish approach.

—Petra’s battle continued. Being cute was not enough to win. The world was a very big place.

END

Rem’s Very Ordinary Happy Day

1

Rem, the Roswaal residence’s first head maid, wakes up early in the morning. A certain room at the mansion’s east wing—Rem wakes up on her bed, and what she wakes up to is a dawn with a sky still left with traces of the night.

“…”

Signs of the morning appear towards east with a faint glimmer of light mixed with the dark night sky. The girl laying down on the bed opens her eyes quietly as if she had heard the footsteps of dawn.

She had a small body with her small hands and legs. Her rather short hair that had equivalent lengths on all sides was a bright, sky-blue, and her round light blue eyes, which had a color similar to her hair, were charming. Her features indicative of youth were cute.

However, she herself was completely unaware of how much she excelled in her looks.

Rem: “Fuwa…”

She wakes her body up with a small yawn. Rem steps onto the floor from her bed while wearing her blue nightgown.

She was very good at waking up. When she stood up without being pulled back by drowsiness, Rem stretched in the middle of the room. She wipes off the tears in the corner of her eyes, bidding farewell to the traces of her dreams.

Rem: “I need to wash my face and change…”

Speaking of the things she had to do was a secret habit of Rem, which she did before she started her work.

Putting things in order and organizing her actions was an essential ritual for Rem, as a person who was aware of how she wasn't very good at dealing with things.

She was barely satisfying her duties as the mansion's head maid by doing the ritual in secret, or at least, that's what Rem thought.

"…"

She heads towards the bathroom with a towel in her hand while she organizes her thoughts and washes her face.

Her loosened thinking tenses up from the cold water. After she wipes her face with the soft towel, she goes back to her room and it was time to change her clothes.

After she dropped her thin nightgown onto the bed, this young lady's soft skin was exposed, as she had only her underwear on.

Rem was small in comparison to other 17-year-olds, but her body's non flatness was rich with similarities of a woman. In particular, her breasts had been growing considerably in these past few months, which also annoyed her.

Rem: "Haa…"

Rem lets out a seemingly melancholic sigh and turns around to the closet. She had many uniforms organized in a row in this place stored with clothes—identical maid outfits were hung up. She picks one set of clothes without hesitation, and starts to put on the uniform that she was used to wearing.

She had actually been living like this and wearing her maid outfit for almost 10 years.

10 years—it was the same date and the same time when the oni village went into ruins and she and her sister Ram were found by Roswaal. For Rem, it was literally more than half her lifetime.

That was the only time period where Rem would put on this maid outfit.

She had no displeasure or questions towards that, and she thought she'd continue on like that but—

Rem: "I wonder if it'd be weird to wear different clothes every now and then…"

Rem sees her own image reflected on the dresser installed on the closet, and looks carefully at her uniform. It was standard for a maid to have a well-kept appearance and it was the minimum preparation done to avoid embarrassing herself in front of the master. That was what Frederica told her many times, which was a person Rem followed as an example for being a maid and who also told her about the etiquettes.

Rem of course followed those teachings, and she didn't fail to spend time on her personal appearance.

However, she was more enthusiastic about it in these past several weeks and would check on it briefly. That being said, the enthusiasm was more about her preferring to be "Cute", rather than it was preferring to be "Perfect".

Rem: "…Let's leave it at this."

Rem turns around many times in front of the dresser, and puts an end to the preparations that didn't have an end in sight.

After she finished putting on her very exposing maid outfit, she put on her flower hair ornaments, and she was done. She turns over the edge of her short skirt, exits to the corridor in a lively way, and takes a deep breath.

The corridor of the mansion was filled with the morning's cold air. Rem breathed in a lot of that air, and started to walk happily. The place she headed towards—was not the room next door, which was the room of her older sister, Ram.

Rem: "—Good morning"

Rem says her greetings with a very thin-like voice and steps into the room. The design of the room was the same as Rem's private room, but its interior was designed delicately based on the owner's personality. It still didn't have much property in it, but she felt that even that really emphasized his character. “Every night and every morning” Rem saw it, she felt her chest warm up.

It was a room used by a servant. It was not Rem’s room. It was not Ram’s room. Excluding the sisters, this servant living in the Roswaal residence could only be one person. In other words, this was that person’s room—

Rem: “—Subaru-kun”

Rem looks down on the boy lying down on the bed in this dim room and calls that name. However, that voice also seemed like it was vanishing and that it was something fragile, so there was no way it reached this boy, who was still in the middle of dreaming.

But, she said her greetings before she entered the room, so she called out to the sleeping boy.

Rem: “So, Subaru-kun is an oversleeper, considering how he still isn’t waking up.”

Rem uses that type of reason to justify her actions as she stands beside the bed. And then she looks at the sleeping boy—she looks at Natsuki Subaru’s sleeping face, and the impulse she experiences inside her causes her to loosen her lips greatly.

Subaru was lying down on the left side of the bed, and was sleeping while holding onto the blanket with his arms. Subaru was sleeping with a black jersey. They were reproduced clothes that Rem made by copying the foreign appearance Subaru had originally. She felt warm and fluffy inside from seeing him use those clothes as his sleep-wear.

She didn’t just feel warm and fluffy, though. He would usually have his bangs up, but he had them down on his defenseless sleeping face and it had a childish cuteness to it. He had lips that let out surprisingly quiet breathing and pretty fingers that were holding the blanket fiddling with it. His legs were short. He was drooling on his pillow. It was cute.

Rem: “Subaru-kun is cute…”

Such blind devotion”, is what she thinks as even she was a little amazed herself, but she couldn’t betray the way she viewed it all. Actually, perhaps it couldn’t be helped because she felt that way.

It makes Rem’s white cheeks blush. She enjoys herself with Subaru’s sleeping face and appearance.

She sharpens all of her senses. It was the readiness to pick up all of the signals Subaru gave out.

She continues that observation that was exaggerated to the point of it being ridiculous for a short time and says

Rem: “Th-That’s it for today…I can’t take much more. I have to let it go…”

Her heartbeats speeds up. She becomes aware that not just her cheeks were having a fever, but her ears were too. Rem somehow restrains herself and pulls her attention away from Subaru’s sleeping face. She steps back. The boy is completely remotely removed from her field of vision, and she somehow recovers herself.

Rem: “That was close…a little more and I’d lose control of myself.”

Rem puts her hand on her forehead, and gives herself credit for her self-control. Taking a peek on Subaru’s sleeping face was her daily routine “every morning”, but not once did she test if her offensive lust and her defensive self were settled down.

It was always a close battle.

—Furthermore, it was as if she wasn’t aware of how she had suspicions of following her desires when she was giving in to impulses from seeing his sleeping face.

Rem: “I really did try my best this morning, if I may say so myself. Geez, Subaru-kun is a sinful person…”

If he was awake, then surely he would have asserted false accusations from those brief words.

Rem leaves those words along with a hot sigh and quickly goes to leave Subaru's room. She completes the first thing she did in the morning for her daily routine, and then this time Rem heads towards Ram's room.

Rem: "—Good morning."

Whenever Rem entered her sister's room, the voice she called out to the inside with was of course about as quiet as the buzzing of a mosquito.

The lights were turned off in the room and it was dim, but in comparison to Subaru's room, it was pretty bright. That was due to it getting closer to the morning, and it was proof of Rem wasting her time in Subaru's room. That being said, it didn't hinder her work and it didn't cause her to be late. She was waking up early for time to see his sleeping face.

Just from that, the amount of sleep she got decreased. However, her daily was not just about physical strength, but about willpower as well. After all, she was just aiming to replenish her willpower. It was not just Subaru's sleeping face that did that—-

Rem: "—Nee-sama is lovely today too."

Ram was lying down on the bed facing upwards. Rem lets out a faint smile at Ram, whose sleeping face was exposed.

Ram was Rem's twin sister. "Their appearance made them look like two peas in a pod" is what she's been told various times, but Rem did not believe it at all.

She had a stern face and light pink eyes that were full of strong intellectual self-confidence. She had beautiful, brilliant pink hair that even had transient glossiness. She had a perfectly balanced body and slender, flexible limbs—her sister was perfect no matter what she looked at, while she was a younger sister who improperly copied her only with her outward appearance.

Rem had people tell her that she had her good points, so she tried her best to not feel like she was indebted, but—-

Rem: "But still, Nee-sama is my role model."

She was always full of confidence. She was always right. She was always strong, no matter what. That was who Ram was.

She felt indebted to her sister who was like that, but she also was proud of her. So, Rem put in her love, respect, and deep affection into her voice, and called out to Ram.

Rem: “Nee-sama, Nee-sama. It’s morning. Please wake up.”

She felt guilty for her figure that slept peacefully, but she hardened her heart and body and shook Ram awake. Doing this and waking up Ram was also part of her daily routine before starting her work. Ram softly whispering “Just five more minutes…” was also an everyday thing Ram did when she opened her eyes from being called to.

Even Rem wanted to let Ram sleep to her heart’s content if she could.

Rem: “You can’t do that, Nee-sama. If you don’t hurry, change, and get ready, then you won’t set a good example for Subaru-kun, who is an apprentice. Moreover, Subaru-kun still hasn’t recovered from the witchbeast injuries, so I don’t really want to make him do work, and I feel bad…”

Ram: “…You’re more worried about Barusu than you are worried about me, so I don’t want to wake up.”

Rem: “Nee-sama, please don’t say such pitiful things. …But, if you take a day off, then just me and Subaru-kun will do the work. Okay. Nee-sama, today you can…”

Ram: “Actually, I’ll get up. Alright, help me change, Rem.”

Ram bravely takes back those previous remarks, as she suddenly raises her upper body and puts her hands up in the air.

Rem opens her eyes wide at her sister quickly changing her mind and then lets out a happy smile.

Rem: “Nee-sama, you are hasty, huh. We do need to change your clothes, but first we need to comb your hair. You have quite the bed hair today. Did you sleep late?”

Ram: “I didn’t have good sleep because you haven’t been sleeping with me lately, Rem.”

Rem: “Geez, and how many years has it been since you and I slept together again?”

Rem combs Ram’s hair with the comb she took out while being immersed in the nostalgic memories. Her glossy pink hair was smooth, so it was if it was dancing in her hands. The thin feel she felt with her fingers should’ve been about the same as Rem’s. —That’s what she suddenly thought.

Rem: “Perhaps I’ll try growing out my hair….”

The reason Rem had her hair short was because she wanted to have the same hairdo as Ram.

If she matched her looks and features by having the same hairdo as her sister and the same clothes, making people say they’re two peas in a pod, she felt like she’d be closer to being like her. Doing that was also Rem’s raison d’être.

However, now she thought about if it was okay to change that childlike obsession.

Rem: “Nee-sama, would you find it weird if I grew out my hair…?”

Ram: “…Are you asking if I’d think it’d be weird? Or are you asking if other people would think it’s weird? Based on that, my answer will be different.”

Rem: “Ummm, would Subaru-kun think it’s weird…?”

When she tried to talk about the source for her anxiety, Ram bluntly let out a deep sigh.

Ram: “Why are you saying this so suddenly? Did Barusu say something to you?”

Rem: “No, it’s not that. It’s just, I thought I’d comb Nee-sama’s hair, and so…”

Ram: “…Emilia-sama did make her hair long and she does have pretty hair.”

She easily sees through her intention of covering up her reasons, and then Rem lets out a wry smile.

Ram responds to the hints of her smile by shaking her head in disappointment.

Ram: “Rem, you’d of course look cute even with long hair, no doubt about it. It makes me want to pull Barusu and tear him up.”

Rem: “Nee-sama…”

Rem feels both joy and unease at Ram, whose voice and attitude were stern.

She felt glad about Ram worrying about her, and she felt uneasy from thinking about how there may be tension between Subaru and Ram.

Rem: “Nee-sama, do you hate Subaru-kun?”

Ram: “Me hating him and me feeling that he isn’t appropriate for my cute Rem are two different matters.”

Ram gives a flat denial, which makes Rem reflexively open her eyes wide at her.

However, soon after, it changed into a smile filled with emotion.

In other words, Ram’s reply just now meant she didn’t hate Subaru.

Rem: “Thank you, Nee-sama. I also am proud of my Nee-sama.”

Ram: “Oh. Weelll, of course. I am an older sister that one would want to take pride in after all.”

They slipped off topic, but the confirmation of their sisterly love causes Rem to feel happy. Ram begins to hum in a seemingly very good mood. —She also was unusually skillful with her humming.

"…"

In response to that humming, Rem also starts to pleasantly move the comb again and gently styles her sister's hair.

This was also a ritual for the important sisterly bond between Ram and Rem, which was done every morning.

2

In the Roswaal residence's spacious courtyard, Subaru and Emilia were having a friendly chat about something that appeared to be fun.

Rem loosened her lips while looking down at that from afar.

Rem: "Subaru-kun looks cute with how he seems to be having fun."

Subaru's state of being merry filled Rem's heart with so much emotions to the point of them overflowing.

In this courtyard at a time this early in the morning, Emilia's contract with the lesser spirits—she was spending the one time in the day where she'd interact with the spirits. That was a habit Emilia continued to have ever since she came to the mansion, and then Subaru also showed up to these things, which was a habit he continued ever since he came to the mansion.

Beatrice: "—Interrupting the invaluable time of spirits, he really is a hopeless person."

Suddenly, a voice calls out to Rem from the side, who was looking down at the courtyard.

She was focused on the garden, so she was a bit startled from having not noticed that presence. After that, the appearance of the person who called out to her gave her an even bigger startle.

Rem: "Beatrice-sama"

Beatrice, who was standing right next to Rem, responds to her calling out by folding her arms without giving an answer.

It was a girl with a lovely appearance. She had her faint colored hair put into drills, and she wore a magnificent dress that had a lot of frills. Her looks were also well kept like a doll and looked perfect.

Her looks were lovely. There was no better word to describe them.

Rem: "You can't rival Nee-sama though"

Beatrice: "I can't help but feel like I've suddenly been insulted for some reason."

Rem: "That's not true. Nobody can be compared to Nee-sama. I think Beatrice-sama has her own good points. Please don't get depressed."

Beatrice: "The more you speak, the more it's becoming a plan to make me unhappy, I suppose!"

The intention to cheer her up provokes anger from Beatrice, who was irritated, and so Rem says "My apologies" to her and bowed. She wasn't trying to anger her, but for some reason something irritated her.

Rem: "Are you perhaps hungry? It's just a little more time until breakfast…"

Beatrice: "I'm displeased from being hungry? Don't make fun of me! These mansion guys are intolerable with their behavior, I suppose! Everything is that guy's fault…!"

Beatrice says those words, and looks towards the courtyard with a frown on her face.

What she saw was Subaru and Emilia still continuing their friendly chat. She then says

Beatrice: "That guy is influencing you, and it's also showing in your sister, I suppose. Nothing can be more irritating than this."

Rem: “Influence…right. It’s because Subaru-kun is lovely.”

Beatrice: “Why is it that you smiled there? …I’m now starting to regret my decision to start a conversation with you.”

When Rem smiled at the topic of Subaru, Beatrice put her hand on her forehead and sighed. She murmured those words while having that worn out state, and Rem recovered from her initial startling.

Putting aside Beatrice’s regret, it was rare for her and Rem to have silly conversations. Also, whenever Beatrice was the one to start the conversation, the amount of strange occurrences that happened were enough to count on one’s hand.

Rem: “I’ll have to write about this thing with Beatrice-sama in today’s diary entry today too, huh.”

Beatrice: “Oh? You keep a diary? Quite methodical, I suppose.”

Rem: “Yes. I started doing it lately to record the daily things that happen with Subaru-kun and Nee-sama. There are still six volumes, so I’m embarrassed about being poor with writing, but…”

Beatrice: “Six volumes…? It’s only been about one month since that guy came to the mansion…”

Rem was embarrassed from her own incompetence, although for some reason Beatrice was shivering with her face.

She had a countless amount of things written in her diary, but her literary talent and the amount of time she had weren’t very permitting. It was next to impossible to express Subaru’s charm and Ram’s wonderfulness, so—

Rem: “Would it be conceited for me to think “But even then, some day…” ? I wonder.”

Beatrice: “I’m not the one who knows, I suppose! Do whatever you want! …Geez, if it’s just that, then it’s as if I was worrying too much, I suppose.”

Rem: “Worrying too much, you say?”

Beatrice: “I don’t want to get involved with trouble by giving you something like a day off again.. So, before it gets to that, I just thought to look over your condition moderately, I suppose.”

Beatrice confesses that with a sigh unsuitable for her appearance with a face that seemed to be pouting.

Those words cause Rem to choke. She opens her eyes wide. It was a bolt out of the blue.

The trouble Beatrice was talking about was surely the “Rem’s Day Off” that happened the other day.

It was a sudden day off proposed to Roswaal by Subaru out of consideration for Rem’s health—Rem was allowed to rest, and it was the day where everyone at the mansion carried out the duties for the work of that time.

To be honest, Rem got startled from the sudden proposal and she felt sorry for troubling them. She also had unease about leaving the work up to them, but as for the result, it was also a time when she was able to truly feel how she was very blessed.

Ever since then, it seemed that she was trying to put more and more of her soul into her work, but it seemed that Rem wasn’t the only one who believed that the circumstances didn’t end with just that day.

Rem: “Did you perhaps worry about me?”

Beatrice: “…”

Rem: “Thank you, Beatrice-sama. Those feelings really make me happy. I understand. From now on, I’ll have you let me work with everything I have in me even more!”

Beatrice: “That’s exactly what I’m telling you to stop doing! Loosen up and make sure you don’t get tired, I suppose! If you don’t, it’ll cause trouble again!”

Beatrice swings her hands and knocks off Rem’s declaration, who renewed her enthusiasm. When that rejection caused Rem to hang her head in despondence, Beatrice pulled on her drills with her fingers and said

Beatrice: “It’s weird to get tired even when we have more employees than before, I suppose. I know that he is useless too, but making that half man cooperate well with your sister…”

Rem: “Nee-sama is perfect. She doesn’t have even a single weakness.”

Beatrice: “…Then insert that guy for a single weakness and use him well.”

Rem actually wanted to refute her by saying he wasn’t a single weakness, but she kept that to herself. In this case, the important thing wasn’t the extent of the gap, but rather Beatrice’s opinion on him.

It was just that the opinion in itself was something that couldn’t have possibly been related to the Beatrice back then.

Beatrice: “What are you laughing about?”

Rem: “I’m sorry. But, I’m happy. Beatrice-sama wouldn’t worry about me like this back then, after all.”

Beatrice: “…That’s not really true. I am full of sympathy, I suppose.”

She pouts. Rem says nothing to the girl that turned away.

In actuality, that may have been right. Beatrice was already kind to begin with, and Rem also had thoughts about that sometimes. However, she never spoke about that until now.

Rem: “Beatrice-sama, a little while ago you said that Subaru influenced both me and Nee-san…but I kinda think he’s influenced you too.”

Beatrice: “That’s some pretty severe sarcasm.”

Rem: “But I wasn’t trying to be sarcastic…”

Beatrice: “Then that’s even worse, I suppose.”

Beatrice snorts her nose with displeasure, and after that, she reached out for the room’s door that was right nearby when she turned her back on Rem. That was the parlor, but as someone who was connected to the door of the forbidden archives through her “Door Crossing”, it could be none other than the entrance to Beatrice’s room.

Rem: “Beatrice-sama, I’ll call you again when it’s time for breakfast.”

When she said those words to the small back of the girl who sought to return to the forbidden archives, Beatrice waved her hand in silence. The distortion of the room then emits, and then the girl vanishes into the forbidden archives, a place different from where she was.

Rem: “Just as I thought, Beatrice-sama has changed too.”

Rem whispered those words while knowing that they wouldn’t reach the vanished girl’s ears.

Back then, Beatrice would rarely show up to the mansion’s breakfasts.

She was rewarded for her perfect attendance this past month, since she also didn’t turn down this morning’s invitation either.

“…”

When she looked outside the window, she saw Subaru and Emilia leaving the courtyard.

They went together like that, headed towards the Alam village, a place close to the mansion, and should’ve been going to do radio calisthenics with the villagers, which was something that had become an established event. After that, they’d have breakfast, and then they’d return to the mansion.

Rem: “I have to hurry.”

Rem sees off the images of those two who became smaller and also aims to hurry over to the kitchen.

Everyone in the mansion gathered for breakfast. Rem hurries over the corridor's carpet while she feels satisfaction from having something like that become an ordinary daily thing.

3

Emilia: "Wow, you even made tea today, Rem. It's been a reeaally long time since you did that."

Emilia greets Rem, who came to her private room, and says those words like that, smiling with a cheerful face.

She had long silver hair and clear, bluish purple eyes. Even for Rem as someone who saw her older sister Ram as a superior being, this girl had such beautiful looks that you'd admire them spontaneously.

It became a sunny day within an instant, and it was around 2:30PM. Lunch had already ended, and the people at the mansion each went to do their respective duties. It was now that time to rest.

She brought in delicious baked sweets and tea. Supplying Emilia with time to rest was also part of a maid's job, although normally Subaru would be the one to take the initiative and take that role.

Rem: "Subaru-kun and Nee-sama went to go shopping at the village for today. There's a lot of things on the list, so they weren't able to make it for the break time."

Emilia: "I see. That's something that's been rare lately. Lately you've been going with either one of them for shopping too."

Rem: "Yes. I asked a selfish favor of them today. …I wanted Subaru-kun and Nee-sama to get along better."

Just like she said in the conversation in the morning, it wasn't as if Subaru and Ram had tension between them. In fact, if you considered just their interactions, then they did get along with each other, and you could even say they had a nice relationship.

But as for them, they each had a bit of a dishonest side. She wanted to improve that.

Rem: “So, I dared to harden my body and my heart.”

Emilia: “I seee. Making them get along better…yeah, that’s a good thing. I also highly approve of it.”

Emilia puts her hands together in front of her chest. Her expression suddenly brightens and then she gives Rem her approval. However, she tilts her head after that gesture with a “But” and says

Emilia: “I thought that Subaru and Ram got along reeeaally well, though…See, didn’t the two of them and Puck go to the mountain to get tea ingredients before?”

Rem: “Yes. Thanks to that, Nee-sama’s assessment of Subaru-kun improved a lot. But, I wanted to give them a push after that, and I thought I’d make an opportunity for that push myself.”

The shopping note asking a favor of the two made it necessary for them to run around in the village, so it did take up time. If they opened up their hearts during that time, then it would be a step forward for Rem’s plan for happiness.

However, that plan for happiness wasn’t just for Ram, but Emilia also had to work together with them—

Emilia: “—? What’s wrong?”

Rem: “No, it’s nothing. Anyways, with that, today I will be a waitress. I can’t make tea as good as Nee-sama does, and I can’t talk about fun things like Subaru-kun, but please forgive me.”

Rem bows with an expression of her hidden thoughts, pushes the cart, and enters Emilia’s room.

In comparison to Rem and the others’ rooms for employees, Emilia’s private room was a remarkably bigger size. It was a design close to Roswaal’s office. It had an ebony desk inside, a large table in the center, a chair used for receptions, and a bed placed in the room next to it.

There were also countless books and documents spread over the reception table and the business desk.

Emilia: “Sorry. There are things scattered around. I’ll clean them up quickly.”

Rem: “I am sorry for causing inconvenience to you.”

She says that and Emilia starts to clean up the documents spread out on the reception table

Behind her, Rem also begins to prepare the tea. When she opened up the table safely, there were steaming cups.

Emilia: “Hm? What about your tea? Not going to drink any?”

Rem: “No, I am a mere waitress, so drinking with Emilia-sama would be…”

Emilia: “Ram and Subaru always go drinking together though…”

Rem: “… But…then I will accept your offer.”

For a second she felt hesitation, but Rem immediately withdrew her previous remarks and participated with her.

The maid’s rules were complicatedly inconsistent, but it was something Subaru and Ram were doing. She wanted to regard that relationship highly more than she wanted to protect those rules, although it would be disobeying what Frederica taught her.

Rem: “If we meet again, next time I’ll apologize…”

Rem prepares her tea while apologizing to the senior maid, who was a woman that was away from the mansion for personal reasons. She then takes up Emilia’s offer and shared tea time with her.

“…”

They both tilt their cups and spent the time quietly enjoying the tea’s taste and smell.

During that time, nothing representing a conversation broke out. Rem notices this and experiences some awkwardness, and she felt very annoyed at her own passivity.

Rem naturally had a passive attitude. She was aware of this herself. Ram of course was no match for Subaru in terms of assertiveness, as he was someone who overflowed with energy.

On the other side, it was also difficult for Emilia to understand her sense of distance with Rem. This situation was a manifestation of that incomprehensible distance, and Rem was disappointed in herself for allowing this to happen.

Maybe she shouldn't have taken up Emilia's offer after all—

Emilia: "…It's lovely doing this every now and then, drinking tea quietly, isn't it?"

Rem: "…"

Emilia: "Usually it would be Subaru talking a lot, and Ram would give me various advice during my studies, but when it's with Rem, it's reeeaally relaxing."

Emilia lets out a faint smile, and Rem becomes surprised at the girl who said those words. After she took a peek at Emilia's face, it seemed as if there were no signs of her lying in her expression. This meant that those words just now were here true feelings.

She was quite embarrassed with how she blamed herself for the silence and how she had looked downward, feeling worthless.

Rem: "…How are…your studies going?"

Emilia: "I think you could say they're not going poorly. As for myself, the place I started at is a place more behind than the other people, so I have to work harder."

She searches for a topic, looks towards the business desk, and Emilia lowered her eyebrows at Rem, who asked that question.

There were a lot of demands for Emilia, a candidate for the next era's ruler, for someone who was a participant of the royal election. As a ruler, she would be burdened with the kingdom, and she of course would have to have a lot of intelligence and education to support that wisdom.

Currently, Emilia was at the stage to study that, and it was difficult to say her level was up to standard even with the compliments she received. But still, the royal selection would begin in the near future.

Emilia: "Before that, I want to get better, even if it's just a little bit."

Rem: "I understand how you feel. Nee-sama and I did nothing but study right after we were picked up by Roswaal-sama."

At that time when they had just left the village, Rem was ignorant of the outside world, not considering Ram's knowledge.

Studying in the mansion was not all there was to one's work and knowledge as a maid. Apart from the minimum reading and writing, they were taught everything they didn't know. That is why Rem had memory of putting earnest efforts into her studies too, just like how Emilia was doing now.

Emilia: "You and Ram did nothing but study in the beginning?"

Rem: "Yes. In particular, I was worse at it than Nee-sama, so it was really terrible."

Emilia: "So you two were like that too. I guess there's nothing like a shortcut after all. I felt some eagerness…but I have to keep working at it, huh."

Rem: "You get eager too, Emilia-sama?"

Rem felt it was something surprising and opened her eyes wide at Emilia, who became frail near the end of her sentence. Emilia pouts with a "Isn't that a given?" at Rem's reaction and says

Emilia: "All the other candidates are reeeally splendid. As it is, I'm viewed as a problem by being a half elf, so if I wasn't, I would have alwaaaays been at the forest."

She heard that the Great Elior Forest was the forest where Emilia was born and raised. Rem didn't know any more details than that, in regards to her birth place.

—Come to think of it, Rem had avoided getting close to Emilia up until now.

That was because of Rem's exclusively conservative thoughts. Only her irreplaceable sister and the surrounding world that was attached to her were important to Rem.

Rem wasn't interested in Emilia, for better or worse. That's why she tended to avoid participating and supporting more than what Roswaal had ordered her.

And then Rem thought that Emilia didn't need her assistance, as she was someone who was always positive and worked hard.

Rem stayed as herself, while Emilia stayed as herself. It was advisable for both of them to go through while having minimal involvement with each other. That was the mere, weak relationship she thought they had.

However—

Rem: "Emilia-sama, you're really bad at singing."

Emilia: "Ehh?! What's this all of a sudden?!"

Her calm expression makes a complete 180. Emilia raises a voice at Rem's words with a face that looked like she was going to cry. Rem looks at the change in her facial expression, and with an unconcerned face she says

Rem: "You're surprisingly clumsy with your fingers, and you're a little too honest, so you have a side that's easy to deceive too. Also, you're easy to accept the influences around you…and you cover yourself with a bucket."

Emilia: "Subaru covered me with a bucket! Also, wasn't it necessary?"

Rem: “Yes, that’s right. …I know everything that happened in this month.”

Rem knew this much about this person Emilia, who she tried not to get deeply involved with. She could also talk about more than what what she just told.

Emilia listens to Rem’s murmuring, puts her hand on her face with an “Ah” and a pouting face, and after that she let out a playful looking smile.

Emilia: “Then I’ll get even too. Rem, you are actually a reeeaally obstinate person with your stubbornness. Also, you like things like picture books, poetry, and you’re a little bad with mayonnaise. And you’re really close with Subaru!”

Rem: “Nice one, Emilia-sama. I can’t refute that. I particularly agree with the last part.”

Emilia: “Fufu, right? But, why did you say that so suddenly?”

After Emilia stuck her chest out with pride, she tilts her head in curiosity. Rem response to Emilia’s doubt by shaking her head with a “No”.

Rem: “There’s no big reason for it. It’s just that, I wanted to make sure of things. It’s been half a year since I met you, Emilia-sama, and yet, far more things have happened in this past month from that point.”

Emilia: “…Hm, that’s true. Ever since Subaru came along, it’s been reeeeaally busy. You and Ram have been talking much more compared to back then, too.”

Rem: “So, err…umm, see.”

Rem searches for words to express the inner thoughts she couldn’t explain well and goes into deep thought. Emilia sees Rem projected in her bluish purple eyes, and she kept the words to continue in silence.

She sees that attitude and makes a decision. Back then, Rem was honestly apathetic towards Emilia's courses of action, as long as Roswaal didn't care about whether it was as he illustrated or not.

But, because this time she had feelings different from back then…

Rem: "I'm assisting Emilia-sama too. At this time for the upcoming Royal Selection, my abilities are very weak…but I'll do what I can with my poor abilities."

Emilia: "…"

Rem: "I thought I knew Emilia-sama. What I said just now is like the basis for those thoughts. I learned about Emilia-sama."

Emilia: "…They weren't just weird things?"

Rem: "There…may have been some weird things."

When Rem gave a smile while being teaseful, Emilia pouts with a "Geez", and right after that, she starts to laugh. Like that, they laughed with each other while sitting across at a table.

Emilia: "Thanks. It makes me reaaallly happy that you said that. This is because of Subaru-kun too, huh."

Rem: "…Yes. Subaru-kun is lovely."

Emilia: "Yeah. Subaru is a reeeally good kid."

Rem and Emilia subtly share their differing opinions and they drink their cups together.

It became a different time than the middle of the day and the tea time that she thought it was, but—

Emilia: "Rem, can I ask a quick request?"

Rem: "Yes, what is it?"

Emilia: "Please give me another cup of tea. For some reason, right now I want to drink Rem's tea."

—In response to Emilia's request, Rem started to prepare the tea with the deep affection that came from her heart.

4

The sound of the bell causes Rem to run, and when she started to run, a surprising combination awaited her.

Rem: “Did you call me, Roswaal-sama? …and the Great Spirit.”

It was the Roswaal’s residence at the top floor’s terrace in the night—the individuals that met Rem there were Roswaal, who was sitting in a chair, and Puck, who was the calm spirit on top of the table next to him.

It was a wizard with clown make-up, and a great spirit in the form of a grey kitten. There were several existences that were beyond human understanding in the mansion, but among them, Rem cowered in fear to the two people who stood out.

Puck: “You really do come over immediately when you are called. But, you don’t have to cower like that. Weell, I think it’d be hard for you become smaller than me like a scaredy cat anyways.”

Rem: “I apologize for not being able to live up to the Great Spirit’s expectations…”

Roswaal: “It’s not something to take seriouuoosly, Rem. That was a Great Spirit joke.”

Puck: “Yes yes, a spirit joke. Spirits don’t really think it’s funny either, though.”

Puck wraps around his very long tail around his body and laughs softly with a carefree tone. At Puck’s feet on top of the table, there was a glass filled with amber liquid.

There was a glass in Roswaal’s hand to make a pair. The thing these two were doing together was—

Roswaal: “Relaxing and having an evening drink with the Great Spirit, huh. Subaru-kun found the family treasure’s wine cellar. As a descendant, I cannot help but check out my ancestor’s achieeevements. Then, I ran out of sakana for the sake.”

Puck: “Then it came to “Call the hostess”. And then I called you. Sorry.”

Rem: “Hostess…that’s Kararagi’s way of saying “Excellent woman”, right?”

Roswaal: “Rem, I just tooold you. Do not take a Great Spirit’s words seriouusly.”

Rem is given an order once again from the head of the mansion, and she bowed respectfully. That causes Puck to give a disapproving "Boo Boo" at Roswaal, although he gave a nonchalant look at that Great Spirit's behavior.

Anyhow, Rem soon figured out the reason she was called over.

Rem: "I understand now. I'll start the preparations immediately. Do you have any requests?"

Roswaal: "Nooope, I'll leave that up to you."

Puck: "I'd like mayonnaise! I want mayonnaise!"

Rem mainly receives Puck's request and she quickly moves towards the kitchen. In her head, she had a conversation about the ingredients that should have been left over. Sake sakana and mayonnaise. Lately, the latter condiment has been a definite meal of the mansion.

The people in the mansion mostly liked the mayonnaise idea Subaru came up with.

Rem was a little bad with the strong, sour taste of it, but everyone liked it—in particular Subaru did, so she highly valued it as a fundamental, unique flavor. People other than him liked it too, including Emilia, Puck, and Beatrice, so she put her powers into using it to create new cooking too.

Although, they weren't asking for that grand of a tour de force with the sakana. Rem takes out the fish from the refrigerator that used a magic stone, quickly grills the cut fish, and added mayonnaise.

Puck: "Hmmm, that jolts my instincts. What a nice smell."

Puck says those words like that at Rem, who came back with the sake sakana, while washing his face.

Puck did look like a kitten, and he really was a spirit, but the way he acted and his tastes were just like a cat. Rem gives a wry smile at that figure while hiding her feelings and placed the plate on top of the table.

Rem: “If you can leave the plate and glasses like that, then I will clean it up. If you don’t need anything else, then I will leave, but…”

Roswaal: “Good work. I’ll have you rest like this for tonight…is what I waaant to say, but may I have you stick along with us for a bit?”

Rem: “—? Yes, I can. Umm, sake is a little…”

Roswaal: “I know you don’t driiiink. The smell is also risky. Perhaps you should separate yourself a bit.”

Rem is told to stay in the terrace, and she stiffens up slightly as she responds to him.

Roswaal lets out a faint smile at those words, and put the glass in his hand next to the table, which was a place opposite of Rem.

Rem really had no resistance to sake, although that was pathetic to the oni clan.

All of the Oni were heavy drinkers who liked sake—that was some well-known gossip, but Rem really did see adults drinking excessively while having drinking parties many times. Also, unlike Rem, Ram stayed calm even after drinking. She was the real heavy drinker. A true oni.

Roswaal: “You sisters are extreeeeme. Even Ram surprises me with the same face she always has, but Rem surprises me too in a different way. You were fine with sake cooking tooooo.”

Rem: “When I’m cooking, perhaps there’s a difference in my concentration when it comes to separating the unnecessary from the necessary. At the party, I just couldn’t handle my tenseness…”

Puck: “During the previous party, you and Lia were always happy, after all. That was cute in itself, so I kinda think it’s fine as long as you just recognize what is moderate.”

In response to Rem’s contemplating while having her head down, Puck said those words with mayonnaise on his whiskers while wrestling with the sakana.

The party was the Roswaal residence's "Stargazing party" that happened the other day. The hidden wine cellar in the mansion was discovered, and they had a party with the cellar's sake.

During that party, Rem showed quite a shameful sight.

Rem: "I showed a really indecent side of myself at that event…"

Puck: "If it's you embracing Emilia with a bright red face, then it's cute. Even if Betty and I want to get drunk off sake, we can't…I wonder if Betty is different. Her circumstances are a bit different than mine."

Puck recites the event in a calm way, and Rem didn't know how to respond.

Puck: "You make a troubled face whenever you're troubled now, huh. I think that's a good thing."

Puck looks at Rem, who was silent, and nods his head while saying those words. When Rem reflexively put her hand on her face in response to those words, Puck focused back on the plate.

Roswaal: "You are like that with jokes too, but your fickle personality is hard to understaaaand. Keeping moderate distance is important for relationships with people."

Rem: "That's difficult, but I'll try my best. …So, Roswaal-sama."

Puck says something unexpected to Rem, and Roswaal teaches Rem the essentials for relationships. Rem nods at that advice, and after that, she bounced back and called out to Roswaal.

Just from her calling out to him, Roswaal understood what she was getting at.

Roswaal: "It wouldn't be right to make you stay here where there is the smell of liquor drifting about. Soooo, I will quickly go into the main topic…Subaru-kun's body."

Rem: "Tell me about Subaru-kun's body."

Roswaal: “About his body, the gate that he used excessively is in an exceptionally bad state.”

It was so heavy that it sounded serious, but Roswaal still said those words.

In the middle of the strife at the forest started by the witchbeasts, Subaru’s mind and body were both exhausted, so he became burdened with quite the amount of debt. In particular, he suffered a remarkable loss to his gate, which was an organ necessary for using magic. He was just about to look over its progress too.

Roswaal: “It’s hard to say that me, Ram, Emilia, the Great Spirit, or even Beatrice have an aptitude for healing water magic. Surely the only one with an aptitude for it would be Rem, but that’s for operating on external injuries, so stuff inside aren’t in her area of expertise.”

Puck: “That would only be using it recklessly, so it is worrying.”

It was Puck getting into other people’s business, but nothing could be done about how she couldn’t deny it. Anyhow, there was a reason behind Roswaal’s preface. If there wasn’t a way to heal his body—

Rem: “Someone who is an expert with examining insides will take care of Subaru-kun?”

Roswaal: “He has achieved something great from the incident that happened the other day where the damage didn’t spread in the village and the mansion. Which means that I have the biggest obligation to reward him for thaaat. Thus, I’ve made various sinister plans with the Great Spiriiiit.”

Roswaal spreaded his hands and joked around, but Rem felt relieved by the sincerity of those words.

The way Roswaal spoke meant that he already had a solution. That was what Rem understood, as someone who worked for him for these past 10 years.

The question was what was the solution, and how would Puck be involved.

Roswaal: “There’s merit. There’s even a long-awaited opportunity. Soooo, I thought to guide the kingdom’s best healeeer for him. That’s why I requested a present from the Great Spirit.”

Puck: “You don’t really need my permission either. Putting aside how it was at that place, Roswaal is the one that holds that right, isn’t he? You know how I am, and Lia shouldn’t interfere as well, as long as her “relatives” are safe.”

Roswaal: “Although, it would be bad if your good mood got hurt and you become big again.”

Puck: “Come on I rarely do thaaat. Geez, you sure hold grudgeees.”

They were laughing with each other in good moods, but Rem knew that the conversation was actually dangerous.

When Roswaal went to the forest to see Emilia for the Royal Selection, he clashed with Puck, who opposed it. As a result, she heard that the “topography changed”.

However, Rem put that aside as something minor, and she turns her attention towards the part she was given. It was the reason Roswaal called Rem out to this place.

Roswaal: “You have a face filled with determination even without me saying anything, but I’ll dare to clearly give my orders. Rem, I give you the role to observe Subaru-kun…or rather, I give you the role to watch over him so that he doesn’t do anything unreasonable.”

Rem: “In other words, Roswaal-sama, you’re giving me that? A just cause?”

Roswaal: “You’ve really bent the meaning of your circumstanceees. But, I don’t dislike it.”

Rem: “You’ve ordered to me to watch over Subaru-kun, as someone who does my best to avoid stepping on Subaru-kun’s shadow and avoid breathing in Subaru-kun’s breath as much as possible, at morning at night, every day.”

Puck: “You restrict yourself like that? I didn’t know that.”

Puck finds out about Rem’s several daily voluntary restrictions she established and he opens his eyes wide. But, he cannot be surprised. That was merely the beginning. He becomes afraid of Rem’s restraints no longer being in effect. He didn’t place as much restrictions on himself like that, nor were they as good as those.

Rem: “But, it still isn’t the time when I should talk about all of it…”

Puck: “Hmmm?”

Rem: “Anyways! I humbly accept the order. From here, I’ll follow your order and I’ll follow Subaru-kun around. It’s Roswaal-sama’s order, there’s nothing wrong with it.”

Rem pays no attention to Puck, who tilted his head in doubt, and she gives a salute to Roswaal as she straightens her back. After that, she moves smoothly back to the terrace, and she showed an elegant curtsey there.

Rem: “Alright then, please excuse me. Roswaal-sama, Great Spirit, sweet dreams—”

Rem gives a response that sounded more poetic than usual and she gallantly leaves the terrace.

They see off that spirit, and then Roswaal and Puck look at each other. Then, Puck points the tip of his tail towards the table—towards Roswaal’s glass and says

Puck: “The girl was probably downwind, huh.”

Roswaal: “…I wasn’t aiming for what just happened right now either, okay?”

They said these words. The clown and the kitten take a sip of their glasses and resume their evening drinking as they say “Oh weell”.

Rem: “—I knocked. Excuse me.”

Rem knocks the door as if caressing it and invades the room in a way that made it seem like she slipped in.

The lights were already off. Inside this room, what rose into the darkness was a light blue luminous point that turned on a mysterious looking light—in short, it was just the light of Rem’s eyes, who was immersed in the smell of sake.

Rem: “I knocked properly.”

She says that reminder again and puts up a guard. Rem silences her footsteps and steps into the room. It was the place she frequently passed by “every night and every morning”. Even if she closed her eyes, she would reach the place she intended to visit.

But, closing her eyes wouldn’t be fulfilling her objective, so she would have her eyes open.

Rem: “Subaru-kun is cute…”

She had a black haired boy lying down on the bed reflected in her eyes. As soon as that happened, Rem relaxed her face. She had more of a faint smile than a normal smile.

This was how she would enjoy Subaru’s sleeping face daily before she went to bed in her own room. Rem thought there were good points in Subaru when it was the morning or the night, while Subaru thought they were annoying points.

And then she had conflicting feelings with the gap between her usual lust and her feelings of guilt, but today they were clear. This is because tonight wasn’t out of her self-interest, but was a duty given to by Roswaal.

Rem: “I’ve been ordered to watch over him at a distance where I can feel him. So, it can’t be helped.”

While giving a broad interpretation of the master’s orders, Rem gets close to the bed and kneels on the bed. After matching the position of Subaru’s eyes, who was sleeping, the distance between their faces shorten at once.

As a result, they were close enough to feel each other's breath.

Rem: "…Is it okay for you to be this defenseless in front of me, Subaru-kun?"

Subaru did not respond to the talking that was quiet like a whisper.

Subaru surprisingly wasn't turning over and continued to sleep while not knowing about Rem's invasion. Even his breathing was quiet, contrasting with the liveliness he had when he was awake.

"…"

She incidentally is fascinated by his sleeping face more than usual, and Rem shamefully blushes.

She came here intending to strictly control herself, and yet what a fickle oni she was.

Since back then, Rem wasn't able to give genuine approval to her sister Ram's adoration of being okay with even dedicating both her mind and body to Roswaal.

It was because of the difference between her respect she had towards Roswaal, and the deep affection Ram had towards Roswaal, but that difference even turned into a inferiority complex too without Rem knowing it.

But, the person who suddenly came here was Natsuku Subaru. His existence became bigger in her, and she became able to understand the same feelings of adoration Ram had towards Roswaal.

She came to understand that she really was passionate and that it was something that could not be restricted.

"…"

She puts her kneecaps to the bed, and then Rem puts the upper half of her body onto the bed. While looking at Subaru's face right by her and his figure she says

Rem: “You have fingers of a boy, and yet they are slender and lovely. Your face while you sleep is calm like a baby. Your hair is hair that will turn into bed hair after sleeping if you don’t dry it properly.”

She talks about the interesting parts of Subaru one by one. But, none of these things were faults. This was the terrifying side of Rem’s fever.

Rem: “Lips…”

She concentrated her look on the particularly defenseless point on his defenseless sleeping face.

His lips were slightly open to breathe, but they were so close that if she put her face a little closer, she would touch them. She could feel his breath. If this was a restriction too, she would be breaking it.

Rem: “—-Ah”

But, as soon as she became aware of that restriction, Rem’s world quickly starts to return to the usual.

She was immersed in the smell of sake, but it wasn’t much. It was a matter of the amount she sniffed. Once she sobered up, she controlled herself sternly, and the girl who could control herself from touching the person she fell in love with returned.

Rem: “…What a fool I am.”

After the thoughts tinged with the smell of sake cleared up, regret and shame start to overwhelm her. While blushing from that shame, Rem grinds her teeth at her patheticness and stands up.

Roswaal ordered her to simply keep a moderate distance and observe him.

That didn’t change. Even if she broadly interpreted it and used it like a just cause, it was extremely arrogant disrespect.

Rem: “Subaru-kun, you can’t seduce me with this and that.”

Rem smiles as she accuses Subaru of a crime he had no memory of committing as he sleeps. Just like she usually did, she withdrew herself without doing anything. She decides that she'd apologize to Subaru for what she did tonight tomorrow, and finally, Rem playfully touches Subaru's lips with her white finger and—

Rem: "Ah"

The moment she touched his lips with his finger, Subaru moves with a desire to have something in his mouth and takes in her finger with his mouth. He licks her finger with a hot, rough feelings. Rem's thoughts climax, and she falls into a state of confusion.

That licking didn't continue for long, and Rem's finger was immediately released, but—

Rem: "…"

Rem is dumbfounded as she looks at her right hand's index finger. She couldn't move from that spot. That finger was so slippery and wet with saliva that she knew it clearly even in this darkness, as the mysterious looking light followed it around.

Rem: "…Will this be narrowly forgiven?"

The choice to wipe it with a towel or an apron quickly disappear from her head.

Inside of Rem, there were two options in regards to this finger—to do it, or to give up.

Rem created all kinds of restrictions for when she'd confront Subaru, but what happened just now was completely out of her expectations, and she never thought about measures against this.

She didn't because this was obviously a once in a lifetime event that wouldn't come by again if she let it pass by her. It was a miraculous moment.

Rem: "But…"

The devil inside her and the angel inside her butt heads, and the disturbance starts a whirlpool.

She was a proud survivor of the oni clan, but she was enjoying her sudden good luck. But, the only person who was conscious in this place was Rem. Nobody was looking. If Ram found out, what would she think? Was this an action that she could be proud of to her perfect sister? She honestly hated how the moment she had her fingered licked vanished from her memory.

Two opinions conflicted severely with each other inside of her head. Rem's breathing was rough, and it became intense. Sweat appears on her forehead. Her whole body was stiff with tension. She was worrying, struggling, and—

Rem: "I-I can't do that…"

A white horn grows from her forehead, and she was in utmost pain. Rem pushes her finger wet with saliva against the apron…and wiped it. A sense of emptiness filled up her heart within an instant, but she ignored that, as she thought "This is for the best".

Rem: "Right, Subaru-kun—"

She overcomes her time of distress and sought to turn to Subaru's face with a frail smile. However, those words were interrupted, and Rem held her breath in astonishment.

Rem puts both of her hands together on the bed, and she breathed roughly. Arms went around the upper half of Rem's body, and the man used his physical strength to forcibly pull down that girl who stiffened up.

Rem: "—-eek"

That sudden event causes her to blank out once more.

She loses her cool in embarrassment as a fever rises on her face, and Rem understood the situation she was in with a blush on her face.

She was laid down on the bed facing upwards, and she was embraced. Her uniform gets wrinkled from that reckless action, and her felt like her skirt was riding up too. —It was a really shameless appearance.

Rem: “—!”

He embraced Rem even closer with his surprisingly strong arms as she recognized the reality. They were both in each other’s embrace, and it made Rem’s heart jump so much that it seemed like it would explode.

The angel and devil inside of Rem start fighting once again about the situation.

It was not Rem being assertive, but rather him being assertive—

Subaru : “Munya…”

Rem hears the sleep-talking from the person she is troubling inside of her head that was in chaos and Rem becomes exhausted at once.

If she tried to move around her head, Subaru was still in a deep sleep, and he also wasn’t aware of how he was holding tight onto a large human body pillow.

Rem: “That’s right. Subaru-kun isn’t like that, after all.”

There was relief in that whisper, along with some disappointment. She had complex feelings for the action that wouldn’t happen when he was conscious. Thus, to make up for the bothersome part, she enjoyed his temperature and smell with her whole body.

And then—

Rem: “It can’t be helped. I tried my best to resist, but Subaru-kun won’t wake up, so I can’t move. So, I’ll continue to resist like this until Subaru-kun wakes up.”

She leaves those words that were only deceptive, and Rem rubs her nose and chest against Subaru like that, deciding to continue experiencing it comfortably.

—There was also a just cause to it. It was fine to have a day like this once in a while.

She allows herself to understand herself like that, and Rem starts to slowly doze off as well. She starts to yield the doziness.

The next day, Ram came to wake up Subaru, and she saw him and Rem, who both slept in and were in an intimate situation. A situation where Subaru was given a violent scolding broke out with him not being able to argue about it.

—Everything was scenes of Rem’s very ordinary happy day.

Kararagi Girl Meets Cats

1

“Hoshin of the Wilderness” was the name of a legend, someone that no one in the world was unaware of.

The beginning of his legend traced back to four hundred years ago, when the western area of the world was naught but ruins, with many small countries vying for supremacy.

A small country that did not have a desirable location by any standard, and was on the verge of being overshadowed by the other countries—the very first stretch of soil where Hoshin placed his flag on, having decided that he would start taking action, was the miserable land of “Kararagi”.

Hoshin had never been a person blessed with the talent for the arts of combat, the legends depicted.

Hoshin was an extraordinary man of wisdom, who excelled at holding discussions, knowing how to guide the hearts of people, the legends depicted.

Hoshin became well-acquainted with the ruler of Kararagi, controlling the management of the country from the shadows. In the blink of an eye, he formed friendly relations with the other countries, expanding his circle, sometimes using stratagems, sometimes by amity, and sometimes with his flair for business, the legends depicted.

When the surrounding countries realized that Kararagi had been operating behind the scenes in an effort to dominate the western lands, it was already too late.

With the majority of the small insignificant countries under the jurisdiction of Kararagi, and also with the inscrutable maneuvers of Hoshin, who had become the leader of that grand alliance, no one was able to stop them.

Thus, the era of war and competition between powerful figures came to an end, and under the name of “Hoshin of the Wilderness”, the Federation of Kararagi City States was founded.

???: “Haa~. No matter how many times I hear it, the legend of Hoshin really fascinates me.”

Having finished listening to the full story, the girl exhaled a breath of admiration with rapt attention.

She was a young girl with cute and adorable facial features, aged around eleven or twelve, and her stature was slightly shorter than the average of those the same age as her, yet she was far more good-looking than the average standard for those of the same age group.

Soft, purple hair and light blue-green eyes that shone with curiosity. With her pale and clear skin, her appearance could fool anyone being told that she was a noble girl from a nice place.

However, this girl—Anastasia was not from such a highborn family.

Anastasia: “Hm? Sup? It’s rude to stare at someone’s face like that.”

All of a sudden, Anastasia began appraising the person in front of her with a doubtful gaze. Her eyes contained none of the charm of a sheltered girl, and a glimpse of craftiness and vigilance not befitting her age could be seen.

Because of her origins, it was only logical that she was quick-witted. The person, with his jaws wide open, bared his fangs as he laughed.

???: “Nothin’. I was just thinkin’ that the little kid I picked up from that alleyway became quite an influential person. Well done, well done.”

Anastasia: “Talkin’ about an old story again? Uncle, don’t people often tell ya that you’re annoying?”

???: “If ya say that, then that means you’re way more annoyin’, since ya keep pesterin' me to tell ya the same story again and again, Ana-bo! Ya better prepare yourself, because I'll continue diggin' up whatever past things for another few years or so."

As Anastasia pouted, looking sullen, the large, calloused palm of a hand ruffled her hair. She didn't brush away the arm, but both her face and eyes still seemed to hold dissatisfaction, which the owner of the palm involuntarily let out a wry laugh against.

He didn't mind her competitive and indomitable spirit. If she wasn't like that, then there was no point in him doing all of this.

Anastasia: "That's enough. The elderly are people who're always talkin' about the same things, so I'll bear with it for your sake."

???: "Oh, ya worded that pretty strongly. Where did'cha learn that?"

Anastasia: "I heard it from the owner of the tavern, and also from the regulars. I only regret that I couldn't question and get any weaknesses out of the dead drunk old man before I quit my job there."

Exchanging banter and sticking her tongue out, Anastasia escaped from the hand patting her head, heading over to the doors. While doing that, she speedily and neatly adjusted her hairstyle and kimono.

Anastasia: "Breaktime's over. Uncle, Chuden-san'll fire ya if ya keep skippin' work, too."

???: "That's scary. With your earnings, providin' for someone with a large body like me'd be tough."

Anastasia: "Why do I have to look after your basic needs?!"

???: "Ain't it obvious? You're gonna buy me and make me yours, right?"

Revealing his sharp canines with a smile, he touched his own neck with his broad fingers. The collar, the remnant of his days as a slave, was wrapped around his neck, fashioned from cold, rough metal. What was supposed to be an object for discipline was now a testament to their promise.

Anastasia held her breath at the gesture that invoked her memories of the promise, nodding immediately after.

Anastasia: “…Yeah, that’s right. That’s right, but because it’s like that, it’ll be bad if ya dropped dead on the side of the road before I save up enough money. Take care of yourself properly!”

With a quick retort, Anastasia stuck her tongue out and then bolted out of the room. Listening to her pattering footsteps fading in the distance, he broke into a smile, gazing out the window.

Outside of the window was a cloudy sky, and his appearance was reflected in the slightly foggy glass.

An enormous frame that was too large to be fully reflected in the window of the room, and the visage of a beast that didn't bear the slightest resemblance to Anastasia. His bare skin was covered by dark brown fur, unsparingly exposing the majesticness of a demi-human, different from that of an ordinary human.

Ricardo Welkin—a giant man, unique even among the kobolds, and also a hired bodyguard associated with the Chuden Trading Company. To add to that, he was acting as someone akin to a supporter and a guardian to Anastasia.

However, the 'guardian' part was something that Anastasia would never acknowledge openly.

2

The headquarters of the Chuden Trading Company were located in the Second City of the Kararagi City States, Banan.

Within Kararagi, there were ten large cities, all of them numbered from one to ten. Each city functioned similarly to a small country, governed under a mayor and a set of city laws, allowing it to exist as a sort of federation.

In the city of Banan, it could be said that the Chuden Trading Company was a mid-level organization. Having one of the most prominent enterprises, the Regret Trading Company as its parent company, the Chuden Trading Company was underneath its umbrella as a subsidiary associate.

It didn't restrict the kind of goods it sold, but managed to handle those in a prosperous manner, so those that frequented Banan generally visited the Chuden Trading Company.

For that reason alone, while the gates of the city were open, with merchants from the outside rushing inside all at once, there was always a waiting line in front of the company. Because of that, the staff and attendants having a hectic schedule was a daily occurrence.

???: "—Anastasia! I'm runnin' out of change! Hurry up and bring over the copper box and silver box!"

Anastasia: "Yes!"

???: "Not only those! Also…"

Anastasia: "A burlap sack, right? Gotcha!"

While being showered with orders being yelled at her, Anastasia carried out the wooden boxes with her thin arms. They were packed with coins meant solely for payment. The copper box contained copper coins, and the silver box was filled with silver coins respectively. Both of them were quite cumbersome for a young girl, but there was no way she could dump everything down on the floor.

Anastasia's position was that of a staff member that managed the actual trading—not. She was an attendant that ran all over the place to support the staff, a role commonly also referred to as a "helper."

As instructed, Anastasia utilized the little tricks that she had come up with to make her job easier, throwing in the heavy payment boxes by the staff's feet.

The trading grounds where transactions took place in the Chuden Trading Company was a location where the merchants from outside of the city directly rode into on their wolf carriages—wagons pulled by a large wolf-like species known as Ligers. It was a place where those merchants could trade with the company on the spot.

Many long tables were lined up in the place, with the staff and merchants commencing their negotiations with the tables in between them, exchanging merchandise, money, and the such.

Each staff member was in control of different categories of products. Today, the employee that Anastasia was assisting had been put in charge of clothing, accessories, and textiles. The amount of money flowing in and out was huge, and all the product appraisals that they had to do were likewise dizzying.

???: “Next! Divide the customers that’re crowded around! Don’t spend more time than ya need!”

Anastasia: “From Hoshin’s sayings! ‘Time and money are equally valuable!’”

She didn’t even have the time to see the staff member nod in response.

Anastasia ducked under the elongated table, coming around behind the line of people and sorting them out, while she examined the goods and catalogs piled on the luggage platforms of the carriages with her eyes. There were multiple lines, and a few young boys that were also helpers. However, they were all working at a slower speed compared to her.

She carried out twice the amount of work compared to helpers twice her age, but she didn’t take pride in that. Even if the people around her were envious of her achievements, she thought nothing of them, so it was only natural that she wasn’t particularly proud.

After dealing with the waiting line that had formed at her place, Anastasia surveyed her surroundings with haste, wondering if she should get started on doing the same to the other rows of people—

Anastasia: “—! Hey, you! What are ya doin’!”

In the middle of the waiting line being managed by a different helper, who was taking a long time with their work, a man jolted with surprise upon hearing the shout of anger that had come from Anastasia. He was a man with a scrawny figure she did not recognize, about to lay his hands on the loaded goods while pretending to take the catalog.

When the man realized that his attempt at thievery had been unsuccessful, having heard Anastasia’s voice ring across the area, he immediately made an effort to escape. Thrusting aside a helper that had ran over to stop him, he made a break for the exit of the place of commerce.

Anastasia: “I won’t let’cha go!”

Thief: “Outta my way, ya runt!”

However, faster than the man could flee, Anastasia blocked his path with her arms spread out. The man spat at the resistance being put up by the helper, balling his hand into a fist and holding it high over his head. It happened right before she was struck.

???: “You’re askin’ for a little too much, aren’t’cha!”

A muscular arm, twice the size of that man’s own arm and fist, was swung, and the poor man was sent flying towards the heavens. And just like that, he descended back down onto the floor of the trading grounds head-first, collapsing and lying on the floor. Limp.

Timidly opening her eyes upon catching his scream of pain, there was an abrupt shift in Anastasia’s expression.

Anastasia: “Uncle!”

Ricardo: “Good job noticin’ that thief, Ana-bo. Well done, but it ain’t good to be reckless. Imagine gettin’ injured from somethin’ like this. It’s gonna be a dumb ‘n heavy loss for ya. What ya hate the most are things not worth the effort, right?”

The kobold that had sent the thief flying—Ricardo, told Anastasia with a loud laugh, as she jumped at him. He then lifted the scrawny man up by the back of his neck, dragging him out of the area.

Ricardo: “Here, this way. Ya sure did have the guts to pull off something like that, in a place where I’m standin’ guard. Better get ready for one of your arms to go bye-bye.”

Thief: “…That runt, doin’ an unnecessary thing and gettin’ in my way…”

The man glowered at Anastasia with a furious scowl, Ricardo's threat falling on deaf ears. She slowly approached the thief, who looked like he might snap at her at any moment, and then promptly slapped him across the face.

A satisfying smack echoed throughout the place of transactions, stunning both the man and the surrounding people.

Anastasia: "Lowerin' your own worth by doin' stupid things, and holdin' a grudge because ya were called out is the worst. Where's your worth now, after bein' slapped directly in the face by a little girl? You're pathetic!"

While Ricardo watched Anastasia with a pleased smile, the thief choked on his words, raising only a "Guh" against the young girl's blistering criticism of his actions. —And then, the trading grounds erupted with cheers of delight.

???: "Well said!"

???: "It was refreshing to hear that!"

???: "Serves the thief right!"

Anastasia: "Thanks, thanks."

Smiling and trying to appear amiable to the approving cheers from the crowd, Anastasia returned to being a young girl of her age, which she was. Her surroundings became even more lively at the change of her attitude, and Ricardo took the thief outside meanwhile.

Ricardo: "I'm probably supposed to do something like rippin' off your dominant arm and throwin' ya outta town, but…"

Arriving at the back of the trading grounds, Ricardo haphazardly tossed the man on top of the soil. The man paled upon hearing the intimidating threat, crawling on the ground on his hands and knees. However, Ricardo, flicked his own beard with a finger,

Ricardo: "—I'll let'cha go for today. I can't come up with somethin' that's harsher than what that midget just did to ya, so. I'm sure ya have some thoughts, opinions or whatever ‘bout it. Make sure ya never show your face ‘round here ever again.”

The man instantaneously scurried away when Ricardo shooed him off with a gesture. Staring at his back until he was out of sight, Ricardo yawned, as he moved to go back to keeping watch over the place of commerce.

???: “Do ya really think the thief from earlier will have a change of heart?”

Ricardo: “…Oh, it’s the man, Chuden. Ya were watchin’?”

Having heard that voice speaking to him, Ricardo turned around to see a fox-eyed, chubby man standing behind him. It was a man who wore a nicely tailored indigo kimono—Chuden Agri, the representative of the Chuden Trading Company.

Chuden brushed the lower part of his kimono with a hand, his fox-eyed gaze moving towards the direction the thief had run away in,

Chuden: “It’s customary to cut off the dominant arms of thieves, and then chase them out of the city… Surely, I don’t think that you, the guard dog of the enterprise, doesn’t know that.”

Ricardo: “It was settled as attempted thievery because of Ana-bo. Dependin’ on how ya look at it, she struck him a much harsher blow than losin’ an arm. If it were me, I would be way more scared of that.”

Chuden: “With the right opportunity, anyone could go back on the path that they strayed from, huh. Ya know that such a thing doesn’t exist, Ricardo-dono.”

Ricardo: “Of course, even I know that much. —I memorized his features. The next time he’s up to no good ‘round these parts, I’ll take his dominant arm, and his non-dominant arm as well. That’ll do, won’t it?”

When Ricardo growled out with a deep voice, Chuden said nothing for a moment, before giving him a nod.

Chuden: “Splendid. I was worried sick for a moment, thinking the Hound Ricardo had lost his motivation.”

Ricardo: “Stop it, it’s embarrassin’. Now, I’m a pet dog with the company’s collar ‘round my neck, right? Ruff, ruff.”

Chuden: “Well, it’d be reassuring if ya were really, genuinely our pet dog… Oh well, I guess I’m okay with that for now.”

Ricardo: “The way ya said it kinda bothers me…”

With a sniff, Ricardo responded to Chuden while frowning. Seeing his expression, the fox-eyed man shook his head in an exasperated manner, continuing with a, “By the way,”

Ricardo: “…What is it?”

Chuden: “There’s somethin’ important I want to talk to ya about. It’s about a bit of a troublesome matter. For further details, let’s head to my room.”

Hearing the telltale signs of something ominous from Chuden, Ricardo deepened his frown, knitting his brows even further.

—Speaking from experience, in conversations that had begun like this, there had been no instances where the matter at hand could be put away as ‘little’.

3

Chuden: “Recently, there’s been frequent occurrences of caravans bein’ attacked around the outskirts of Banan. Have ya ever heard of ‘em?”

As Ricardo entered the office he had been invited into, feeling ill at ease, Chuden brought up the topic he had mentioned earlier.

Ricardo made a face in turn, replying with, “Sorta.” His large ears had also caught wind of reports of damage being done to the caravans on the outskirts.

Ricardo: “But, I only happened to hear it. If it’s gonna be about somethin' outside the city, then it won't fall within the range of the company's bodyguard. To begin with, the people who're being attacked're merchants from the outside… they're not included in the people I need to protect."

Chuden: "You're absolutely right. That's true, but those merchants are our important trading partners. Furthermore, their goods will also become our merchandise in the near future. If those were snatched away by brigands, and the merchants distanced themselves from Banan to boot, then the damage done will be enormous."

Ricardo: "…Ya better not be telling me to do something about those brigands, bandits or whatever."

His background was quite renowned, but having expectations being placed on him because of it was stressful.

If the perpetrators were a gang of bandits that preyed on caravans, then their numbers would be no less than fifty people. Depending on the circumstances, there could also be a hundred of them. Taking them on all by oneself was something an idiot would do.

Ricardo: "If the enemy has a ton of people on hand, then it's absolutely, definitely impossible, even if it's me bein' sent out. It is even possible to fight 'em alone?"

Chuden: "Oh, please put your mind at ease if it's about that."

With a sly look on his face, Chuden laughed in response to Ricardo's concerns,

Chuden: "For the matter at hand, this time, even Banan's Senate considers it a problem… Includin' our company, the Association of Commerce will pitch in and gather people for the job. So, I want ya to spearhead the group, find the problematic gang of bandits, and wipe 'em out. Well, that's about it."

Ricardo: "…That's still an unreasonable demand, ya know."

He grumbled, but deep down, he understood that Chuden was doing all he could to prevent him from backing out of this whole mess.

Because of the way Kararagi's government's was structured, the merchants had a say in whatever concerned the cities. The majority of the people affiliated with the Senate that dictated how the cities were ran, were either influential merchants or leaders of trading companies. Chuden was one of the latter.

Since he was sharing his plans, Ricardo could take a wild guess and say things had already progressed up to a point that the bill was submitted to the Senate, and all he, the person involved, had to do, was to nod in agreement.

Ricardo: "Puttin' a kobold like me in charge of a ragtag group of people? What're ya thinkin', really."

Chuden: "A talented person's given a position where he can display his talents. It's only natural."

He answered brazenly, spreading out a map on top of his desk. It was a rough sketch illustrating the outskirts of Banan, and Ricardo saw red marks being placed on several roads that were being used by the merchants.

Chuden: "These are the surrounding routes, and the places where the caravans have been raided. There were zero survivors in every caravan attacked. Their goods and dogs, taken as well. For a gang of bandits, they're being pretty thorough with their methods."

While staring at the map, Ricardo set his eyes on the areas next to the places the bandits' assault had taken place—a forest and a rocky field. If a band of brigands with sufficient numbers needed to conceal themselves, then there was a high possibility of them setting their base somewhere around that area.

Like that, as the two went on with their conversation, their eyes fixed on the map—

???: "'Scuse me, I brought some tea."

Announcing that, Anastasia entered the room, holding a tray with steam coming out of the cups placed on top of it. She set two cups of ryokucha[6] on the desk, in front of Ricardo and Chuden.

Ricardo: “What, Ana-bo, servin’ as a waitress? What happened to your job as a helper?”

Anastasia: “The busiest hours’ve settled down, and I was told I could take a break after I bring tea to ya two. More importantly, why’re ya both staring at a map?”

Being shrewd enough to bring her own cup of tea with her, Anastasia tilted her head as she blew on her ryokucha. Ricardo pointed a finger at the map in response to the question,

Ricardo: “We’re talking about how a lot of people’re dyin’ ‘round these red circles. Right now, we were at the part where Chuden demanded me to solve it.”

Anastasia: “Eh, you’ll solve it? Will ya be safe?”

Ricardo: “Oh, you’re worried for me?”

He appeared to be happy, a broad smile making its way on his face, but Anastasia shook her head, saying, “No,”

Anastasia: “That’s not it. Ya need to use your brain for a job like searchin’ the culprit. Are ya fit for the job?”

Chuden: “Please don’t worry. What I asked Ricardo-dono to do was to split open the culprits’ heads once they’re found. In that case, that would be his field of expertise, wouldn’t it?”

Anastasia: “Ah, then that’s good. What a relief.”

Ricardo blew out a sigh, seeing the two get along very well. His sigh was as powerful as a gale, its force blasting both of them away and causing Anastasia to snap at him with an, “Uncle!”

He jabbed a finger at her face in return,

Ricardo: “Ya know what? This ain’t a game. Us adults’re gonna talk about important things, so a child like ya should go outside and chase after butterflies or somethin’.”

Anastasia: “Butterflies aren’t even worth a coin, so there’s no way I’ll chase them around. More than that, lemme hear the details. It might be dangerous if I don’t know anythin’, so?”

Ricardo: “Why’d not knowin’ ‘bout the brigands on the outside be dangerous for a helper inside the city?”

Chuden: “Well, why not? This might take up all of your time for a while, so let’s have Anastasia listen to it as well.”

Unlike the hesitant Ricardo, Chuden was remarkably benign towards Anastasia’s curiosity. Originally, he had been charmed by the bright future in front of her, so his softness was brought to light in these situations.

As for Ricardo, he really did not want to let Anastasia hear about the bloodier side of the world. However, his concerns would be the target of laughter coming from the people around him, with them telling him he was being overprotective.

Anastasia: “—Hmm. I see, even the outer parts of the city don’t have it easy.”

Receiving the same explanation as Ricardo had been given before, a comment of indifference slipped out. Of course, was what Ricardo could only think in response to that reaction, which had been identical to that of a child who did not know best.

However, contrary to how Ricardo had perceived her answer, Anastasia continued with a, “By the way,”

Anastasia: “What sort of goods did the victims load on their carriages?”

Chuden: “Their goods? According to the reports, it seemed like they departed after packing up antiques, such as jewelry before coming to Banan. Caravans of handicrafts, mana stones, weapons, and armor were also attacked by the bandits.”

Anastasia: “Uh-huh, is that so?—Kinda strange.”

Anastasia tilted her head sideways, muttering under her breath.

Ricardo: “There, that’s enough. Chuden, ya shouldn’t make a kid listen to weird things like that either.”

Ricardo had noticed her nearly inaudible muttering, but he prioritized sending her away more than making conversation with her. Anastasia looked upset, but Chuden reluctantly ordered her to leave.

Anastasia: “What’s with ya?! You’re bein’ mean, Uncle!”

Holding her unfinished cup of tea, Anastasia stuck her tongue out as she was forced out of the room. Ricardo closed the door after watching her leave, shrugging his shoulders.

Chuden: “Really, you’re so overprotective of her.”

Ricardo: “Say whatever ya want. Yeah right, I’m overprotective. That’s what I am, so I won’t let those bad guys come close to the city Ana-bo’s in. I’ll get on with it and finish the job.”

Refusing to be mocked, Ricardo bared his fangs as he glared at the map. Affected by the frightening, unnerving air being released from his enormous frame in close proximity, Chuden exhaled, his cheeks stiffening slightly.

Chuden: “The Hound is living up to his name, huh. It’s scary, but at the same time, I’m really glad you’re on our side.”

4

—A few days passed since the dramatic scene that had occurred at the Chuden Trading Company.

Inside a tavern located at the western end of Banan, a girl was leaning on the counter while babbling endlessly to the female owner.

???: “And then he left me here, after treatin’ me like a nuisance and all. Uncle was being unfair.”

????: “I see. I thought I haven’t seen his dog-like face for a while, so that’s what it was about… Is that why you came here to drink until you're dead drunk, Ana-chan?"

Anastasia: "Yep. I'm heartbroken right now, so cheer me up please. Oh, and I want a refill."

The girl being referred to as "Ana-chan", pestering the owner to refill her cup of milk was Anastasia, as you all know. Despite being bothered before opening her tavern, the owner handled the young girl's request with kindness and a touch of tenderness.

To the owner, Anastasia was an adorable employee who had been working at her tavern until quitting three months ago. The owner's positive feelings towards her were not as extensive as the ones she directed towards Ricardo, but she cherished her nonetheless.

Because of that, she could condone Anastasia visiting her even while she was making preparations to open her tavern, and she was also willing to listen to her complaints.

Tavern owner: "But, it's a little unexpected. I thought the relationship between you two was one-sided on Ricardo's end. To think that Ana-chan'd feel lonely while he's away…"

Anastasia: "That's 'cause Uncle's mine. I already made reservations for his collar, so he shouldn't go places where I can't reach him. He doesn't understand that, for cryin' out loud!"

Even in the present, a collar with a broken lock was fitted on Ricardo's wide neck.

The collar was an item that had restricted his movements during his days as a slave, and it was now a mere ornament, devoid of its function. Although he had cast off his status as a slave, he left the collar attached to his neck in order to do penance.

It was something Anastasia was tremendously unhappy about.

Someday, she would set a price befitting him, and then she would purchase him. After that, she had decided she would take off the collar with her own hands and toss it away. That was one of the many dreams that Anastasia wished to fulfill.

Anastasia: “Thanks to ya and Uncle, I’ve gotten real close to making my dream come true. That’s why I need to do my very best. I need to try harder more than ever.”

Tavern owner: “Your dream? What kind of dream is it? Can I hear it?”

Anastasia: “My dream’s to become as big as Hoshin-san! In order to do that, right now’s the time to lay low and be obedient, so I can save up power, knowledge, and money.”

“Mfuh,” she snorted as she spoke about her dreams, optimistic and vigorous, and almost making the owner chuckle at her.

There were many merchants who looked up to the legend of “Hoshin of the Wilderness”. If one were born in Kararagi as a young boy, then that person would dream of experiencing the same success story at least once in his life.

However, if it was a young girl she was close to with those dreams, then it was a special, different case.

Anastasia: “Come on! You’re laughin’ too? That part of ya’s the same as Uncle!”

Tavern owner: “Sorry! But, I think that dream of yours won’t necessarily end as just a dream. In fact, you were taken away by Chuden-san from that large company… Like that, if you became his wife, then you could at least become a higher-up of the city, right?”

Anastasia: “Me, becomin’ Chuden-san’s wife? That’s a little… no. No, no.”

Apparently, the girl cackling in a child-like manner wasn’t aware of how attractive her appearance was. Even though she was adorable enough as she was currently, the owner guessed she’d eventually grow into a beautiful woman.

When the time for that arrived, what the owner had just said wouldn’t be something to laugh at.

Tavern owner: “You know what, Ana-chan. You probably won’t believe me right now, but please remember this. You’re cuter than the average child, so there might be people out there who’re up to no good. If you feel like you’re in danger, make sure to talk to Ricardo or Chuden-san about it.”

Anastasia: “Ehh… but, that’s…”

Tavern owner: “Just remember it.”

Having been warned with a serious expression, Anastasia gave a nod to her words with, “Okaaay.” She guessed the owner was going to continue lecturing her, so she drank up the refill she had gotten for her previously empty cup of milk.

Anastasia: “Thanks for the drink. I still have work to do today, so I’m gonna head back.”

Placing three copper coins on the counter as payment for the milk, Anastasia jumped off her seat. The owner momentarily looked disappointed, but soon after, waved her hand at the back of the small girl who was leaving her tavern,

Tavern owner: “Ana-chan, come and show your face here durin’ your next day off, will ya?”

The last thing Anastasia heard from the owner before she left was her Kararagi dialect, which rarely came out of her.

Anastasia: “Hmm, I still have a lotta time… Uncle ain’t here, anyway. What should I do?”

Stretching out her body outside the tavern, Anastasia struggled to think about what to do with too much time on her hands.

Today was a holiday, a complete day of rest that took place once a week. She had said to the owner she still had work to do, but there was nothing on her schedule. Having said that, even if she went to the trading grounds to be of assistance, it was obvious the people there would greet her with disapproving looks.

Anastasia: “It’s bothersome even if I’m told to curry favor again… okay, I think I’ll just walk around while eatin’.”

Straightening herself with her head held high, Anastasia started strolling down the busy street, which had various people weaving in and out of it. Like this, ever since she had been able to carry her own wallet around with her, walking while eating had become one of her secret hobbies.

Back when she had been living in the back of the streets, stalls selling food out in the open had been her hunger's greatest enemy. Because she could enjoy those foods in the present day, she thought that she had acquired a good social standing compared to where she was previously.

Anastasia: “Hn…”

As she kept on walking while stuffing herself with the dekoyaki[7] she had bought, she felt a set of eyes staring at her.

Glancing at the direction of the stare, her eyes met with a grimy boy who was looking at her hands. She could easily imagine where he had come from. He was a hyena, living in the slums at the back of the city.

The people who rummaged through garbage dumps, desperate to obtain enough food to get by everyday, were referred to as hyenas. They did not have a house, and they did not have anything to eat either. Hyena was a term that was said to have existed since the era of Hoshin.

Anastasia had also been a hyena in the past. In her case, living in extreme poverty and surviving on what meager amount of food she could get her hands on had not been anyone else's business. And so, she had her own opinions and thoughts about the gaze the boy was directing at her. However—

Anastasia: “—That's just stupid.”

Anastasia crammed the rest of the dekoyaki into her mouth, and then showed off the empty container to the boy. Shaken by her domineering action, he turned around and scampered back into the alley in a hurry. How unambitious.

The attitude of waiting to be fed with one's mouth wide open like a nestling, expecting to be given things as charity, was what got on Anastasia's nerves the most. —In reality, she had attained her current position because it had been given to her.

Because she understood what it felt like, Anastasia's heart ached with pain, caused by her own actions, as well as her words that ended up tying her heart as if it was a piece of rope.

Ricardo was there for her, but he could possibly be—

Anastasia: "Ah—?!"

The moment she let her guard down while thinking about something else was taken advantage of, and a hand reached out and felt around the inside of her kimono from behind. She immediately flung off the person's arm, but it was too late. A small shadow pulled out her wallet from her kimono then sprung away, and she could see their back as they threw themselves back into the alley. Her wallet had been stolen. —And it had been taken from her so easily.

The one who got robbed was the fool. That way of thinking was something Anastasia knew too well, being a former hyena. Her usual self might have given up on taking it back, thinking her wallet had been stolen because she was not careful enough, but for this occasion, she was not in the mood to give in.

Anastasia: "Wait up!"

Chasing after the fleeing shadow, Anastasia also jumped into the alley. It had been a long time since she had set foot on the rough, low-quality roads at the back of the street, but it was a place where she had ran around for years, ever since she became old enough to become aware of her surroundings. Her body remembered how to navigate around the area.

She caught up with the thief soon enough, using her footsteps and voice to lead them where she wanted them to go. Cornering them into a dead end right after, the shadow that had run straight into her trap turned around to face her with a frustrated expression.

Anastasia: “There, gimme back my wallet. Between me and you, there’s a difference in how much experience we’ve got.”

Hyena boy: “Wh… what experience…? Wearing clean and pretty clothes like that… To a person like you, I won’t…!”

Even if she told him she had previously been in the same position he was currently in, he probably would not believe her. To add to that, it was meaningless to say such a thing.

Drawing closer to the hyena glaring at her, Anastasia made a move to take back her wallet from him. Along with her nutritional condition, she also had a grasp on the arts of self-defense, something she had learned from the trading company. Snatching back her wallet could be done effortlessly. However—

???: “—Right. How can I stand being criticized by a runt like you, talkin’ like ya know everythin’?”

Anastasia: “—kh?!”

Hearing a man’s voice from behind, Anastasia attempted to turn backwards in a panic.

Despite that, at a speed faster than her own, a harsh, sharp blow struck her upside the head, and she collapsed onto the ground. Both of her hands and feet felt weak, and her consciousness immediately started fading away, growing distant.

???: “Heh, ya did a great job. There, take that wallet, and hurry up and get the fuck out!”

Hearing the man’s voice, which gave the impression that he was quarreling with someone, Anastasia vaguely registered that she had been caught in a trap. Someone’s trap, by someone. She felt like she had heard the rowdy voice somewhere before.

—The man’s voice, sounding like he was wishing misfortune upon her, was a voice she felt like she had just recently heard at the trading grounds.

Meanwhile—the band of mercenaries that had Ricardo as their leader was having difficulties with the extermination of the brigands.

They did find a few of them inside the forest around the city, the place that had been marked down on the map, but the brigands' numbers were too small for them to be able to pull off their many raids on the caravans, which was the matter at hand. Upon being spotted by the group of a few dozen people, the brigands immediately scattered and fled in disarray. The possibility they would continue to commit thievery was low.

However, they accomplished nothing other than that, and not a trace of the problematic culprits of the caravan attacks could be found.

Ricardo: "So, they're also not in the cave that we found in the forest. Even though I didn't expect much because of how narrow that entrance was…"

Having received reports that brought zero advantages to them one after another, Ricardo's expression darkened as he added several more "x" marks on the map.

There was also the fact the mercenary group was not cooperating too well because it had been built in a hurry, but Ricardo believed it was his incompetence that did not let the group achieve the results they so desperately needed, even if they were doing their best. Though, the situation was so incomprehensible that it weighed on his mind even further.

Ricardo: "Is there a chance they went to a different place? It's making me concerned, since it overlaps with us settin' out to exterminate the brigands, though…"

Even the Senate responsible for the management of the city wasn't a tight-knit organization. It was impossible to say that it was certain there was nobody assisting the bandits, wishing for the downfall of the current members of the Senate. If things turned out to be like that, then the situation would go on to become more complicated.

However, compounding even more, Ricardo could not help but feel like the situation was wreathed by a different intention or purpose.

???: “Ricardo, a caravan departing from Banan is here. Please come and meet them, just in case.”

Ricardo: “Got it.”

The vice-captain called out to Ricardo, who was grumbling to himself inside the tent set up where they had established camp. Heading outside through the tent flap, he saw a caravan that took along several dozen wolf carriages, moving along the evening road in a large group.

They had more than a few sturdily-built guards with them, and it could be said they were a large caravan with quite a lot of people.

Ricardo: “Traveling over a long distance during this time of the day? Ya must be pretty busy.”

Caravan leader: “It’ll be a big problem if we worry about the dear, mighty sun, and end up missin’ an opportunity for business. Hoshin’s gonna sneer at us from the skies. I don’t want that to happen.”

Ricardo: “Well, I agree… Anyhow, ya got quite an intimidatin’ bunch of guards with’cha.”

Caravan leader: “Recently, we heard that it’s unsafe ‘round here. It’s not like ya guys got nothin’ to do with it too, right?”

The large man leading the caravan gave an exaggerated shrug of his shoulders. Ricardo didn’t have the privilege to respond to him directly. Instead of answering his question, he walked up to one of the caravan’s wolf carriages, pulling up the cloth which covered the luggage platform.

An iron cage was placed on the platform, and inside of it were the merchandise—multiple humans who had been pushed inside.

Ricardo: “…Slave trading, huh.”

Caravan leader: “Do ya detest it, mister? I guess it makes sense, since that collar of yours is evidence that ya used to be a slave.”

The man pointed his finger at Ricardo’s neck, saying that after he looked at the hole in the collar where the gem had been taken off. The existence of the gem, depending on its presence, displayed the corresponding status of collared slaves. In the case of Ricardo’s collar, it proved that he was a freed slave.

Ricardo: “Slave tradin’s also a legal business. If the agreements are upheld, then it’s unreasonable for me to meddle with it.”

Sniffing at the slaves, who possessed dull and lifeless eyes, Ricardo moved away from the wolf carriage. And then, he spoke to the representative of the caravan, telling him, “Ya can go ahead.”

Ricardo: “Sorry for preventin’ y’all from leaving. Be careful on the way out, even though we’re on alert. If ya get attacked by the rumored brigands, instead of havin’ all your possessions robbed, they’re also gonna rip off your bones as well as your flesh.”

Caravan leader: “That’s dreadful. We’ll be as careful as possible.”

“Scary. That’s real scary,” the man laughed, and then made his caravan start leaving the area. Ricardo separated himself from the mass of wolf carriages as well, giving orders to the mercenaries and telling them to monitor the group of merchants as they left.

???: “—Mister Wolf, you’ve got a nice expression on your face.”

A guard that was stationed at the tail end of the line of carriages spoke to Ricardo, his thick voice giving him an image of stickiness and humidity.

He was a robust man. He was also taller than Ricardo, who was already more than two meters tall, and although the width of the man’s physique was inferior, his experience in combat was probably comparable with Ricardo’s, since his body was covered in scars from wounds created with sharp blades, such as swords.

To add to that, what stood out the most on the man’s body were the four arms protruding from his shoulders—the proof that he was a part of the Multi-Armed Race.

Ricardo: “It’s rare to see a multi-armed person in Kararagi, instead of the Empire.”

Multi-armed man: “Ufufu, you’re right. It seems like most of the multi-armed people drifted away to Vollachia, but my ancestors carried on their legacy in Kararagi. Which means their descendant is me.”

Showing off his goggling, large eyes, and the weapons—broadaxes, that were held in each of his four arms, a grisly smile spread across the man’s face. Ricardo did not like the way he smiled, but what he disliked more was his attire.

An atmosphere of powerfulness surrounded him, and he was lightly equipped with leather armor that merely protected his vital spots. He was also wearing an item made out of fur, draped over his head, but Ricardo was not a fan of the fashion sense evoked by the piece of fur. It was obviously because—

Multi-armed man: “You’re curious? You’re curious about this. Ufufu, of course you are. Because this is the pelt of your fellow wolfin. It was hard, trying to neatly peel off the skin of the one I killed.”

Ricardo: “Looks like you’ve misunderstood, but I’m just a dog-human… a part of the kobold race. I only grew up to be this large because I ate a lil’ too much.”

Multi-armed man: “Ufufufu! I know. You wolfins are on the verge of going extinct, so you’re taught to say that. Since the whole race can lie to preserve their blood, isn’t it admirable, compared to the Oni clan that perished? Don’t you think so?”

The man bent over provocatively, peering up at Ricardo from below. However, Ricardo did not respond to his taunt. His arms remaining crossed, he jerked his chin towards the tail end of the wolf carriages, which were all driving further away from where the two were standing.

Ricardo: “You’re being left behind. Aren’tcha a guard? Stop being unnecessarily curious and get on with your work.”

Multi-armed man: “…That’s too bad. Ahh, that’s a bummer. Ufufufu, too bad, too bad.”

Saying that with a hint of persistence, the man withdrew his four broadaxes and returned them to his back, where he carried them. After that, he stared at Ricardo from head to toe with his goggling eyes, and then,

Diddley: “I’m Diddley. If we’re able to meet again somewhere, I want to talk about this pelt.”

Ricardo: “I see, Diddley. I’d rather not. If I see ya again, I’m gonna lop off that head of yours.”

Diddley: “Ufufufufufu!”

Diddley nodded his head over and over again at Ricardo’s response, acting as if things had gone exactly as he wanted. He then chased after the wolf carriages with a bounce in his step, moving away into the distance in a well-behaved manner.

Watching him leave until he was gone with a wary eye, Ricardo cracked his neck, giving off a loud pop as he did.

Vice-captain: “Those were a creepy bunch.”

Ricardo: “Slave traders’re just like that… Oh, there was one guy so weird that I didn’t wanna take the time to separate him from the rest. He called himself Diddley. Do ya know him?”

Vice-captain: “I don’t know, but someone might. I guess I should ask around.”

Ricardo: “It’s not related to the extermination of the bandits, but… Well, it’s just out of curiosity. Idiots who miss the point like that guy ain’t good for children’s education, so I’ll kill him if I see him durin’ a day off.”

The vice-captain next to him widened his eyes as Ricardo muttered irritatedly. And then, he burst out into laughter.

Ricardo: “What’s that laugh for?”

Vice-captain: “I just thought that you’ve changed. These days, it’s pretty well-known between fellow mercenaries. That the Hound’s fallen deeply in love with a girl who’s still very young.”

Ricardo: “Everyone’s been tellin’ me that… Ya guys must be really bored.”

Nudging the vice-captain who was talking nonsense, Ricardo let the dull thuds of his footsteps be heard as he returned to his tent.

Once again, they were going to focus on digging out and exposing the brigands’ hideout. If they continued like this, achieving nothing, then it wouldn’t be strange to have Chuden or someone at a similar position give them snide remarks, or even tell them to hurry up.

Ricardo: “And, Ana-bo’d sulk if I left her alone for too long.”

Saying that out loud, Ricardo remembered that he had just been laughed at by the vice-captain, feeling a mixture of surprise and exasperation.

It could not be helped, even if a rumor like that was circulating around. Him being “deeply in love” was a misunderstanding, but he himself acknowledged the fact that he cared for her, and also the fact he worried about her. Because of that,

Ricardo: “It’s nice if she were at peace, without any eventful things happenin’.”

Before ducking under the tent flap, Ricardo murmured as he gazed at the sinking sunset.

The sky was light-purple, with the colors of dusk and sunset intermingling. The same, beautiful color as the hair of the girl that came to his mind.

—With Ricardo's wish in vain, Anastasia was currently encountering the largest predicament she had ever come across in her whole life.

Anastasia: "Nn, nnnh,"

Her mouth was gagged, and her hands and feet were tied firmly. Unable to even raise her body from the floor, she was in a state of imprisonment, like a perfect example of being kidnapped.

This is bad, this is really bad, Anastasia cried out as she twisted her body around with all her might.

Right after she had woken up, Anastasia had realized that she was in an abnormal situation. It took only a moment for her to assess the situation, and she also remembered clearly what had transpired before she lost her consciousness. Because of that, Anastasia had been exceptional at keeping her composure for a person who had just been captured. Although, whether it would lead her to breaking out of her crisis or not, was a different question altogether.

—She remembered the person that had struck her, just before she had been knocked out.

He had the voice of the man who had attempted to commit thievery at the trading grounds a few days prior. His attempt had been seen through by Anastasia, and he was the person who had been knocked down onto the ground by Ricardo. After that, she had delivered a slap to his face as he kept directing resentful complaints towards her, and the applause she was showered with was fresh in her memory. —She figured the man bore a grudge against her for that reason, and it was why she was having such a terrible time.

Anastasia: "If 'hats so, ten't 'hat ol guy's…"

Severe punishments were delivered against thieves. That was the Kararagian Style. Following it, the man should have received the natural punishment, which involved losing his dominant arm, at the very least. If he was trying to get his revenge on Anastasia, even after what he had pulled, then his tenacity was splendid. Though, she wanted to tell him to be more passionate about something other than this.

Anastasia: "…"

As she pursued Ricardo's responsibility for the situation, Anastasia finally regained her calmness.

Anyhow, even if she continued making a racket, it was probably fruitless. She could see no windows in the room, and she could not imagine her voice reaching outside. Her captor would not confine her in a place where her clamors could be heard outside, in the first place.

Judging from the way her voice echoed, the room was not that wide. The floor she was lying down on was cold and hard, made out of stone—not built out of stone. A shed had been erected right on top of a rocky tract. She could not imagine the ground having been leveled either, leading her to think her captor had done a poor job, which could be described as sloppy in many ways.

—What was the objective of the man who had captured her?

Finishing her quick examination of the room, Anastasia's thoughts wandered to the objective of her opponent.

If it were the thief from earlier, then his motive would most definitely be revenge. The issue at hand was the details of his revenge. Having come this far, he would not release her after just giving her a good scare, most likely. Killing her after teaching her a lesson… was not a far-fetched guess, were the thief a shallow, hot-tempered person.

Anastasia: "'ell, prolly a 'lave."

Selling her off to slave traders was the choice with the highest possibility of happening.

In the first place, slave trading was not particularly rare around Banan, or even in the Kararagi City States as a whole. Laborers were valuable assets as sources of manpower, and they were in demand for all sorts of tasks, such as servants and maintenance workers of the highways.

Back when Anastasia used to live in the slums, nearly being caught by slave traders was not uncommon. Even considering Banan's city laws, the enslavement of hyenas in the slums were overlooked. Because of that, there was an unspoken agreement between the slave traders about keeping one's hands off clean-looking children, but…

Anastasia: "I 'crewed uph."

Once she had gone ahead and made a mistake, there was no way to justify it.

The Chuden Trading Company was her sponsor, and she also had Ricardo with her to begin with. Should he ever hear that she had been trafficked by a slave trader, he would definitely bare his fangs at the man who had done so.

She was not getting ahead of herself because it was an objective truth. —Well, perhaps she was being somewhat arrogant.

???: "I'm telling the truth! She's a first-class article. You guys will understand if you take a look!"

Just as Anastasia came to that conclusion, out of the blue, someone's voice drew near.

His harsh voice cracking, a scrawny man entered the dark room. Anastasia remembered his face and the sound of his voice, identifying him as the thief from back at the trading grounds.

Following the man, two more men walked into the room. Both of them had a large build, and comparing them to the skinny man, the difference between them could be put as that between a withered branch and the trunk of a giant tree.

???: "We ain't doubtin' ya. It's just that people make mistakes when they get cornered."

Thief: "Do, do you really mean it? Why would I do something so reckless? L-Look, it's that one…"

Intimidated by one of the large men, the thief seemed to be growing agitated. Seeing him point at her with a trembling finger, Anastasia immediately acted as if she had been unconscious for the whole time.

A presence peered at the “unconscious” Anastasia. And then,

???: “Huh, she’s a real fine one. She’s a pretty girl, and she’ll grow to be super beautiful. This ain’t just a win, this is a huge win.”

Anastasia: “—uh,”

Anastasia let out a tiny cry as she was forced to sit up, her head being grabbed off the ground. However, the man did not notice that she was awake, resuming his inspection of her while handling her without care.

Judging from the flow of the conversation, this man was a slave trader. Having been told she was a “fine one”, Anastasia recalled what the tavern owner had said to her in her former workplace. She was wrong to have paid no heed to her words.

If she could, she wanted an opportunity to meet her and apologize directly to her, but…

Thief: “Th-Then… it’s a deal, right? Right?”

???: “Ya said ya wanted to join our tradin’ company, and promised to bring a souvenir. Yeah, you’re able to bring such a fine article. You’re a great help to us.”

Thief: “Then…!”

???: “Bu~t, that’d only apply if this girl were a stray dog, without any leashes from anywhere attached to her.”

Thief: “—Eh,”

Immediately after he emitted a voice, sounding like he had caught his breath, there was a violent sound, and something crashed into the wall. Soon, Anastasia heard a pained scream and the noise caused by someone writhing in agony, comprehending that the thief had been struck by a fist.

It was punishment for arbitrarily overstepping the unspoken agreement, one that was heeded by human traffickers, as a mere amateur.

Thief: “Aah! Aaaah! It hurts… it huuurts! Gweh!”

???: “Quit screechin’ and quiet down. The sleeping child’s gonna wake up and be scared.”

As Anastasia was let go, she sensed the trafficker turn around. Upon cracking open her eyes to assess the situation, she saw the thief lying down on the ground, said trafficker gazing down at him. He dug the heel of his foot into the thief’s stomach, eliciting a cry of pain.

Trafficker: “Geddit? Even we traffickers have a set of rules we gotta follow. We’re able to run our business, only because the city laws overlook it. Can a guy who’s clueless ‘bout them work with us? Hey, whaddya think?”

Thief: “Gah, fh… I… I’m so, I’m sorry…!”

Pressed against the earth by the man’s weight, what sounded like creaking bones reached Anastasia’s ears as well. The thief pleaded for his life, blood trickling out of his mouth. The trafficker was crouching down beside him, bringing his face closer to him.

Trafficker: “Ya learned a lot from this. Good for you. From now on, we’ll train ya ‘round these areas with hands-on guidance, so ya can rest easy.”

Thief: “Th, thank y…”

Thinking he had been forgiven, the thief was about to express his thanks, but he was forced to stop midway.

The clack of a metallic sound, and the thief’s “Eh?” overlapped. The shivering thief touched his own neck with a finger, his face sinking with despair from the chilly, solid sensation.

Thief: “Wh…why… did you put a slave’s collar on me…?”

Trafficker: “I told ya you’ll get hands-on guidance, right? Becomin’ a slave’s the fastest way to learn about the rules surroundin’ slaves. You’re a wuss, but you’re young. You’ll survive if you’re fortunate ‘nough.”

Thief: “That’s not what you sai—bgeh!”

Sent flying with a kick to the side of his face, the thief was knocked unconscious, his eyes rolling into the back of his head. After making sure he was out cold, the trafficker fastened handcuffs on him, and threw him away on the floor.

Trafficker: “Jeez, this is why amateurs pull some scary shit. Ahh, though, we were lucky to obtain a first-class article. The rule breaker got declassed to a slave, too. I’m glad none of us suffered any losses.”

???: “But, I think it’s a large problem for these two new slaves.”

The other man, who had been silent for the whole time, responded thickly to the trafficker’s comment. The trafficker cocked his head with an, “Ahh…” towards the man’s reply, directing his gaze at Anastasia. And then,

Trafficker: “Sorry, but I don’t consider slaves as people. These’re products, same stuff like meat ‘n fish.”

Saying that, the trafficker exited the shack, bringing along the large man accompanying him. The door was locked from the outside once again, and the two presences left the area.

Inside the shack, with the darkness and silence returning, Anastasia let out the breath she had been holding the entire time. Her heart pounded and she was drenched in cold sweat. It was good that they had not noticed it, but…

Anastasia: “Though…”

She had caught the eye of a trafficker who acted very much like a real trafficker.

It seemed like the thief had also been turned into a product, but she could not bring herself to think he had deserved it.

Because, whether retribution was carried out sooner or later, did not serve any purpose to Anastasia.

—A few hours had passed, and Anastasia judged that it was night-time based on her intuition.

In the meantime, she had been left lying on the cold floor, tormented by the urge to roll over multiple times, but she had to bear with it every time. It was because,

Thief: “Why do I have to go through such a… Dammit, dammit…”

The thief had regained his consciousness, perpetually mumbling and whining, unable to accept reality.

If he realized Anastasia had been awake, then there was no mistake he would shower her with a storm of profanity. So, she had to endure the impulse to turn over, in order to prevent herself from causing any unnecessary noise.

Anyway, being dissatisfied with the comfort of the hard ground was something she would have never thought of in the past. Anastasia did not think of it as becoming weak due to her living a relaxed, enjoyable life. Nothing was bad about it. Rather, she was slightly proud of herself.

If one lived like a human being, then of course they would not be able to bear living like a non-human. No one should be a pushover and behave submissively at the bottom of the ladder. Dreams must remain big and high up in the sky.

Thief: “Oi, you’re actually awake, right? Hey, you’re awake, right?”

As if he had ran out of things to say in his monologue, the thief dragged himself towards Anastasia. Hearing the tone of his voice and the feelings of resentment deep in his bones, it was clear that the man was intending to inflict harm upon her. His hand grabbed the cloth tied around her mouth, roughly taking it off.

Anastasia: "…I'm awake. You've been noisy for some time."

Thief: "Y-You, you're awake, you're awake! You… youuuu… how dare…!"

Anastasia: "Just sayin', but I don't recommend hurtin' me. Ya understand my product value as well, don't ya? That trafficker might as well get rid of ya for real next time."

Thief: "Uh… guh, fguh,"

Just by hearing those three words, "get rid of", the thief immediately withdrew his fury. The pain of being beaten and kicked seemed to have recurred to his mind, and he grew discouraged, holding his head in his hands.

Anastasia: "Where's this place?"

Thief: "…"

Anastasia: "Don't ya have somethin' that might come in handy?"

Thief: "…"

It was no use, the "conversation" was not going anywhere.

Deeming it useless to talk to the man who appeared emotionally and mentally drained, Anastasia sat up slowly. She twisted around her body, stiff from being unable to sleep well, and started crawling over to the door of the shack.

Thief: "It's pointless."

Ignoring the thief's pessimistic words, Anastasia somehow managed to stand up whilst leaning against the wall. After that, she played around with what looked like the handle of the door, but it showed no signs of opening. If so, should she remove the rope around her wrists by rubbing them against the ground?

It happened when she thought of that.

???: "Sneak, sneak… Hmm, does it feel like someone's in there?"

Anastasia: “—?!”

The moment before she began struggling in vain, she heard a voice coming from the other side of the door. Frankly, it sounded way too nonchalant, but it was enough for Anastasia to think the voice to be unrelated to the traffickers.

Anastasia: “Here! I’m inside! I got captured!”

???: “Ooh, someone’s in there! Wow~! It’s just as Hetaro said! Got it~!”

Saying that, the presence outside distanced itself from the door by a tiny bit. Anastasia wondered what they were going to do, but she instantly came to realize the reason, and hurriedly threw herself towards the side of the door. The very next moment,

???: “Oryah~! Mimi go boom!”

Simultaneously with the shout, a tackle accompanied by a bluish-white light blew off the door into the shack. The hinges burst apart, and the wooden door ricocheted around the room loudly.

???: “Alright, it’s a success! Mimi is awesome~! Hum! Hum!”

Anastasia: “…”

Anastasia was rendered speechless by the excessively violent method that had been carried out. However, taking no notice of what she thought of it, the silhouette standing at the doorless entrance was displaying a dance of joy, seemingly having a great time.

The silhouette was too tiny. Their height was only around half of Anastasia’s, who was already on the smaller side for her age. Their physical appearance, lit by the moonlight was not even that of a human. They were a cat, and if one were to speak of a bipedal, cat-faced race, that would be no other than a cat-human.

Cat girl: “Ooh, you’re tied up. Tied up! Wait a lil’ bit~!”

The cat girl giggled innocently, walking over to Anastasia, who was unable to move due to being restrained, to remove her bindings. “Clink!” She exclaimed, showing off her claws, and then used them to sever Anastasia’s restraints.

Anastasia: “Uhm… Thank you?”

Cat girl: “Yup, ‘thanks’ is important~! If you’re able to say it then well done. Mimi also gets told by Hetaro and Tivey to not forget it~. You’re a good girl. Good girl, good girl.”

Anastasia: “S, stop, it’s a bit embarrassin’. Anyway, who’re ya?”

The orange-haired cat girl patted Anastasia’s head without any hesitation. When Anastasia kept her distance and asked her a question, she blinked her large eyes, and,

Cat girl: “Fufu~, glad you asked about that~. Umm, Mimi is a chivalrio thief! Chivalrio!”

Anastasia: “Chivalrio what…?”

Although the girl declared it triumphantly, placing a hand on her hip, Anastasia had no clue about what she was saying. Was it a name? No, if so, why would she be calling herself “Mimi”?

???: “Onee-chan, it’s ‘chivalrous’, not ‘chivalrio’.”

However, Anastasia’s doubts were answered from a different direction. She heard the sound of a calmer voice from the entrance of the shack, the same the girl had entered from earlier. There, making an appearance and peeking inside, was a petite cat-human, just as Anastasia had expected. Even including physical differences within a race, he was identical to the girl.

???: “We are sorry for confusing you. I’m Hetaro, and this is Mimi-onee-chan. For now, please just follow us.”

Unlike Mimi, her little brother—Hetaro seemed quite rational, bowing to Anastasia. Just like how she had acted a moment ago, Mimi looked proud of herself, her head held high beside him.

Their identities were surrounded by mystery, but Anastasia understood that they meant no harm. If so, Anastasia: “From Hoshin’s sayings! ‘Decisiveness is the mightiest sword!’ All right, I’ll follow ya.”

—Women should be courageous, and men should be charming.

Two intruders had suddenly entered, followed up by their astonishing declaration of being “chivalrous thieves”, but Anastasia decided to believe them. It was mostly because of her ability to judge the characters of people, something she had fostered within her short life, that she had decided that the two children were not trying to be evildoers.

Hetaro: “Come on, you too! Let’s go together!”

Not only did Hetaro invite Anastasia, who had displayed her will to escape, on their breakout, but he also tried to bring the thief with him. However, the thief directed a frightened look towards the children.

Thief: “Do-Don’t say anything stupid! If I ran into you guys… and get found out, they’ll kill me! I-I’m having none of this. Dy… dying is something I absolutely don’t…!”

Hetaro: “That can’t be…”

Anastasia: “It’s useless. Ya can’t help him no matter what ya say. —Only those who’re determined to walk down their own path, are able to live an honest life.”

She stopped Hetaro, who was persistently struggling to convince the thief, and walked out of the shack. Even after that, Hetaro looked like he was unable to decide what to do, but Mimi clapped his shoulder.

Mimi: “Hmm, it’s disappointing~! But it can’t be helped. We can only save the people who reach out their hands because they want to be saved~.”

Unexpectedly, Mimi had reached the same conclusion as Anastasia, trying to pull Hetaro towards them by grabbing his hand. Prompted by his sister’s words, he finally gave up on the thief.

Anastasia: “Which part of the city’s this?”

Hetaro: “We’re at the edge of the trash heap. Those traffickers always use this place, and…”

Mimi: “We discovered it by ourselves! It’s time for justice~!”

“Trash heap” was a common name for the disposal site meant for burying dirt and scrap under the ground. Because it was a place people preferred not to approach, nor to linger around for long, it was the most optimal choice as a hideout for traffickers.

Gazing up at the moon, Anastasia blew out a small sigh, then searched for the route that would bring her back to the streets.

There was quite the distance between this empty place and the populated slums. Anastasia was confident in how far she could walk to a degree, but comparing herself to Mimi and Hetaro, she would not be able to catch up to them. Even if she shouted for help, she would only attract slave traders. The best option was to continue running while making little noise, like this—

???: “That’s no go~od. Tricking us and trying to run away.”

However, her wish in vain, the voice called to her from above.

Anastasia: “—hk!”

When Anastasia immediately stopped in her tracks, a giant man landed in front of her with a heavy thud on the ground. And then, her breath caught in her throat as she saw the man’s bizarre frame.

The hide of an animal draped over his head, the large man was a member of the Multi-Armed Race, four arms protruding from his shoulders.

The voice of the man with goggling eyes was the thick, sticky voice she had heard earlier in the shack. He was the other man who had been standing behind the trafficker.

Multi-armed man: “It’s good you’re energetic, since you’re going to be a slave. It’s wonderful that you’re energetic. But, being too energetic isn't good. Let's calm down, shall we?"

Anastasia: "—h,"

As the man said that, bringing his face closer to her, a scream almost tore itself out of her throat.

Strictly speaking, it was not the man who incited her fear himself. It was the foreign item she witnessed in his hand.

Multi-armed man: "Ah, this? I surprised you, didn't I? Sorry, sorry. But, you see? This guy saw you guys off while you all escaped, right? He really was clueless on how things were done, watching a slave in the same room run away and doing nothing."

While laughing, the man shook the item dangling from his hand—the thief's head. Decapitated with a terrified expression plastered on his face, could he not have understood the reason of his death until the very end?

The man haphazardly tossed away the severed head, which still had blood dripping from the neck. And then, those bloodstained hands of his reached out towards Anastasia's neck—

???: "Pre-emptive strike!!"

Multi-armed man: "Whoa."

Right as Anastasia was about to be captured, Mimi drilled a glowing kick into the man. He effortlessly caught it with his bottom left arm, and grabbed her body with his upper left arm as well.

Mimi: "Mm?! Wha? A lot of hands? Not fair!"

Multi-armed man: "Yes, it's not fair. Sorry for that. The more arms you have, the stronger you are. Isn't that obvious?"

Hetaro: "Let go of onee-chan!"

Unlike Mimi, who was being optimistic and carefree despite being caught, Hetaro quickly ran to get behind the man.

However, the man evaded him as if he had a pair of eyes on his back, and since Hetaro had nowhere to run, he could not escape from the two right arms of the man as a result.

Mimi: “Not fair! Not fair!”

Hetaro: “Mh…! Sorry, onee-chan, I’m sorry…”

Mimi, who was thrashing around, and Hetaro, who was painfully aware of their difference in strength. The man restrained them with his four arms, his eyes filled with enjoyment, moving to look at Anastasia.

It was as if he were saying, “You might be able to run away right now, because my hands are full.”

Anastasia: “Only a person like the guy who died earlier would believe an offer that’s too good to be true.”

Multi-armed man: “I guess that’s how it goes. Being clever is going to knock your feet from right under you in some cases. I obtained two cat-humans who look like they’d be useful to replace the idiot… You’d call this being very fortunate.”

The man laughed in his sticky voice, and Anastasia sensed another trafficker approach her from behind. She was restrained yet again, commodified for good this time.

So, before she was gagged yet again—.

Anastasia: “Just remember one thing.”

Multi-armed man: “Hmm?”

Anastasia: “If ya lay your hands on me, a scary, scary wolf’ll come. —I’m rather unlovable, too.”

Hearing Anastasia’s declaration of her hostility, the man’s shoulders shook with happiness.

Multi-armed man: “Ufufufu! Nice, that’s very nice. —Then, I guess I’ll be looking forward to it.”

He did not take it as Anastasia being unwilling to admit defeat. Therefore, the game between them had been established.

—She would not play a game in which she had lost before it even started.

Even if the trafficker grabbed her shoulder roughly, and she was dragged away with a gag in her mouth, the fighting spirit continued to burn in Anastasia's eyes, refusing to die out.

7

Contained within the legend of "Hoshin of the Wilderness", was the story of the bloodless liberation of a stronghold.

According to it, Hoshin entered the enemy's stronghold on his own, gained the devotion of the stronghold's master with his eloquence alone, convinced them to open their robust gates, and welcomed them as an ally.

Multiple theories existed regarding the method he had used to enter the stronghold.

Shamelessly paying a visit by walking up to the front gates, burying himself inside the cargo brought into the fort, and there was even a theory that stated he had played dead to take them by surprise.

However, no matter how divided the opinions concerning his entry were, the manner in which they were tied to his exit was the same in every single one of those theories.

—Hoshin liberated the stronghold without causing any bloodshed, saved the minor power, Kararagi, and his legend began.

From that point onwards, Hoshin used his first achievement as a foothold, jumping into the ongoing battles between countries vying for supremacy. And then, it would eventually lead him to build up the history—the birth of the Kararagi City States.

Remembering such an anecdote, Anastasia was impressed by how exceptional legendary heroes were.

How gallant did he have to be, and how aware of his chances of success did he have to be, in order to set foot in enemy territory all by himself? It was well-known that Hoshin had been inexperienced in the arts of combat, and the only weapon he had was his tongue. That part of him was similar to herself.

Making it so that the only difference between them… was probably how Hoshin did not experience having a slave's collar fitted around his neck, because he never blundered in a way that would happen to him.

Anastasia: "…"

Feeling the cold, hard sensation of the collar against her skin, Anastasia sighed, recognizing the difference in the capabilities between a hero and herself.

She was not in the mood to joke that she now sported matching collars with Ricardo, but the existence of the collar gave her a sense of relief to an extent. It was because she knew her opponents were legitimate slave traders.

People might wonder if the words legitimate or illegitimate even applied to the trafficking of slaves, but there was quite the disparity between the two.

The difference could be distinguished by whether they used slave collars or not. The collar Anastasia wore was one kind among the tools referred to as meteors, connected to the owner's gate through the gem of the collar. Because of that, the owner only had to think of it in their head to cause pain to slaves as punishment, and in many cases, slave traders used these meteors to manage and maintain their slaves.

Without these meteors, slave traders would have to resort to violence to discipline their slaves. In that case, the possibility of reducing the slaves to defective products could not be avoided, so the more legitimate a trafficker was, the more they would handle their slaves carefully.

That was why the existence of the collar evidenced that the slave traders had some decency—she did not have to worry about being killed, at the very least. It was the primary source of Anastasia's relief, and the reason why she could carry on thinking.

???: "Nn~! Mnn~!"

And, there was one… no, there were two more things that provided her with moral support.

It was the existence of the two little cat-humans, who had the same collar fastened around their necks, and who had been trapped inside the same shack with her.

Mimi: "Nnnn~! Mnnnn~!"

With her endless amount of energy, Mimi continued to struggle in an attempt to free herself of her bindings for hours on end. Hetaro was lying down beside her in silence, but he wasn't curled up out of resignation.

Hetaro: "…"

The lack of noise from him was not because he was pessimistic, but because he was contemplating how breaking out of this situation would be achieved. Without a single trace of submission nor compromise within them, the look in his eyes said he was biding his time, the same as Anastasia.

Hetaro was vigilantly looking for an opportunity he could seize, Mimi was full of vigor, and both of them were not remotely close to giving up.

With that as the case, Anastasia had hope. A gigantic, shaggy source of hope.

Anastasia: "'omehow, gotta tell 'ncle…"

She had to pass down her location and her predicament to Ricardo.

It was the only thing Anastasia could do, as a method to liberate this stronghold of the slave traders.

???: “—Hm.”

Like that, the trafficker from before made an appearance in front of the three children, who were desperately searching for a way to escape.

???: “I’ve already heard from Diddley, but two cat-humans in exchange for an idiot is an excellent deal.”

Opening the door and surveying the room was a well-dressed man who let out a snort.

Anastasia remembered seeing him on the previous night, guessing that he was the head of the slave traders. The day before, she had not been able to see his face from the front, but she could see it today, his accessory-covered attire in full view as well.

The leader had brought several bodyguards with him, and among them was the four-armed man. Upon noticing Anastasia’s stare, he gave her a twisted smile, waving his hand.

The head of the traffickers, three bodyguards, and one berserker. It seemed grandiose for a thorough inspection of their products.

Leader: “What, I heard y’all were causin’ mischief yesterday. I’m a faint-hearted man. Thanks to my nature, our business is goin’ rather well… Oi.”

Politely, he answered to Anastasia’s unspoken observations. After he nodded, the bodyguards took the children’s chains off the wall, but it was not as if they were about to be freed.

Leader: “Time to repack the boxes. The business over at Banan’ll try out another place soon, too.”

Tugging at Anastasia’s chains roughly, the leader told her she would be shipped out, in a roundabout way. She was taken outside of the room, and she was also about to be placed in the luggage platform on the outer part of the wolf carriage.

However, it happened in the middle of being brought onto the carriage.

Mimi: “Mgghh!”

Bodyguard: “Wha… hey! Wait!”

Mimi began going on a rampage after she had been taken outside just like Anastasia had been, shaking off the bodyguard’s arm. She hopped off the ground, trying to pounce onto the leader of the traffickers. Was it instinct that made her target the head of the group, rather than any tangible strategy? The choice in itself proved correct, as the leader’s cheeks stiffened for a moment.

Multi-armed man: “You were already told causing mischief isn’t good~.”

However, Mimi’s revenge was brought to a halt midway. The huge, four-armed man barged in between her and the leader, bashing her with two of his arms. She was slammed against the ground, unable to soften her landing and bouncing across the earth.

Mimi: “Gyaa!”

Leader: “Ah, hey, Diddley! Don’t overdo it! It’ll be bad if she gets damaged!”

Looking at Mimi, sprawled out on the ground, the leader slapped the giant man on the back. The man—Diddley, he was called, reacted to his words by shrugging his shoulders and stepping backwards.

Leader: “Sorry for that, lil’ kid. Even so, ya shouldn’t do that. We don’t wanna go out of our way to damage our goods. If ya behave well, then we won’t have to treat ya like this.”

Mimi: “Oh~, I won’t be fooled, bad guy!”

Mimi retorted at the leader, who crouched down to speak to her in a disgustingly sweet voice. The punches’ impact had dislodged her gag, and she demonstrated her indomitable spirit with her mouth, now freed from the cloth.

Mimi: “Misdeeds will make you have a bad time! Even if we get caught, Hetaro and Tivey shall stand in your way~!”

Leader: “You’re an energetic girl, even after gettin’ punched in the face… It’ll be worth disciplinin’ ya.”

Mimi: “Wh… mih, gyaah!”

While she was speaking, every hair on Mimi’s body stood up, and she cried out at the top of her lungs. Her eyes widened as she screamed. The cause was the slave’s collar. The leader had commanded it to torment her.

Hetaro: “—hk!”

Seeing his elder sister writhing in pain, Hetaro grimaced as if he were experiencing the same torture. Eventually, once Mimi had been weakened enough, the leader of the slave traders put the gag back in her mouth and then stood up.

Leader: “What’re ya doin’, almost lettin’ her escape, ya dunce? If ya don’t pull yourself together… Do ya wanna play with the collar too? The motivation you’re lacking’ll return to ya pretty fast, won’t it?”

Bodyguard: “I-I’m sorry! I won’t do it again!—hk,”

The bodyguard who had messed up got his face’s side slapped. He then repositioned the unconscious Mimi in his arm. Anastasia, watching the sequence of events, had already realized that they had been captured by a truly troublesome bunch.

They were organized, ambitious, and capable to top it all off. She was getting fed up with them.

Leader: “Well, if ya try to run, you’ll be put through a painful, painful experience like what just happened. I’m sure ya learned your lesson, so… hey, let’s go out. Ya better bid farewell to your hometown.”

Hearing the leader speak with a contemptful edge in his voice, Anastasia gave a quick observation of her surroundings. No matter where she looked, the area was filled with scrap. It was certainly the trash heap, indeed. She was not impressed one bit.

Leader: “Ya look like ya had enough of sayin’ goodbye to your hometown. Let’s go, then… hey hey, wait a minute.”

As Anastasia stared at the ground, the leader pushed her from behind, trying to shove her into the carriage. Pressed by the momentum of the shove, she lost her balance and fell to the ground.

Leader: “What, I didn’t hit’cha that hard. That ain’t good, ya need to live strong.”

One of his bodyguards pulled Anastasia to her feet after she fell forward. She shook her head while being forced to stand back up, hiding her clenched fist from their field of view.

Like that, she tried to walk towards the wolf carriage, pretending to look like nothing had ever happened—

Anastasia: “…hk,”

Seized by cold fear, Anastasia raised her head. Standing in front of her and looking down at her was Diddley, his goggling eyes opened wide.

Feeling those eyes peer into her, a chill ran down her spine. He saw me, she thought, feeling the skin under her collar itch from dread.

She would be punished with the collar, just like Mimi. —However, her predictions were, —Rejected by Diddley, who loosened his lips, laughing in a subdued voice.

Diddley: “—Ufufufu.”

He did not bring up anything about her actions, returning to being cautious of their surroundings like the other bodyguards. Anastasia was dumbfounded by it, but she was pushed from behind once again, stepping onto the platform of the wolf carriage.

The luggage platform was curtained inside, having been tampered to make sure its contents could not be seen from outside. It was probably a plan to separate illegal slaves from those that conformed to the rules and agreements of slave trading. Of course, Anastasia and the two cat-humans had been made slaves in a way that violated the rules, and the slave traders would not be able to get away with it if they were ever exposed.

Anastasia: "…"

Unlike the shack, the platform had a window. The area was cramped as a result of all the alterations, and the three kids were pressed against each other; it could almost be described as "being packed inside a box".

Leader: "Ya better be on your best behavior in here. Havin' to bully children pains my heart, after all."

Pointing at his own neck, the leader threatened them with the fear of the collar, lowering the cloth that covered the platform. Right before the sight of the trafficker was hidden by the fabric, Anastasia caught a glimpse of Diddley's smile.

It was horrifying, feeling as if he had seen through her scheme, but she had no idea of what went through his mind.

Hetaro: "Onee-chan, onee-chan…"

Mimi: "Mhkyu~…"

Inside the confined space—box, Hetaro was worried for the unconscious Mimi. She had not come to her senses yet, but her life was not in any particular danger. The effect of the collar was of that sort. Moreover—

Anastasia: "Ya 'ook it off…?"

Hetaro's gag was out of his mouth. When Anastasia tilted her head out of confusion, he noticed and showed her his sharp front teeth, clacking them together.

Hetaro: "Our teeth are more sturdy than most people's. I'll teach onee-chan too after she wakes… uhh…"

He hesitated, having imagined Mimi starting to make a racket the moment her mouth was freed. He could already see her raising hell in her loudest voice, and then getting knocked out by her collar again.

Not only were their hands and feet bound together, but they also had the collar around their necks. Hetaro's issue must be the way to deal with those. However, Anastasia had various, effective solutions for what to do.

Anastasia: "'irst… pwah. We should compare and adjust the information we have at hand."

Hetaro: "—How…"

Hetaro directed his surprise towards Anastasia, who had taken off her gag by bringing her hands to the back of her head. She exposed the palms of her shackled hands so that he could see what she was holding. In her hands, was a metal shard she had secretly snatched when she had fallen over, before being placed on the wolf carriage.

Anastasia: "When I picked it up after pretendin' to trip, I was scared for a second, thinkin' I got seen."

She was unsure of the true intentions of Diddley, who had overlooked it. However, it was true that she had been saved by his caprice.

The conditions were strict, but they had been fulfilled. Mimi and her sibling, Anastasia herself, and the outside world she was able to see from the luggage platform. The slave traders' leader and their appearances, the map of the surrounding area of the city that was fresh in her memory, and Ricardo—.

—If Anastasia could connect all of them together, then she would be able to "liberate the stronghold".

Anastasia: "Hey, I have somethin' to ask ya, but… doesn't the wound on your cheek hurt?"

Hetaro's expression stiffened in response to her question.

Feeling that his reaction met her expectations, an adorable, cunning smile spread across her face.

8

Vice-captain: “Ricardo, I discovered it while asking around, but it seems like that Diddley guy is quite nutty.”

The vice-captain reported his findings, returning to the tent, while Ricardo was glaring at the map inside. Sitting on a chair far too small for his giant physique, Ricardo made a frustrated face at the results of the vice-captain’s investigation, gnashing his fangs together.

Ricardo: “Anyone’d know that by takin’ one look at the Skin Wearer.”

Vice-captain: “Whoa, Skin Wearer describes him pretty well. Well, it’s not a bad name to call him. He’s practically infamous for skinning his opponents once he kills them.”

Ricardo: “He has a damn terrible hobby, is what I think, though…”

Recalling the four-armed man, Ricardo wrinkled his nose out of disgust.

He would be alright with it if the man only wore the hide of animals, but in reality, the man wore the skin of demi-humans he had killed. Ricardo did not think the man would be satisfied with only having one or two of those “collectibles”. Therefore, he probably had a countless number of skins, enough to swap them out depending on his mood or the weather.

Vice-captain: “He apparently comes from further north, but he recently came here to work and gain publicity. Right now, was it the… Razcrew Trading Company that we just met? It seems like he’s contracted exclusively to them.”

Ricardo: “Gainin’ publicity? Does he look charmin’ enough to do that? Though, I see there’s someone who’s quite knowledgeable ‘bout that guy.”

Vice-captain: “They said they once got into a fight with him in a tavern. One of their ears was torn off. They got off lucky.”

The vice-captain said as he shrugged, but Ricardo agreed with him. If the person had gotten away with just an ear torn, then they were fortunate.

The strong stench of blood wafting from that man was not something any ordinary mercenary could compete against. They would be killed with a mere twist of his arms. And he had four of them, so the difference in ability between him and the others was glaringly clear.

Vice-captain: “You got a scary face there, Hound. Even if you grow bloodthirsty, isn’t he irrelevant to our job?”

Ricardo: “I know, I know. Fuck, I’m headin’ out for a lil’ while.”

Keeping the irritation burning in his chest at bay, Ricardo left the vice-captain behind, exiting the tent. Gazing up at the night sky above the camping grounds, he used a finger to fumble around with his collar out of boredom.

Still unable to get a grasp on where the group’s target, the gang of bandits, was located, Ricardo could not hide how discouraged he felt from his weakened sense of smell. Piling on that, he felt even worse because a person who got on his nerves had rubbed his wavering state of mind the wrong way.

Diddley, the man who had peeled the skin of the people who shared the same race as Ricardo, and draped it over his head. He could not help but feel a thick sort of malice from how Diddley had called him “Mister Wolf” to his face. Excluding that man, who had referred to Ricardo as a wolf without being convinced of what he called himself, the only other person who did the same was Anastasia—.

Ricardo: “What, my beard’s tremblin’… huh?”

Caressing his beard, Ricaro raised a brow as he felt a tinge of uneasiness. From a slight distance ahead, he could hear voices coming from an argument. Spontaneously, he started walking in that direction.

???: “Ya know what, runt. It’s dangerous ‘round here. Ya better hurry and go back to the city.”

????: “But, I’m saying I need to talk with the person in charge. Please let me through.”

Along with the exasperated voice of a rough fellow, a rather formal young voice overlapped with it. Once Ricardo took a look at them, he saw a tiny, tiny cat-human arguing with a mercenary standing guard at the grassland.

Ricardo: “What’re ya causin’ a ruckus about? A full-grown man yellin’ at a child. How shameful.”

Guard: “Ah, Ricardo-san… No, it’s ‘cause this runt wouldn’t listen to me tellin’ him to go home, so…”

The guard repeatedly dipped his head at Ricardo, who barged in between them. Snorting at the guard’s behavior, Ricardo then glanced over at the boy. He was a young cat-human with an intelligent-looking face.

Ricardo: “Son, I’m the representative around here. What, if ya need to talk about somethin’, I’m all ears.”

Cat-human: “Are you the person in charge?”

The boy, clothed in rags, widened his eyes at Ricardo’s attitude. He immediately gave him a polite bow afterwards, kneeling down and lowering his head further to the ground.

Cat-human: “I ask of you. Please rescue my elder sister and brother.”

Ricardo: “Your siblings? What’s it about?”

Cat-human: “It’s the slave traders. They were caught by them, and I… want you to save them.”

Ricardo: “…Aah, I get it now. I’m sorry to hear that, but…”

Ricardo scratched his head, feeling an inkling of pity at the boy's desperate plea.

His older siblings were most likely cat-humans, and they would be perfect targets for the traffickers to prey upon, if they were as young as this one. Compounding on that, the rags the boy wore—assuming they were hyenas from the slums, if the slave traders tried to capture them it would not infringe on Banan's city laws. It had been a mistake to ask Ricardo to go against that.

If only I wasn't on duty, Ricardo thought, mercy starting to bud in his heart. However,

Cat-human: "Please look at this."

Intercepting Ricardo's rejection, the boy took off the rag he was wearing. Looking at the chest and stomach area of his scrawny body, Ricardo let out a small grunt.

—The boy's skin was swollen with dark red, and the internal bleeding underneath had formed a drawing.

The more Ricardo stared at that drawing, the more it started looking like a map, and he realized that it was a map similar to the one which depicted the outskirts of Banan. The very map he had been glaring at until recently.

Ricardo: "Son, this injury of yours… no, what's this map?"

Cat-human: "Someone is inflicting wounds upon either my sister or brother. With our Divine Protection… the power of the Divine Protection of Trisection, we three can split our injuries and fatigue between each other, and… this wound is a result of that."

Ricardo: "Drawin' a map through injuries… That's pretty darn impressive. I see, so they showed ya their whereabouts… wait."

The boy's siblings, who had been captured by slave traders, were letting their youngest sibling know of their location by having wounds etched into their body. Ricardo was amazed by their idea, but it was not enough to force him to take action. However, he furrowed his brow upon thinking about something. —That was not all there was to the map.

Ricardo: “This map…”

The map of the surrounding area of Banan. It was a map similar to the one Ricardo owned, but it was too similar. The map on the boy’s body even had a few notable places marked down, such as where the caravans had been attacked, and where Ricardo’s group had thought the bandits were hiding.

It would be impossible to draw this map if without the siblings having looked at Ricardo’s map while doing so. Between the two maps there were a few differences, such as the mark on the camping grounds near Banan—the current location of the mercenary group, and the mark that traced the highway extending from the city, as if it was following along the path.

Ricardo: “This place, the highway, and the workplace of the bandits… Connecting those together…”

Guard: “Ricardo-san? …Wha—whoa!”

While in deep thought, his eyes fixed on the map etched on the boy’s body, the guard called out to him. However, Ricardo grabbed the guard’s shoulder, baring his fangs and shouting out,

Ricardo: “Gather all the big shots and come inside the tent right now! The kid’s achieved an incredible result!”

9

The boy called himself Tivey, showing the dark red map engraved upon his body in front of everyone. Supporting Tivey’s shoulders, who was standing on top of the desk, Ricardo pointed at the bloody map for the mercenaries to see.

Ricardo: “Listen up, everyone. Look at this map on this boy’s stomach. Right now, someone’s etchin’ the details of the map into the body of his sibling, who was captured. It’s a freakish thing, but we can glean somethin’ from this.”

Vice-captain: “It’s about the location of the slave traders that caught his siblings, right? That's amazing, yeah, but it's not…"

Our business, the vice captain did not say out loud, keeping his words ambiguous. However, his sentiments were shared between everyone in the tent.

Unrelated to whether they disliked or even tolerated slave trading, the objective of this mercenary group was the subjugation of the brigands. Even if they felt sympathy for Tivey, they could not stray away from their goal. Towards the mercenaries who had that in mind, Ricardo shook his head with a "No,"

Ricardo: "What's important's the huge amount of marks on this map. The place where the caravans were ambushed, and the place we mistook as the bandits' hideout are also marked. Ain't it strange?"

Vice-captain: "I guess it doesn't sit right with me, but… what meaning is there to it?"

Ricardo: "Just listen. There's an 'X' symbol placed where the caravans were attacked, and another near the area we mistook for the place the bandits're lurking around. In exchange, there's a circle placed on the slave traders who should still be on the move… Ya should know what the creator of this map wants to say."

Vice-captain: "—. Whoa whoa, Ricardo. You can't be…"

Understanding the context behind Ricardo's savage grin, the vice-captain widened his eyes. However, there were a lot of mercenaries who had yet to reach the answer to the mystery. To make sure everyone could hear it, Ricardo spoke,

Ricardo: "Our targets, those we're lookin' for, ain't bandits. Slave traders that do business borderin' on a bunch of brigands' business… no, our target's a Muggers' Tradin' Company, made up of those who disguise themselves as traveling merchants, and then launch attacks on other caravans."

It was obvious why they had not been able to find anything while searching for the hidden gang of bandits. No such gang existed. The crimes had been committed by an armed group, who pretended to be traveling merchants and attacked people who passed by.

Looting the wolf carriages and goods of other caravans, and turning their employees into slaves. Like that, selling off what they harvested, as well as their slaves to some other city, then traveling around the whole country while engaging in business was the go-to method of these Muggers' Trading Companies.

Ricardo: "So, it's this Muggers' Tradin' Company, but… they're roaming around this area on the highway durin' this time of day. Judgin' from the speed a loaded wolf carriage can move at, there's only one candidate."

Vice-captain: "—The Razcrew Trading Company!"

The vice-captain clicked his tongue, thinking about the group that had just passed in front of the camping grounds a few hours prior, the very group that had just came up in their conversation before the meeting. He looked like he was panicking, fearing that the Razcrew Trading Company would escape if they did not take immediate action, but Ricardo shook his head at him.

Ricardo: "There's nothin' to be panickin' over. I told ya. This map will keep tellin' us where that bunch's headin' for. Before long, they'll stop in their tracks to set up camp."

Once the band of mercenaries got a hold of their location, then it would be time for the Hound to live up to his reputation.

Vice-captain: "Fold the tents! We'll be pursuing the Razcrew… no, the Muggers' Trading Company at once!"

The vice-captain raised his voice, and the slightly energized mercenary group scattered immediately, all at the same time. Watching his fellow mercenaries leave the tent, Ricardo gave a firm clap on Tivey's shoulder, who had fulfilled his role to the very end.

Ricardo: "Son, good job for doin' your best. Ya were amazin'."

Tivey: "If it's for onee-chan and onii-chan, then it's… to be… expected…"

Replying with that, Tivey grew weak as he relaxed his body. Ricardo promptly supported him, feeling the burning temperature of his tiny body and seeing his labored breathing. It was only natural. Tivey must have endured an unbelievable amount of pain because of these injuries. If he had been reduced to this state as a result of the pain being distributed, then the suffering of his siblings, who were on the receiving end of such atrocities, must be beyond description.

Because of that, Ricardo and his group needed to give it their all.

Ricardo: “Ana-bo, your message has been heard loud and clear.”

Lifting up Tivey in his arms, Ricardo called out to the girl who was not present.

Accurately drawing out the map she had only taken a single look at, connecting the dots between the bandits and the slave traders, and delivering it to the “Uncle” etched into the area of the camping grounds. —The girl who had played a key role in achieving this result.

Ricardo: “I gotta find ya safe and sound, and ask ya why ya were caught by some slave tradin’ company…!”

Why had the girl, who was supposed to be in the city, been thrown into the midst of such a critical emergency?

However, Ricardo did not even think that it had been the doing of the man he had let off the hook.

10

—The clash between the band of mercenaries, led by the Hound, and the Razcrew Muggers’ Trading Company began in the middle of the night.

The deserted village, located at the side of the highway that linked cities together, was a place often used as a camping ground by legitimate caravans that stopped by on their travels, in order to let their weary feet and Ligers take a rest.

The camping ground, formerly a village that specialized in agriculture, had a few, abandoned houses left scattered around as a reminder of old times. The existence of the houses, all equipped with roofs, made it more than just a little appealing to use as a place to set up camp.

Because of that, the fact that an illegitimate Muggers' Trading Company was making themselves comfortable at this place, had fully incurred the blazing wrath of the Hound and his group.

Mercenaries: "…"

The Hound and his forty rowdy mercenaries were quietly surrounding the deserted village that was sinking into the darkness.

Fires that had been set up at the camp, used to clear the view of those standing guard, and the vulgar voices of the ones holding a feast, while chugging down their alcohol-filled mugs. The carriages with the tethered Ligers had the seal of the store number on it—proof that it was the company the mercenaries were after, and there was no mistaking it for any other.

The map engraved into Tivey was perfect. Remembering the boy he had left in the tent before carrying out their plan, as well as his pleading voice that surfaced into the back of his head, the Hound gave his orders to the vice-captain, and placed small troops in various places around the village.

Confirming that they were ready to go, the vice-captain nodded at the Hound. Receiving his signal, the Hound threw his head back to look up at the sky and opened his jaws,

Ricardo: "Awooooo—!"

A bestial roar was released, as if reaching for the round moon shining in the night sky.

The next moment, the Hound's limbs swooped down towards his assigned position—and the battle had begun.

Man: “Uwohhhh—!”

Ricardo: “Shut it, moron!”

With one swing of his large machete, Ricardo struck down the frenzied man who lunged at him.

The thick chunk of iron penetrated the man’s head, his skull exploding like a fruit. Looking at the body that had fallen over, with blood and brains splattered all around it, the men behind the corpse gulped one after another.

The men: “Hk…”

Ricardo: “Don’t stop in your tracks, ya dolts!”

Being horrified by their ally’s glamorously mutilated body, and because of it pausing their movements and freezing their thoughts, were actions below those of a third-rate fighter.

Ricardo sliced through one man, and bashed in the neck of another, snapping his neck. He shoved a third man into the wall by kicking him with all his strength, pulverizing the top of his head with the butt end of the machete and knocking him down to the ground.

A Muggers’ Trading Company that disguised themselves as a regular company, repeatedly plundering and pillaging other caravans in the middle of their travels. Even with such an extravagant title stuck onto them, they proved themselves to be a letdown the moment they were forced to be on the side of the ransacked.

Vice-captain: “Ricardo! How’s it going over there?!”

The vice-captain swung a bloodied sword as he ran towards Ricardo, who kicked away the corpse near his feet. Observing the disastrous spectacle created by the Hound’s rampage, the vice-captain started to lament the situation, a hand placed on his forehead.

Vice-captain: “I wasn’t worried about you, but this is too much. Are you planning to massacre them?”

Ricardo: “Is it worth holdin’ back ‘gainst these fellows? I almost feel like cuttin’ all their limbs off and throwin’ them into boilin’ hot oil.”

Vice-captain: “I understand how you feel, but please think about what comes next. We might even have to explain this to the Senate, so this can’t be resolved by murdering everyone and reaping all the benefits.”

Ricardo: “What, if they tell me to slit my stomach and apologize, then I’ll do just that! But, that’s only after everythin’s settled peacefully. And that seems unlikely if we find Ana-bo and the boy’s siblings.”

Anger burning inside of him, Ricardo barked at the vice-captain, who seemed concerned about the Senate’s intentions.

The only factors that had made it possible to ascertain the identity of the Muggers’ Trading Company, were Anastasia’s quick wits and the cooperation of Tivey’s siblings. Such small children were forced to do more than they could manage. Ricardo and his group had a duty to repay their deeds.

Hearing Ricardo’s words, the vice-captain’s expression fell even further as he looked up at the sky.

Vice captain: “Aah, goddammit! This is why exactly I didn’t want to be paired with you. Your influence is rubbing off on the others, and I’m worried if there are going to be enough of those fellows to give their testimony by the end of this…”

Ricardo: “I won’t target the leader, at least. If some morons remain alive at the end, then that’s fine, ain’t it? Rather…”

Vice-captain: “I know. It’s about the Skin Wearer dude, right?”

Diddley the Skin Wearer. That man of the Multi-Armed Race was unmistakably the main force of the Muggers’ Trading Company.

Neither ambushes nor cheap tricks would work against that. He was in a different dimension altogether, compared to people who would fall for those.

Ricardo: “Goin’ up against that guy’s impossible unless it’s me. Don’t let the others try and fight him.”

Vice-captain: “Needless sacrifices are just gonna keep piling up otherwise. Say, it should be almost time…”

The mercenaries had been told to send out a signal with a whistle once Diddley’s whereabouts were located. If Ricardo slayed him, then the victors of the battle would become set in stone.

Waiting for the sound of the whistle to ring across the clearing, Ricardo pricked up his pointed ears, but—

???: “Heeeeeeey! Come oooooooout, Mister Wooooooolf!”

A thick, sticky, and grisly laugh echoed, thoughtlessly shaking the air of the deserted village, reeking of blood, with its cheerfulness.

11

Due to the Hound’s planned attack, the Razcrew Trading Company had been hit by a devastating blow within the blink of an eye.

Those that were either drunk or slumbering were easily killed by the mercenaries, and their numbers were reduced by one third. However, the people who had managed to avoid death during the first assault were the real members that composed the Muggers’ Trading Company. They would certainly be small fry if facing against Ricardo.

However, that only applied if they were against Ricardo.

???: “Shit! What the hell’re these guys, tryin’ to make light of us?!”

An aide countered a mercenary that had tried to attack them, and Razcrew grinded his teeth, facing the fresh corpse.

Five mercenaries had made their way inside Razcrew’s bedroom, which was located in the abandoned house that was the most intact in the deserted village. Every intruder was cut down by the sword skills of his aide. However, it was clear this attack was not only a racket caused by five people, as they could hear screaming and the clashing of swords ringing out from all over the village.

Razcrew: “This ain’t the work of some dumb bunch of bandits… it’s the work of those simpletons at the highway.”

The news of Banan’s Senate organizing a band of mercenaries as a countermeasure against damages done to caravans had reached Razcrew’s ears as well. Because of that, he had wrapped up his business in Banan, and attempted to leave in order to try out another place for trading. All this, while the mercenary group wasted their time searching around in the corner of his eye.

Aide: “Boss, what shall we do with the others?”

Razcrew: “They have Diddley. Even if we sat around doin’ nothin’, those who don’t know their place can get killed off for all I care. Rather than that, there’s something I need to check.”

Hearing the name of the multi-armed berserker, the aide immediately closed his mouth. By now, that madman would be gleefully skipping around the battlefield, sprinting freely while decapitating people.

However, finding the cause of this chaos came first. If an unusual disturbance had occurred in his usual work, then the problem would be lying within the “unusual” part.

Razcrew tested the sensation of the bracelet he had snapped onto his wrist, an object linked with the gem on the slaves’ collars, and headed for the place where his products were safeguarded, while bringing his aide with him. And then,

Razcrew: “If I remember correctly, that girl was in this box.”

Standing in front of a specific box, Razcrew ordered his aide to open the door. When it creaked open, the heavy stench of blood wafted out of the box, and Razcrew knitted his eyebrows in frustration.

???: “—hk,”

On the far side of the box, he sensed someone catch their breath.

Entering it, Razcrew squinted his eyes amidst the dark, and nodded, making sense of the situation from the scene in front of him.

Razcrew: “I see. Those runts had some kind of Divine Protection… Not bad.”

The female cat-human with her stomach area painted in blood, and the male cat-human who had suffered through an identical number of injuries. Razcrew was honestly impressed by the girl standing in front of them, as if trying to protect them.

That appearance and that skill. She was a masterpiece among every “product” he had handled so far.

Razcrew: “Ya did well, considerin’ your hands ‘n feet were tied together. Those wounds… didja pick up a shard of glass at the trash heap or somethin’?”

Girl: “Ya seem like ya got time to be light-hearted. You mean that sca~ry wolf ain’t comin’ to pick me up?”

Razcrew: “Our rabid dog’s probably takin’ him on right now… Rather, the damage you’ve caused’re gonna cost ya a pretty penny.”

Razcrew showed off the bracelet on his left hand to the bluffing girl. Just by thinking about it, he could cause his collared slaves to feel a great deal of pain. He had already carried out that threat on the female cat-human.

Imagining the pain, even that girl stiffened her cheeks, and Razcrew drew out a dagger with a twisted blade from the inside of his outfit. It was one of his favorite torturing devices.

Of course, he was not planning on hurting the girl and decreasing her value as a product. The dagger was meant for the cat-humans behind her.

Razcrew: “Listen, missy. It’s not necessarily ya yourself who has to take responsibility for your screw ups. What happened this time’ll teach ya a good lesson.”

Razcrew jerked his chin, and his aide reached his arm out to hold down the girl. Like that, he would torment the cat-humans to a suitable degree in front of the girl, and make her regret what she had done. And if Diddley swept up the surrounding mercenaries, then it would be the end of this ruckus.

Girl: “Responsibility for my screw ups, huh…”

Razcrew: “Hm?”

As Razcrew pondered on how he would clean up the mess in advance, the girl’s faint voice reached his ears. Turning around, he saw the girl meet his eyes with a glare.

Those light blue-green eyes had a power that sucked him into them —

Girl: “If that’s so… it means you’ll be takin’ responsibility for what you’ve done!”

The girl declared out loud in a harsh tone.

In a flash, the female cat-human sprung to her feet with great enthusiasm, grinned, and then,

???: “Evil won’t prosper in this wo~rld!”

She shouted, the back of her feet landing a powerful kick on Razcrew’s face.

12

—In that one fleeting second, the situation inside of the box had taken a drastic turn.

Anastasia: “…”

Mimi had jumped awake due to Anastasia’s call, and she kicked away Razcrew while covered in blood, her appearance harrowing. The moment she did that, Razcrew should have punished her using his bracelet.

The punishment being given to her through her gate, Mimi’s tiny body shook as if she was about to start bouncing around. However, it did not contain enough power to halt her justice. It was because the punishment was being shouldered by Hetaro.

The Divine Protection of Trisection was a Divine Protection that enabled the siblings to share sensations such as pain. The distribution defaulted to an even split, but they could consciously unbalance it. It was also possible to receive a hundred percent of the pain when drawing the map, or when the eldest sister was receiving her punishment.

Hetaro: “I’m not as strong as onee-chan, so… I can only do things like this.”

Hetaro had said, his resolve to accept Anastasia’s suggestion of etching the map onto his body too bright for her eyes. Even now, as he suffered from the pain and bleeding, he took on his sister’s punishment and protected her until it ended.

Mimi: “Ooh~! Chya~!”

The fighting strength of Mimi, who was bouncing all over the room, having comprehended the will of her brother, was much higher than what Anastasia had imagined.

The aides, who were taken aback by the falling Razcrew—jumping into the gap that appeared for nary a moment, Mimi punted one of the two aides with her short legs, defeating him by slamming him against the wall.

Those were bodyguards that Razcrew had brought along, commanding them directly. They could not possibly be weak, but the fighting strength of the roused cat-human had increased even further, influenced by her excitement.

Aide: “Sei!”

The aide came to his senses after his ally was defeated, unsheathing the sword on his waist. The single-edged blade, known as a katana, released a single, terrifyingly sharp strike. However, Mimi skillfully ducked under it, and,

Mimi: “Aiyaiya!”

She made him lean backwards with a blow from her tail, and followed up with a powerful headbutt to his stomach. Batting at the throat of the staggered enemy with her short limbs, she then finally knocked him out cold by flinging him across the box.

Mimi: “You see that? It’s Mimi’s overwhelming victory!”

Triumphing over both Razcrew and his aide, Mimi jumped with elation over her win.

Anastasia’s eyes were wide open, having witnessed Mimi’s maneuvers. That fight was only supposed to buy some time for them, but she had not expected Mimi to wipe the traffickers out.

Anastasia: “Anyways, I guess this wraps it up!”

Although she was surprised by results that exceeded her expectations, Anastasia stole the bracelet from the fallen Razcrew.

Even if they were to escape from this area, it would be difficult with their hands and legs left shackled together. So, the best option was to make securing their safety a priority, and wait for the scary wolf to come running towards them.

Mimi: “Ooh, the collar came off! Hetaro’s also came off~!”

Anastasia: “Alright! We can take off our collars usin’ this, just as I thought. What’s left is…”

The bracelet acted as a key, and Anastasia used it to remove her and the siblings’ collars. After that, she took the collars and refastened them on Razcrew and his two aides.

Razcrew: “Ya little… don’t think… you’re gettin’ away with… pullin’ this shit… gaaah!”

Regaining his consciousness, Razcrew threatened her in a low voice when he noticed the collar around his neck. However, Anastasia punished him with the bracelet, leading him to pass out once more. It was hard to control it, so she had accidentally inflicted the same pain on the unconscious aides, but with this, she had finished securing the safety of her group.

Anastasia: “What’s left is Uncle… I believe in ya, so please don’t betray my trust…”

Next to Mimi, who was beginning her treatment of Hetaro’s injuries, Anastasia murmured quietly while rubbing the bracelet, praying that the next time someone opened the box, it would be a familiar face.

Razcrew: “Gyaaah!”

Anastasia: “Ah, my bad.”

She carelessly made an error while trying to control the bracelet, and Razcrew’s scream echoed across the box as he was punished.

13

Summoned by the large, intense act of self-assertion, Ricardo paid the man a visit, only to witness a sea of blood.

???: “Ahaa, you came to see me, Mister Wolf.”

Breathing heavily from excitement, the berserker directed his gaze towards Ricardo. A massive number of corpses were strewn around his feet, none of them retaining their original shape.

However, even as he stood in front of the mountain of corpses, all of them mangled beyond recognition, there was something he could make out with a single glance.

Ricardo: “That, that too, and the other one over there. They’re not my allies, they’re yours.”

Multi-armed man: “Huuh, were they? They were loitering around in front of me, so I got annoyed and killed them. Stuff like that happens sometimes, right?”

Ricardo: “Hell no. Don’t lump me in with ya, damn idiot.”

Feigning ignorance while raising his bloodstained broadaxes was Diddley the Skin Wearer. He adjusted the piece of fur he wore with one of his four arms, and glared at Ricardo with his goggling eyes.

Diddley: “Just as I expected. The wolf that girl was talking about was you.”

Ricardo: “…You’re the one who let Ana-bo do as she pleased. Rather than bein’ whimsical, you’re just stupid. What ya did resulted in y’all being on the verge of a wipe-out… There’s a limit to riskin’ your life to make the others laugh.”

Diddley: “Really? Personally, I’m fine with it if it means I can play with the wolf.”

I see, that’s truly the logic of a berserker.

The misjudgement of the person in change, having hired Diddley for his skills without taking his personality into consideration—it was rare to see someone with such an amoral personality to this extent, so perhaps it was cruel to tell his boss to sense that part of him before contracting him.

Vice-captain: “Ricardo…”

Called by the vice-captain who had accompanied him, Ricardo pointed towards a different part of the battlefield with his large machete.

Ricardo: “If I confine this guy to this area, then the others surely won’t get pushed back any further.”

Vice captain: “The same could be said for the opposing side, though.”

Ricardo: “Shut up. Just leave and go somewhere else. Pray for my victory.”

Shooing off the vice-captain and his concerns, Ricardo faced Diddley alone. Taken aback by the fact that Diddley was waiting quietly for the vice-captain to leave, Ricardo raised a brow.

Ricardo: “What, you’re more well-behaved than I imagined. I thought you’re a rabid dog, but it seems like you’ve been disciplined.”

Diddley: “It’ll be my loss if the flavor grows weak, all because I was bad-mannered in front of my feast, don’t you think? I’m Diddley. I have a personality that wants to taste delicious things while they’re in their best condition.”

Ricardo: “I see. I don’t have any standards of tasty or nasty in a fight to kill each other. —Ya haven’t done any unnecessary things to Ana-bo, have ya?”

Diddley: “Would you have been more passionate about this if I did?”

Ricardo: “I’d be about to toss ya into boilin’ oil, ya dolt.”

Their banter serving as a trigger, Ricardo took one step to close the distance between him and Diddley’s chest. Diddley intercepted him with his four broadaxes, swinging them towards his broad frame with varying trajectories to each of them.

With the wind blowing around him, Ricardo dodged the strike of the first broadaxe by lowering his posture. After deflecting the two following strikes with his machete, he greeted the Skin Wearer with a front kick before the final attack reached him, flinging him away.

Ricardo: “Goh, ruyaaah!”

Along with a war cry, the machete was swung down towards the staggering Diddley’s head.

Diddley caught the blow, one that could even split a giant rock in half, with the two broadaxes he held above his head. Steel collided against steel, and sparks flew. As they were about to enter a competition of strength, the multi-armed man lashed out using his remaining two arms. Ricardo immediately fended off the broadaxes that approached him from both sides, using his breastplate to do so.

His ribs creaked, and the impact even passed through the organs behind them. Vomiting out a glob of blood that surged up his throat, Ricardo leapt backwards using the momentum of having Diddley pushing against him. He broke into a fit of coughing.

Ricardo: “Kah, peh, peh! Damn, you’re pretty good at this!”

Diddley: “You’re good as well, Mister Wolf. Well then, let’s start taking this seriously.”

Diddley responded with a persistent, wide smile to Ricardo, who spat out blood and verbal abuse. Immediately after that, the multi-armed man’s giant frame disappeared from his sight as if it had been blurred out from sight. A four-armed anomaly prowled within the dark night.

Ricardo: “He can pull that off with that body of his?”

Ricardo growled, narrowing his eyes in the dark at Diddley’s unexpected display of the arts of stealth.

He had not thought that the man with an incredibly self-assertive appearance would be able to dive into the darkness so spectacularly, like this. The berserker was absent in his field of vision, and the thick stench of blood in the air prevented him from tracing his movements with his sense of smell.

If Diddley had covered the area in blood for this purpose, then he had an eye for some tough tactics to face, unexpectedly.

Ricardo: “—hk,”

Instantaneously, he swung his machete up just as there was a sound of something cutting through the wind. Their weapons clashed, and Ricardo sensed he had turned aside three strikes in total, judging from the impact he felt in his hand. Canceling out three gigantic broadaxes with one swing was the fruit of Ricardo’s abilities.

However, if one of the four strikes had made its way through, then it meant that Diddley’s tactics had bested him.

Ricardo: “Ghn…”

A broadaxe sunk into his left shoulder, severing his wire-like fur and dense muscles. Fresh blood spewed out, pain and fury exploding in the back of Ricardo’s throat.

Diddley: “Uha~h! I can’t cut it off with one broadaxe!”

Yelling with delight, the berserker flipped backwards with fearsome nimbleness, lurking back into the dark night. The sound of him stepping on grass, which would mean he had landed, could not be heard. His skill in melting into the darkness was akin to facing a wild beast.

It could be said that the way he carried himself was like a living nightmare.

The incarnation of a nightmare that wore the skin of those it killed, and brought forth death with its four arms. It was a strong, vivid image.

Diddley: “How is it? How is it, how is it, how is it? Are you enjoying my dance?”

The source of the slight sound of the ground being kicked, and the thick, sticky voice did not match.

A strange gait he used to set his voice and footsteps independently from each other, deceiving Ricardo’s eyes with his art of stealth, his ears with his voice, and his nose with blood. Ricardo did not have the means to pursue the giant form that prowled in the dark.

Distancing himself, and then approaching. Slinking around, bouncing around. To the right and to the left, above and below, the number of wounds inflicted on Ricardo were gradually increasing from the strikes of the broadaxes that aimed to kill, lashing out one after another, changing their trajectory as they pleased.

The moment Diddley struck, even if Ricardo deflected his attacks, his senses relying on the direction of his opponent’s murderous intent, blocking up to three hits was the limit of his defense. The remaining strike would carve into his body, and it was only a matter of time until he was beheaded.

Ricardo: “Shit, dryah!—Fine, then. I’ll interrupt your damn dance by killing ya!”

Letting out a shout that would make others forget that he was facing a difficult situation, Ricardo carried his machete on his shoulder and jumped backwards. The Hound held up his weapon while looking straight ahead, with an abandoned house to his back.

If he made sure there was a wall behind him, then he could limit the direction of his opponent’s assault, having it arrive from his front or his side. Although he did not know “when” or “where” would Diddley make a move, it would be possible for him to shut off “where” he would strike.

Despite that, the berserker gave a delighted laugh at Ricardo’s martial judgement.

Diddley: “Ufufufufu! That’s right, you would try to do that! But, you know!”

Ricardo: “—hk!”

The next moment, Diddley came into view in front of Ricardo. However, he appeared far beyond the reach of both Ricardo and himself—he was not aiming to engage in close combat.

His broadaxes drew a wide arc upon being thrown, transforming into discs of death as they advanced on Ricardo.

Hurling the broadaxes was a move that brought certain death to their enemies, who would have taken a desperate measure, because they had not been able to break through Diddley’s art of stealth. — In order to deal with four attacks coming from four different directions at the same time, four arms were required.

Diddley: “I’ll kill you, and then I’ll show off your pelt to that girl. What kind of face do you think she will make?”

Ricardo: “…”

Laughing cruelly, Diddley spoke of the unsavory future actions, to be performed after he finished his job. Unable to put up with him any further, after having heard the contents of his speech and having looked at his expression, Ricardo opened his mouth wide.

—To subdue his opponent's lethal attack, Ricardo decided to play his strongest card as well.

Ricardo: "GRAAAAAAAH!!"

Opening his jaws, that were lined with sharp teeth, Ricardo released a roar of destruction in front of himself.

The very air rumbled, and the earth was turned over from the quaking din. The spinning broadaxes were blown away, swallowed by the massive shockwave, and the wave of sound landed a direct hit on Diddley, staining his giant frame with blood.

Diddley: "Wh…a…?"

His eyes widened from the unforeseen attack, Diddley tilted his head, his face covered with blood.

Ricardo: "Oooaaaarrrgh!!"

There, Ricardo lunged at him without a single pause in his movements, mercilessly swinging the machete he had carried on his shoulder.

The machete stabbed into the berserker's thick neck, sending his large physique flying along with the fur he wore, much to Ricardo's satisfaction, and caused a blood flower to bloom.

Diddley: "—ah,"

The sound of bones and flesh being squashed out of shape overlapped, and the berserker crashed down onto the ground.

Diddley: "Amazing… I was… fascinated by your… performance…"

His neck broken, Diddley uttered that out with a smile, letting out one, final breath of joy before he fell silent.

—That was the end of the Muggers' Trading Company, the evil that had grown rampant within the city of Banan.

The day after the incident, Ricardo and Anastasia were in the chairman's office of the Chuden Trading Company.

Sitting on the sofa and sipping some ryokucha, Ricardo sighed as he finished giving his job report to Chuden.

Ricardo: "So, we got rid of the fellows who were up to no good. We also retrieved Ana-bo, and our losses… ain't that big a deal."

Chuden: "It appears so. It seems like a lot of unexpected situations were piled on top of each other, but…"

Having listened to the detailed account of the whole event, Chuden, sitting on the opposite side of Ricardo, nodded deeply. Receiving his somewhat inarticulate response, Ricardo wrinkled his nose with, "What,"

Ricardo: "You're puttin' it ambiguously. Do ya have any complaints or somethin' 'gainst m…"

Anastasia: "Of course! Do ya have any idea of the dreadful experience I went through because of ya? Ya deserve a pay cut! A pay cut! Be strict with him, Chuden-san!"

Ricardo: "Ghn… I already said I'm sorry, haven't I, Ana-bo…"

Ricardo's expression clouded over as Anastasia continued ranting right beside him. Chuden had also shrugged his shoulders in exasperation, and Ricardo sincerely felt bad for his mistake this time.

Thanks to Anastasia's quick wits, they had succeeded in annihilating the Muggers' Trading Company.

However, having listened to how it all began, listened to the details of Anastasia being captured by the slave traders—Ricardo felt deeply indebted to her.

He hadn't expected that acting on the mercy in his heart to end up backfiring. The predicament that Anastasia went through during the whole incident was a consequence of Ricardo's carelessness, and therefore, completely his fault.

Ricardo: "But, we were able to shut down the Razcrew Tradin' Company thanks to it…"

Anastasia: "Think about what'cha did!"

Ricardo: "Yes, I'm sorry! I'll work hard to make sure nothin' like this ever happens again…"

Ricardo flattened his ears against his head, apologizing to Anastasia, who was fuming. Looking at their interactions, Chuden burst into laughter.

Chuden: "Jeez, ya two are… no, I understand. For the matter in hand, the credit will go to Anastasia. For Ricardo-dono, well, consider it somewhere between receiving credit and your mission being labeled as failure."

Anastasia: "You're too soft, really. Uncle's gonna get ahead of himself!"

Chuden: "If that's so, then it's alright if ya discipline him strictly."

Anastasia: "Aah, yes, understood. I'll discipline him strictly!"

Looking as if she had received official permission from Chuden to do so, Anastasia glanced sideways at Ricardo.

Her eyes made him anxious of the coming future, but at the same time, those were the eyes of a girl who had "liberated the stronghold". Ricardo was also proud, since it proved he had made the right choice regarding her.

Chuden: "Anyway, Anastasia, ya did an excellent job in connecting the dots between the slave traders and the brigands. Where did ya find out such a thing? Did ya hear them spill it on accident?"

Anastasia: "Ah, uhm, it's not a big deal. They had a leader standin' at the top, didn't they? I remembered seein' the jinglin', shiny stuff he wore."

Chuden: “Ya recall seeing his accessories?”

Anastasia: “I just remembered seein’ those while I was workin’ as a helper. And, I thought the incident had been all about the customers, who were buyin’ and sellin’ them, then bein’ raided by the bandits, based on what ya and Uncle were talking about. And then… I imagined maybe that’s why the gang of bandits that Uncle was lookin’ for couldn’t be found. In the first place, I thought it was strange that, for a bunch of bandits, they were goin’ after products that were hard to sell out before the price dropped, so…”

Chuden: “…”

Chuden held his breath, hearing Anastasia speak as if she had merely been lucky.

Beside her, Ricardo had also been left speechless by her bizarre way of connecting her ideas. What was even more terrifying than that, it was not the fact she had reached the correct answer using her eccentric way of thinking, but the method she used to deliver that answer to Ricardo.

Anastasia: “The siblings who were captured along with me… ah, they’re cat-humans, but when the older sister was bein’ beaten, the younger brother’s cheeks were also swelling up for some reason. I thought they were linked together through a Divine Protection. Then, they said they had one more siblin’ outside.”

Chuden: “…So, to make the map appear on the other sibling’s body, ya etched the map into the body of the sibling ya were with?”

Anastasia: “I’m glad I was able to take a single look at the map here. Thanks to that, I could draw it pretty accurately.”

The fact that she had been able to draw out the map she had only gotten a glance of, and a very precise one to boot, was not of much importance to Anastasia. Staring at the sky out of the window in the wolf carriage, measuring their location and the distance they had travelled by looking at the position and height of the sun, listening to the number of times the wheels rotated, and using those to add on to the map made out of injuries, were considered as trivial to her as well.

Once they had pinpointed where the slave traders were hiding during the night, in the camping grounds, it was certain victory for the mercenaries, the uncertain variable known as Diddley excluded. Anastasia had been the key figure for all of that.

Ricardo: “Though, how could ya do that inside a carriage that held ya captive…”

Anastasia: “On that luggage platform, the wall’d be warm where the sunlight hit it, and I’d been countin’ the time ever since the bell rang durin’ noon. And because I did all of that, the locations on the map were perfect, right?”

Ricardo: “Oh, uuh, you’re right…”

Ricardo nodded slowly. Just as she had said, perhaps it was not that impressive if she had done those one by one.

However, counting every second to keep track of time, ascertaining their direction from the position of the sun and the angle of the sun’s rays, coming up with a plan to escape, and engraving a clear-cut map that existed in her memories into a human body, accomplishing such things simultaneously was normally impossible. And she had done it all by herself, so what were he and Chuden able to say?

Chuden: “Well, well… you’re really beyond what I imagined.”

Anastasia: “—?”

Chuden seemed extremely satisfied about Anastasia, who innocently cocked her head sideways. He was the man who had noticed her resourcefulness, pulling her into his trading company from her former position as the poster girl of a tavern. He could not help smiling about her actions that had allowed him to recover what he had invested, and his conviction that his eyes hadn’t deceived him.

However, Ricardo was deeply concerned about Chuden’s expectations, fearing them as dangerous and risky.

That's why he deliberately spoke in a loud voice, rubbing Anastasia's head roughly.

Ricardo: "Well, I guess she was really beyond what we all imagined. I didn't expect Ana-bo to crush the enemy's captain before I came to save her, and even treat him like a slave! I'm astonished!"

Anastasia: "Th, that couldn't be helped! I thought it was dangerous outside, so I had to secure our safety inside… Also, he brought it upon himself since he's a slave trader… Stop that! My hair's goin' all over the place!"

When Ricardo had gone to pick her up, Anastasia had already placed a slave's collar onto the leader of the enemy, splendidly giving him a taste of his own medicine. There was no sweeter revenge than a slave trader having a slave's collar fastened around his neck.

Ricardo: "I promised I'll entrust the handlin' of my collar to ya, but maybe I was too hasty."

Anastasia: "Don't make fun of me! Even if it's a verbal agreement, I'll protect it with my lifeeee. What the heck are ya sayin'!"

Ricardo laughed while showing his fangs to Anastasia, who shouted at him with a reddened face.

He had omitted it from the report, but considering she was acting like this, then it was probably wiser for him to shut his mouth about Anastasia bawling and jumping onto him the moment she saw him come to pick her up.

Chuden appeared to be dumbfounded by their exchange. Since the focus of the conversation had veered off from Anastasia's achievements, he thought he should put an end to it for now.

Chuden: "By the way, about the little cat-humans… the siblings that cooperated with the arrest of the culprit… Where might they be?"

Finally, Chuden asked them about the people who had contributed greatly to their cause, noticing that they were absent despite having been brought up several times during their conversation. Ricardo and Anastasia both frowned at the question.

Ricardo: “About that… I’m not sure. There’s no doubt the eldest sister treated the injuries of her two little brothers with her Healin’ Magic, but…”

Anastasia: “She said, ‘Justice does not ask for anything in return~!’ and just… left.”

Chuden: “…What?”

Chuden’s inquiries were shared by Ricardo and Anastasia.

The three siblings, who had made a significant contribution to the extermination of the Muggers’ Trading Company, did not seek any rewards nor words of gratitude, and had disappeared as the morning sun rose, the sister carrying her brothers and dashing off gallantly. No, they had returned to the entrance of the city with Ricardo and the others, so they should be somewhere around Banan, but…

Ricardo: “Allies of justice… do those kids know what it means?”

Anastasia: “Of course they do… I hope. It’s true that I was saved by their justice and courage, and I think I’ll be able to meet them again somewhere.”

Those siblings were incredibly loud, so they would probably be easily found if one went on the search for them. However, what Anastasia wished to say was definitely not that.

Ricardo crossed his arms, responding to the smiling Anastasia with, “Right.”

Hearing that, Anastasia stretched out her body. And then,

Anastasia: “Well then, since I got an extra, unnecessary day off, I’m goin’ back to work.”

Ricardo: “Wait a minute! Ya know what happened yesterday and today. Do ya have enough energy to…”

Anastasia: “But I’ve been asleep the entire time. If you’re the bodyguard of this company, then ya should get back to work too, Uncle! Ya need to make sure you’ll never make a blunder like this one again!”

Being pulled by the hair on his arms, Ricardo was shoved out of the room by the small girl.

Once he had finished giving his report, he planned on chugging some alcohol and lazing around. However, such an insignificant wish failed to reach the ears of the enthusiastic girl.

Anastasia: “Your price fell from this huge blunder, right? Then the day I can buy ya ain’t that far away!”

With a wide grin popping across her face, the girl shamelessly daydreamed of human trafficking.

Feeling like he had been reduced to a harmless creature by her smile, Ricardo, ashamed, blew out a sigh.

He supposed being told that he was going soft was only natural, since hearing what she said made him feel good.

Filled with deep emotion, Ricardo scratched his head, and followed behind Anastasia.

Sunlight on the Water

1

One day, in the early afternoon, it started with a declaration that came out of nowhere.

Priscilla: "—Al, I am bored. You shall commence something that is of my interest."

Al: "Hey hey, Princess. Even a tyrant will be surprised by your opening sentence. I can't keep up with you either, if you don't change the pacing of your speech depending on the situation. What was that?"

Priscilla: "I am bored. You shall commence something that is of my interest. If you are unable to do so, I shall lop your head off."

Al: "Huh?! Isn't there no doubt that you're being a tyrant?"

Al shouted with a muffled voice, holding up both of his hands and gazing up at the sky.

Leaning against the iron fence on the balcony, when he stared intently at the magnificent, blue sky, he saw the clouds flow quickly across the wide expanse as they were blown by the wind. Absentmindedly thinking that tomorrow's weather might worsen—right after that, the tip of Al's chin, who was leaning backwards, was pushed by a strong force.

Al: "Dah! Whoa! Gyah!"

Just like that, Al's unsupported body half-rotated, using the fence as a fixed fulcrum. Coming dangerously close to being thrown out into the air, he immediately grabbed onto something with his right arm, desperately pulling over the soft and smooth sensation towards himself.

Al: "Th, tha, that was close! Right now, I was totally wandering on the border between life and death…"

Priscilla: “Unfortunately, your crisis is ongoing nonetheless… no, your current situation is more dangerous.”

Al: “Eh?”

While looking at the garden that was located right below the balcony, right as Al breathed out a sigh of relief, he was told that he was in more danger than before. Letting out a silly voice, Al returned his gaze to the balcony. And then, on the other side of the iron fence, he saw the pale arm that he had hastily clutched onto—the owner of the arm, smiling sadistically.

She was a girl with orange hair, clothed in a red dress that boldly exposed her luscious skin. Effortlessly supporting Al’s body with her left arm that was in his grasp, she extended her delicate, pale fingers towards him,

Al: “Pri-Princess?! Princess! With a more merciful heart, please hear me out! I only have one thing to ask of you, I promise!”

Priscilla: “Although it was only for a few seconds, you shall embrace the honor of touching my exquisite, gem-like skin, and sink to the bottom.”

Al: “Gyaaaaah!”

Along with the cruel pronouncement, the fingers on his right hand were forced off as if they were repelled from her arm. What she did was basically a flick to the forehead, only that she did it on his fingers instead, but the speed and power of the flick was in a different league. A shrill sound resonated, and the force of it sent his whole body airborne.

Blown backwards with the feeling of floating in the air taking control over his body, while remaining upside down—he was plunged headfirst into a body of water, submerging below the surface.

“Ri, ri, ri, right now! I feel like Al-sama has fallen into the pond!”

Priscilla: “Oh, Schult. You have shown your face at the right moment. Here, I have a desire for tea, so you shall promptly prepare it. It is your job. Do not make me wait."

Schult: "Y-Yes! Of course! But, Al-sama also looks like he is in trouble!"

With bubbles floating out from the gaps in his helmet, Al sank down into the rather deep water. In the distance, he could hear the concerned voice of the boy, as well as a boisterous laugh that came from the girl who was using his predicament as an appetizer for her boredom.

—I wonder what the heck I'm doing.

Thinking that, Al kicked out at the bottom of the pond, propelling himself up to the surface with a powerful thrust.

2

At the southwest area of the Dragon Kingdom of Lugunica, this place was known as the Barielle Barony, which was governed by Baron Leip Barielle.

Leip, the lord of the domain, had laid down a rule of tyranny that was hated by all of his people. He had also imposed heavy taxes and made excessive labor mandatory, which caused the Barielle Domain to be referred to as a penal colony on one occasion.

However, during these few months, the bad reputation of the Barielle Domain had disappeared into the shadows. Far from that, rumors were circulating around, saying that the relations between the lord of the domain and the people were at an all-time high in recent years.

All of that was because of Leip, who had a change of heart after taking a young, intelligent, and beautiful woman as his wife, the fruit of him starting to make dedicated efforts for his people—not. Every one of the people knew that wasn't the case.

The change had occurred not in his heart, but the lord of the domain himself. Namely, although Leip had been managing his domain, he came down with an illness, so his wife, who became the lord of the domain on his behalf, had improved the domain's relations with her own ability.

Since Leip had fallen ill, the fate of his territory was entrusted in the hands of the elegant woman, replacing Leip's position as the new lord of the domain. Her talents were regarded as something that was divine, and she had captured the hearts of the people all at once.

Taking the place of the previous lord that continuously exploited his people, was a female lord who administered a reign that supported her people. With her unprecedented, dignified beauty, as well as her frequent observations of the territory that made her easy to approach, the people of the Barielle Domain were captivated by her existence.

That was the reputation of the compassionate woman, admired and praised by the people as the "Sun Princess".

Al: "…If word gets out that the Sun Princess tried to drown her attendant by kicking him into the pond, I have no idea what the people are gonna think about that."

Priscilla: "Do not speak of something that is scandalous as that. To begin with, the dead do not have a mouth to make their voice heard… Comparing the claims of you, a ruffian who is as good as a suspicious man, and the beautiful me, who do you think will the people believe?"

Al: "What you said right now is especially scandalous, without a doubt!"

Al asserted with a thumbs up, while sitting cross-legged near the pond at the garden of the mansion.

He was drenched in water from head to toe due to being submerged in the pond, and his clothes, let alone his underwear were soaked as well. Exposing his zori to the sun by taking them off, the upper half of Al's body became naked as he took his vest off, struggling to wring it out.

Putting the fabric in between his chin and chest, he used his right arm to squeeze it forcefully. It was only natural that he was having a hard time twisting the water out of his clothes, as he was one-armed, since his left arm wasn’t at where it should be.

Schult: “Al-sama, I will squeeze it! Please leave it to me!”

Unable to stand by and watch Al continue struggling, the young boy decided to raise his voice. Having a tender and adorable face and wearing a small butler uniform, his appearance was heartwarming because it looked like he was trying to do something that he couldn’t do just yet.

However, even such feelings were—

Priscilla: “Halt. It will be troublesome if your fingers were roughened from carrying out washing such as that. Shall your comfortability deteriorate, I will immediately dismiss you from the position of lying by my side.”

Schult: “Wah, wah, wah! Priscilla-sama, I will be surprised if you hugged me so suddenly…!”

Just as she took him in her arms from behind, the boy with a reddened face—Schult, shrunk into himself. Looking at his embarrassed expression as he was being tucked into the girl’s arms, it was a mystery how the smile-provoking impression that he had given earlier had changed into an immoral feel, to the extent that it was almost strange.

Priscilla: “What, Al? For what reason are you staring at us absent-mindedly with an idiotic look on your face?”

Saying that, the orange-haired girl who had Schult in her arms smiled daringly.

She was certainly the sun—someone with radiant beauty so bright that it would blind the eyes of the people who laid their eyes upon her. Orange hair that shimmered in the sunlight and eyes that were of flames that blazed fiercely. With the engrossing charm that she had, as well as her refined limbs that were exposed without regret, she enthralled the hearts of those who saw her, regardless of if they were a man or a woman.

A girl that left an impression so strong, that even her red dress didn't look good enough compared to her. She was the very Sun Princess who managed the domain in place of her husband, Priscilla Barielle herself.

Al: "Ah, no, I was just double-checking that oneshota[8] is nice, yeah. Thank you for the meal."

Priscilla: "Again, that is a word that I do not know of. Is that another one of your hometown's 'Great Waterfall Language' or whatever it is?"

Al: "Yeah. Also, there's water here and there in my helmet, and it's hard to see what's in front of me. It's like that."

Lining up vague excuses, Al put his hand on his helmet, making it ring as he adjusted it. The clacking sound came from the welded part of the black steel helmet that he always wore on his head.

Schult, still held in Priscilla's arms, widened his eyes as he watched Al fiddle with his helmet.

Schult: "Helmet! Your helmet will rust if you leave it like that! If your helmet is gone, then you will be headless! It's scary! You need to dry it quickly!"

Al: "Your misunderstanding is cute, but it's not my head's made out of iron, so I won't be headless, y'know? And there's no need to worry about this helmet getting rusty anyway."

Schult: "Eh? It will not rust? You also have a head… it's a little bit disappointing."

Al: "I don't know what part of it is disappointing, Schult-chan."

Al smiled wryly at Schult, who seemed saddened for some reason, and then slapped the water out of his helmet by hitting it.

Al: "This helmet's been specially made. It's something that I have quite a connection with, see that?”

Priscilla: “Huh, that is the first I have ever heard about it. Where have you stolen it?”

Al: “Why is your first choice ‘steal’?! Come on, put more faith in me!”

Priscilla: “I cannot think that someone of your resourcefulness is able to buy something of that caliber. Where have you stolen it?”

Al: “It’s from the gladiators’ Colosseum that I was in a long time ago—! But, it’s not like I stole it! It’s just that when I was running away from that place, a kindhearted guy gave it to me. It was being displayed in the Colosseum, so I think it’s a pretty decently made helmet. Maybe.”

The moment the word “gladiator” popped up in Al’s explanation, sorrow flitted across Schult’s expression for a brief moment. However, the attitude of Priscilla, who didn’t even bat an eye despite hearing the same word, made Al a little bit happy.

Priscilla: “You were one of the gladiators at Vollachia, indeed. If that is so, then you must be from somewhere on the Gladiator Island Ginunhive. That helmet would be an item associated with the Gladiator King, or more accurately, a replica.”

Al: “I can’t even hide anything from a knowledgeable human! Yeah, you’re right, I was forced to work at the Gladiator Island for so long. I also dropped my left hand there. The helmet’s the alternative for my severance pay.”

Al spat out in such a manner, half-sulking at the fact that his personal history had gotten profoundly exposed. Anyway, setting aside where he came from, it was true that his helmet was specially made. There was no need to take it off and dry it.

Al: “So, it’s no use even if you make a curious face like that, Schult-chan.”

Schult: “Ah, um, I am not actually curious about it! Men aren’t all about their faces!”

Al: “That isn’t even a follow up! And it hurt me unnecessarily!”

Failing to console Al, Schult’s shoulders sagged dejectedly. Patting the boy’s head, when Priscilla casted a sidelong glance at the helmeted man,

Priscilla: “What, a man’s value is not determined by his face alone, however, his face is one of the standards that ultimately decides his worth. Schult, you are also to not forget that you had gained my favor because of your lovable appearance. You must hold back your growth as much as possible. Also, I will be unforgiving of any unwanted hair.”

Al: “At least make it an order that he could work out somehow by putting in effort, Princess.”

Schult: “I-I will do my best…!”

Al: “See! Schult-chan’s straightforward, so he believed it.”

As Schult made his declaration while clenching his fists, Al gave him a pitying look. However, to Schult, devoting himself to Priscilla was something that was pretty much the same as his reason to live. It would be insensitive to get in the way.

After choosing which direction her attendant would be going down with a casual remark, Priscilla drew out her fan from her cleavage. No matter how many times Al saw the same gesture, it was a bold hiding place that was also pleasing to the eye, but Priscilla covered her mouth with the fan, and,

Priscilla: “Hm, the boredom that had been diverted has returned. Al, before long, you shall provide your next act of entertainment. I have enjoyed seeing you drown in the water. Next shall be… hmm, shall you dance atop a fire?”

Al: “Ohh, that’s a good idea. I also felt like drying my clothes right now, hey, idiot!”

Priscilla: “Despite being about to accept it once, why have you come to your senses so abruptly? What was that, right now?”

Al: “I’m just playing the straight man after pretending to go along with the silly man, but don’t make me explain. You’re gonna shave down my heart.”

When Al shrunk bank, discouraged, he could see that Priscilla’s mood was starting to tilt towards the sullen side. She was as fickle as a cat, but she was far more violent than one. That was what was scary about his master.

Al tilted his head to the side in contemplation, unsure of what to do although he wanted to humor her in some way or other.

Priscilla: “As a jester who serves to entertain me, you shall always remain conscious of your minimum duty. Adhere to Schult’s example. If it were my words, that one has the willingness to accomplish it, whatever it is.”

Al: “That’s way too much of an unreasonable demand.”

Priscilla: “It is not. Schult, tell me a story that will alleviate my boredom. Right now, at this place.”

Schult: “Eh?! Ah, yes, I will do my best. Umm, umm…”

Since Al couldn’t comply with her wishes, Schult was chosen to be on the receiving end of Priscilla’s tyranny instead. Seeing the boy thinking as hard as he could to come up with something was starting to weigh heavily on his conscience, so he attempted to stop it, but—

Schult: “Ah! I remember one thing! Just a while ago, a housemaid-san was talking about a rumor.”

His face brightening up, Schult spoke with his hand raised in the air.

Schult: “I heard that there’s been many cases of people going missing, in a village that’s at the south of the domain! There’s a forest near the village, and it’s said that anyone who comes close to the spring will not be able to return! It’s a rumor about the ‘Nightmare of Ladrima’. Ooh, it’s scary!”

Al: “What the heck? With you saying stuff about me being headless and all, do you like stories about hollows[9] or somethin’?”

Smiling wryly at the realization of Schult’s unexpected interest in hollows, Al let the water fall out from the gaps in his helmet. After that, letting out a metallic clunk from the welded part of it, when he turned to Priscilla with a “Hey, Princess,”

Priscilla: “The village in the south, ‘Nightmare of Ladrima’, a spring that causes people to disappear… I see.”

Seeing Priscilla muttering wearily made Al have a bad feeling about it.

And so, the bad feeling that he had became a reality before he could make a move.

Priscilla: “Interesting.”

Priscilla said, closing her fan and pointing the tip of it towards Al and Schult,

Priscilla: “It will be enough to relieve my boredom. Why don’t I resolve that incident by my own hand!”

Fully motivated and completely willing to stick her nose in a troublesome matter, Priscilla beamed, her smile as brilliant as the sun.

3

—Ladrima, the village that was located in the southern area of the Barielle Barony, was a normal village that could be found anywhere.

Far away from the kingdom’s main highways, any signs of its development were thin. It was nothing more than one of the many villages that existed within the domain, and the only thing that was slightly popular about it was its flowers, which were the village’s specialty. The villagers lived their lives with little change because they liked it that way. Because of that, in the present day, Ladrima Village was thrown into an uproar due to the strange incidents that rarely happened to them.

Al: “…Well, that’s why I said that we should disguise ourselves before coming here.”

Priscilla: “Do not utter such foolish things. Why is it necessary for me to disguise myself and elude the attention of the people? There is not a reason that exists for me to feel ashamed. The commoners shall burn my influence into their memories to their heart’s content.”

Al: “I’m saying that it’s to make sure we don’t stand out, not about feeling ashamed, but… I guess it can’t be helped now.”

Scratching the back of his neck, Al sighed at the gazes that were directed towards them. All the staring was coming from Ladrima’s villagers, who were surprised by the intruders that appeared so suddenly, which was a reasonable reaction.

After all, the dragon carriage that pulled up to the village was embellished by gold, silver, and jewelry, which was basically the exteriorized form of a nouveau riche’s tastes.

Along with a vivid, eloquent golden carriage, if an extraordinarily beautiful girl came into view in addition to that, it was only fair that the villagers would be confused, unsure of what was going on.

Just as Al had thought, a large portion of the villagers’ astonishment were directed towards Priscilla and the dragon carriage, but he wasn’t aware that quite a few of them were staring at the one-armed, helmeted man with an eccentric outfit.

If it was the case of standing out, then the master and servant were similar in that sense. Anyway,

Al: “Firstly, the basis of an investigation is making steady progress by gathering information from people, but…”

Priscilla: “Slow and steady investigations do not suit me. We shall immediately head towards the spring that was brought up earlier.”

Al: “I thought that you’d say that! Schult-chan, can you keep company with her?”

Since his master hated the sound of words such as ‘slow and steady’, as well as ‘little by little’, it seemed like she had no intention to follow the ironclad rules of investigation. With Priscilla already having grown tired of waiting, Al tried to entrust her to Schult, who was also accompanying her.

However, there was no response from him. Al turned around, only to see the young butler running his eyes over a large book with his undivided attention, while making a solemn expression on his face.

Al: “Schult-chan?”

Schult: “Ahh! Ah, I’m sorry! I was too focused on the book!”

Al: “Scolding you with ‘That’s neglect of duty!’ can wait. What’s that book?”

Schult: “Priscilla-sama gave it to me! She said that it would be useful if I remembered the stories when she is bored… She told me to keep reading it until I can recite it.”

As Schult had only recently learned how to read and write, he was struggling with the major challenge that had been given to him, to the point that smoke might erupt from his head at any moment. Priscilla’s fickle and self-indulgent actions were a common occurrence, but Al still felt bad for Schult, since the boy was at the mercy of her whims.

Al: “Princess, what did you teach Schult-chan this time? I feel sorry for him.”

Priscilla: “Knowledge will aid one’s life. Schult has a myriad of things that he must learn. Do not measure it with your pathetically small standards at your own discretion. However, I will not deny your feeling of wanting to admire a teary-eyed, assiduous Schult.”

While covering her mouth with her fan, Priscilla casted a sidelong glance at Schult. Her thoughtfully arranged plans were extremely difficult to find out. It also included the possibility of the ‘plan’ not even existing, however.

Al: “Schult-chan’ll need to stay strong. Though, the villagers’ restlessness will probably reach its limit pretty soon. We should really explain the whole thing to them.”

Priscilla: “In addition to that, you will be gathering information from the people slowly but steadily, you are saying? Well, I suppose that is alright. Until Schult finishes reading his book, I shall make an exception and go with you.”

Priscilla accepted Al’s apprehensive suggestion without protesting, much to his surprise. Before she changed her mind, he raised his hand while facing the people who were gathering around them at a distance,

Al: “Sorry for surprising you guys. We aren’t anyone suspicious. We might not look like it, but please think of us as something like an investigative team. Recently, there’s a couple of incidents that’s been occurring around this village, right? We’re here to investigate it.”

Gesturing towards the three people in the group, including himself as he clarified the purpose of their visit, the villagers exchanged glances with each other.

Putting it honestly, there was no persuasiveness in what he said. Along with his claim that they weren’t suspicious, and the investigative team that consisted of a woman, child, and a helmeted man, there were too many dubious points. Al was already prepared for the information gathering to become complicated and arduous.

However—

“The woman by your side… I may sound rude if I say this, but is she the Sun Princess?”

Al: “Oh?”

The person that tentatively stepped forward was a man with short hair with a few gray hairs mixed in, who looked close to being middle-aged. He gazed at Priscilla, as if he was acting as the representative of the villagers’ opinions.

Receiving his gaze, Priscilla gave a small sniff, along with a "Hmph,"

Priscilla: "Not once have I ever called myself with that name. However, it is true that the commoners within the domain have been regarding me fondly as such. If you gaze at my eminent beauty that is identical to the sun, it is a reasonable conclusion nonetheless."

Man: "—Ohh, just as I thought!"

The man's eyes shone as he heard Priscilla's words, which were rather excessively self-conscious. And then, his astonishment and amazement having been transmitted to the other villagers, they all kneeled down simultaneously.

Man: "To, to think that the Sun Princess would actually visit us! We were consulting the surrounding villages about the spring, but…"

Priscilla: "It was passed from one place to another, and it has finally reached my ears. I have arrived at this village in person because of that. Surely, I am able to expect that you will not waste my effort in coming here by feigning ignorance, saying that it is a matter that has been already dealt with?"

Man: "Ye, yes!"

Taking control of the village's will within an instant, Priscilla gazed over at the kneeling villagers with satisfaction. After that, she turned around to face Al, who stood still the whole time,

Priscilla: "Here. What are you doing, Al? Making slow and steady progress is your task. I shall be displaying my authority like this. While I am doing that, you shall promptly fulfill your role."

Al: "That's fine by me, but… I dunno, but I'm not satisfied with that!"

When he went along with Priscilla to do something, there were times that Al seriously doubted if he was making the right call, or was actually mistaken. It was probably because he had never seen her fail.

Priscilla: “Naturally. After all, this world is made to be convenient to myself.”

Saying her signature phrase dauntlessly, Priscilla laughed as she gave Al a supportive push on the back.

Afterwards, thanks to the obedient and cooperative villagers, the gathering of information progressed quite smoothly.

Al: “There’s a forest next to the village, and there’s a spring in it. And, during these two months, they say that the people that headed for the spring all disappeared one after another. First, it was a villager, then it was the person who went to look for the missing villager, and then it was someone who stopped by, and then…”

Priscilla: “An unusual rumor had been spread, and once in a several days, there will be someone who would approach the spring and then vanish. —What a peculiar, absurd idea it is.”

Priscilla narrowed her eyes against the information that had been gathered from the villagers, which was organized and presented to her in a straightforward manner. She sounded terribly bored, but Al had the same opinion as her.

Undoubtedly, it was no more than the saying: “a mummy hunter becoming a mummy”[10] consequently happening in real life.

Al: “They also said that they sent out search parties from the village over and over again, but the end result was always terrible. Apparently, the forest becomes foggy, and they were alone when they realized it. There were also instances of some managing to come back safely, but some people also don’t come back. So, that’s how a missing person incident happens consecutively.”

Priscilla: “That is not enough of a reason for the continuous damage that has been done to this village. The foolish commoners who dare to venture into a dangerous forest, are surely not limited to the people in this village. What lured in the outsiders?”

As expected, Priscilla was looking at things differently. Impressed by what she focused on, Al whistled to express it, but his whistle didn't give out any sound. Before he incurred Priscilla's displeasure with the noise that sounded like a hoarse sigh, he cleared his throat with an "Ahem,"

Al: "This is the masterpiece. It's about this spring, but it was exaggerated even before the rumors were spread. Approaching the spring, you will be swallowed up by the fog. If you manage to pass through it… supposedly, you can meet the dead."

Priscilla: "—Huh. Meeting the dead, I see."

Al: "There's also rumors of it being connected to the afterlife or whatever, but both of them are a bunch of nonsense. But, unexpectedly, there's no end to the amount of people that are being tricked by that rumor. As of now, only a few dozen people fell victim to it, but it could turn into a major incident if the numbers keep increasing."

If the source of the rumors—the root of all evil wasn't resolved quickly, then it could develop into a situation where the country has no choice but to move. Once that happens, even if the issue was settled, Priscilla's capabilities as the lord of the domain would be questioned.

As someone who was waiting to participate in the Royal Selection, it would be preferred if she was prevented from being put in a bad position. Thinking from that point of view, Schult's choice to pick up the rumor of the incident was absolutely correct. Because of that, they were able to make moves that were necessary to solve the problem.

Al: "What do we do, Princess? Forming a quick investigative team and stamping out the issue could be one choice we could make…"

Priscilla: "Obviously, we shall immediately head into the forest and inspect the actual spring. If it is a problem that I am able to settle, then I shall put an end to it with my own hands. Are there no objections?"

Al: "Are you serious? By heading into the forest, you mean… you would go in there? Bugs might jump outta there, y'know?"

Priscilla: “Fool. Is that enough of a reason for me to withdraw from it? First of all, my radiant authority repels the likes of insects.”

Declaring something that couldn’t really be asserted as a lie, Priscilla appeared to be fully motivated to enter the forest.

That wasn’t a decision that was meant to be praiseworthy, since Al knew that Priscilla didn’t say that just because she wanted to deal with the problem right away. It was just that he thought that she seemed rather proactive in resolving the issue. Unlike her usual self, she was being supportive.

However, the level of Al’s bewilderment was not as much as the villagers that just heard of Priscilla’s plan.

The idea that the representative of the lord of the domain, Priscilla, would be directly venturing into the forest, provoked a type of perplexity that made them feel like their world was turned upside down. Panicking and all flustered, the villagers attempted to stop her from doing so.

Man: “We, we cannot let the Sun Princess do such a dangerous thing! If you insist that you must go, then we will follow you! Every villager will aid…”

Al: “Wait, wait, wait, wait! I know that you’re worried, but every villager?! Don’t be ridiculous. We won’t be able to move a muscle if a huge crowd comes with us!”

Al spoke up, alarmed when the chief of the village lost his cool, but it seemed like the man wasn’t the only person to believe in the reckless plea that he made on the spot. The villagers genuinely looked ready to accompany Priscilla.

The chief gripped his fist tightly, a slight tremor in his voice.

Man: “The previous era of the lord of the domain felt like hell. Words are not enough to describe our gratitude towards you, the Sun Princess, who is now governing the domain instead of that lord. At least, please let us be your meat shields!”

Priscilla: “Hm, hm. That way of thinking is not bad. You are doing quite well for a band of commoners. Do not forget the loyalty that you are pledging to me."

Al: "Is it the time to be saying that?!"

Priscilla sounded content, but it would only be troubling and burdensome even if they brought along a ton of people who were unable to fight.

Using his vocabulary to its fullest extent, Al struggled to cajole the villagers into stopping them from providing their assistance.

Al: "We really appreciate that you guys feel that way, but there's no point in overloading ourselves with meat shields. The Sun Princess wishes for you guys to stay here quietly, waiting for good news."

Priscilla: "That is quite a convenient interpretation of my words."

Al: "The Sun Princess wishes for you people of the domain to remain safe! Hurrah, long live the Sun Princess!"

Villagers: "L-Long live the Sun Princess—!"

When Al lifted his arms into the air with desperation, the villagers were enticed into doing the same whilst raising their voice. The situation was being developed way too forcefully, but with this, Al hoped that he was able to put a stop to the villagers' self-sacrifice.

After that, all they had to do was hurry up and leave before the villagers came to their senses.

Al: "Let's go, Princess. Life is limited, but the possibilities are infinite. Let's go to a hopeful tomorrow."

Priscilla: "Mh, let's go, was it? That is a new word from the 'Great Waterfall Language'. I like the sound of it."

When Al gently tugged at Priscilla's hand, she followed him without getting angry nor protesting. Behind her, Schult was still grappling with the contents of the book, following them while looking like his head was going to explode at any moment.

Priscilla: “Well then, we shall be settling the situation promptly. Let’s go.”

Using the newly-learnt word, Priscilla authorized the departure of the dragon carriage in a good mood.

The villagers saw through the gold-adorned carriage’s departure, giving Priscilla their three rounds of cheers all the while.

4

The forest with the spring in question had a peculiar ambience that floated around it, as if it was rejecting any person from entering it.

Whether it was due to the problem of the spring that was happening, or whether it was something unique to the forest that was there from the start, whichever it was, there was no mistaking that something malevolent was permeating the area.

Al: “Well, we’re ignoring that and trespassing on the forest without hesitation, though.”

Al muttered out calmly, while treading on the grass that peeked out from the ground and straining his eyes at the overgrown trees.

Several dozen minutes after departing from Ladrima, the group of three had arrived at their destination, and had already begun their investigation whilst trampling on the ground. Of course, they couldn’t ride through the forest in the dragon carriage, so the inspection was being conducted on foot.

Al walked at the front, using his Blue Dragon Sword to make a path by cutting down the greenery that blocked their way. They marched ahead in a way that the two people behind him were following after his footsteps, which were made by the firm steps of his zori. Anyway,

Al: “Wasn’t it better to leave Schult-chan at the dragon carriage, together with the driver?”

Turning his head to the side, Al spoke to the two people behind him —Priscilla, who was boldly heading further into the forest with her high-heeled shoes, and Schult, who was timidly tagging along while linking arms with her.

Upon hearing those words, the look on Schult's face morphed into an apologetic one. On the contrary, Priscilla glowered at Al,

Priscilla: "Fool. If Schult had been left at the dragon carriage, then I cannot see the point in bringing him with us. I am able to discern that you wish to be alone with me in the dark, but you think too much with the lower half of your body."

Al: "I didn't make that suggestion out of immoral thoughts! It's made out of the purer upper half of my body!"

Schult: "It's, it's alright! I will do my best so that I will not inconvenience both of you… ah! I will fall down! Muh! I endured it!"

Priscilla: "Hm, well done, Schult. I shall praise you for that."

Unlike Al, who had gotten his suggestion brushed aside, Schult looked delighted, complimented by Priscilla after nearly tripping over. It wasn't like he was jealous. Perhaps, maybe.

Rather than that, the slow pace they were walking at and the tense atmosphere was a larger issue to him. The uproar about the spring didn't draw too much of his interest, but he was getting stressed by how sluggish and leisurely they were being.

Al: "Why don't we just torch the forest? That way, it'll be quick and easy 'cause the spring will also evaporate."

Priscilla: "The number of foolish statements that you make have been increasing more than usual, Al. Firstly, how will you make up for it if you settled the incident using that method? That is as good as defeat."

Al: "Is it a problem of winning or losing?"

Priscilla: "Everything will be, if one regards it as such. Since losers continue being defeated without recognizing that, the belief that they will lose before the match even begins is ingrained into them."

Priscilla asserted fiercely, crossing her arms with a “To begin with,”

Priscilla: “I am also fond of flames. Burning objects makes me excited[11]. However, setting the forest on fire just because there are people who approach the spring… that is a lowly, wretched reason for the wildfire it would cause. How preposterous.”

Al: “What I don’t understand more than that are your preferences… But, okay, I get it. I’ll go back to cutting down the plants.”

Instantly deciding that it was meaningless to oppose Priscilla’s views, Al focused on creating a path they could walk on with his Blue Dragon Sword. To road to their destination was a trackless path. The forest was so dense that he could understand why many people went missing, but it also made him wonder if the reason why they were disappearing was unrelated to the spring.

There was not much of a reason for one to enter a forest that wasn’t that big. Although, that was only fair because it didn’t even meet the requirements of having a path so that people could pass through.

Priscilla: “Tempted by the forest’s spring, I see. What a hackneyed tale.”

Priscilla spoke out from behind, sounding like she was trying to stifle her boredom. Hearing that, Al agreed with a “Yeah,”

Al: “Apparently, the first person that went missing saw some magnificent light that danced in the forest. They were led by it, and went after it without thinking… And now, those who want to meet the dead keep getting swallowed by the spring one after another.”

Priscilla: “Wanting to meet the dead… It is increasingly being reduced into a hackneyed tale.”

Al felt like something was off with what Priscilla had just said. Boredom, anger, dissatisfaction, contentedness, joy—her whims were erratic and elusive, but what she muttered out didn’t match any of those emotions.

It was as if she currently felt an emotion that was something similar to envy or jealousy. That was what he thought.

Al: "…Princess, you don't have someone you wanna meet?"

Priscilla: "I have no idea. Recently, the only person I am familiar with who has passed is my beloved husband."

Al: "He's not dead yet. Looking from an outer point of view, he's just under medical care."

Priscilla: "He even leaves the care of his excretory system in the hands of others. That is surely the equivalent of being dead."

Al could no longer see any strange indications in her attitude, which wasn't even trying to hide her disgust. Ignoring it and shrugging his shoulders, he looked at Schult, who had remained quiet during their exchange.

Perhaps, the topic and he and Priscilla had spoken about was upsetting for a boy that was young as Schult. Just as he expected, Schult seemed to remember the person who was brought up in the conversation, his face turning white as paper.

Schult: "Master was… a bad person, right?"

Al: "The opposite of justice is another type of justice. There's a wise saying like that, but Master Leip can't be referred to as just, to say the least. He's a completely evil guy. Though, it's not like we're the just ones either."

Priscilla's husband and someone who was the original lord of the Barielle Domain, Leip Barielle had been scheming to seize the kingdom's real power by using her as his puppet. However, his aim has been shattered by Al and Schult, and he had already been broken down mentally, losing the ability to function normally in everyday life.

Al: "There were a lot of people who were happy to see him like that. It's evidence of Princess's popularity, but it's pitiful."

Schult: "But, I… at least, I will pray for his soul to be at peace."

Al: “I said he’s not dead…”

Al tried to say, but paused when he saw Schult fold his hands with a solemn expression. He supposed that it was alright that at least one person would earnestly mourn for Leip, hoping that the lord would become even a little bit better in his next life.

Priscilla: “Rah, stop that, stop that. It is a waste of time, praying for that gaunt, senile man.”

However, it seemed like Priscilla disapproved of the prayer that Al had turned a blind eye to. With a fiery look in her eyes, she shook Schult’s head, who was clinging on to her arm,

Priscilla: “If you have the time to spend on such trivial matters, return to memorizing the contents of the book.”

Schult: “Eh, ah, yes! I will memorize the contents of the book! Uhm, the first one is…”

Al: “Don’t bully a pure kid…”

Although Al touched on Priscilla’s immature behavior, Schult stopped praying and went back to his recitation of the book. Poor Leip, he thought as he internally put his hands together in a prayer for the lord instead, driving his sword into a remarkably thick branch that was in front of him and slicing it off.

Priscilla: “Speaking of, Al. You seem to reject the idea of meeting the dead, almost terribly so.”

Al: “Because there’s no way it exists. If we die, it’s over. We can’t meet the dead, and we aren’t allowed to try and meet them. It’ll only make us miserable. You have the same opinion, right?”

The space between the trees was small and narrow. Nicking a branch, Al kicked it in. It didn’t break with one hit. He bashed it with his foot again, but it still refused to break off. The wood was tough.

Priscilla: “Even if we have arrived at similar conclusions, with me and you, the processes that we have gone through to reach that are disparate. We cannot meet the dead. That is true.”

Al: “…”

With his third kick, the tree toppled over with a dull thud. Lifting it up with his shin and moving it aside, he continued creating the path—

Priscilla: “Or—is it that there is someone you do not want to meet?”

Grinding his teeth at the words that rang in his ears, his leg that he put too much strength in flung aside the fallen tree. It rolled across the forest floor in a disorderly fashion, disturbing the nearby leaves and branches, and Al blew out a long breath.

She was really a girl who would bluntly and mercilessly trample down the hearts of other people.

Al: “You know what, Princess. Do you really think I’ll talk about something as serious as that…”

Forcefully calming down his heart, Al feigned an easygoing attitude and turned around. However, his words didn’t reach Priscilla. It wasn’t only her, but Schult as well.

“…”

The area was foggy. And, Al was alone before he knew it.

5

Al surveyed his surroundings. When he realized it, his vision was clouded in white, and it felt like he was in a world that was only vaguely a forest. In fact, he was unsure if he really was still in the forest. Unable to sense the presence of the two people who were right next to him, he placed his Blue Dragon Sword on his own shoulder.

Al: “You’re kidding me. This is unfolding just as I heard how it’ll go like.”

The villagers’ testimony, the story that he was doubtful of, thinking that it was just a fishy tale, had become reality.

Entering the forest of the spring would cause the intruder to be captured by the fog, leaving them all alone. There were people who managed to pass through it and return, but if they were unlucky, then they would be dragged into the spring—

Al: “And they’ll be able to meet the dead, huh. Sorry, but that doesn’t make me happy.”

Depending on the person, it might be worth taking the risk of going missing for that, but reuniting with the deceased only made Al feel like it was uncanny.

Al: “Instead of that, I’m happier if I could accidentally touch[12] Princess under the cover of the fog.”

Prioritizing his ulterior motive over the sacred mystery of the spring, Al reached out his Blue Dragon Sword and parted the fog. The tip of the sword touched thin air, and he couldn’t detect the existence of the trees that were previously crowded around the area. It was unnatural.

Following the theory of when one became lost in an unfamiliar place, it would be wiser to stay put as much as they could. However, Al knew that his two companions, who were unconventional and unknowledgeable respectively, would probably not adhere to that.

Al: “I have no choice but to look for them, huh… Give me a break.”

Breathing out a sigh at the situation where he had no choice but to actively move around, he slowly advanced into the fog.

Fog being attributed to a sign of misfortune was an idea that was accepted in every part of this world. The kind he was surrounded in was different from the fog that would be primarily thought of as a bad omen, but it didn’t lessen its eeriness.

Raking away at the fog that was so thick that he could feel it, Al strained his ears, seeking to meet up with his two companions. He was reluctant to call out to them because of his instinct. Somehow, he had a bad feeling about it. It was—

"—Who is it?"

Al stopped in his tracks, cautious of the breath that he heard beyond the fog. On the inside of the helmet, what stirred his eardrums was the sound of someone else's breath, but it was too deep for him to think that it was Priscilla, nor Schult.

The other person obviously sounded like a man. None of his company matched that description. With tensions running high, Al braced himself.

"…"

In front of him, he could hear the faint sound of footsteps drawing near. Heading towards him expeditiously.

Surely, there was no way that the deceased would actually appear —.

"—I found you, traitor."

Al: "…"

As Al shuddered, an old man with a robust physique broke through the fog, appearing before his eyes. He was a white-haired elderly man who wore well-tailored clothes, and had eyes that were murky with ambition.

He was someone that Al recognized. Eyes boiling with hatred, the man glared at him,

"You are…"

Al: "I said he's not dead!!"

Before the man spat out his rage, Al directed a slash at him that diagonally cut him down.

"…"

Unable to react in time to the sudden act of violence, the old man received the full extent of the blow. Then, the man simply dispersed into nothing as he fell on his back, melting into the fog without leaving a single trace behind.

Watching the man disappear, Al lifted up his Blue Dragon Sword while breathing heavily. There were no bloodstains on its blade.

Al: "Hey, so it's really a fake story! At least bring the dead to me. The dead!"

At the sudden appearance of the old man who had been recently brought up in a conversation, moreover, who was still alive, Al expressed his anger towards the sloppy and careless supernatural phenomenon. No matter how he looked at it, what just happened was way too realistic.

It probably wasn't because it decided to listen to Al's opinion, but as he kept on ranting, multiple shadows emerged around him, switching places with the disappearance of the fake Leip.

A huge man who was armored from head to toe, a black-clothed man who held a long katana, a half-naked, smaller man who had blades fused to his fists, and there were also others that Al could recognize. He let out an involuntary sigh.

Al: "An assembly of fellow gladiators is fine by me, but what the heck? Did you guys die without me noticing?"

"…"

There was no response. Instead of that, the black-clothed man lashed out his weapon, drawing a horizontal line.

Al immediately closed the distance, crouching down to avoid the silver flash of the blade. He had challenged that one strike thousands and ten thousands of times. His body remembered what was coming. Meeting the knee that followed after the first strike with his own sword, Al skewered his opponent the moment he lost his footing.

The huge, armored man had the habit of raising his arm whenever he executed a powerful technique. The smaller man distanced himself from those who flung themselves at him while expecting to die, fearing the damage that could be done to him. Nothing had changed. In fact, they were worsened in terms of quality.

“They’re not faithful enough to the original—!”

Carving through the torso of the large man who raised his arm, Al threw the Blue Dragon Sword at the place where he knew that the smaller man would retreat, seeing that he refused to come any closer. Spewing out fog instead of blood from where they were fatally wounded, the imposters of his old friends vanished.

The next one that appeared wasn’t a gladiator. However, Al recognized his face as well. With all his gratitude, he swung his sword.

Al: “Thank you very much for the farewell gift!!”

He sliced through the neck of the gatekeeper, the person who had given the steel helmet to him as a parting gift when he escaped from the Colosseum. Watching the leering smile dissolve into the fog, Al confirmed that he repelled the second wave of enemies.

Al: “Goddammit, making me do something that leaves a bad taste in my mouth… Everyone was alive when I ran away from there in the first place. Ah, it’s only Ghajit that I killed.”

Just as what he did to the imposter, Al had killed Ghajit by skewering him in the stomach. If that was it, then it could be said that he certainly did meet the dead.

Al: “Smells fishy… Well, it’s out of the question if you can’t pick who you want to see.”

It would only perplex the person who went to meet the deceased, if the people they were previously affiliated with were haphazardly summoned left and right. To begin with, the living were also appearing, so the preconditions of meeting the dead had already fallen apart.

Al: “Though, I’m dealing with the rumors in order. Is the afterlife the next thing I'll be debunking if things go on like this?"

In that case, he predicted that the name 'Al' would be put on the list of missing people. The requirements for that would be him being killed by the fog that he encountered moments ago, or having a separate, unpredictable event happen in the same area.

Al: "Seems like the third wave arrived while I was talking about that."

As Al assumed a stance with his sword held firmly in his hand, fed up with the whole thing, the fog in his sight began squirming around. The silent, swirling fog weaved itself to form a shape, molding it into the existence of a new being.

By now, he wouldn't be surprised no matter who came to him. —That was what he thought. However,

"…"

The being that was supposed to be constructed by the white fog, was pitch black to the point that it completely filled up his vision.

Slender limbs that were cloaked by the color of darkness. The churning fog was engulfed by the jet black shadow that expanded vehemently, losing its original form and causing the world to be overwritten with ease.

—What was replicated was a forbidden being who shouldn't have been there.

Al: "—ah,"

A hoarse breath escaped from his lungs, and Al became aware that he was pinned down and rendered useless.

He had realized that this fog replicated the people that its target had some kind of connection to, whether they were dead or not. However, this… this was breaking the rules.

This transcended life and death. This was a blasphemous act against everything that ever existed.

Al: “Ah, aaaahhhhhh—!!”

Unexplainable, vicious fury flared up from within Al, making him let out a shout that was driven by his raging emotions.

He had to obey the voice that inspired his willingness to act, kicking off the ground and cleaving through the shadow in front of him, using every last bit of his strength. That was what he needed to do.

Despite that, his shout of determination rang shrilly, the foot that was supposed to kick the ground trembled, and the sword that he was planning to hack into the enemy with had slipped out of his loosened grip, falling down onto the floor.

He couldn’t move. He wasn’t able to move. It was impossible to do so, because it was hopeless.

Thousands, ten thousands, several hundred millions of tries. Even with all that, it was futile. —Even now, Al had been already certain that it was impossible.

“…”

His teeth chattering, Al felt like his knees could give out at any moment.

In front of him, the shadow began advancing slowly towards him. The black-clad being was wearing a dress that was of the same color as the darkness that hid her from the world. The hem of her dress swayed in the shadows, and her thin arms were lifted up while straightened.

He saw every one of her delicate, supple fingers. Silent, tender, and loving, they reached out for his defenseless neck.

He would be at ease if she touched him. He would be at ease. That’s why—

“…”

The sudden jolt of terror caused Al to crumple to the ground, landing squarely on his bottom. Just like that, the inadvertent petrification of his body had worn off. Doing everything he could to pull back, he attempted to distance himself from her.

Al: “S…top. I, I’m… I’m…!”

“…”

His voice cracking, Al’s shout refused to manifest as one. The shadow didn’t pay attention to his rejection, closing the distance that he had just widened, walking up to him and persisting in laying her fingers on him.

Al was on the verge of letting out a scream of despair, but—

Al: “Eh?”

The next moment, the shadow’s chest was pierced by a crimson, lambent sword from behind.

While he was taken aback by the sight that was unfolding before him, a blinding light emerged from where the blade had struck immediately after. A red and white refulgence swelled up one after another, and the darkness that was made out of the fog burst into flames instantaneously. Her whole body was fully blanketed in fire.

“—How frivolous. In the end, a counterfeit is nothing more than this.”

Beyond the fog that was evaporating into a scarlet blaze, the voice of the bored-looking girl reached Al’s ears. On the other side of the wall of flames that flickered between them, there stood Priscilla, a crimson sword held in one hand.

The power of the treasured sword had incinerated the shadow that was weaved by the fog. It had been, right in front of Al.

Al: “How, dare…”

Priscilla: “…”

Al: “Look at what you’ve done! In front of me, how could you… bhah?!”

Priscilla: “Hold your tongue. Do not point your misdirected anger at me, foolish commoner.”

As Al grinded his teeth, his body shaking with raw fury, Priscilla ruthlessly delivered a sharp blow to the side of his face with her sword. Tipped over by the force of the hit, Al blinked in surprise from the impact.

Al: “Ah, kah… Hh, Prin… woah! Hot! Gyaah! Fire! Ahh, fire!”

Priscilla: “This is your penalty for your insolence. With the flames of the Yang Sword, you shall become a little bald and reflect on your actions.”

As the result of receiving punishment from the heartless Priscilla, a part of Al’s helmet was lit on fire. He made an effort to put it out by desperately rolling around on the forest floor, sinking to the ground in a slovenly manner after the flames were extinguished.

Looking down at Al, Priscilla stuck her Yang Sword into the ground, letting out a disdainful sniff as she did.

Priscilla: “The more shackles that are chained to one, the more they will be tempted by these kinds of evils. The more one puts on a front of disinterest, the more likely they will be to turn out like this. How disgraceful. How laughable.”

Al: “P-Princess, are you the real one? You’re not fake, right?”

Priscilla: “If I step on you like I usually do, will the pleasure cause you to recall your memories?”

Al: “Wow, really faithful to the original! You’re the real one!”

Looking up at the beautiful girl who was tilting her head with a touch of her cruelty, Al was relieved, feeling that he had returned to the world that was within the territory of sanity.

Right before that, he still felt the effects of the terror that had been replicated, but now that it had been dissipated into the fog, he could tell himself that it was a counterfeit. There was no problem. There shouldn’t be.

For now, he could simply be happy with being able to meet up, and also how neither of them were harmed in any way.

Al: “You’re completely fine?”

Priscilla: “There is no possible way that I will be enticed by such a lowly illusion. Do not move unnecessarily from where you are. The fog will be clear soon. Schult shall be clearing it out.”

Al: “Schult-chan will? Why?”

Priscilla: “I have given him the answer. If Schult is not an egregious fool that knows no bounds, then there is no problem.”

With the mention of the young butler who wasn’t present at the moment, Al was puzzled by Priscilla’s doubtless, unhesitating assertion. However, his puzzlement wasn’t solved by words, but rather, it was solved by the results.

“…”

A twisting curve. It was definite, greatly distorting Al’s vision to the point that it could only be described as that.

Within the contorting realm, the scenery alone was wrenched out of shape, since there were no changes to Priscilla, who remained standing with her arms crossed. Leaving her and Al unharmed, only the world was given a tremendous twist, warping and tearing off. After that, the fog gradually came apart, shredded indiscriminately —

Al: “No way.”

Right after Al blinked his eyes, the fog that had been scattered around in huge quantities had completely vanished. He and Priscilla were back inside of the forest—and in addition to that, they were transferred onto a patch of grass on the side of the spring.

In front of the dumbfounded Al, a spring that wasn’t that large was stretched across the area. The water was crystal clear, with countless water weeds floating on its surface, and he could see that the petals were swaying in the wind here and there.

And, a boy was standing in the middle of the spring, waist-deep in the water with both of his hands raised in the air.

Al: “Schult-chan?! What are you doing?!”

Priscilla: “Schult has banished the evil that has been encircling this spring. Creating the fog, leading astray those who lost their way, and submerging them into the spring when they have been spellbound. A bewitching, hideous evil such as that."

Saying that to the astonished Al, Priscilla glared at the spring with an expression of displeasure. Noticing that the two were present, Schult's face lit up with joy, and he started heading in their direction.

Schult: "Pr-Priscilla-sama! Al-sama! I found it, as you can see! The Water Mirror, it was sunken under the water just as you taught me!"

Al: "By 'Just as you taught me', you mean…"

Schult: "In the book that was given to me, it was just as what was written in the fairytale!"

As Schult said that while wading through the water, making his way back to them, Al was struck speechless, remembering the book that the boy had been reading. The book that Priscilla had made Schult read until he knew it by heart, making him recite it even when they were in the forest. The book was about—

Priscilla: "Springs, lakes, and the edge of the water. Near those places, there are an abundance of anecdotes such as this one. If that is so, in areas of water where its flow is concentrated into one place, mana is prone to piling up in there. Naturally, although rare, there are cases where it would give rise to phenomenons like this."

Schult: "The secret of how not to be tempted by the monster, or the hollow, at the edge of the water was written in it!"

Priscilla: "It is a fairytale to read aloud to children, amusingly."

Priscilla explained, casually closing one of her eyes, but Al's stupefaction remained lingering, unable to be subdued. That meant that she had already discerned the truth of the spring, right from the very moment where she caught wind of a part of the rumor.

Schult: "Priscilla-sama, this is the Water Mirror. I broke it, and the fog disappeared."

Jumping out of the spring, Schult made a dash towards Priscilla, even though he was soaked to the bone. In front of her, he handed over a faintly white, translucent crystal to her. That was probably the Water Mirror.

Priscilla: “Well done. I shall praise you for it.”

Schult: “Thank you very much! I am happy that I could be of help!”

As Priscilla received the Water Mirror, drawing back her chin, a broad smile spread across Schult’s face. Watching the two’s interaction from behind, Al scratched the back of his neck, feeling awkward.

Al: “So, is the case settled now? The incident was caused by the evildoings of the accumulated mana, or whatever.”

Priscilla: “—Like that, an incompetent one might have jumped to that conclusion before heading back.”

Detecting a hint of menace in her callous remark, both Al and Schult widened their eyes. Shortly afterwards, the Water Mirror burst into flames in Priscilla’s hand. Transparent chunks of mana were scorched by the heat, and then—

[—hhk]

The Water Mirror changed its form abruptly, flinging itself out of Priscilla’s hand. Two pairs of wings, a small, blue-colored body, and goggling compound eyes—it was an abnormal being that had the body of a human, along with the wings and head of an insect.

Letting out a high-pitched shriek, the misshapen being attempted to escape from the area.

However—

Priscilla: “—Do you really believe that I will let you escape with ease, Evil Spirit?”

The tip of the twirling Yang Sword sliced off the wings of the small being, boring through its torso and pinning it to the ground. Immobilized on the ground like a preserved specimen, the abnormal being thrashed its limbs around, struggling to free itself.

"—hhk"

Priscilla: "Do not chitter about like a bird. Combined with your appalling appearance, I am thoroughly disgusted by your existence."

Priscilla twisted her sword in an irritated manner, drawing out additional screams from the insect-like being. Witnessing such a scene, Schult fell down, his legs giving out, and Al gulped in a large breath of air.

Al: "Princess, is that a Spirit…?"

Priscilla: "It is as you can see. For the most part, the Water Mirror had disguised itself as something that was naturally created, in an attempt to wait until we have passed through. That shamelessness, as well as its audacity to underestimate me… is deserving of ten thousand deaths."

Al: "Ohh, it's an Evil Spirit. It's the first time I've seen one…"

Al grimaced, looking at the Spirit—the Evil Spirit that was desperately gasping for breath, skewered by Priscilla's Yang Sword.

Evil Spirits were a species of Spirits, but there were no differences between the two in a strict sense. However, as Spirits that harbored malice against both people and animals, the term 'Evil Spirit' had spread far and wide. Originally, Spirits were supernatural lifeforms that were represented by mana, mostly free from the rights and wrongs of the physical world.

On the other hand, it was a rare occurrence, but Spirits that evidently bore ill will towards those around it, such as what was inside of the Water Mirror, were born. They were called 'Evil Spirits' and were given the same treatment as witchbeasts, designated as the harmful enemies of humanity.

Priscilla: "This one had been luring humans to it by utilizing the ability of the Water Mirror, drowning them in the spring and absorbing all of their od. Presumably, it used that method to amass its strength. It is similar to the traits of a carnivorous plant.”

Her explanation implied that the missing people had fallen victim to the Evil Spirit’s scheme, over and over and over.

Having the desire to meet the dead, if the missing people had entrusted their single wish to the spring, and were able to reunite with the people they wanted to see before dying, then that didn’t sound too bad. However, if they were devoured with their wishes in vain, then—

Schult: “Priscilla-sama, this Evil Spirit…? What will you do with it?”

Priscilla: “Obviously, I will dispose of it. It went ahead with its barbarous acts within my domain. There is no atonement for that, no matter how many times I shall slaughter it. Yet, I am benevolent and generous. —Since although it is deserving of ten thousand deaths, I shall be settling it with only one.”

Schult seemed to hold a small amount of sympathy for the Evil Spirit that was letting out anguished screams of pain. In spite of that, Priscilla simply paid no mind to his pity.

Perhaps the Evil Spirit had found a ray of hope in Schult’s behavior, as it stopped its thrashing limbs, lifting its neck so that the boy could see it, starting to cry out as if it was making a desperate appeal. It looked like it was acting as if it was begging for help, as if it was saying that it would do anything for it.

Schult: “—h,”

Gazing at the Evil Spirit, Schult’s voice caught in his throat, tears welling up in his eyes. Even with him glancing over at her while being at a loss for words, Priscilla’s blood red eyes did not waver even in the slightest.

And then, before unnecessary friction was created between the girl and the boy, Al interjected.

Al: “Imagine this. I did it on impulse. I won’t do it again. I’ll turn over a new leaf. Even if it’s trying to tell you that…”

Schult: “Al-sama?”

Al: “You heard it back in the village. The first victim was led by a swaying light inside the forest. That means, this guy has been targeting humans from the very beginning.”

Evil Spirits were Evil Spirits, their nature wouldn’t warp into something else so abruptly. There was no reason for their malignity either, as they were purely an enemy against humanity. Because of that, there was no need for sympathy, nor compassion.

Priscilla: “At most, you shall gradually burn to death. With that, it shall be the repose of the souls of my people.”

When Schult fell silent from Al’s words, Priscilla openly declared as such, concentrating her power into the Yang Sword.

Following her will, the blade of the Yang Sword began to emanate a red-hued light. The brilliant, blazing flames snaked towards the edge of the sword, incinerating the Evil Spirit’s tiny body.

An earsplitting screech was released. However, the shriek was eventually swallowed by the flames, fading out slowly and surely, disappearing—cut off without any warning, never to be heard again.

That was the final act for the consecutive cases of missing people—The “Nightmare of Ladrima”.

6

Al: “From the bottom of that spring, I heard that the bones of the missing people were found one after another. Most of them were turned into piles of bones, but they say that they’ll somehow be able to tell apart who’s who with the accessories that the victims were wearing.”

A few days after the incident with the spring was resolved, Al passed down what he had just heard to Priscilla.

They were on the balcony at the second floor of the Barielle Mansion, during their tea time that was between their working hours. Priscilla, who was drinking the tea that Schult had made for her, frowned at the report from the man that appeared in front of her.

Priscilla: “That spring? What are you talking about?”

Al: “It’s the after story of the Evil Spirit-related things that happened very recently! You sound like you forgot it for real and it’s scaring me!”

Priscilla: “Spring, Evil Spirit… ah, you are talking about Ladrima. Do not unearth a topic that has already lost my interest. You will make me wonder what is happening.”

Al: “Is it my fault? Was it my fault? Okay, I’m sorry~!”

Apologizing to Priscilla, who looked both disinterested and dissatisfied, Al sat down on the side opposite to her. A slightly warm breeze was weaving through the balcony, and the weather was fine to the point that the warmth of the sun could make him drowsy.

Priscilla put back her cup on the table, sniffing at Al’s lazy attitude.

Priscilla: “To begin with, how can you unearth a story that is already over, in that deplorable state of yours? Just to let you know, you played a lesser part than Schult during that day.”

Al: “Stop! ‘Cause I can’t deny that! You forgot the whole incident, but you remember that?!”

It was hard to forget the truth of him being trapped within the Water Mirror’s illusion, becoming a hindrance to his companions. Al’s face reddened inside of the helmet as he was forced to recall the memory of it, pointing a finger at Schult, who was refilling the teacups.

Al: “Really, why didn’t the Water Mirror’s trap work on you and Schult-chan? I can understand why it didn’t work on you because you’re off the charts, but Schult-chan’s just a shota!”

Schult: “Ah, yes. I am just a ‘shota’…”

Al: “Sorry to say this while you look embarrassed, but shota isn’t a word that’s used to praise someone.”

As Schult laughed shyly, Al patted his head to the point that he was messing up his hair, moving his face closer to the boy. It was as if he was asking for the key to breaking through the illusion, which Schult responded by dropping his gaze to the floor.

Schult: “I didn’t do anything special. Before even that, what illusion…?”

Al: “We’re starting there?!”

Priscilla: “It is not a difficult topic. It is just that Schult did not have a deceased person that he wished to meet, nor did he feel like he had to put on a facade and conceal his desire to, because he does not have anyone that he seeked to reunite with. Firstly, his precondition of falling victim to the Water Mirror’s illusion varied from yours.”

Stealing back Schult from Al, Priscilla put the boy in between her cleavage. While looking at the enviable sight, Al narrowed his eyes, mulling over the contents of Priscilla’s clarification.

—The reason why Schult wasn’t caught in the illusion, was because he didn’t have the happy memories to fulfill the requirements of being trapped in it.

Being an orphan, Schult was found when he was on the verge of death, and he didn’t have any memories of his family, nor did he have any memories of joyous days from before he had been taken away by Priscilla. Because of that, the illusion didn’t work on him.

If that was so, was the negation of the effects of the fog a fortunate or an unfortunate thing? Which one was it?

Al: “At the very least, I don’t feel like I was fortunate…”

It was a period of time where he was associated with the living as well as the dead during the many encounters that he had in the fog, but to Al, all of those were unwanted reunions. Besides, every one of them were fake.

"…"

His expression hidden within his helmet, Al glanced over at Priscilla, who appeared to be delighted with Schult in her arms.

The girl who had pierced the shadows with the blazing Yang Sword didn't question him about what he had seen in the fog. Of course, she probably didn't even remember what she had burnt.

Although Al understood that she wasn't being considerate or anything, that it was just the result of how she ought to exist, he found solace in her attitude, feeling gratified by it.

Priscilla: "What is it, Al? Staring at me? You cannot exchange positions with Schult."

Al: "It's true that I'm jealous, but I'm not looking at you because of that! …By the way, you really didn't see anything in the fog?"

Priscilla: "Disappointingly, the only person I am familiar with who has passed is my beloved husband."

Al: "I said he's not dead! Even though I met him in the fog! Though he's alive!"

Among the various unwanted reunions that he had, meeting Leip was one of the most awkward experiences that he ever had.

Priscilla laughed softly at his revelation, and Schult made a surprised face. After continuing to laugh for a while, she gave a slight tilt of her head.

Priscilla: "By the way, Al. Where did you hear the report of the village that you have given to me just now?"

Al: "Ah, a messenger came from the village in question just a little while ago. They told me the whole story, gave their regards to you, and… oh yeah, the flowers were delivered to the entrance."

Priscilla: "—! You utter fool! Tell me that earlier!"

Schult: "Hyah! Pr-Priscilla-sama?!"

Her eyes lighting up at the last segment of Al's report, Priscilla swept Schult up like a princess, rushing out of the balcony. Al got a late start in chasing after her, who ran off at breakneck speed, but he immediately followed her with haste.

Like that, Al finally caught up with the two at the mansion's entrance—in front of a bouquet of large flowers.

Priscilla: "Yes, yes! Grandeur, elegant, and truly adorable. I shall praise the residents of Ladrima for it!"

Putting one hand on her hip in high spirits, Priscilla broke out into a wide smile at the bouquet—the flowers of the finest quality that were brought into the mansion along with the report, its red petals blooming opulently.

Priscilla's reaction was close to when she was given a luxurious, golden dragon carriage, when she saw many bizzare works of art, and also when she admired Schult. In other words, she was elated.

Al: "Are those flowers that high quality?"

Priscilla: "Ha, how pathetic it is to be ignorant. These are flowers that only bloom in a part of Lugunica, the forest of the spring in Ladrima, called 'Kurenai'."

Al: "Never heard of them… wait, what? Did you just say that they only bloom in the forest of that spring?"

Priscilla: "They only bloom during this certain period of time. It may well as be the one thing that makes that puny village worth existing."

Crossing her arms and lifting up her bountiful chest, Priscilla nodded over and over again as if she was ascertaining the quality of the flowers.

Staring at her serene expression from the side, Al understood why she seemed so eager to resolve the incident of the spring. In retrospect, she was strongly against burning down the forest.

Her beaming face told him the reason for this, that, and everything.

Al: “So, Princess, you saved that village because you were after those flowers from the very beginning, right?”

Priscilla: “Do not utter such foolish things. Ladrima is my domain. There is no way that I will grant them my acts of goodwill only because of that. —However, I will not deny that it is why I had taken immediate action.”

Unapologetic and with no intention to hide it, Priscilla walked over to the bouquet unhesitatingly.

If the truth of her actions were known, then the villagers that extolled her as a goddess of mercy would be baffled. Of course, there was no point in letting them know. There were things that were better off staying unknown, like how people say that ignorance is bliss.

Al: “In actuality, you did save the village. Even if you were prioritizing your personal desires.”

Because Priscilla wanted to adore the large, red-hued flowers, the actions she took to do so saved the village, and it ended up leading to the villagers giving her their support. It basically proved what she always said: “This world is made to be convenient to myself.”

Schult: “Priscilla-sama, where should I bring the flowers to?”

Priscilla: “You shall adorn my room and the entire mansion with it. While the flowers still contain life, they shall please my eyes with their beauty. Do make sure to treat them attentively so that they do not wilt.”

Schult: “Understood! I will do my best!”

Following Priscilla’s orders, Schult ran off in an effort to gather all the vases in the mansion. After watching the young butler’s departure, Priscilla noticed Al’s presence, and,

Priscilla: “Ahem, Al. What are you doing? If you have the time to stand there and do nothing, go and be of assistance to Schult. Assume that every one of these petals are worth at least two times more than your life.”

Al: “…You’re being too harsh, Princess.”

With Priscilla in a good mood, in high spirits, and her tongue being as sharp as ever, Al let out a shameful, wry laugh at her razor-sharp words.

And then, before his butt was kicked by the crimson girl who had the red flowers behind her—his cruel and compassionate master, Al rushed to take part in the preparations of carrying the bouquet of flowers into the mansion.

Arc 5:
The Stars That Engrave History

Volume 16

Chapters 1-19

Chapter 1:
It Always Starts With a Visitor

1

—He breaks into a sprint, launching himself forward.

Air breezes over the sweat that drips from his brow to his eyes. He blinks it away, ignoring it. His lungs ache with every breath. His innards twist into knots.

He grits his teeth and dispels all his pain. The only thing left in his mind is the world ‘goal’.

“—!”

Someone is yelling far in the distance. Their voice draws ever nearer, closing in on Subaru as he runs. With their call as his landmark, as his beacon, he sprints onward, onward—

“—!”

The frantic voice draws him in. Heedless of the white light swamping his vision, he runs. And,

???: “Goal, in fact!”

The second he crosses the finish line clumsily drawn underfoot, the sky and the earth swap places. Small weeds poke into the crown of his head, and Subaru instantly puts his hand to the ground for a forward roll. The habitual action kills his momentum, and with two more unneeded rolls, he lands sprawled out on the ground.

Subaru: “Bhaahhh! Auhhg! Everything hurts! Everything stings! But it’s over! I did it!”

Breathing breath after ragged breath, he still finds it in him to shout. He complains as he does to invigorate his faltering heart. He mustn’t feel that his fatigue is simply wear, or that his effort is simply exertion. He must remember that this is not the end, and there is still more to come. Every time he tries to dictate where the finish line is, to give himself that satisfaction, Subaru puts his hand to his chest and thinks of that night.

???: “Good job, Subaru, I suppose.”

A small silhouette enters Subaru’s view from above. A loveable girl with long, cream hair and an extravagant outfit—Beatrice.

Her fluttering dress looks out of place in the meadow as she presents Subaru with a towel. He accepts it and vigorously towels his head dry.

Subaru: “Ah, thanks. Was looking to cool down so this’s perfect.”

Beatrice: “I’ll tell you that Petra cooled it before you go pinning this on me, in fact. Go thank her and she’ll jump for joy, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Petra’s really considerate that way. But man, weird to see you out here, Beako. Something putting you in a different mood than usual?”

Subaru swings his arms as he sits up and slides over to Beatrice. She puts her hand to her hip, averting her gaze.

Beatrice: “Just whimsy, in fact.”

Subaru: “Oh wow so it was whimsy huh.”

Beatrice: “…And I wanted to personally see what you’re like when you’re putting in your best, I suppose.”

While keeping her gaze averted, Beatrice easily unveils her hidden intentions. She’s so much more honest now. Subaru feels keenly that time has earned him her trust. Beatrice looks like she wants to say something to Subaru as he grins, but,

Beatrice: “Now, this must involve more than just gallivanting about, in fact. What comes next, I suppose?”

Subaru: “I’ll have you know this gallivanting is pretty taxing on its own, mademoiselle. While I cannot say whether I’ll meet your expectations, I'm tackling the obstacle course of dreams next."

Beatrice: "…Ah, right, in fact. You mean the playground that Garfiel built in the forest, I suppose. 'Obstackle…?'"

Subaru: "Obstacle course. You don't have to force yourself to memorize it. Just ignore it."

Beatrice: "But Subaru, I want to understand every word you say, in fact."

The smooth line makes Subaru's cheeks relax even further. Beatrice looks puzzled by his reaction, before she realizes what she just said and her expression instantly shifts. Her cheeks are adorably pink as berries.

Beatrice: "N-No, I didn't mean it like th… it just came out that way, I suppose."

Subaru: "Nonono, no worries, I know exactly what you meant. Everything's cool, I love you too."

Beatrice: "You know exactly nothing, in fact!"

Subaru chuckles as he jumps to his feet and scoops a sour-faced Beatrice into his arms. She looks displeased in his hold, but makes no complaints about being carried.

Beatrice: "Subaru, you reek of sweat, I suppose."

Subaru: "Breathe with your mouth then. Or just drain the mana directly."

Beatrice: "I'll sap you dry if that's what you're asking, in fact."

Subaru: "You're gonna be the one crying after that."

Beatrice: "A-As if, I suppose! Cease your nonsense, in fact!"

With Beatrice in his arms, Subaru breaks into a run. His breathing returns to normal during their banter. Beatrice makes a perfect weight for running from the track in the field to the obstacle course in the forest. Since she’s far lighter than she looks. Basically a feather.

Subaru soars with her in hand, so light he may have grown wings.

2

Their new mansion is surrounded in just as much green as the old one. Shrubs grow in abundance throughout the verdant mountains. Subaru feels the cool breeze wash over his bangs as he launches into a run.

Subaru: “Okay! All! Right!”

The forest is so lush that it drowns everything visible in green. Here, Subaru sprints forward and lightly puts his hand to a sideways log, defeating the obstacle with only a small hop and his momentum. ‘Vaulting’ proves an effective means of locomotion in places strewn with obstacles, or in urban areas with copious buildings. Parkour champions the technique: a sport that Subaru often watched on television, all while amazed at the superhuman feats of the athletes. He never anticipated once that he would be training himself in this field.

Subaru: “Hup! Hah! Okay!”

The climbing apparatus is the star of this obstacle course that Subaru got Garfiel to construct. One large post composes the central pillar, while logs are assembled together in the space around it. It is essentially a classical jungle gym but with a slight avant-garde flair.

The thing looks a mess to climb even while taking it slowly. Subaru leaps onto it with all the momentum from his sprint, using the slight contact his fingers and toes purchase to shoot himself upwards, as if scaling a vertical wall. He races quicker than the eye can catch all to the top of the jungle gym. But there still more to this stunt, and more purpose to the gym.

Subaru: “Hup! Hup! Hup!”

Subaru reaches the slight footing at the peak before hopping to the uppermost point of the structure. He gazes down. Drop looks about six meters. Obviously, nothing is laid upon the wild, mossy ground. While the earth could have been soft once, it is now well-trodden and hard. Meaning the terrifying fall is definitely going to hurt. However,

Subaru: "—Hah!"

Without any hesitation, Subaru leaps down to the hard earth. Entirely undefended as he is, this jump may appear the worst of his usual recklessness. But Subaru unhesitatingly stretches out his legs and contacts the ground. Suffering the pain of the impact, he writhes in hideous agony—or not.

Subaru "…"

Subaru bends his legs and ducks to dissolve the impact, breaking into a forward roll to further avoid damage. One more roll, and another onto his hands and knees, before he darts to his feet, sustaining no injury at all. He merely brushes himself off, wiping the dirt from his track suit.

This is another parkour stunt: the land and roll. The stunt involves a landing combined with a roll to disperse the impact. It allows one to safely fall from moderate heights. While it's no big deal for superhumans, it is a question of life or death for ordinary human Subaru. Just practicing this technique should be broadening his horizons for what he can do.

Subaru: "So that's basically it. That improve your opinion of me?"

Subaru spreads his arms wide and looks to Beatrice, who watched the whole thing. Beatrice sits calmly on the stump for spectators, her eyes widening.

Beatrice: "Honestly, I am a little surprised, in fact. It did improve my opinion somewhat, I suppose."

Subaru: "You're back in love with me?"

Beatrice: "Subaru, recently, I've been having trouble deducing what you're trying to make me say, in fact!"

Subaru: “I only want to know you love me.”

Beatrice’s attitude already demonstrates it more than enough. Subaru gives the red-faced, indignant Beatrice a smile before glancing behind him.

As shown by that spot of parkour, part of the forest has been repurposed into an obstacle course for Subaru. No one’s going to complain about it, since it’s on Roswaal’s land. But Subaru has to keep his honest urge to send Garfiel occupationally into construction, having seen how easily he cleared the timber and built this, to himself.

Garfiel is surprisingly nimble-fingered and attuned to detail. Perhaps his young, reckless talent will bloom in more fields in the future.

Subaru: “Anyway, guess we’re calling it here for today.”

Beatrice: “Huwah, I suppose.”

Subaru catches the towel that Beatrice throws to him, and wipes off his sweat as he did in the field. Then he stretches his legs, waist, so on. The old world already drove the importance of limbering up into him, but now that he’s seriously exercising his body, he truly does feel the effects.

He can’t do the splits, but he has grown more flexible. He puts his foot to a nearby tree-trunk and stretches his body out. When he seats himself and spreads his legs, Beatrice walks over behind him and presses him down, letting him fall forward.

Subaru: “Done stretching. Alrighty, let’s get ourselves back to the mansion and blob out.”

Beatrice: “Indeed, in fact.”

That comment would’ve earned him an insult before, but Beatrice accepts it without argument. She is both accustomed to how Subaru handles her, and to responding to it. Beatrice reaches out for him. Subaru accepts, and hand-in-hand, they exit the forest.

Subaru: “Beako, are you holding back on the mana drain? It feels like you’re taking less than usual.”

Beatrice: “I’m at least considerate enough to take care when you’re exhausted, I suppose.”

Subaru: “My my, how incredibly your opinion’s changed in just these two short hours. But we don’t want you to suffer from this, go back to the usual.”

Subaru smiles wryly at Beatrice as he lifts their linked hands. She glances aside at him and sighs. Instantly, the usual sensation hits. Beatrice is directly entering the interior of Subaru’s closed gate. This is the backdoor dedicated to extracting mana from Subaru, without passing through the gateway. Only she can use this backdoor, and it is Subaru’s lifeline.

Subaru’s abused gate has completely stopped functioning. But the loss of his gate does not stop his od from generating slight amounts of mana. Actually it is proceeding to generate more and more mana despite the lack of an outlet. If left like this, the mana inside Subaru will frenzy, and he’ll pop like an overinflated frog—is how he understands it.

But leaving aside whether he’ll actually explode, Beatrice tells him it’s dangerous. Since the mana exchange required to preserve their contract simultaneously resolves the issue, Subaru and Beatrice absolutely must have physical contact at least once daily. Subaru is constantly stockpiling tiny loads of mana, and Beatrice needs mana to function. Both in terms of personality and constitution, their compatibility is excellent. Although,

Subaru: “If you could mana drain people outside your contractor, we could easily keep you in mega loli mode.”

Beatrice: “Don’t you go mulling over that, I suppose. I thought we came to an agreement about that ages ago, in fact. And you are amassing mana, even if it is in small amounts, I suppose. Even if it is tinier than a sparrow’s teardrops.”

Beatrice has an idiosyncrasy where she only mana drains her contractor. She had been constantly and randomly draining mana from people in Roswaal's mansion before, but apparently that involved using the Forbidden Archive as a mediator.

Beatrice: "The Forbidden Archive was arranged to mediate my mana intake, draining it from entities inside the mansion, in fact."

Was Beatrice's explanation. So the plan to drain mana from Garfiel, who looks to abound in the stuff, or from Emilia, initially struggling with her vast pool of it, is a wash. It's like someone's silently telling him: of course it wouldn't work out that perfectly.

But, while it disappointed him at first, he's glad for it now. Touching Beatrice is now a ritual representing more than just their relationship, and he likes feeling the truth of their connection. The relationship between Subaru the spiritualist and Beatrice the spirit differs somewhat from those of normal spiritualists. They need to recognize how their partnership represents them, by doing things like this.

Beatrice: "I'm done, in fact. This is enough to fill me for today, I suppose."

Subaru: "Oh, kay, haauh… nothing, to it… haa… haa…"

Beatrice: "I've already decided not to comment when it comes to your bravado, in fact."

Done with their daily ritual, Beatrice gazes flatly at Subaru. They step off the forest trail and onto paved ground, proving that they're close to the mansion. The path resembles the one from Earlham Village times, but now that it crosses through the nearby town of Costuul, it all fells far less remote.

Beatrice: "If I were going to pick, I'd say I preferred the quiet forest, I suppose."

Subaru: "I think noisy towns and quiet forests both have their appeal. I wouldn't pick one over the other. But since the Capital's the only big city I've seen yet, Costuul feels pretty novel."

Beatrice: "Hrmpf, in fact. Subaru, your ideas are mismatched with Betty’s, I suppose.” Beatrice pouts in clear dissatisfaction.

Subaru pulls her onward, chiding her with a “yeah yeah” as he heads towards the path to the mansion. When,

???: “—Subaru-sama! Beatrice-chan!”

Someone shouts their names, and the two of them look up. They find a girl running towards them from the road to the mansion. Her face and voice are familiar, and her adorable expression brightens upon sighting Subaru and Beatrice. Her auburn, shoulder-length hair flutters in the wind. The catlike roundness of her eyes give her expressive face even more charm. Anyone would catch themselves smiling at her friendly, lovable attitude.

A sweet wildflower, out of anyone’s reach. That would be a good descriptor for Petra Leyte.

Petra: “I was just leaving to go fetch you two. Thank goodness we didn’t miss each other.”

Says Petra after running up to them, out of breath with her hand to her chest. Subaru gives Petra, who had grown to his chest, a pat on the head in response.

Subaru: “What’s the rush? We weren’t gonna escape. Did you just get those baked tarts at the perfect temperature for us or something?”

Beatrice: “Then it’s sensible that she would make haste, in fact. Since it’s incredibly important, I suppose.”

Petra: “No! That’s so not it! You guys are being jerks!”

Petra puffs out her cheeks as Beatrice nods solemnly, and goes to remove Subaru’s hand from her head. But once her hands clasp his own, she stops. She keeps that hold on Subaru’s hand, cheeks flushed red as she continues,

Petra: “Leaving the tarts aside for the moment, it’s something else. The mansion has received a guest. Emilia-sama said to go and fetch you, and…”

Subaru: “Wait, Petra. Just stop there. I’m getting a terrible feeling about this.”

Petra: “Huh?”

Clearly wary, Subaru cuts Petra off. She looks surprised at this, but Beatrice doesn’t. Well yeah. Beatrice has witnessed the same things that Subaru has, considering they’ve been together ever since moving to the new mansion. Quite a few things have happened between now and the day they left SANCTUARY.

Subaru: “And the conversation pattern goes exactly the same. When you show up to fetch me, or Frederica does, or sometimes Otto or Garfiel do, it always means trouble. I’ve learned that much.”

Beatrice: “A guest suddenly appears while Subaru is out… indeed, this absolutely is the pahttern bespeaking misfortune, I suppose.”

Petra: “B-Beatrice-chan, you’re using words that Subaru-sama does…! Subaru-sama, stop teaching her weird things!”

Subaru: “The mansion’s consensus is that Beako gets to do what she wants. But anyway, the guest. Petra, me and Beatrice are absent due to stomach-ache.”

Petra: “No! You! Don’t! Emilia-sama will be furious! And I have no reason to disobey her. Come on, this way!”

Petra used to be such a Subaru adherent, but living here has led her to oppose him when needed.

Her hands grab Subaru’s arm and she pulls him along, putting in her greatest effort to drag him away. As she does, Subaru glances to Beatrice, her hand in his.

Subaru: “Beako.”

Beatrice: “Enjoy your day, in fact.”

Subaru: “You’re coming too!”

Beatrice: “Ghhah, I suppose!”

It starts as a plea for help, and instantly transforms into embroilment. Beatrice quickly attempts to shake him off, but Subaru keeps a tight grip on her left hand. And her right hand is restrained by Petra, leaving her doubly without an escape. With Subaru refusing Beatrice's escape, and Petra refusing Subaru's escape, the trio venture along in their nonsense arrangement to the mansion.

Subaru: "I know it's too late to kick the visitor out… but that just makes me wish we'd been told sooner."

Petra: "You mean, to have a messenger on messengers? But then we won't know far we need to go out to anticipate them beforehand. That much is clear."

Subaru: "I'm just saying it'd be nice for everyone's mental health and relations if we did something about that. Anyway, do you know who today's visitor is, Petra?"

The one receiving the guest is going to be Petra, Frederica, or Ram. One of the three. Since Petra is out here fetching Subaru, one of the other two will be dealing with the guest.

Petra: "Umm, well, not really…"

Subaru: "You don't know? Maybe you didn't see their crest, but you'd have to've seen the messenger. And even if you didn't I'm sure they would've told you something when they told you to fetch us…"

Petra: "They were in an incredible rush, saying that the guest was extremely important. But they didn't look important."

Subaru: "You can't judge much off of people's appearances. Sometimes you get little girls with powerful drills who also command dark powers. Though they may seem a mere dress-wearing loli, in truth they preside over—"

Beatrice: "Shut it, I suppose!"

Beatrice is the one calling off the jokes, leaving Subaru silent. Petra looks at the silenced Subaru, still worried.

Petra: "I don't judge people based on their appearances anymore either."

Subaru: "That's good, Petra. Dunno what happened to change it but it was important you did."

Petra: "I thought the new nasty-eyed choresman who came to the village was a weirdo… but he really wasn't."

Subaru: "It boomeranged!"

Stricken somewhere that he didn't expect, Subaru tilts his head at Petra. Never mind her first impressions of him, the stuff she mentioned earlier is important. Petra doesn't judge people by their appearance, but she still thought this visitor was odd.

Subaru: "So what're they like?"

Petra: "I guess… a kitty?"

Subaru: "A kitty?"

The image of a grey cat spirit, long tail wagging, comes to mind at the word 'kitty'. Subaru's feelings for him are complex, and there are things they must talk about upon his eventual return.

Subaru: "Gotta ask him for his daughter."

Beatrice: "I thought of Bubby too, but Petra's surely seen him before, I suppose. So it can't be him, in fact. Petra, what kind of kitty was it, I suppose?"

Petra: "It's so cute that you're calling them a kitty too, Beatrice-chan."

Beatrice: "Pet! Ra!"

Says Beatrice indignantly to a teasing Petra. Petra gives an easy, "Sorry, sorry," and looks up in thought.

Petra: "I guess they weren't really a kitty. I haven't really seen one before, but I suppose they were a catfolk demi-human. I always think of Big Bro Garfiel when I think of demi-humans though."

Subaru: “Garf’s mixed race, and he doesn’t have any blatantly obvious demi-human traits. Best you can manage on closer inspection is how intense his eyes are.”

And I guess you could mention his sharp canines. According to Garfiel, his canines will always keep growing, much like a rodent’s incisors, and he needs to chew on hard objects to maintain their length and sharpness. It’s not uncommon for Ram or Frederica to flip out at him after catching him chewing on the mansion’s banisters.

Subaru: “So a demi-human who looks demi-human has arrived. If they’re catfolk then they’re probably a beastman, and I do know a couple of those.”

It’s a given in the Capital, but Costuul also has many beastfolk demi-humans. A long period of time has dissolved the discrimination against demi-humans in the domain of Roswaal the Demi-human Fancier. Making this area a nicer region for demi-humans to live in, or so says the local bunny-eared bartender. But Petra, who spends her time working in the mansion and goes to Earlham Village rather than Costuul on her days off, naturally is less familiar with them.

Petra: “I get it. Could you show me around Costuul on my next day off, then?”

Subaru: “Yeah, sure. I’m sure you’ll get to go there for shopping and stuff too, and you wanna be making as many friends as you can.”

Subaru gives that poorly-thought promise, and Petra pumps her fist. Beatrice only sighs and smiles wryly at Subaru.

Subaru: “Aaaand we’re here. Back at our beloved abode.”

The gates come into view during their conversation, and Subaru lifts his hands, linked as they are with the girls’. He ignores their protests as the gesture forces them to stretch, correcting his own posture and looking at the mansion.

This is the new mansion replacing the old, burnt one. Its exterior gives the same western feel that the previous did, and is similarly designed. There is space between the front gates and the doorway, with garden lawns flanking the gravel path. On the right side is a fountain, while the left continues into a path to the side end of the mansion, where carriages are parked, that has stables for earth dragons.

The fountain comes with an installation of colorful flowers, and at a fixed time daily, it sprinkles them with water. One section of the flowerbed holds Subaru and Petra's vegetable garden, letting them harvest fresh vegetables in-season. It's quite well-praised when the crop is bountiful.

The group pass through the front garden and the gravel path, leading them to large double-doors. The knocker shares the shape of the Mathers family crest, using the raptor motif, which indeed makes this feel like the primary estate of the Mathers.

Subaru: "I noticed an unfamiliar carriage over by the stables. Guess it's the visitor's."

Petra: "The carriage is a dragon carriage, but it wasn't being pulled by anything like Patrasche-chan. It wasn't a dragon, it was more like a big dog."

Subaru: "Pulled by a big dog… actually, maybe it's…"

Thinking back on his internal bestiary, Subaru gets a clue of the visitor's identity. But before he can reach a definite answer, the solution ends up finding him. Which is to say,

???: "Oh! Hullo mister, it's been foooreeeveeer! Have you been well?!"

A stupidly cheerful, high-pitched voice comes hurtling at Subaru, startling him as he opens the door. Petra gives a wry smile, and Beatrice squeezes Subaru's hand slightly. With these reactions in the corner of his eye, he looks ahead at the figure bounding toward him.

They are small. They are shorter than Petra, but a little taller than Beatrice. Meaning that they're a child's height, but this may be as tall as she'll ever get. Her body is covered in short, orange fur, and her alert cat ears are adorable. Her eyes abound with curiosity and her loud mouth is curved mischievously. Her long, orange braid is very feminine, and her perfectly-fit white robe makes her all the more cute.

She's effectively a bipedal kitten, and in some sense, a cat-lover's dream. A catfolk—and one who Subaru knows.

Subaru: "Mimi! It's been ages. You're as full of energy as always!"

Mimi: "Mhm! Yup! I'm super duper full of energy! You get it, mister! And I even grew bigger and now I'm an adult. Hmhmhm!"

Mimi puts her hand to her hip, smirking boastfully as her tail sways to and fro. She just looks like a lively, energetic girl, but actually she is a vice-chair of the beastman mercenary company Iron Fang, with considerable fighting prowess and many other surprises. She once helped Subaru in fighting the White Whale and Petelgeuse, and shares his tendency to be cloyingly friendly and familiar with anyone, which perhaps makes her the best friend he unaffectedly made during the whole affair.

Incidentally Iron Fang is basically the private army of Emilia's political opponent Anastasia Hoshin, so they are an enemy going by that. But being hostile towards Mimi is entirely tasteless.

Subaru: "Thanks for coming all the way. Right, introductions. This cute maid here is Petra. She's an upcoming almighty maid who works in our mansion. And this blatantly wary loli is Beatrice."

Mimi: "Okey! I got it! The maid who's Petra's and your baby! Got it! I won't forget it!"

Beatrice: "I-I feel she's remembering me by hideously improper means, in fact…!"

Beatrice is trembling, hiding behind Subaru's back. It seems she's scared of Mimi and how unforgivingly forward she is. Mimi mercilessly dives into her, Mimi: “What? You’ll never be big like me if you shrink up like that! Come on, get out here, out you get!”

Beatrice: “Wh, no, wa, stop, I suppose! Betty doesn’t mind being small, and you’re too small to be saying this anyway, in fact!”

Mimi: “Hmhm! Listen to the rooky. I’m huge inside, so my outsides’re gonna catch up to me before long! The Boss said so!”

Beatrice: “It’s nonsense, I suppose!”

Mimi pulls Beatrice to the front, manhandling her entirely. Beatrice looks to Subaru for rescue, but he enjoys watching her being people-shy while also making friends, and simply watches over her with a fatherly look.

Petra: “Um, Subaru-sama. Beatrice-chan is looking to you in sheer terror.”

Subaru: “People mature by battling their weaknesses. Beako is a little too averse to new things, so it’s best she start developing that challenger’s mentality now. Let us watch her in silence, mom.”

Petra: “M-Mom… y-yes, let’s.”

Subaru senses his mistake as he sees Petra blush and fall silent. But correcting it would be a mess so he decides to go with it. He turns his attention to Mimi, dancing circles around the room with a tight grip on Beatrice’ hands.

Subaru: “So if you’re here, then are the others… are your brothers or Ricardo with you? Also I’d really rather goddamn Julius not show up without booking in first.”

Anastasia’s Knight, Julius Juukulius, has a very complicated relationship with Subaru. Subaru doubts he can be sincere with him even when seeing him face-to-face. Subaru knows he has some trouble dealing with Anastasia, but she’s still preferable to Julius. But Mimi casts aside Subaru’s worries with a shake of her head.

Mimi: “Nope. Not Hetaro or Tivey or the Boss or Julius or my Lady are here! It’s just me! I’m here all on my own! Hmhm!”

Subaru: “That’s impressive and all, but… what are you here for, then?”

Mimi: “Ummm, uhhh, oh right!”

Mimi tilts her head, before pouncing onto Beatrice. Heedless of Beatrice as she hurries to support her, Mimi gives a sunny smile,

Mimi: “I’m inviting you to a party! My Lady said let’s all hang out! So here I am to invite you! I’m super excited! Super! Excited!”

Chapter 2:
Pedigree of the Poseur

Subaru tilts his head, Mimi merrily waving her arms as she takes the lead. ‘Party’ is a pretty extravagant word, and it’s coming out of nowhere.

Subaru: “A party invite… from Anastasia-san? But that’s still like, what happened? Is there something to celebrate?”

Mimi: “Celebrate? Celebritty? Whatever! Who cares, it’ll be so much fun eating food and getting drunk! So much! Fun!”

Subaru: “You’re clearly too young to be drinking.”

Mimi: “Heeheehee. I’m an adult as of this year! The Boss says I can drink! But my Lady says I can’t.”

Mimi puffs out her chest, and the belled ornaments in her hair chime. Subaru’s eyes shoot open in shock,

Subaru: “What, you’re allowed to drink, then you’re fully grown?! No way. How old are you!”

Mimi: “I just turned fifteen! So I’m an adulty adult. I’m a big girl!”

Subaru: “Big girls don’t talk like they’re still in grade school! But anyway…”

Having regained some composure, Subaru puts his hand to his chest as he recognizes the differences in adulthood between this world and the old one. It’s essentially the same as genpuku. The age of adulthood is about fifteen in this world, and that’s when it’s legal to drink and smoke.

Subaru: “…would be the right way to consider it, Petra?”

Petra: “Yes, that’s right. But going into more detail, boys leave their homes and find work at fifteen, while some girls start getting married around then. If they don’t get married, it’s also when they’ll usually start working. Like me."

Subaru: "Which means you left your home pretty early. You're a feisty girl, you."

Petra: "Heehee, I'm feis… I don't think that was a compliment."

Petra glares at Subaru, who heads over to an exhausted Beatrice. Mimi has released her, and her pigtails are in some disarray. She looks bitterly up at Subaru.

Beatrice: "After participating in your training and being manhandled by this cat, Betty is exhausted, I suppose… Subaru, carry me, in fact."

Subaru: "Participating? All you did was watch…"

Beatrice spreads her arms out, reaching for Subaru, and he scoops her into his arms. He's more muscular than he used to be, and since she's light as a feather, the weight doesn't bother him at all. Though, he does sort of look like a dad cradling his daughter now, which is not ideal.

Mimi: "Oooh! You're holding the baby! That's awesome! Hold me too! Me too!"

Subaru: "Your Boss'd be another story, but I physically can't do it. Request denied."

Mimi: "What! That's no fair! No fair! Unfair! Unfair!"

Mimi scampers around Subaru as he holds Beatrice. For some reason Beatrice smiles victoriously. Eventually Mimi grabs onto Subaru's track suit,

Mimi: "Okey then! I'll just climb up!"

Subaru: "Idiot! Stop, you'll topple me over. Petra help me stop he— what're you doing?"

Petra: "Ah, erm, I'm not jealous or anything. I'm not. But would you mind if I climbed you, Subaru-sama?"

Subaru: “Um yes?!”

Subaru holds a little girl, with a kitten girl and a maid girl pursuing him incessantly. The shenanigans in the foyer continue without resolution.

When,

???: “—I thought you were taking forever to return, and here you are monkeying about in the foyer.”

The frigid voice makes Subaru and Petra stand up straight.

Mimi’s eyes sparkle with curiosity for the new speaker, while Beatrice sighs.

The voice is coming from the stairway overlooking the foyer. Subaru glances up to find a girl standing there, where she can see the four of them She has pink hair, and wears a short-cut maid outfit. Her cerise eyes look apathetic, and though she is cute, there is nothing cuddly about her. This is Petra’s colleague, Ram, the head of the maids in the mansion.

She gazes coldly at Subaru and snorts a breathy, “Ha.”

Ram: “Filthy.”

Subaru: “You’re the filthy one for reaching that conclusion! Maybe you can argue about how sound this is, but it’s still a heartwarming scene!”

Ram: “You always bend reality to suit your purposes. But, Barusu, you mustn’t forget. —I judge only by what I’ve seen.”

Subaru: “Maybe you could take off your weird filter before you start looking please?”

Ram glances at him disinterestedly, apparently unwilling to hear him out. She ignores the stunned Subaru and looks over at Petra, who instantly starts to quake.

Ram: “Petra. I told you to drag Barusu here by the neck if you had to. Would you like to explain why you are playing with him in the foyer?”

Petra: “I-I’m sorry, Sister Ram.”

Ram: “It seems you weren’t listening, Petra. I believe I asked, why are you dawdling here in the foyer?”

Subaru: “Stop acting like the sister from hell. It was just me screwing around. Petra’s not to blame.”

Ram: “Of course she’s to blame. I’ll pummel you, Barusu.”

Subaru: “She’s only a little to blame!”

Pleased with that concession, Ram jerks her chin to the room behind her.

Ram: “You mustn’t keep Emilia-sama waiting. Barusu, to the upstairs parlor. Petra, the dining room. Beatrice-sama, accompany Barusu.”

Beatrice: “Of course, I suppose.”

Mimi: “What about me? Come on, what about me?”

Petra regretfully lets go of Subaru’s sleeve, but he remains caught in the energetic catgirl’s firm grip. Ram brushes aside her hair, caught on her cheek.

Ram: “I ask you accompany Barusu to the parlor, dear guest. I’m afraid that your companion is unsettled by your absence.”

Mimi: “Hokay. Guess I gotta go back then. I done a no do.”

Even Ram is polite when receiving guests. Mimi laughs boisterously in reply, but Subaru catches something that he can’t ignore.

Subaru: “Companion? But I thought you said you were alone?”

Mimi: “I did, and I am. Not Hetaro or Tivey or the Boss or Julius or my Lady are here. But Joshua’s here. I’m alone being Joshua’s boddygar, boddygard?”

Subaru: “Bodyguard?”

Mimi: “Yes! Boddygard!”

Mimi puffs out her chest, smirking. Subaru pats her head before looking back up at Ram.

Subaru: “I’m sorry. I was so sure it was only Mimi. I didn’t realize I was making someone wait.”

Ram: “So it seems. It’s fine, but do hurry. Emilia-sama’s patience will tire before long.”

Subaru: “Can’t have that. Okay, see you later Petra. Let’s go, Mimi.”

Mimi: “Whoo!”

Who is this mysterious Joshua?

He must be someone from Anastasia’s faction who Subaru doesn’t know. If they’re sending him as a messenger, and appointing Mimi as his bodyguard, he must have suitable rank. He could have an important post if Mimi refers to him without an honorific, but then again considering how indiscriminately friendly Mimi is, it doesn’t exactly indicate much.

Petra: “I’ll bake the tarts once everything has settled down. You will taste them, won’t you, Subaru- sama?”

Whispers Petra before darting out of the scene. Frederica must be waiting for her in the dining room. Subaru doesn’t know whether they’ll serve food in the parlor, but either way, it seems like it’s going to be a while before he gets to eat Petra’s tarts.

Subaru: “Who else is in the parlor with Emilia-tan?”

Ram: “Roswaal-sama has not returned yet, which leaves her with Otto and Garf. If the visitor is an assassin in disguise, Garf will be enough to manage them.”

Subaru: “Doubt we need to be so worried about direct attacks. I already told Emilia-tan to use Otto as a human shield.”

Ram: “If I ever feel in danger, that’s what I’ll do too.”

There are no words for how they treat Otto. Well actually no there are. Either way, if those three are the ones in the parlor, Otto must be stuck pulling more than his weight. Should they neglect to lessen the strain upon him swiftly, they are liable to lose their precious Internal Affairs Minister.

Beatrice: “He never gets his reward, I suppose. I don’t understand why he’s even friends with you, in fact.”

Subaru: “It might be invisible to others, but me and Otto are tied together with a solid bond of masculine friendship. Rock solid.”

Mimi: “Ooh! Rocka solid!”

Ram’s sigh guides the three up to the parlor: the very first room after scaling the foyer staircase. Ram knocks on the door, which then opens from inside. The face that peeks out belongs to,

Garfiel: “There yer are, Captain. Yer were takin’ so long I was thinkin’ I’d haveta go’n get ya.”

Subaru: “It would’ve been funny if you all said you were leaving to look for me and left Otto there on his own.”

Garfiel: “Crap, it wouldda. Now’m imaginin’ him panicking everywhere n’ freakin’ out.”

Garfiel, with his short blond hair, sharp fangs, and characteristic forehead scar, shares a mischievous grin with Subaru. He jerks his chin, his arms crossed, apparently keeping himself posted at the door.

Garfiel: “Get in here. Th’guest’s sayin’ y’gotta be here if we’re gonna talk. Otto n’ Emilia-sama were tryin’ t’give ‘im a welcome, but it all juss looked like a comedy.”

Subaru: “Honestly I’d want to see that.”

Ram: “Cease this foolishness and enter the room. We’re already delayed.”

Subaru: “Guh.”

Ram drives her foot into the small of Subaru’s back, and he goes stumbling into the room. His odd posture as he bursts into the scene earns him stares from those in the parlor. The predominant emotions are relief, exasperation, and confusion, respectively.

Subaru suppresses his urge to make excuses to the relieved and exasperated parties about his tardiness, and turns to face the confused individual.

???: “…”

The prim, handsome man gazes back at Subaru. A well-tailored outfit garbs his slender frame, and his long violet hair is tied in a ponytail. He exerts a scholarly air, and his monocle only supports that impression. His yellow eyes are rather sharp, and between that and his pout at he peers at Subaru’s unfamiliar face, he looks displeased.

Neither party makes the best first impression on the other.

Man: “And this would be…?”

The visitor is the one to speak first. He looks away from Subaru, and to the two people seated before him. A beautiful girl, with silver hair flowing down her back, is the one to nod and answer him.

Emilia: “Right. I apologize that he arrived late. —This is my Knight, Natsuki Subaru.”

A tingle shoots down Subaru’s spine. The words ‘My Knight’ are simply so wonderful that they captivate him every time.

Man: “M-May I point out that he seems, ah, enraptured…?”

Beatrice: “Subaru. Stop making funny faces, I suppose. He’s going to think… huh? Erm this feels quite forceful, in fact. No, you’re, holding too tigh—Suba–Subaru! Ow! Ouch, I suppose!”

Subaru: “—Aah! Ahh, sorry. Was tripping.”

He had almost unwittingly squeezed Beatrice to death to distract himself from his feelings. A Beako Hug or also a bear hug. That’s what it was. Anyway. The guest looks on skeptically as Subaru clears his throat and puts down Beatrice.

Subaru: “As stated a moment previously, I am Natsuki Subaru. I serve as Knight to Emilia-sama, who makes her presence before you. It pleases me to make your acquaintance.”

Man: “…”

The track suit makes it a little slovenly, but his manners align perfectly with courtly etiquette. He used to think cynically of the pretentious attitudes of knights, but now that he’s trying it himself, he finds it works surprisingly well for him. It’s not a question of whether it suits him or not. It’s that he feels himself being more of a knight. The pressure, knowing that one misstep will leave him a laughingstock, gives the rigid seriousness meaning. Under the tutelage of Garfiel, with his extensive knowledge as a Knight Fanatic, Subaru has fostered etiquette that disgraces him not as a knight.

Subaru glances to the door to find Garfiel watching him, satisfied. Garfiel notices Subaru’s glance and flips him the bird. Subaru taught him the gesture, but he’s using it wrong. While he may be a good teacher, Garfiel is a failure of a student.

Man: “You humble me. I am… I myself am Joshua Juukulius , visiting you as an envoy on behalf of Anastasia Hoshin-sama.”

Subaru: “Then you would be Joshua-san. What a fine name. Still, I must apologize for my poor punctuality. Allow me to—Juukulius?”

Halfway through the diplomatic fineries, Subaru finds himself tilting his head at the familiar word. Joshua nods with a, “Yes,” and adding onto that,

Emilia: “That’s right, Subaru. Joshua is Julius’s little brother. And they’re both supporting Anastasia together, it’s sooo sweet.”

Laughs the girl, her chaste demeanor gone, and her speech far more casual. Her face as she looks at Subaru is her true face, naturally. Subaru sighs, staring impolitely at Joshua as he seats himself opposite him. As he seats himself beside Emilia, like it’s natural.

Subaru: “What, so he’s Julius’s brother. Actually now that you mention it they are pretty alike. You have that disdainful… or not, intense, gaze of his. Or that mocking… or not, elegant, smile of his. Or that hellish… or not, pretty, hair color of his.”

Otto: “If you need force it every time then would you care to refrain from commenting?!”

Says Otto, unable to hide his sweat. He’s the Head Minister of the Emilia Faction’s Internal Affairs, or more rather he’s the only one capable of being said minister so that’s why he has the title. But diplomacy terrifies him immensely.

Subaru: “Did you lose weight?”

Otto: “Life here is simply too exhilarating, yes! When things in this exact vein keep happening in constant succession, the mental fatigue leaves me too exhausted to exercise, and thus skeletal! Skeletal!”

Mimi: “Skellytall! Skellytall!”

Cheers Mimi, unintentionally aggravating Otto further. It looks like the only thing keeping Otto quiet is the fact that Mimi is the guest’s companion. She disregards him entirely as she scampers over and leaps onto the seat, beside Joshua. Beatrice also looks at the seats. But Subaru, Emilia, and Otto are fully occupying the seat opposite Joshua and Mimi. They could scooch together to open room for Beatrice, but it would look lame. And so Beatrice promptly seats herself on Subaru’s lap. Subaru naturally loops his hands around Beatrice’s waist, making sure she won’t fall.

Subaru: “Now, finally getting to the main topic…”

Joshua: “P-Please wait! Who is this girl?”

And Joshua winds up too flustered to talk. He points at Beatrice, sitting on Subaru's lap, and leans forward so forcefully that his monocle slips. Apparently he lacks Julius's composure. Subaru decides that he prefers this to Julius, while Mimi instead speaks up.

Mimi: "Geez, you're so behind, Joshua. This is Beako, she's Subaru's baby. It's so obvious. And beside him's the mommy, and beside her's the housekeeper?"

Otto: "Honestly I am far too unconfident about what my current standing is to be hearing that I'm the housekeeper so would you please care to stop?!"

Mimi: "Housekeeper! Housekeeper! Wow! It's like a witchbeast name!"

Otto's pleas are entirely ineffective on Mimi, the embodiment of dumb innocence. Nobody bothers to react to Otto, who slumps his shoulders. Subaru puts his hand on Beatrice's head.

Subaru: "Sorry for not introducing her. We're just so used to sitting like this that I completely forgot to explain."

Emilia: "Otto-kun forgot to mention it too. And it caught me unawares as well."

Subaru: "Who says caught me unawares anymore?"

It's Emilia's usual phrasing, but Subaru agrees with the sentiment. And Otto must be getting so accustomed to this life that he's forgetting to interject with common sense. It's a good problem to have.

Subaru: "This is Beatrice. Mimi's right, she's the child of myself and Emilia-sama."

Joshua: "What?!"

Joshua, aghast.

Emilia: "Geez. No she's not, Subaru. Look at how you shocked Joshua. I know we kissed but you can't make babies by kissing. I've been studying.”

Subaru: “Ah, sorry, Emilia-tan. I think some private stuff just got thrown right into the open. It was my bad so I’ll just introduce her normally.”

Beatrice: “This is what you get for using me for tomfoolery, in fact. You best regret it, I suppose.”

Subaru forces a smile at Emilia and Beatrice. Emilia’s misunderstandings about making babies have only been rectified when it comes to ‘making babies by kissing’. Subaru couldn’t go any further into the topic, and, anticipating the shock the subject would give Emilia, the faction’s women decided to wait until she’s more mentally mature.

Basically everyone is overprotective.

Joshua: “Ehrm… so, Miss Beatrice’s true station would be…?”

Joshua fixes his monocle, overwhelmed with his initiation to Roswaal Mansion and its people. But shouldn’t the unruliness of everyone here be pretty close to Anastasia’s Faction, which has Iron Fang?

Subaru: “I’m sorry that the conversation keeps slipping. Beatrice may look like an ordinary, lovable little girl, but she is actually my contracted spirit. She is a loligranny.”

Beatrice: “Exactly, I’m a spirit, in fact. And I know that you’re mocking me with that word ‘loligranny’, I suppose.”

Beatrice brushes Subaru’s hand aside and digs her head into the underside of his chin. She has grown rather proficient in Subaruese, making verbal gaffes generally impermissible. ‘Loligranny’ is just a combination of ‘granny’ and ‘loli’, a word that he has already explained to her, so of course she saw through this one.

Joshua’s reaction to Subaru and Beatrice’s heartwarming exchange is extreme. His prudish but charming face falls frigid.

Joshua: “—I see. She’s a spirit.”

Nobody who catches his whisper can decode his sentiment. It’s not that he’s hiding his emotions. It’s the opposite. The emotion is so convoluted and complex that it’s impossible to tell what lies at its core. But everyone can see that it was not a very friendly statement.

Garfiel: “Hey, guest. You got a problem with our Captain havin’ a spirit with him?”

Garfiel has inherited Subaru’s old role. Which is, practicing disrespect to anyone. While everyone else deliberates on how to address the problem, he fearlessly dives right in. Joshua promptly shakes his head,

Joshua: “No. It’s nothing important. Just, it struck me that Natsuki-dono is a Spirit Knight. As I myself am sure you already know, my brother is a Spirit Knight. The title is so rare that you could call him the only holder in the nation.”

Subaru: “Yeah, I know. When we were fighting the Witch Cult, he… um, he. He really hel… h-hel—ghk. Helped me, out a… lot, so…”

Otto: “Are you truly so reluctant to accept that he saved you?!”

No. But thinking back on his battles with Julius makes him feel awkward about what he's saying, and makes the old wounds from his beatdown sting.

Beatrice: "I heard that there was another knight who uses spirits, in fact. What an odd turn of fate for it to be your brother, I suppose."

Joshua: "What do you mean by 'odd turn of fate'. Spirit."

Beatrice: "It's obvious what I mean, in fact. Precursors are destined to be excelled, I suppose. His best place is as an ornament on the glorious road that Subaru and I—nhaaha!"

Subaru: "Don't pick fights with people we just met. And I've got nothing on Julius. I'm never gonna beat him in what he does. I don't beat people who're good at puzzles by challenging them to puzzles, I beat them by challenging them to Mario Kart."

Subaru musses Beatrice's hair and bows his head to Joshua. While pushing Beatrice's head into a bow as well.

Subaru: "I'm sorry. I wasn't trying to make a fool of your brother. Or really, I know that I'm less capable than him. This spirit here is just being a braggart."

Joshua: "An admirable, and correct judgement. When comparing yourself to my brother, it's natural to recognize your inferiority."

Subaru: "Uh?"

Subaru was looking to make a mature compromise, but Joshua's abrupt arrogance makes things precarious again. Heedless of Subaru as he furrows his brows in confusion, Joshua catches the light on his monocle,

Joshua: "Yes. My brother is amazing. At the age of twenty is the second most capable of the Imperial Knights, the finest Order of Knights of the Kingdom. His service to Anastasia-sama currently distances him from his station as an Imperial Knight, but once her wishes are fulfilled he will be secured a place as Head of the Imperial Knights. He has a close, amiable relationship with the Sword Saint Reinhard, and holds himself impeccably in both public and private contexts. He is strict on himself and others, disciplined, ambitious, always seeking improvement. His beautiful looks enrapture scores of women, and his personality is accordingly excellent. Yes. My brother is amazing. You're nothing compared to him."

Subaru: "…uh."

Joshua speaks with passion, his face red as he goes on and on and on.

Subaru has no reply, and Beatrice recoils too. Garfiel and Otto stay silent, unsure whether this could get deadly, and Mimi is too busy stuffing her cheeks with snacks to help him out of this. There is only one person here who can counter Joshua's screed.

Emilia: "Heehee. Joshua, you love your brother Julius sooo much."

In this room exists an angel who will take anything positively. Her words make Joshua realize what he just said, and his face reddens in shame rather than excitement. He clears his throat, managing to compose himself.

Joshua: "M-My apologies. I may have fired myself up. I have some difficulty restraining myself when it comes to my family."

Emilia: "No, it's okay. I want to hear you talk about Julius more. I've only ever seen Julius while in the Capital here and there, so there's lots more I want to know about him."

Joshua: "R-Really! Well, there are several memories of me and him that—"

Subaru: "How about we save those for another occasion, and finally get to the point?! How does that sound, Otto! Garfiel!"

Both: "Huh?!"

Subaru cuts in, forcing the other two into the conversation while they pleadingly try to stay out of it. But they do promptly nod in agreement. Joshua then notices that the conversation has strayed incredibly far, and, Joshua: “Th-Then, we will save the stories of my brother’s magnificence for another time. I must… I myself must also fulfil my duties and reconvene with Anastasia-sama shortly.”

Emilia: “Right. I’m sooo excited for them. So, it really took us a long time to finally get here… but what is this visit all about?”

Joshua’s awkwardness lingers as he feigns calm, while Emilia easily enters Royal Selection Candidate Mode. The tone of their voices drop, bringing a tenseness to the parlor. Emilia can establish tension like this because she has come to recognize her place as a budding politician.

Joshua: “—I speak to Emilia-sama on the behalf my master, Anastasia Hoshin-sama.”

The prickly tension makes Joshua’s expression regain its former warmth. He puts his hand in his pocket, withdraws a letter, and sets it on the table. He opens it. Looks down at the letters and their black ink.

Joshua: “Anastasia-sama wishes to invite yourself and all of your associates to the city of Priestella.”

Emilia: “An invitation to Priestella City… Priestella is the Watergate City, yes? The big city near the border between the Kingdom of Lugunica and the Kararagi City-States.”

Joshua: “You are correct. Anastasia-sama is presently sojourning there, rather than the Capital… and she wishes to invite you.”

Joshua quietly lowers his head. Emilia looks away from him and glances to Subaru. Obviously, this gaze means, “what are your thoughts?”

Subaru feels similarly to Emilia about the whole thing. Everyone knows that Anastasia is staying in a mansion in the Capital’s noble district while she’s in Lugunica. When Mimi mentioned an invitation to a party, Subaru was certain it would be to that mansion.

Joshua: “Priestella is a scenic place. The city is distinctive in itself, and makes for a popular tourist destination. Anastasia-sama finds herself delighted and at ease there.”

Subaru: “It’d be great if you were just showing us a nice place, but… you’re not, are you? Emilia and Anastasia aren’t friends.”

If Subaru remembers this right, then Anastasia was particularly harsh on Emilia during the dialogues in the Palace. The candidates most unsparing toward Emilia were her and Priscilla. Crusch is simply not racist, and Felt is in Emilia’s debt. So, while Anastasia did help during the White Whale and Witch Cult fights, Subaru’s personal opinion of Anastasia is not very good.

So he doubts that this invitation is anything so kind-spirited. As if supporting Subaru’s doubts, a grin etches itself over Joshua’s face. And,

Joshua: “Anastasia-sama invites you out of her beneficence. She has noticed the valuable object you are searching for in Priestella.”

Emilia: “What I’m searching for?”

The instant that Emilia shows her interest, Otto’s expression screams: He got her! This tells Subaru that Joshua snatched away predominance before they could stop it, but he still cannot see the crux of this deal.

In that delay, the opponent takes full control of the conversation. Grinning, Joshua speaks on:

Joshua: “—In Priestella City there is a shop selling magic stones, in which slumbers the high-grade colorless stones that you desire. I believe that you are currently seeking an anchor for the Great Spirit?”

—The second that Joshua gains dominance, the Emilia Faction are fated to leave for Priestella.

Chapter 3:
Each Gives Perspective

1

Emilia: “It wasn’t fair to Otto-kun that we decided so much on our own.”

After speaking with Joshua and returning to her room, Emilia speaks as she offers Subaru a seat. Subaru seats himself there and chuckles,

Subaru: “Leaving Otto’s panic aside as a legend for future generations, I basically always support your ideas, Emilia-tan. But if I’m gonna mention something to be worried about, it’d have to be the fact that they’re ready and waiting for us.”

Emilia: “I don’t think Anastasia would take risks anyway, if she’s sending messengers. Mimi-chan may’ve been there, but Joshua-kun still took control when I tried to take control.”

Subaru: “She recognizes you as an opponent if she’s sending her Knight’s family as her messenger. I always wondered why in Sengoku dramas, when they send important people as messengers, they don’t just kill them. But turns out there’s all this background stuff. Didn’t think I’d be learning that by experience.”

It’s a question of trust between the parties and the people. If the people learn that the rulers acted unjustly, it harms the ruler’s standing. And each faction faces too many enemies to be acting disgracefully. Otherwise, since a group faces more clandestine enemies the larger it grows, it’s simple logic to be careful when challenging influential people.

—The meeting with Joshua Juukulius is over, and night has fallen upon the new Roswaal Mansion.

Since it would be awful to send them back on the same day they arrived, they offered to let Joshua and Mimi stay the night, and accepted the invitation to Priestella City. Joshua had been rather imposing when discussing the topic, but everyone saw his relief peeking through when their side accepted the invitation. His monocle was likely just a decoration to garner a certain impression from others, the earnest young lad.

Subaru: “He’s way more likeable than his brother.”

Emilia: “You are always so insincere about Julius. Do you still have a grudge from that time in the palace?”

Emilia catches Subaru’s mutter, and amusedly pokes fun at him. Just thinking about the affair used to make his face redden in shame, and his stomach burn with indignation. But how about now that some time has passed?

Subaru: “It’s still too vivid for me to laugh and smile about it. I was young back then. And I have reflected on my actions. Wish he’d do the same.”

Emilia: “But I heard you both apologized and made up. It’s so uncool to give shallow apologies and keep simmering on the inside.”

Subaru: “Mnngh… But I’m only human!”

Emilia looks at him reproachfully, but Subaru remains stubborn. Subaru looks away. Emilia frowns at him for a moment, but ultimately can’t hold back her grin.

Emilia: “Fine. Subaru, you are just so stubborn. But you’re not allowed to fight with Julius if we see him in Priestella. You’re a knight now, and knights mustn’t misuse their power.”

Subaru: “Yeah yeah you’ve bested me my Liege.”

Subaru covers up his blushing with some jokes and rubs at his upper lip. He gazes absently around Emilia’s room, before seeming to remember something,

Subaru: “Oh yeah, Emilia-tan. I don’t really know much about Priestella, is it known for anything?”

Emilia: “Hmp, you need to study more, Subaru. Priestella is one of the five main cities of Lugunica, on the Tigracy River that marks the border with Kararagi. It’s famous for being built right on a huge lake, with canals flowing through the city.”

Subaru: “Ok so leaving aside that that’s all second-hand information, it’s a floating city. Well you have Venice, so may as well be possible here too.”

Venice springs to mind when it comes to aquatic cities. The town is surrounded by water on all sides, with lakes winding nonchalantly through the stone cityscape. It’s one of those romantic places that everyone visits at least once, and Subaru regards it as a picturesque spot too. And so that’s the impression he gets of Priestella.

Emilia: “No, Subaru. Priestella isn’t a floating city, it’s a Watergate City.”

Subaru: “Watergate?”

Emilia: “Yes. It’s in the middle of a lake, so the city floods when it rains. They built huge walls around the city to stop that, and there’s gates to regulate the water levels. The gates are sooo amazing and famous that they don’t call it the Floating City, they call it the Watergate City.”

Emilia’s explanation flips Subaru’s pretty water town into an enclosed watery jail. The concept is all so beautiful, and then they ruin it with these giant walls. Subaru tilts his head, wondering why they built this whole mechanism.

Emilia: “I think there’s lots of theories behind the city’s construction. Like, they were testing the limits of their technology, or trying to conquer the floods without relying on magic or the Dragon, or trying to trap a powerful, evil witchbeast.”

Subaru: “None of them sound sensible but they all somehow feel possible which is how you know humans did it.”

The average person wouldn’t come up with the idea, but the geniuses of humanity are fundamentally liberated from the reins of common sense. And sometimes their ideas get realized. Either way.

Subaru: “But we still don’t know what they’re planning. …Doubt they’re just being nice and directing us to what we’re looking for.”

Emilia: “Are you sure? Have you ever considered trusting in people more, instead of being so suspicious?”

Subaru: “Sorry, but all the candidates have their faults. And I don’t trust what they’re plotting for a second.”

Crusch herself is trustworthy, but Subaru doesn’t know whether she’ll stay a demure lady, and he has to keep wary of Felis. That problem is solved if Wilhelm reins Felis in, but the Sword Demon puts Subaru on edge too. Knowing their circumstances, it’s difficult to trust them when they’re left to their own devices.

Subaru has no idea what Anastasia is thinking, or what drives her. He cannot divine her motives for sending this invitation. Julius may be the knightliest of knights, but Anastasia is ultimately in control. And the business lives of the members of Iron Fang are unrelated to who they are as people. Subaru can’t dislike them.

Reinhard and Rom from the Felt Faction may merit trust. But Felt’s thoughts are unclear to Subaru. So long as she’s willing to participate in the Selection, Subaru must brace for the tricky, devious girl to be scheming something. If she seriously deploys Reinhard, and he becomes their enemy, their chances of beating him in combat are a dream within a dream.

The Priscilla Faction is hardest to read. Subaru cannot trust either of them. Al might also be from Japan, but he is surprisingly loyal to Priscilla. So he will not stand up for Subaru, while Priscilla’s capriciousness is already terrifying. She could randomly visit to decapitate him with a smile on her face. That’s her breed of absurdity.

Even though a year has passed, no candidates know the motives of the others. Subaru needs to probe deeper if he wants to know more than what he learned at the Palace. Which is one reason for accepting this invitation.

Subaru: “Honestly I am terrified of being in Anastasia’s debt. How did she figure out you were looking for a colorless magic stone anyway?”

Emilia: “Puck showed himself in the Palace, so I didn’t want anyone to know he’s limited. I was trying to be sooo careful… but you just can’t stop people from saying things.”

Subaru: “That’s what happens. So even if we get the magic stone, it just means things are back to status quo from the other factions’ perspectives. The benefits are in establishing the debt.”

That said, Puck’s return will enhance Emilia’s already significant combat strength. But no amount of combat power alone will secure Emilia’s win in the Selection. It would just make their defeat of the Sizeable Hare more convincing, if anything.

—The defeat of the Sizeable Hare in Sanctuary.

This second achievement of the Emilia Faction, unrelated to the defeat of Sloth of the Witch Cult, is unfortunately not recognized by the public. There were no witnesses to the Hare’s defeat, and it is impossible to retrieve any corpses as proof.

They threw the thing into another dimension never to return. It’s the truth, but not believable. The Al Shamak spell that Beatrice used is forgotten in this era, and she lacks the mana to demonstrate the technique again.

So while they reported the Hare’s defeat to the Capital, it has yet to be deemed as a legitimate achievement. And if they go into detail, they will have to describe Sanctuary in detail too, and thus reveal that Roswaal kept a hidden village in his territory. Ultimately they had to stop pressing the issue.

They were told that their claims would gain credibility if the Hare remains unseen for the next decade, but by that point it’s too late to be a useful achievement. Though it doesn’t bother Emilia too much, since it all happened extremely suddenly.

Subaru: “But it’s still annoying. Seriously how much pain did those fucking rabbits put me through…”

Emilia: “But we really did beat the Sizeable Hare, even if they don’t believe us. That scary witchbeast won’t hurt anyone else anymore. Isn’t that enough?”

Subaru: “Emilia-tan you are way too positive and kind…”

When you do something righteous, it ought to be acknowledged. Emilia speaks magnanimously, making Subaru recognize how pathetic he is. How nice would it be if he could think the way Emilia does? He will never achieve it. It just irritates him not to get recognition he deserves.

Emilia sees Subaru sulking, and her mouth relaxes into a smile. Subaru hasn’t noticed that Emilia sometimes gazes at him with this tender look in her eye. Or that her expression during these moments lacks the maternal spark of a mother watching over a child, and is instead something indescribably complex.

Emilia: “And people already know that you’ve achieved things, Subaru. It’s formally recognized that you fought the White Whale and defeated Sloth.”

Subaru: “For those… it really feels like I only got the scraps. People were doing a lot more than me for the White Whale, and I just happened to snag the perfect moment at the end. And I didn’t have that goal in mind for Sloth.”

All he was thinking during the Petelgeuse fight was to protect Emilia. Or, no, that’s not quite accurate. What Subaru felt back then was both desire to protect Emilia, and hatred for Petelgeuse personally. It’s not a question of which is legitimate. Both are, and both desires are Subaru’s own. It makes him uncomfortable that a fight which was basically a personal grudge is deemed as being for the sake of the world at large.

Emilia: “But that’s the same for the Sizeable Hare. You defeated two of the witchbeasts that had been tormenting the world for four hundred years in such a short timespan… I know I’m not one to say this, but it’s like you’re doing sooo much more than you should.”

Subaru: “Yeah. And there I am involved in both. Honestly, I think what I’ve done’s excessive. Let’s just hope the last one doesn’t show up.”

Emilia: “—Yes.”

Subaru trusts in the power of words and prays to never encounter the Blacksnake. But Emilia’s response is rather wooden. It’s almost as if she has some personal thoughts on the Blacksnake.

Emilia: “So anyway, about Priestella.”

But before he can address the shift in her attitude, she changes the topic. Obviously she doesn’t want to talk about it. And, having grown somewhat wiser, Subaru decides not to force an explanation out of her. Though sometimes he forgets to pay attention to things like that and acts exactly how he used to.

Emilia: “We know we’re going, but do we really want to go with the same people? I kind of wanted to talk with Roswaal about it, too.”

Subaru: “I think we’re fine. You’re going, so naturally your Knight, that is me, and my partner Beako will be coming too. But being serious, we bring Garf for combat and Otto too since he’s so insistent to go. I’d really like for Petra or Frederica to come too so all your needs are addressed, but…”

Emilia: “It’s too bad. Roswaal’s busy with the Meeting of the Western Lords. We’ve known forever that Petra needs to join him for her maid training. Though she’s sooo angry about it.”

Subaru: “Because she completely hates Roswaal after the Sanctuary thing. Roswaal enjoys it, which keeps Ram quiet, but

Petra is maturing justly and brilliantly as a maid, but her core is still dangerously childish. Her harshness on her master Roswaal is particularly striking, and she conceivably would wring the water from her washcloth into his tea. But since Subaru is on Petra’s side, he’s ready to overlook it even should he hypothetically witness it.

Only time will mend broken trust. But it seems that a year was not enough for Petra to start listening to Roswaal.

Subaru: “Which means Frederica should go with them as a restraint and a model of proper etiquette, which leaves Ram in the mansion. Hold on this is dicey.”

Emilia: “Really? Anne will be going to the meeting too, so Clind-san will be there. I’m sure he’ll be friendly with Petra, so maybe Frederica doesn’t need to go.”

Subaru: “Clind-san… I don’t really get him.”

Subaru thinks back on the powerful butler of the Milord Mansion, where the group stayed while their mansion was being prepared. He works with such incredible refinement that the eye can’t catch it. It’s a mess of a compliment, but it’s what describes him.

Subaru’s training in parkour also began with Clind, who taught him the basics. He coached Subaru, who cannot exceed the physical limits of the ordinary man, when he was trying to figure out how to move without disregarding his boundaries. Anne-Rose and Clind have visited the new mansion multiple times to hang out. Subaru had Clind watch him practice his parkour, but then Clind defeated Garfiel’s obstacle course without breaking a sweat and without ruffling his clothes. He’s inhuman.

Subaru: “But leaving aside who’s staying in the mansion, we shouldn’t worry about it. And anyway I should be the one more concerned about being careful. Goes for you too, Emilia-tan.”

Emilia: “Mm. I do feel bad about agreeing without discussing it. I’ll have to apologize to Otto-kun.”

Subaru: “He doesn’t care about his dignity, but he does hold onto things for ages. I’ll tell him that I told you off so hard you cried.”

Emilia: “Heehee, thank you.”

Subaru fires an uppercut into the air, and Emilia smiles. She puts her hand to her chest and touches the blue crystal pendant hanging there. Even now, the Great Spirit Puck sleeps in that crystal.

Never mind his true power, this gem isn’t even strong enough for him to communicate. If he even twitches, the jewel will break and he will be unleashed—or so Emilia and Beatrice say. Once he is free, Puck will inadvertently bring great destruction on the environment, eventually run out of mana, and disappear back to where he came.

Emilia is constantly supplying the crystal with mana so that this doesn't happen, and preserving Puck. Now they just need to make a good crystal from colorless magic stone and they should be able to restore him. Anastasia is saying she has seen magic stones that can withstand this wear.

Emilia: "Once I can talk with Puck again… there are so many things I want to ask him. So—"

Emilia closes her eyes, saying nothing more. Her long eyelashes quiver, and Subaru quietly scratches his head. He can only vaguely figure what Emilia is thinking.

Subaru: "You better get back here, cat spirit. I got a mountain of complaints for you."

And, as her knight should, he agrees with her alongside his insults.

2

Otto: "You know! I'm saying this with everyone's best interests in mind!"

Otto Suwen slams his glass to the table, clearly in a bad mood. After his conversation with Emilia and dinner, Subaru decided to see Otto before his nightly routine, and has been listening to him drunkenly complain for the past while.

Garfiel: "'S been like this th'whole time. My amazin' ears're sick'a it."

Says Garfiel in exasperation, sitting beside Subaru as he listens to Otto complain. He sticks his pinky in his ear and scratches his head, his sharp fangs clicking as he laps at his glass of milk.

Subaru is insisting that they not give alcohol to minors like him. Frederica and Ram agree, and he is trying to establish twenty as the drinking age in Roswaal Mansion. Also one time naughty Otto encouraged Garfiel to take a sip of alcohol and it turns out he can't hold his liquor at all. Now just seeing a bottle of the stuff is enough to make him grimace.

Subaru isn't going to break the laws from the old world, so the only drinkers in the mansion are Roswaal, Otto, Ram, and Frederica. Which means that the only drinker in the room is Otto.

Subaru: "Don't sulk. Emilia's sorry about deciding everything on her own. She knows she should've discussed it. Don't think it would've changed anything though."

Otto: "But there is more to things than their outcome. The process is important. You often get conversations where the conclusion is apparent from the very beginning, but the course you follow to get there is essential. Especially when we're unguardedly accepting their offer… you mustn't play into the opponent's hands!"

Subaru attempts to smooth things over, but Otto snaps at him. He's completely correct so Subaru can't rebut him, but,

Subaru: "What the hell, you sound like an actual internal affairs guy. After how hard you resisted it in the beginning? Guess you weren't so reluctant about it after all."

Garfiel: "We're juss acceptin' a damn invitation, it ain't that complicated, Otto."

Otto: "It's almost invigorating how little you two have changed!"

Subaru and Garfiel dig into Otto in concert and high-five. The three friends are around the same age, and often hang out together. It is beautiful how naturally their conversations fall into this exact pattern.

Who cares about what Otto thinks. He makes a wonderful internal affairs minister. He was well-educated as a merchant's son, learned the ways of the world as a travelling merchant, and he's both smart and calculating. This has to be a better fate for him than somehow getting swindled into slavery. Though, he still tilts his head, wondering how this even happened to him as he chips through mountains of paperwork. Guy's stubborn.

Since he's seen Roswaal's confidential paperwork, is accustomed to his post as Emilia's helper, and is neck-deep in managing the territory of Margrave Mathers, he has no hope of escape.

Otto: "What is that, that pitying look. It's like you're gazing at a chicken seconds before strangling it."

Subaru: "It's more like I'm gazing at a battery hen that only gets to live for its eggs."

Otto: "Even worse!"

Garfiel: "Yer be quiet now. 'N stop teasin' him so much, Captain. Rules're t'keep it t'ten Ottos a day."

Otto: "How much is that?! How much is ten Ottos a day?!"

Yells Otto, his face red, but neither Subaru or Garfiel respond. This is what it's like when he's drunk. He's working a stressful job, so they give him his drinking time, but it might actually just encourage even more stress.

Subaru: "Otto vents best by yelling anyway."

Otto: "Clearly not!"

Garfiel: "Yeah yeah now quiet down 'n pour yerself another drink. Anyway, Captain, got somethin' I wanna check with ya."

Subaru: "Oh? Don't get that often. Go ahead."

Otto grumbles as he refills his glass and quietly sips at it. Garfiel glances away from him, his mouth white with milk.

Garfiel: "'S 'bout what the enemy's doin', obviously. The candidates ain't never got any scuffles goin' before, 'n now she's up in our face lookin' fer a fight. She gotta be up t'somethin', yeh?"

Subaru: "You mean, you think she just challenged us to a duel?"

Garfiel: "'Course I goddamn do. 'S what she's thinkin'. Forget that weedy Joshua prick, you see the cat kid who was with 'im?"

—The cat kid is the same age as you. The comment is too tasteless for Subaru to actually say it. But what's his problem with Mimi? Far as Subaru could tell she was acting the same as usual, just reaching for her tea and biscuits. And she did the same thing through dinner too.

Garfiel: "That girl's damn tough. N' she was starin' at my 'mazin' self, not juss durin' the talk, but all through fuckin' dinner. She musta figured out 'm th'strongest guy in the place."

Subaru: "Are you sure…? No, I mean, Mimi is strong, and she is kind of a battle junkie, but…"

She doesn't seem marginally smart enough to have ulterior motives. Subaru can only see her as transparent, or actually just airheaded.

Garfiel: "Either way, sh's keepin' n' eye on my amazin' self while she's here. Best we make sure you and Emilia-sama ain't caught on yer own while we're over there, Captain. Otto's one thing, but we ain't ever recoverin' if we lose you."

Otto: "You do realize that this fief will be an absolute mess if I'm gone?! I wish that you would take that into consideration sometimes!"

Garfiel isn't trying to belittle Otto as he urges caution. It's just that he needs to make the comparison if he's going to get his point across to Subaru. Though he doesn't pass up the opportunity to play with Otto.

Subaru: "Yeah, I'm definitely relying on you for that. Don't want to draw it out so this'll be short but, I'm counting on you, Garfiel."

Garfiel: "Yeah, make sure ya do. Count on The Strongest of Shields, aka The Legendary Guardian, Garfiel Tinzel!"

Garfiel proudly points at himself with his thumb. Subaru nods at him. He takes a sip from his own glass of milk, regretting how awesome Garfiel's titles are. He'll probably get even more titles once his might and valor resound all through the Kingdom. Will Subaru's imagination be strong enough to provide for Garfiel then?

Subaru: "I wonder if I'll ever have a stroke of genius like Invisible Providence again… only Fortune herself knows when she'll smile upon me."

Garfiel: "Yer mullin' over somethin' again. You ain't gotta trouble yerself. Y'get things done when it matters. I got faith in that."

Emilia's the same, but the trust in Garfiel's gaze is incredibly convincing. It instantly makes Subaru feel that he must match up to it. He's trying not to mistake the self-improvement needed to meet that trust with blind, headless sprinting.

Subaru: "If we've got Garfiel then we don't have to worry about our combat strength. Emilia-tan's a pretty strong fighter on her own too, and I'm decent enough with Beako. The problem here's Otto… are you seriously coming with us?"

Otto: "Of course I am! I don't want to know what insane arrangement you and Emilia-sama will land yourselves in if I don't go!"

It's also electrifying how little they trust Subaru when it comes to negotiations. Emilia is as honest and pure as she appears, and while Subaru is devious he's also inexperienced. So naturally they look like sitting ducks to Otto.

Otto: "Also, Priestella is the birthplace of Hoshin of the Wastes, the founder of Kararagi. It has contact with Kararagi since it's on the border, making it a highly significant place for merchants. I find myself duty-stricken to visit it too."

Subaru: "I thought you washed your hands of being a merchant ages ago. The hell are you doing."

Otto: "You are mistaken if you think that I will resign myself to being an Internal Affairs Minister forever! My ultimate goal is still to be a successful merchant with his own shop! This is a necessary road to get there, a necessary road on the path to my goal!"

Garfiel: “Possible that th’road leads ter yer death.”

That stuff about trapping him here is honestly pretty shallow, and if he yearns to go and can help them as Internal Affairs Minister, it makes sense that Otto should join them. Everyone in the mansion knows, for all their banter, that they can’t function without Otto. And Otto knows it, too, which is why he can’t leave.

Subaru: “Or you could just be a masochist but we’ll disregard that.”

Otto: “Did you just agree at me in an incredibly impolite way or am I only imagining it?!”

Subaru: “It’s not important. Anastasia’s going to be there, and we don’t know what terms she’ll hit us with. We’re counting on you. You’re on bureaucracy, Garfiel’s on military. And I’m there to make things fun.”

Otto: “Do more!”

Subaru could try his absolute best, but he will never be stronger than Garfiel. He could study his absolute best, but he wouldn’t have time to eclipse Otto as a bureaucrat.

Subaru: “Just gotta do what I can do. One of those positive steps to self-improvement that I’ve mulled over with Beako.”

Garfiel: “Yer gonna be fine if Emilia-sama ‘n Beatrice’re with ya. Meanin’ my amazin’ self gotta cover for Otto. Watch yer back for me, yeh?”

Otto: “Why does it feel like I’m the greatest burden here… I can’t say that I agree with it.”

Subaru gets serious, and Garfiel accepts his post of babysitter. Otto grumbles and takes another sip of his liquor. The night grows darker, the mood pleasant.

Subaru: “Now, we’re gonna be busy tomorrow, so I’m calling it about here. What about you, Garfiel?”

Garfiel: “I’ll stay’n drink some more with Otto. Gettin’ pretty close t’beatin’ him at Shatranj. Might pull it off now that he’s drunk.”

Garfiel disregards Subaru and grabs a game board and pieces from the back of the room. The game is called Shatranj, with rules similar to Shogi or Chess. Subaru finds himself impressed that every world has these games. Otto is apparently quite good at them, and though Garfiel has been trying his hardest, he has suffered losses upon losses. Also Subaru is outrageously good at Othello, but struggles at Shogi and Chess.

Subaru: “Don’t stay up too late. It’ll stunt your growth.”

Garfiel: “Yer said that before n’ so that’s what I been doin’ but yer sure this fuckin’ works? Don’t feel I grew at all this year.”

Subaru: “Frederica absorbed some of the growth so your case is complicated.”

Garfiel: “Fuck you Sis!”

Roars Garfiel, baring his fangs as he slams the Shatranj board on the table. Then he hunches over and starts meticulously arranging the tiny pieces. While watching Garfiel go at it, Subaru waves to a red-faced Otto.

Subaru: “Don’t you get too drunk either. If you wind up hungover and useless, Petra will think even less of you.”

Otto: “I feel like she’s been rather harsh with me lately, but perhaps it’s just me. Could you have a word with her?”

Subaru: “You mean tell her to try harder?”

Otto: “I was clearly asking you to tell her to be nicer to me!”

Subaru answers with a bitter smile, telling Otto that it’s impossible, and leaves the two to play Shatranj as he exits the room. The crystalights in the hallway tell Subaru that it’s almost past midnight. Usually he would be in bed by this hour, but,

Subaru: “Wound up running late today.”

With that excuse, Subaru ignores the staircase to his room on the third floor of the eastern wing, and heads for the women's bedrooms in the western wing. Where,

Subaru: "—Mind if I come in?"

Subaru always knocks on the door. He knows that no one will reply. So does he say it because he has hope? Or perhaps he confirms that there is no reply, so that he doesn't forget.

—So that he doesn't forget the inferno, always blazing in his chest?

Subaru: "…"

Subaru opens the door. A pitch dark room welcomes him. It's a simple room. Its layout is identical to the countless other guest rooms in the mansion, but it plainly lacks in furniture. Just a bed in the middle of the room, windows, their curtains, a small table, and a vase with flowers. Subaru knows that no one will complain, but he still dislikes the austerity.

Call it sentimental, but he wishes that the place had some human warmth. Perhaps the day will never come where he manages to disregard that wish as weakness.

Emilia: <If you could rationalize things that way, I don't think we ever would've found common ground to our arguments. I like you sooo much just the way you are.>

Beatrice: <It is a vice to want beyond your means, in fact. Subaru, you are reckless on your own, I suppose. …But you're not alone any more, so I'll manage something for you even if you're being greedy, in fact.>

Subaru: "They're coddling me. And Emilia-tan is tantalizing me with those provocative statements."

Subaru wishes she would be more careful about saying 'I like you' or 'you're so cool'.

He has told her how he feels, but Emilia is too immature for it. Their relationship still has yet to go anywhere romantic. But even supposing it did suddenly go somewhere romantic, Subaru is not mentally ready for it either. Give him two more years, no three—or even more if it's possible. That's the kind of loser he is.

Subaru: "God it's so rude of me to go on about Emilia or Beatrice while I'm here. Petra'd beat me up if she heard this."

Petra might have the best grasp of romance and its subtleties out of anyone in the mansion. Somehow everyone is terrible at relationships. Roswaal leads the charge with his toxic obsession, with the others all having their foibles too. Garfiel's feelings for Ram are still a middle school crush, though Subaru has no place to talk. Ram's ideas about extreme loyalty dictating love are perplexing, and Frederica's love life is a complete unknown. Otto sometimes mentions while drunk things about being raked through the mud for philandering, but the consensus is that these claims are lies and pretense. It's a disgrace to these adults that a thirteen year old girl is beating them.

Subaru: "So how does that stand. I don't think that tendency will change much, even after you wake up. Either because I'm a loser, or because you respect me."

Subaru pulls a chair over and seats himself beside the bed. Moonlight slips in through the crack in the curtains, illuminating her face as she sleeps.

The light of the moon spills over her pale face, pink lips. She is a sleeping beauty with short blue hair, her curvy body garbed in thin negligee, her chest rising and falling in time with her breathing.

—She has slept for over a year now.

Subaru: "Got lots of things to tell you today. Since some guests showed up uninvited, and with this crazy offer. I started my day with my usual—"

Subaru speaks calmly to her as she sleeps. He uses his same comedic phrasing as always, but his tone is incredibly gentle. He speaks as though lulling a child to sleep as he cheerily tells her about his day.

She doesn’t respond. Even so. These trysts unfold every night. Tonight is rife with things to discuss. Until the moon sits low in the sky, the tale goes on between Subaru and the Sleeping Beauty.

Chapter 4:
On the Road

1

It takes them three days before they set out for Priestella.

Roswaal: “I respect Emilia-sama’s decision, aaaaaaand there’s nothing urgent for her to do here, sooooo I’m amenable to it. Though it iiiiiiiiis worrying that their intentions are uuuuuuunreadable.”

The Meeting of the Western Lords—a conference between Margrave Roswaal and the other lords under that banner—will be taking place in the mansion of the most neutral lord among them. The lords are generally compliant to Roswaal’s beat, but some definitely do voice objection and unease about his support for Emilia.

Most of the lords are copacetic to Roswaal’s policy of demi-human favoritism, or really, equality for demi-humans, but half-elves are not commonly regarded as demi-human. Over the past year, they have succeeded in getting some lords to superficially support her through discussions and deals. This conference is, in part, to establish a podium for her to speak with the lords who still stubbornly refuse her. Roswaal is leaving the mansion empty to set up that groundwork.

Emilia: “I’m sorry. I honestly wanted to attend the meeting too, but…”

Roswaal: “Iiiiiiiiit would backfire. The purpose of this meeting is so that you may speak with them later, meaning that it would be foul play to reveal you at this stage. Hoooooowever, if you could calm the confusion and silence the rebelling lords with some masterful piece of oration, that wooooooould be nice.”

Emilia: “…I don’t think I can manage that yet. Okay. I’ll behave.”

Emilia purses her lips and casts her gaze down in frustration.

Roswaal nods at her, satisfied. Subaru does want to object to Roswaal's somewhat sarcastic tone, but at least it means the guy is speaking with her more sincerely. It's infinitely better than last year, when Roswaal blatantly kept Emilia the Accessory away from the political issues—or so Emilia divulged to Subaru after he complained about it.

Roswaal makes a far more dependable supporter now that he's being proactive. But since his motives are questionable, it's only half as beneficial as it initially seems.

Subaru: "Assuming that Petra's definitely going to the meeting… who's left in the mansion?"

Roswaal: "Anne-Rose and her associates wiiiiiiill be attending. I doubt there will be any issues if Clind-kun is present, coooooonsidering his favoritism for Petra. I was intending to leave Frederica here, since she gets along poorly with him… what about you, Ram?"

Ram: "I shall accompany you as you desire, Roswaal-sama."

Subaru: "You say 'as you desire' but it's totally your desires talking…"

Ram is still an advocate for Roswaal, but is less hesitant to insist upon her own desires now. Roswaal seems to be accepting it without thinking it strange. Their relationship of one-sided dependency looks to have changed. The dependent atmosphere around them is gone, and it feels like they actually understand each other now. Though it's unclear whether it's beneficial to have someone around who empathizes with Roswaal.

Ram: "What are you staring at. Say anything thoughtless and I'll mash your eyes to paste, Barusu."

Subaru: "Sister, in your mind, just how incessant am I exactly?"

Ram: "…"

Ram makes an extremely complicated expression. It's not because it's a tricky question. It's just the expression she makes whenever Subaru calls her ‘Sister’. She doesn’t dislike it, but it doesn’t feel legitimate. Since she has yet to recover her memories of Rem, those years of being worshipped by her little sister are still lost to the void.

Roswaal: “It would worry me were it only Emilia-sama and yourself leaving, buuuuuuut I’m sure that you’ll be fine with Garfiel and Otto-kun accompanying you. Otto-kun will keep you from bumbling into any horrendously awful agreements, and Garfiel resolves the worst of problems by pulverizing them while you flee.”

Emilia: “But I think that’d cause sooo many problems too… I’ll do my best to keep it from coming to that.”

Subaru: “Leave pressuring them to me, Emilia-tan. I’ll be right on them whether it’s Anastasia-san or Julius. There’s this chatty witch I know who’s taught me all about people dodging important topics in conversation.”

Emilia: “I’m not sure if that’s something to brag about…”

Subaru shoots Emilia a thumbs up and grins, teeth sparkling. Naturally, Emilia knows that Subaru is joking around to relax her. They have build enough trust over the last year for that much understanding, at least.

Roswaal: “Noooooooooow, Beatrice. I can trust that yoooooooou’ll look after them?”

Beatrice: “Of course, in fact. You can’t rest easy about any of these people were Betty not with them, I suppose.”

Beatrice’s pigtails bob as she puffs out her chest. Her adorable attitude puts a smile on everyone’s face. Though she herself just looks displeased.

—Regardless, with this conversation over, they determine to leave for Priestella.

Joshua: “Ask for the Water Plumage Pavilion once you arrive. That is where Anastasia-sama awaits you.”

Mimi: “Don’t keep her waiting!”

On that note, Anastasia’s subordinates leave the Roswaal Manor. They leave for Priestella first to tell Anastasia that the invitation has been accepted.

Garfiel: “Yeh, take care.”

Mimi: “You take care too, Garf! I’m gonna be super on edge waiting, so you better come!”

Garfiel: “Hell about you’s on edge. But I get ya. These guys ain’t got a hope without my amazin’ self. We’ll settle this there. Get yer neck ready fer th’rope.”

Mimi: “Huh? Okay! I’ll get it super ready!”

This cute little exchange between Mimi and Garfiel was particularly notable. Garfiel had been so wary of the two during their stay, but going by Mimi’s attitude, feels like his fears were misplaced. Or rather, feels like Mimi is extremely affectionate when making friends. She started calling him ‘Garf’ out of nowhere, so perhaps Anastasia’s invitation really isn’t hostile.

Joshua: “You may have won Mimi over, but I… I myself shall not yield so easily.”

Says Joshua, trying to stay stoic while following his cheerful bodyguard. Mimi keeps a tight grip on his arm, yanking him down and forward as she bounds ahead. His expression is dead serious during all of this, which is kind of comical. But even Subaru has fostered enough kindness over this year to not inform him of the fact.

Emilia: “Joshua-kun, will you be okay? You have such a lovely outfit, but the sleeve’s seconds from coming off…”

Joshua: “P-Please don’t worry. There’s no need for concern!”

While Subaru can understand the poor boy’s feelings, the attending angel cannot. Emilia speaks with sincere concern for Joshua, who mustn’t raise his voice and instead tries to pry Mimi off, looking miserable. But Mimi is expectedly stronger than Joshua and his efforts come to nothing.

Joshua: “My brother may call you his friend, but I believe he is being far too kind. Which is one of his virtues. I believe it my job as his younger brother to compensate for that, so you best not expect any mercy from the Juukulius family.”

Subaru: “What, you already stopped with the ‘I myself’ thing?”

Joshua: “P-Please pay attention to what I’m saying! Trying to make a fool of me! Not a very pleasant man, are you!”

Subaru: “I’m more worried about you and how you’re forgetting your place as your master’s servant. If you deride people in public, it’d probably wind up as a black mark on the Juukulius family.”

Joshua: “—!”

Joshua’s face pales, but Subaru isn’t trying just to criticize him. And Subaru’s at far higher risk for insulting people in public anyway. Not that Joshua would know that, and Natsuki Subaru being Natsuki Subaru has reason not to tell him.

Emilia: “Subaru, stop bullying younger kids. I’m so sorry, Joshua-kun. Subaru’s… he can be like that.”

Joshua: “—N-No… I was truly being impolite. I apologize.”

Subaru: “Just ‘I’? Ow! Ow, that hurts, Emilia-tan!”

Subaru immediately starts criticizing Joshua again, when Emilia grabs his ear and yanks it. Joshua sees tears rise in Subaru’s eyes, and, satisfied, decides to leave the conversation there.

With a deep breath, Joshua files into his dragon carriage. But since ligers are pulling the vehicle rather than dragons it’s really a dog carriage, which he files into. Perhaps dog races are a thing here?

Subaru: “Might be worth it to introduce some forms of entertainment, like horse racing and stuff…”

Subaru's ideas that use his Unique Knowledge From The 21st Century never graduate from his imagination. But maybe he should more seriously consider utilizing his knowledge. First he needs to judge what the pros and cons of popularizing horse racing would be, and,

Emilia: "What's up, Subaru. You look like you're thinking of something sooo devious."

Subaru: "Got a rare flood of ideas from my Unique Knowledge From The 21st Century. Like a burst of Subaruisms."

Emilia: "Oh, you thought of another new topping? I liked the mayonnaise, and I liked the tartar sauce too."

Subaru: "This time I'm thinking unique in a way that the populace would never conceive."

Incidentally the Roswaal Mansion carries a stockpile of tartar sauce, just like it does mayonnaise. Basically everyone here likes it, but it doesn't entirely satisfy Subaru.

While all this chitchat is going on, Joshua and Mimi get ready to leave and their carriage begins to move. They aren't sitting on the coachman's seat to drive, Mimi just mounts one of the two ligers and controls their course directly. Her white robe flutters as she smiles cheerfully.

Mimi: "Okay! See you two and Garf later!"

They pleasantly see Mimi off, and wave goodbye to a wary Joshua through the window too. Two days after seeing them off, Subaru and the others leave for Priestella.

2

Otto: "It will take us over ten days to get there, even if we hurry. We have no real need to hurry, either, so let's relax and take our time."

Nobody has any objection to Otto's plan. He is the one most accustomed to traveling among them, and he probably holds the median value in their group for physical resilience. If they travel at a pace that puts no strain on him, then everyone should enjoy a safe journey.

Otto: “Considering the carriage’s load, we will have Frufoo and Patrasche-chan pull the carriage. And since we plan not to camp anywhere, we should be fine with only the bare minimum of emergency supplies.”

Garfiel: “‘S no good fer th’body t’just sit there in a carriage th’whole time, Otto.”

Otto: “If that’s what you think, you’re always free to leave the carriage and run.”

Garfiel: “Yup, that’s what’ll do.”

Emilia: “That’s what you’ll do?”

With this little scene where Garfiel and Otto’s usual banter shocks Emilia, the journey to Priestella begins.

But, having said that, the journey itself proceeds without issue. They have some trouble when they cross borders into non-Mathers territory, or when passing through other lords’ gates, but the issue is more or less resolved by flashing the Mathers family crest or showing Emilia’s presence. This itself is liable to stir up trouble too, but they come across no one plotting anything nefarious because of this journey.

When wild dogs or witchbeasts appear on the road, foolishly trying to attack the carriage,

Garfiel: “Perfect. Been wantin’ t’smack some critters around.”

Garfiel violently tears through the group, scaring away the instigating animals. His perfect work as a bodyguard actually makes the poor witchbeasts sympathetic. But even terrifying Garfiel has to kill downtime by chewing on a knife he brought, giving him a trace of gap moe. Also it’s always unnerving to see him chew the hard steel to bits.

Beatrice: “Mm. This dragon isn’t bad, in fact. I’ll concede that much, I suppose.”

Says Beatrice, seated next to Subaru, who holds the reigns. Perhaps it’s a surprise, but Otto isn’t the only one tasked with driving. It took a year of trying, and a dragon that knows Subaru’s idiosyncrasies, but he can drive a carriage now. Is one thing you could say, but this is Patrasche and Otto’s dragon Frufoo. Though, the only other dragons that the Roswaal Mansion keeps are Rascal and Peter. Of course Subaru’s familiar enough with them to name them.

Subaru: “How about less condescension, and more helping me with the reigns? Patrasche is abounding in maternal spirit, I’m sure she’ll be nice to you too, Beako.”

Beatrice: “I’d rather not, in fact. Actually, that dragon is quite plainly glaring at me, I suppose. She doesn’t consider me a friend, in fact. What are these horrendous lies about maternal spirit, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Hey, there’ll be no badmouthing Patrasche. I’ll never let anyone insult Emilia-tan, Rem, you, or Patrasche.”

Beatrice: “You include me in your list, but still won’t let me, I suppose?”

Subaru: “When it’s someone on the list, they’re being naughty!”

Beatrice tries to escape, but it’s impossible on the narrow driver’s platform. Subaru grabs her by the scruff of the neck and draws her near, setting her on his lap as she struggles. He attempts to sentence her to tickle torture, when a strand of her hair brushes across his nose, making him sneeze dramatically—and the carriage swerves.

Otto: “Natsuki-san! Don’t let them do anything odd! If they exit the Windbreaker Blessing, we’re all going to have a terrible time with the motion sickness!”

Subaru: “Sorry! Beako was being so much fun that I just…”

Beatrice: “Don’t you try to make this Betty’s fault, in fact! Subaru just went and… stop tickling me, I suppose! Sto–pffweheehee!"

Otto sighs at the two as they play. Emilia giggles,

Emilia: "They really get along so well. Not too long ago, I never would've imagined that Subaru and Beatrice would be so close."

Otto: "Personally, I can't believe that they were ever apart. It's almost sickly how sweet Beatrice- chan is and how doting Natsuki-san is."

Emilia smiles solemnly, looking something like a mother or older sister to Otto's eyes. But Otto isn't tasteless enough to point it out, or to encourage Subaru's antics.

Otto: "We'll leave them to their merriment while we discuss something more important. That is, we will discuss the goals of Anastasia's faction, and how we will respond to them."

Emilia: "They're not trying to just put us in their debt."

Otto: "The first of the three years in the selection has passed, making this the final opportunity to establish definite groundwork. Once we establish our footing here, we will secure our support base at the Meeting of the Western Lords. If you ignore that the other factions had that issue resolved from the beginning, we should be about equal to them in our progress."

Emilia: "Where is Anastasia sitting right now?"

Emilia has been estranged from the exact movements of the other factions for a while. Because they needed to train Emilia from scratch on how to be a politician, and let her acquire the skills she needs, rather than panic her with unneeded information. Roswaal and Otto, the internal affairs duo, understood that as her reasoning for focusing her attention elsewhere, and also understand that it ought to be safe to remove some of those restrictions on this journey.

So Otto nods to Emilia and begins mentally organizing the facts.

Otto: "First we will discuss the support for the candidates as of the present. Initially, Duchess Crusch Karsten and Anastasia Hoshin were generally understood as the sure winner and the competition. The other three factions, including yours… if you'd allow me to be blunt, they're somewhat seen as space-fillers."

Emilia: "…Mm, I can't deny that. But from what you're saying…"

Otto: "Exactly. Common opinion has changed over this last year. Because the other three factions, starting with yours, have made notable achievements."

The most conspicuous achievements from the Emilia Faction, predictably, are the defeat of Sloth and the White Whale. Crusch's Faction was the one leading the offensive against the Whale, but Crusch herself has publicly stated the greatness of Sir Natsuki Subaru's contribution to the effort. Though the other factions were helping, Subaru headed the Sloth offensive. Both achievements instantly drew public attention to the previously-disregarded Emilia. Emilia also stands out negatively due to her heritage. For better or for worse, Emilia is widely acknowledged as the topic of much gossip and rumor.

The other unknown candidates, Felt and Priscilla, have also been given similar benefits.

Priscilla Barielle has done remarkable work. After inheriting land from her deceased husband, Leip Barielle, she used Lugunica's unfortunate position as a nation bordering the long-hostile Vollachian Empire to her advantage, and instantly made allies of the neighboring territories in the confusion. Almost like magic, she pacified Vollachia and made allies of the lords. Then she revitalized lands that had been ruined by war. In this short time frame, she has definitely shown good prospects. She also has her overwhelming attitude and her looks going for her. Southern Lugunica grows more and more supportive of her by the day.

Meanwhile, Felt has Reinhard Van Astrea and the territories of the Astrea family: relative to the other candidates, she is stuck in the shadow of her knight. The title of 'Sword Saint', as overwhelmingly famous as it is, is not especially useful when choosing a new Ruler. The attitudes of the local lords, including those in the Astrea domain, veer closer to distrust than caution.

But Felt overcame this poor situation quite unexpectedly. Rather than consult the powerful nobles who could stymie the other candidates, she assembled those who had resigned from office and commoners on the streets. Felt is stupidly good at picking out those with hidden aspirations, or talented people who were never given a chance. Never mind the rumors about her having royal blood, she can identify people's talents and assign them to a post, which is perhaps the most important quality in a leader. From that small trigger, the Astrea household and its surrounding territories burst into activity, while the onlooking lords began to slowly change their tune. It's still just a small spark, but she is definitely carving herself a place in history. Nobody important in this nation is ignoring her.

Otto: "…is where each faction is now. Our faction is quite notable for its achievements, but the other two parties have a more stable foundation. Though, I believe that we could disregard that if the Sizeable Hare offensive were officially acknowledged."

Emilia: "Otto-kun, you're saying the same things as Subaru. But maybe this means it's safe to take a narcissistic view, and say that we're about in the middle."

Otto: "For now. Yes. But… there have been some changes on Duchess Karsten's front. Ones that are to our benefit."

Emilia: "To our benefit?"

Otto: "Yes. Duchess Crusch Karsten, as if she's a different person, has lost some of her luster over this year. She used to be stern in both public and private affairs, someone that the supporters of the previous Duke Karsten couldn't help but accept."

Something has changed in her politics and policies. She has become less decisive, and plainly gives a soft impression. Rumors have spread that she attempted her best to serve the unwomanly role of Duchess, but finally her true colors have come through.

She's apparently busy dealing with unsatisfied subjects and lords, even calling upon the previous, retired Duke's assistance.

Otto: “People were certain that she’d win the Selection, being that she secured the first achievement with the White Whale offensive… but, it’s unclear what exactly led to her downfall. Emilia-sama, be sure to keep vigilant.”

Emilia: “—I see.”

Emilia lowers her eyes, full of gloom. She can’t help but feel sympathetic for her rivals, but Otto finds that stance dangerous and fragile. They’re eventually going to oppose each other. It’s disadvantageous to be unduly supportive. This last year has taught Otto that the truism applies in both commerce and politics.

Otto: “Try not to brood on it. More conversations like this will have to happen in the future.”

Emilia: “Mm. Thank you. I know you’re just looking out for me.”

Otto: “Excellent. Now, let’s finally get onto the topic of Anastasia’s faction. They have nowhere to call their base in Lugunica, but have the backing of important merchants in Kararagi. Stores that had originally been considering the idea are now springing up across Lugunica, all with Hoshin Company’s backing.”

Emilia: “But what does that mean? Maybe there are lots of new stores, but that doesn’t mean lots of new suppor… oh, there’s more people who know her, so she’s more visible?”

Otto: “That would be a side-effect, I think. Her goal is more simple than that. —She can use far much more money. And since money is so simple, it works on anyone. There is no creature of society out there who lives in peace after economic downfall.”

Making allies of merchants means making more friends in the world of business. And being that economics supports society, holding economic power means she can attack and defend that society. She’s making allies all over the place, making it nigh impossible to counter her, a businesswoman who prioritizes her economic strength.

Otto: “I believe that Anastasia’s faction is the one we must be most cautious of. And then we get an invitation from them… and it all feels like we're going to wind up in their debt. Do you understand how immeasurably troubled I am?"

Emilia: "…It's finally sunken in sooo deep. I'm sorry for acting so rashly."

Otto: "Nothing to worry, just as long as you understand. You'll never do anything careless again I'm sure… I'm sure… because I'm sure that you understand!"

Emilia bows her head, and Otto shakes his in submission, then sighs.

Otto's clear explanation of matters makes it very easy to understand. Emilia nods over and over.

Indeed. The world of politics is complex and tricky.

She already knew that her thoughts of 'I'll do my best' and 'Let's do our best' wouldn't secure her the victory, but it dizzies her to think that she has to pay mind to what the others are doing. She's glad that he's revealed these secrets to her, but it also makes her far more uneasy.

Otto: "You don't have to agonize over it alone."

Says Otto, imagining how Emilia must feel. Emilia looks up. Otto fiddles with his grey hair.

Otto: "You may be the central figure, but that doesn't mean that you have to do everything yourself. You have this whole carriage with you."

Emilia: "This whole carriage?"

Otto: "Natsuki-san is at the reigns. Beatrice-chan is on guard to make sure he doesn't slack off. Garfiel is keeping lookout atop the carriage, and I am the one who planned our itinerary. What you do is thank all of us for our work, and we'll bumble our way to Priestella."

Emilia's eyes widen, comprehending what Otto means. And it's funny, because this indirect phrasing reminds her of someone else.

Emilia: "Otto-kun. You sound sooo much like Subaru."

Otto: "What?! Truly?! Oh no… he must've infected me over all this time spent with him… n-no, please no, this terrifying thought just —"

Subaru: "Hey, Otto! What are you talking so cheerily about with Emilia-tan? Emilia-tan smiles are my diet, so you better not steal any!"

Otto's shoulders hitch up as the person in question butts into the conversation. Otto's reaction makes Emilia smile, and Otto smiles back, looking defeated.

Subaru: "Come on! What's so interesting?! This isn't fair! Beatrice, take the reigns. I'm busting in."

Beatrice: "Auh! No, in fact! Stop, I suppose! I can't… I-It'll flip over! It's going to flip over, in fact! Look, she's going to flip it over, I suppose!"

Hearing the yells from the driver's seat, Otto resignedly gets to his feet. A certain impatient knight must be hitting his limit. Time to swap places and visit the dragons.

Emilia: "Otto-kun."

When Emilia calls Otto from behind as he prepares to move to the driver's seat. He glances back at her, and his breath catches. Emilia's trusting smile stabs him through the chest.

Emilia: "I know I'll cause some problems, but I'll still do my best. I'm counting on you."

Otto: "—Yes, please do. I'll take my own enjoyment in the scraps."

Emilia: "That also sounded kind of like Subaru."

With a bitter smile, Otto steps over to the driver's platform. Subaru and Emilia are both devious. For Otto, stricken with an illness where he must answer to the expectations upon him, they’re a lethal combination.

While all this banter unfolds, twelve days pass from their departure. Emilia’s group safely arrives at the Watergate City, Priestella.

Chapter 5:
The Watergate City, Priestella

1

—Upon their arrival, Subaru and the others are greeted by towering, grand walls. Subaru: “Yeah, this looks exactly like the prison I expected it to…”

Mutters Subaru as he pokes his head out of the carriage window, Otto at the reigns. Beatrice captures Subaru’s muttering, her head also out the window beneath Subaru.

Beatrice: “Joshua said it was a sightseeing spot, but Betty doubts that, in fact. It looks far more depressing than relaxing, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Agreed. I mean, I guess the bridge and gates and stuff are kinda cool.” Subaru nods in agreement to Beatrice and looks down.

Their carriage is travelling across the massive, stone Tigracy Bridge, which leads to the front gates of Priestella.

Subaru stretches slights and looks over to the horizon, where he sees sunlight glinting on the water. To him it looks like an ocean, but since oceans don’t exist in this world, it has to be a lake or a river.

Beatrice: “Priestella is a city built upon a lake, in fact. The land inside those walls becomes so flat that it forms a basin in the center, I suppose. If you envision the city as an old trap, then of course you’d expect the center to easily flood, in fact.”

Subaru: “You mean that thing ‘bout it being a trap for some nasty witchbeast. Emilia mentioned that too. Is it actually true though?”

Beatrice: “This is my first time seeing this place, and I don’t know what the specific purpose of it was either, I suppose. But I suspect it is true, now that I’ve seen it, in fact.”

Beatrice's bluish eyes gaze at the city's gates beyond the bridge.

The walls keep her from peering inside, but she must be imagining what the city looks like. It's unclear how precisely the books in the Forbidden Archive spoke of the world, but Beatrice's extensive knowledge has helped on more than a few occasions.

Beatrice: "…Why are you stroking Betty's head, I suppose."

Subaru: "Because it's there. I wanna spend all the time patting you that I'm able."

Beatrice: "Utter nonsense, and patronizing, undesired nonsense at that, in fact!"

Nevertheless Beatrice neglects to swat Subaru's hand a way and he proceeds to pat her more while gazing past the bridge-railing, at the lake. The pristine waters give him a clear view to the bottom of the lake, with not a single piece of litter or pollution in sight.

If the whole lake is like this, it's an example of incredible ethics.

Subaru: "Actually I didn't notice any litter or illegally dumped industrial waste on the road either. Probably 'cause people don't have much stuff but still it's nice."

Otto: "Priestella is particularly strict on littering since it has to preserve its landscape. There will be a simple border check once we enter the gates, please don't get weirdly assertive and reject the binding paperwork they give you."

Warns Otto, having caught Subaru's muttering. Subaru tilts his head.

Subaru: "Paperwork?"

Emilia: "I think you're usually exempted from it if you have a crest on your carriage when you're going to the Capital, but absolutely everyone has to fill out paperwork to enter Priestella."

Subaru nods, impressed, and more or less accepts it as a passport and customs check. But once again he tilts his head at the words ‘binding paperwork’.

Subaru: “Is it written on paper that makes you geass yourself? Like it does something to your od once you sign, and the second you break the terms your gate stops working or something…”

Emilia: “Eek, that’d be sooo scary… there shouldn’t be anything that forceful. The paperwork is just a statement that you won’t do anything bad. But it means your conscience will be keeping a close eye on you.”

Subaru: “…We’d have world peace if everyone were as strict on themselves as you, Emilia-tan.”

Subaru smiles wryly, aware of his own scummy personality, at Emilia’s idealism.

Either way, he understands that there is paperwork, and that it is not actually binding.

Otto: “There are nationals laws that must be upheld, but the Mayor and Lord who manage the city have rather extensive authority there. There are many things about Priestella that simply differ from national law. The paperwork will surely mention what they are, so please refrain from mocking it and actually read it.”

Garfiel: “‘S a goddamn pain. How ‘bout you read it n’ tell us what it said when yer done.”

Otto: “You’ll never mature with that attitude. It’s necessary for you to learn how to at least skim paperwork, what with your social position. You can’t just stockpile bizarre trivia from the books you like.”

Garfiel: “It ain’t b’zarre trivia, ‘s a man’s lust fer th’dramatic. Yeh, Captain?” Subaru: “You got it.”

Garfiel balances precariously on the carriage roof as he peeks his head over and down. Subaru nods firmly in reply, Otto sighs, and Emilia watches happily. Beatrice shakes her head in lamentation.

Beatrice: “You two children are just impossible, in fact.” Otto:

"They are a nightmare to herd."

Who could guess how Beatrice's statement resounded with him.

Unfortunately for him, no one else in the carriage is capable of empathizing with his grief and exhaustion.

—Patrasche roars, and everyone directs their attention to the front. The gates of Priestella stand directly before them.

2

The border inspection ends with underwhelming ease.

Emilia and Otto were right. The paperwork described the terms they would have to follow to enter the city, and the rules by which they needed to abide once inside.

That said, every term was practically impossible to accidentally violate, so there's no need to pay that much conscious attention to them.

All you have to do to enter the city is read the paper, sign your name, and get the officer's approval. The officers did panic a little once Emilia introduced herself, but being that Anastasia passed through here too, they probably figure that something is going on.

Subaru: "Guess it is pretty big news to have two girls with the right to the Throne in one place."

Emilia: "There wasn't too much fuss, so I think Anastasia let them know beforehand. Or maybe it was Joshua-kun or Mimi-chan."

Subaru: "Joshua feels possible if you ignore his clumsiness, but I seriously doubt it was Mimi."

It doesn't feel like the catgirl has that kind of sensibility.

But not because she's selfish or anything. How to describe it?

Subaru: "'Cause she's cute."

Emilia: “Yes, because she’s cute.”

And it’s so mysteriously persuasive that it makes Emilia nod. Subaru crosses his arms, finding that no other word fits. Also for some reason Beatrice stomps on his foot.

Subaru kills his time by placating a displeased Beatrice, until Otto and Garfiel finally finish their drawn-out inspection and join the others beyond the gates.

Subaru: “Hey guys. What held you up?”

Otto: “Garfiel did. I’ve been constantly, constantly telling him to practice his writing, and still…”

Subaru: “Garfiel, you can’t write?”

Garfiel: “I can. ‘S just, eh, puttin’ it how you would yer’d call it avant garde or, eh, whatever.”

Meaning his handwriting is so horrendous that the officers couldn’t read it.

The officers must have offered to write for their illiterate client, but Garfiel’s pride would not allow it.

Subaru: “I won’t say anything against you, but you better study if you don’t want this to happen again. I know you write letters to Lewes-san, and those ones have to be legible.”

Garfiel: “Ha, now there’s a joke, Captain. Me n’ granny go way back. My nanna can read anythin’ my amazin’ self writes, even if it’s with my left hand.”

Subaru: “You aren’t thinking to improve at all are you.”

Says Subaru, sighing in exhaustion, to a proud Garfiel.

Garfiel’s grandmother Lewes is not living with him in Roswaal’s mansion. She and the twenty-four duplicates have been tasked with duties in various forests in Roswaal’s domain.

Emilia and Garfiel still hold the command right for the doubles, and their orders still reach the doubles from a distance. The team is trying to utilize this and have the girls serve as middlemen for communicating orders.

Subaru proposed the idea, and Lewes carries the responsibility for the work. Garfiel opposed it all at first, but generally agrees with it now.

And so Lewes and the doubles are living in Earlham Village. The plan is to go girl-by-girl, teaching them everything they need to know, and sending them to towns and villages once they're ready.

Subaru: "It's like a huge spy operation, which kinda makes it sound bad…"

But he loathes to simply leave them there, hanging around without any role or purpose. Perhaps Subaru's guilt from discarding them in a previous loop is what spurred the idea.

Emilia: "Subaru? They finished the bag check for the carriage, let's go?"

Emilia calls Subaru out of his reverie, and he hurriedly glances up. He gives a strained smile as she looks curiously on, and grabs Patrasche's reigns.

As if sensing Subaru's unease, the smart black dragon nuzzles her snout against the back of his neck. It mystifies Subaru how relaxing the rough sensation is.

Subaru: "…Thank you, for everything."

Subaru replies to her silent compassion by stroking her hard scales. Patrasche responds with her snout, and Subaru finally tugs the reigns to set off for Priestella proper.

They exit the front gate to find a river flowing between the exterior gates and the city. They cross the stone bridge over the river, the inner gates open, and Priestella reveals itself.

Subaru: "Woah…"

Subaru sighs in admiration at the sight unfolding before him.

And he isn't the only one reacting like this. Emilia and Beatrice, seated on either side of him, also express their wonder.

He must apologize for using the word 'jail' on this aquatic city.

When Subaru first heard about Priestella, he envisioned something like the old world's Venice. He was correct to do so.

The city is circular, enclosed in turn by the circular walls.

Ignoring the fact that its size is that of a city, its shape is essentially that of a sports arena. The outer rim is the most elevated, elevation dropping the closer you get to the center.

Dense rows of stone buildings line the tiers of the city, the most western-seeming architecture that Subaru has seen yet.

Large canals run through the town, with notably massive canals—rather, waterways—dividing the circular city into four even sections. Subaru sees several gondolas paddling on the water, and a tingle shoots down his spine at the thought: gondoliers.

The Blue City, The City of Water, The Watergate City Priestella. Each one rings true. The sight brings nothing but wonder.

Subaru: "Amazing…"

He says, and no one can deny him.

The guardsmen at the gates smile in satisfaction at the group's astonishment. Most likely, everyone who passes through these gates reacts exactly the same way.

That reaction both fulfils the guardsmen's office-bound obligations, and is the greatest of rewards to them. Definitely is. Right into their trap.

Garfiel: "Yeah, this's stunnin'. So Otto wasn't just spoutin' bullcrap."

Garfiel recovers from the shock first and rubs the tip of his nose.

But his excitement has not faded, for his cheeks remain slightly red.

His masculine passion for the dramatic must have been set alight by this amazing place (which falls under the heading of ‘things that are gigantic’).

Otto: “I’ve always wished to visit this place, connected as it is to the God of Merchants, Hoshin, but this is stupendous. It was worth visiting regardless of Hoshin.”

Otto fidgets with his hands, looking incredibly emotional.

The mention of Hoshin reminds Subaru of the name: Hoshin of the Wastes.

Subaru: “Hoshin’s that guy. That one merchant guy from ages ago who made crazy riches from a burnt wasteland.”

Otto: “You’re a little off, but overall correct. Four hundred years ago, Hoshin travelled the yet- untamed lands of Kararagi unaided, transformed it into an economic infrastructure using solely his own wits, and made a fortune. The man is a paragon.”

Solely because it’s about a merchant, Otto’s eyes blaze with passion as he tells the story of Hoshin. If he built the foundations for one of the four great countries, the Kararagi City State, then Subaru can agree with the legend being passed down.

Subaru: “Anastasia calls herself Hoshin after him too.”

Otto: “It’s very bold of her. I doubt there is any way to more plainly state her enthusiasm and goals, but everyone alive is going to be skeptical. Though I do presently think she has achieved enough to warrant the name.”

Subaru: “If she’s seriously doing something to warrant the name, then… well, snagging Lugunica’s throne works. Just marching toward her goal.”

Sincerely impressed, Subaru manages to pry himself from the beautiful scenery.

He strokes Beatrice's head and tugs Emilia's sleeve to pull them away from the mesmerizing city.

Subaru: "So, Anastasia's waiting for us at the Water Plumage Pavilion. Dunno where it is, but considering who she is, doubt it's someplace cheap."

Emilia: "Mm, right. I think she told the gate officers about the visit too, so it's going to be a nice place. I think Otto-kun investigated more into that…"

Otto nods and hops onto the coachman's platform. He jerks his chin, gesturing to the carriage.

Otto: "I've supposed the route, so allow me to lead. We won't be able to rush since boats have higher priority than carriages in this town. Which I note because I suspect Natsuki-san still struggles with leisurely carriage rides."

Subaru: "Oh yeah? If it was just Patrasche, I wouldn't even have to say anything just stare at her in my trembling boots, and she'd have the carriage doing whatever I want. Right?"

Subaru boldly gazes at Patrasche and winks. Patrasche looks away. Somehow, it feels like she just sighed at him.

The unexpected reaction dejects Subaru. Emilia consolingly pats his back, while Beatrice takes his hand and files him into the carriage.

Garfiel: "N' we're off!"

Announces Garfiel from his new, dedicated perch on the carriage's roof. Otto smiles wryly as he whips the reigns, and the carriage rolls into motion.

Their pace is truly slow, so sluggish that the drop in speed from the uphill inclines cannot feasibly explain it.

Subaru: "But going off what I'm seeing out the windows, there really aren't many carriages."

Emilia: “There aren’t. And look how all the roads wide enough for carriages aren’t straight, they’re windy, because the canals have higher priority than streets.”

Subaru: “Ah, you’re right.”

Emilia is right. Footpaths and carriage roads make winding detours around the canals, which cross through the city. It is inconvenient, but stops feeling that way once Subaru watches the canals alongside the carriage, and the gondolas passing by.

Subaru: “Carriages have the Windbreaker Blessing, but do boats have anything? Like a Blessing of No Capsizing, or a Seabreeze Blessing, something.”

Emilia: “I don’t really know, but I don’t think the boats themselves have blessings. But maybe the boatsmen have a Blessing of Lakes or Blessing of Ferrying.”

Beatrice: “Though this knowledge isn’t particularly widespread, water dragons have blessings, in fact. One that protects then from the effects of water, much like those of earth dragons, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Water dragons. Wouldn’t mind seeing one. And just one.”

Beatrice: “I’m sure there’s bound to be some in this city, in fact.”

Though she answers Subaru’s question, Beatrice’s reply is not proactive, what with her dislike of animals. Her strange awkwardness does not end merely with Patrasche, but apparently extends to water dragons.

Subaru: “I don’t think hugging, say, a liger’d be that unpleasant.”

Beatrice: “It doesn’t kill me not to touch animals, I suppose. Betty is cuter than them, in fact.”

Subaru: “Doubt fighting an animal in a match of cuteness’d go anywhere… actually you might lose a few points if you fought on the same terms?”

To Subaru’s eyes, even Patrasche looks a combination of cool and cute. But a different kind of cute to Emilia, Rem, and Beatrice's cute of course.

Beatrice looks on suspiciously, while Emilia jumps excitedly on the word 'liger' and gazes at Subaru.

Emilia: "Me too! Do you think they'd let me touch them if I asked?"

Subaru: "You could've asked when Mimi was at the mansion. You get weirdly considerate about things like that."

Emilia: "They're their riding dogs, I can't just do whatever I want with them. I've been missing the feeling of fur, since Puck hasn't been around."

It seems that even Emilia, who loves Puck like family, has been enchanted by his fur. Subaru agrees to ask about it and Emilia starts humming happily. While hideously tone-deaf.

Listening to her shoddy humming, Subaru puts his hand to his cheek and leans on his elbow as he gazes at the cityscape. He leans on the window frame. Beatrice gazes out the window's glass, kneeling on her seat. Subaru deliberates whether to tell her that it's bad manners to do that, when,

Beatrice: "Oh, Subaru. Here's your chance, in fact."

Subaru: "Hm? Wh—woah!"

Subaru looks over to see a giant spray of water from the canal as a passing fish—or no, it's not a fish. The creature has a long, serpentine body, alongside stubby but present limbs. It's a water dragon. Its blue, slippery skin evokes images of snakes, but its head is clearly a dragon's.

Sharp fangs crowd its mouth, and catfish whiskers extend from its snout. The earth dragon looks like a bipedal lizard, while the water dragon is more oriental. Subaru almost wants to call it Shenlong.

Subaru: "But it looks kinda stuck up, or unfriendly."

Beatrice: "That's what it looks like to humans, I suppose. Water dragons are much more bothersome to domesticate than earth dragons, in fact. You must raise it from hatchling to adult before it recognizes you as its master, I suppose.”

Subaru: “So they take time. Me and Patrasche bonded the second our eyes met.”

Beatrice: “It baffles me how she’s so attached to you, in fact.”

It baffles Subaru too.

Though she is originally from Crusch’s faction, she grew extremely attached to Subaru from the moment he picked her for the White Whale offensive. Subaru believes his choice back then, picking the highly assertive Patrasche, was the correct one.

There are so many times where he would have failed without her.

Subaru: “Hmpf. The visage of our Patrasche abounds in refinement far the superior.”

Emilia: “Subaru. How come you’re suddenly talking like Anne?”

A strange rebellion against the water dragon, dancing through the canal, overtakes Subaru. And though the dragon couldn’t have noticed his gaze, it turns to glance at him. The dragon pokes its head out of the water and screeches. For some reason Subaru hears the “Eyes off, interlopers,” loud and clear.

Subaru: “I think this asshole just insulted us. Which means it’s time for…”

Dragon: “—℈!”

As revenge, Subaru decides to mimic the roars of the giant black witchbeast he saw when the mansion was burning down.

When a sharp, dignified roar cuts through to the water. Patrasche’s roar.

She perceived her master’s belligerence toward the dragon and got him revenge. Subaru doesn’t know what she meant with that bellow, but her voice and glare terrify the water dragon, which squeaks and slinks back underwater. Then it speeds up and carts its boat swiftly away. The boatsman panics at the sudden speed while Subaru watches on, dazed.

Subaru: “Wh-What just happened?”

Otto: “—Natsuki-san, please keep Patrasche-chan from doing anything too strange. I’d truly prefer that we didn’t make a scene so shortly after entering the city.”

Scolds Otto from the driver’s seat. Subaru waves at him dismissively and whistles through his fingers so that Patrasche can hear him. They can’t exactly communicate by whistling, but hopefully it lets her know that he’s grateful.

Subaru: “Water dragons are pretty cool, but Patrasche is the coolest.”

Beatrice: “…Ours is better than that undignified water dragon, in fact.”

Beatrice begrudgingly agrees with Subaru, perhaps because he spoke so happily.

While they cross a canal by bridge, Subaru thinks of the panoramic view of the city he saw from the gates.

Subaru: “Feels like these canals split the city into four or something.”

Emilia: “They do. The giant waterways in the middle of Priestella divide it into districts. Going clockwise from the main gates, they’re District One, District Two, District Three, and District Four.”

Subaru hums.

Subaru: “Pretty uncreative naming scheme. They could’ve gone for something more like East Blue. Don’t you agree?”

Garfiel: “That I do, Captain.”

Beatrice: “No one cares about your tastes, I suppose.”

Says Beatrice icily at the happy pair. Emilia smiles as she watches on and raises her finger, speaking as if she has read this in a book,

Emilia: “The numbered districts all have different stores and occupations, and the residential areas are concentrated in districts Two and Three, which are farthest from the gates. The Water Plumage Pavilion must have lots of visiting travelers, so it’ll be in District One.”

Subaru: “Which means we should be hitting it soon… or now.”

The slow carriage comes to a stop during their conversation. Apparently they’ve reached the inn. Otto loops around from the driver’s seat and into the carriage.

Otto: “We’ve arrived. I’ll speak with the employees to have Frufoo and Patrasche-chan moved to the stables, so feel free to… no, actually, please wait by the entrance.”

Subaru: “What changed your mind? Is it really that bad for us to go in first?!”

Otto: “It is. We don’t want you to encounter Anastasia-san, and for me to come back and find she’s hooked you.”

Subaru frowns at Otto’s lack of trust, but nobody can refute him considering their track record. They take their hand luggage and leave the carriage while an employee escorts Otto behind the establishment, out of sight.

Subaru watches them go, stretches, and finally directs his gaze to the Water Plumage Pavilion.

Subaru: “Now, just what kind of lodgings have we… we.”

Subaru’s jaw drops. Emilia puts her finger to her cheek, tilting her head.

Emilia: “The building looks sooo funny. I don’t think I’ve seen one like it.”

Garfiel and Beatrice share Emilia’s candid thoughts. But Subaru gets a different impression from the place. Of course he would. After all,

Subaru: “An inn? …This is a ryokan.”

Built of smooth wood, with sliding glass doors.

And hedges, and a gravel path from the gates to the entrance, and a tiled roof, leaving no room for doubt.

Right there in the middle of such a western city, and entirely out-of-place piece of architecture. This is the day that Natsuki Subaru meets the wafuu structure called the Water Plumage Pavilion.

???: “Look at the surprise on you. Was a good choice I made, hand-picking this hotel.” When a calm, cheerful voice cuts into his stupefaction.

Still stunned, Subaru slowly redirects his gaze—beyond the hedges, to where someone peers over at their group.

She has a white fur dress and an eye-catching fox scarf. The cold season has already gone, and the dress has fabric thin enough to call in season, but the scarf could be important since it’s exactly the same as ever.

A slight frame and long, wavy violet hair. A pleasant smile on her charming face, and an indecipherable glint in her aquamarine eyes.

No doubt about it. This is the one who invited them here. A direct, face-to-face welcome from Anastasia Hoshin. And,

Anastasia: “Been some time since I last seen you. Many thanks to you for coming all the way. Figures to me the journey’s worn you out. How says we spend time relaxing inside, then chat?”

Before Otto can return, she easily takes the lead.

—Everyone present can see so.

Chapter 6:
Two Spirit Knights, Two Greedy Merchants, and One Selfless Angel

1

Contrary to everyone's expectations, Anastasia seemed to be striking a preemptive blow. The atmosphere in the Water Plumage Pavilion tensed.

Emilia: "—Thanks for welcoming us in person, it makes us feel at ease."

Coming out to meet Emilia had certainly been calculated. While Subaru was lost in thought, a slightly confused Emilia voiced a reply, grabbing his attention.

Anastasia cast a frown at Subaru, probably pondering the origins of Garfiel, who was standing next to him, and Beatrice, who was clinging to his sleeve. Subaru, having spent many days frolicking with them in the mansion, was calmed down by their presence.

Anastasia: "—The same face as always."

Her gaze left Subaru for Emilia as she murmured to herself, her light green eyes bearing a hint of ridicule. Her relationship with Emilia had changed little in the year past, a small conflict arising between them was not unexpected.

Subaru: "Well, she's just as cute as… No, she's even cuter than before."

Emilia: "Subaru, don't kid around with such a serious expression."

Hearing her response, Subaru rubbed his nose with an air of awkwardness, noting that Beatrice was paying close attention to the proceedings. The corners of Anastasia's mouth lifted in a faint smile.

Anastasia: “Natsuki-kun, I heard that after the subjugation of the White Whale stuff went a bit awry. Are Roswaal’s border territories doin’ well?”

Subaru: “Sorry you had to catch such unpleasant news. Thanks to your troops, we survived the aftermath. As companions, we’ll mutually support each other, right?”

Anastasia: “Is that so? I’m glad ya think the same way. The two of us were glad ya could come. It’s been a while since you’ve seen Julius, yes?”

Anastasia clapped her hands together, taking an opportunity to tease Subaru, who immediately caught on and frowned. Emilia and Anastasia laughed simultaneously, as Subaru grew uncomfortable, thinking that neither of them understood his complex relationship with Julius. He had tried to explain it over and over to Emilia, but each attempt inevitably ended in failure.

Garfiel: “Ah… That’s a bit strange. I’m guessin’ the woman’s one of Emilia-sama’s enemies?”

The previously silent Garfiel voiced a question, making no attempt to conceal his hostility. Subaru scratched his head in helpless embarrassment, and Anastasia’s round eyes grew rounder.

Emilia: “Garfiel, you’re not wrong, but you’re putting it in a pretty extreme way. After all, weren’t we invited here?”

Garfiel: “Yeah but still, won’tcha hafta stab each other in the back one day? That’s gonna sting after actin’ all buddy-buddy.”

Emilia: “That’s true. Garfiel’s a gentle person, so I’m worried about that…”

Garfiel: “—Hk! Who’s gentle?! What’re ya talkin’ bout, Emilia-sama!”

As expected of him, Garfiel hurriedly tried to deflect Emilia’s sarcastic words. Anastasia eyed him curiously, wondering why he seemed so embarrassed, when,

???: “Ah! Garf’s here! Miss, why didn’t you tell me?!”

The wooden door of the inn was flung open with a bang. The racket was caused by Mimi, a catgirl whose lovely face shone brightly as she noticed her audience. She flew into the room and surprised everyone by firmly grasping Garfiel’s arm.

Mimi: “Welcome! You’re tired, you’re tired, so Mimi will guide you to your room! That’s where you’ll be staying! Hey, you’re not budging at all!”

Garfiel: “Oi, oi, wait, wait! My amazin’ self hasn’t agreed… You’re strong! What?!”

Mimi: “This way! That way! Hurry!”

The petite Mimi clung to Garfiel’s arm and, though he should have been strong enough to break free, he was dragged along helplessly, nonetheless. Perhaps she was using a secret technique, but it was way more likely that Garfiel did not want to distance Mimi by shaking her off. After all, despite appearances, they were supposed to be the same age.

Anastasia: “Hmmm…”

Garfiel allowed himself to be dragged away with little resistance and Anastasia had a rare troubled look on her face, as did Emilia.

Anastasia: “Haaaaa, Mimi’s always been lively, but even so I can’t help but be surprised just now.”

Emilia: “Ah, that’s right. That’s good. I thought you might have felt she left you alone.”

Anastasia: “Not at all, that’s not a problem. However—”

After their exchange, Anastasia’s briefly softened gaze sharpened. Finding himself chilled to the bone by that calm look, Subaru unconsciously moved to stand in front of Emilia.

Anastasia: “I’d like you to tell me what kind of a child he is, the one who has attracted Mimi’s attention.”

The dangerous question was loaded with the quiet, burning rage a woman would hold towards pests who surrounded her cute daughter or little sister. It subtly conveyed that Mimi was loved, and, although they'd arrived early, the thought of dealing with this left Subaru exhausted.

???: "…Why is it, Natsuki-san, that you suddenly have such a tired face?"

At that moment, Otto, who had returned from securing the ground dragons and their carriage, found Subaru in an exhausted state and joined their gathering at the entrance of the inn.

2

Priestella's famed hotel, the Water Plumage Pavilion, was tiled with wooden floorboards resembling tatami mats. This place was clearly geared toward exhausted pedestrians like Subaru, who immediately seated himself on a cushion.

Subaru: "If you're that obsessed with me, I may get in over my head."

Beatrice: "What are you babbling about all of a sudden, in fact. Why are you so restless, I suppose?"

Beatrice calmly took a seat next to him, in front of a table, but Emilia and others seemed puzzled at the notion of sitting directly on the floor. The long wooden desk and the large hall were all reminiscent of a Japanese-style inn, excluding the lack of an actual tatami floor.

However, a true expert like Subaru found some reasons to take away some points.

Subaru: "For example, this place lacks a sliding door and a paper door, and, unfortunately, the employees are not dressed in kimonos. It's in poor taste to resemble a ryokan on the outside, but not faithfully reproducing the atmosphere."

Ultimately, Subaru could not shake away the uncomfortable feeling that the setting was straight out of a fantasy in spite of the employees' clothing and hospitality.

Subaru: "So, my grade totals to seventy points. This place is barely acceptable, but what's good's good, that's how I would judge it. I hope you will work hard to improve in the future."

Beatrice: "What are you talking about, in fact?"

Subaru: "It's a cheap, spirited, and light-hearted kind of fun that relieves my frustration… so I'll be fine even if you let go of my hand."

Beatrice: "…Just to be sure, I'll hold it for a little while longer, I suppose."

The grip on Subaru's left hand slightly strengthened, and he said no more, instead turning to face Emilia on his right. Emilia, who had been examining the strange surroundings, noticed his gaze.

Emilia: "It's so amazing, isn't it? It's only a little strange from the outside, but I feel reaaally odd as soon as I enter it, sitting on the floor and taking off my shoes…"

Subaru: "I didn't have a bed in my bedroom, I had a futon on the floor. I'd be surprised if this place doesn't have any… Would the employees let me have one?"

Otto: "What an unusual and unnecessary proposition… Or, rather, is Natsuki-san familiar with Kararagi-style customs?"

Otto, sitting opposite Beatrice, joined the conversation between Subaru and Emilia. The phrase "Kararagi-style" caught Subaru's attention, causing him to frown.

Subaru: "'Kararagi-style'? Is this building a product of it?"

Otto: "That's right, these wafuu architectural styles are designs taken from Kararagi, although their use isn't as widespread here. In Kararagi itself, designs much akin to the Water Plumage Pavilion's own are considered traditional."

Subaru: "So why is this hotel in that style? Is it a diplomacy thing?"

This wafuu architecture was doubtlessly of Japanese design. Subaru wanted to confirm his suspicions on why that was.

And as if to supplement Subaru's thoughts, Otto raised a finger and spoke.

Otto: "That would be because of Priestella's history itself. Hoshin of the Wilderness was responsible for its construction. I trust you've heard of him?"

Subaru: "Really, I've heard a bit about this Hoshin of the Wilderness."

Otto: "Despite being born in such a dark age, he managed so many achievements. Even calling him a Sage would not be a stretch. However, it was because of how dazzling he was that disputes ended up happening."

Otto's story took place just over a hundred years ago, when Priestella had been split between Lugunican and Kararagian cultures. Priestella was geographically Lugunican, but its founder Hoshin considered himself and was considered by the world as a native of Kararagi. Lugunica disliked the cultural influence of Kararagi and had tried to eradicate all traces of its culture, but the locals took offense and protested, which led to several territorial disputes between Lugunica and Kararagi. Eventually, diplomatic relations deteriorated to the point where both countries had been on the verge of cutting off their relationship.

Otto: "Fortunately, this didn't last. Gradually, regulations became more relaxed, and Lugunica and Kararagi mended their relations. During that period, import of Kararagi's customs slowed down. It was probably due to this ordeal that Lugunica felt secure in letting its security measures become more lax."

Subaru: "In any case, it's good the problem was solved. So Kararagi customs can be traced back to Hoshin?"

Otto: "It seems so. Hoshin was a person with innovative ideas from the start. His influences on ideology, technology, and legislation were immense."

Subaru: “—I see.”

Subaru drew his hand to his chin. He had received the answer he was looking for.

Otto’s story confirmed that Kararagi’s founding father, Hoshin of the Wilderness, had the same identity as Subaru and Al, that of a person summoned from a different world.

Subaru now knew of three people who had been summoned into another world, but the timings were all off. Hoshin from four-hundred years ago, Al from twenty years ago, and himself from one year ago.

Subaru did not understand the time gap, or why he had been chosen, and it was meaningless for him to speculate wildly. But he certainly was not alone. Just knowing that granted Subaru’s heart some small salvation.

Anastasia: “—It would appear that everyone’s enjoying this ryokan.”

A thin sliding door made of wood slid open quietly, and Anastasia, entering with perfect timing, stood at the other side with a smile. And, standing next to her,

???: “Long time no see, Emilia-sama. I sincerely apologize for being late. I should have been the first to welcome you.”

A man with an apologetic face and a sweet, soft spoken voice. Just from hearing it, many women would assume it to be the voice of an angel. An amusing pipe dream, but the voice did have the necessary color, beauty, and strength. This was the voice of the Finest of Knights, Julius Juukulius, which existed solely to vex others’ hearts by simply existing. At least, that was how it felt to Subaru.

Emilia: “Mhm, it’s been a while, Julius. You look like you’re doing well.”

Julius: “I am grateful for your consideration. Likewise, Emilia-sama’s kindness and beauty are ever the more polished. It’s as if the shade of your gaze alone strengthens this Kingdom, while the rest of the world suffers a loss.”

Subaru found his speech, as always, pretentious and disgusting. Julius turned his gaze from Emilia to Subaru.

Julius: “It’s been a while since we’ve met face to face. You seem lively as always, Natsuki Subaru-dono.”

Subaru: “…Stop with your phony attitude, it sends shivers down my spine. “Subaru-dono” my ass, you’re so transparent.”

Julius: “It’s a well-known fact that you were officially recognized as Emilia-sama’s Knight. Your former disrespect of the position should now be disregarded by both of us. First and foremost, as a Knight, are you trying to behave accordingly?”

Watching Julius’s virtuous attitude, Subaru scowled.

Subaru: “Yeah, I’m her Knight now. No one thought I could do it, but here I am.”

Julius: “I see. Although your position has changed, your attitude has not—In that case, I will make do without the courtesy.”

Julius dropped his formal attitude and gave a slight smile before approaching and looking down towards Subaru, who was sitting on the floor.

Julius: “Then, once again… Long time no see, Natsuki Subaru. Have you been working hard every day to be an honorable Knight?”

Subaru: “Do you even need to ask? After all, I was beaten horribly by someone who thought I was dishonorable, or whatever.”

Julius: “It seems my reputation is being attacked. I recall it being an honorable duel.”

Subaru: “Don’t oversimplify it, you bastard…”

However, the one at fault had been Subaru, and even if he tried to say otherwise, it would only make himself look worse. So Subaru, rather than futilely defend himself, insulted Julius in a light exchange of banter. Seeing this, Julius narrowed his eyes as if to say “Hmm”.

Julius: “It seems that your shortcomings have been rectified somewhat. If you learn to see things with a Knight’s perspective, you will go far. Emilia-sama and Roswaal-sama have an eye for potential, it seems. Even so…”

Subaru: “—?”

After appraising Subaru, Julius looked around until his yellow eyes stopped on Beatrice, who met his gaze steadily with her own pale blue eyes.

Beatrice: “What is it? You shouldn’t stare too hard at a lady, I suppose.”

Julius: “That was terribly rude of me. I did not expect that a high-level Spirit like you would be present here.”

Beatrice: “Because Betty is Subaru’s partner, it is natural I appear here. I am on a completely different level than the Quasi Spirits who you have brought in. I wonder if you are afraid of me, in fact.”

Beatrice stood with her hands on Subaru’s shoulders and her chest puffed up. That grumpy attitude was based on Julius’s attitude toward Subaru, who was inferior to Julius in every way except one. Both were Spirit Knights, but Subaru’s contracted Spirit was of a higher grade.

Julius was accompanied by his six Quasi Spirits, one for each of the six attributes. Great Spirits were stronger than Quasi Spirits, who in turn were stronger than Micro Spirits. Taking that into consideration, it could be said that Subaru and Beatrice were the stronger team.

—However.

Subaru: “If you’re comparing actual ability, we have so many faults and are such a waste of potential that we can’t even compare to his Quasi Spirits.”

Beatrice: “Hmph. If he does not stop disrespecting Subaru… I’ll tell you what will happen if you disdain Betty’s partner, even if you are a handsome man who causes Betty’s heart to waver, I suppose!”

Subaru: “A handsome man who causes your heart to waver?!”

That was hardly what Subaru had wanted to hear, but it was Julius himself, a possible cause of the crack in their relationship, who explained the reason.

Julius: “Do not misunderstand, your Spirit is not going to betray you. Her instinct is merely being shaken by my Divine Protection.”

Subaru: “Your protection…? Seriously, you also have one? What kind of protection?”

Julius: “The protection I have is the Divine Protection of Gathering Spirits. Simply speaking, it is a kind of Divine Protection that garners the favor of Spirits. I also have a contract with Quasi Spirits of six attributes. Only with the power of that protection am I able to maintain them.”

Beatrice: “Betty will not lose! Subaru is better than you… I suppose!”

Subaru: “Thank you! Please, don’t hurt me any further!”

Although the bond of trust between Subaru and Beatrice was unbreakable, he was still disappointed at her lack of a firm response. Whenever Subaru faced Julius he would, without fail, become worked up over any of his own shortcomings. That had been the main reason for his former hatred of Julius.

Anastasia: “As usual, our Knight’s payin’ attention to Natsuki-kun.”

Julius: “Not at all. I am merely discussing the attitude of a Knight as his senior. One’s view of the Knights of the Kingdom of Lugunica may be appraised from his behavior.”

Anastasia: “Well, Natsuki-kun already has a reputation as a Knight, doesn’t he? You’re really dishonest, Julius.”

In response to Anastasia's teasing, Julius lowered his head and nodded silently. Anastasia probably would have won anyway, only to be smug about it later. Their motions had that air of familiarity.

—Beatrice patted Subaru's left shoulder, while Emilia his right.

Beatrice: "Don't be too worried, in fact. Looks aren't everything, I suppose."

Emilia: "I'm glad that Subaru and Julius are getting along, I'd be happy if you two became good friends."

Subaru: "Thank you for this mood where it's hard to say thank you…"

How would other people view this? All Subaru could receive from them was unhelpful comfort. He scratched his cheek with frustration as Anastasia took a seat across from him.

Subaru: "Come to think of it, why are only the two of you here? Mimi and Garfiel… are probably on a date, but…"

Anastasia: "It's like you said, Mimi's with the blonde child right now. Hetaro adores his sister and is probably keeping an eye on them, and Tivey is probably keeping an eye on Hetaro. That's why they're not with me at the moment."

Subaru: "Did Ricardo not come? I know that the kitten triplets are pretty strong, but isn't it comforting to have a full-grown Knight around?"

It was odd that the triplets were here, but Ricardo, that large Kobold that betrayed one's expectations for his race and who usually handled their antics, was missing, as was Julius's brother Joshua.

Julius: "Unfortunately, we're not in Priestella just for fun. Ricardo and my brother Joshua have business elsewhere. You should have met him by now, yes?"

Subaru: "Yeah… and he's a lot like you. If his frame were a little steadier, he could play you perfectly. Actually, he should do that anyway. You can leave now.”

Julius: “I’ll keep your interesting opinion in mind, but that would be difficult for Joshua. He is not a child well suited for excessive travel. Frustratingly, I hold several concerns about him, as his older brother.”

To Subaru’s annoyance, Julius took him seriously and began worrying about Joshua. Otto interrupted Subaru’s awkward silence by clearing his throat.

Otto: “Hmmm—I don’t mind this casual atmosphere, but now that almost everyone’s here, could we all give introductions?”

Anastasia: “I’d like introductions too, since the only people here I really know’re Emilia-san and Natsuki-kun. I especially wanna hear more about this competent-lookin’ officer and that powerful Great Spirit-chan.”

Subaru: “Oioi, it’s really not like you to be lacking information, Anastasia-san. Is something amiss in your reports?”

Otto: “I can imagine why you would have that impression, but I think it would be best if we don’t get into whose information is accurate!”

Subaru stuck out his tongue and tried to look cute, as the so-called “competent-looking” Internal Affairs Minister held his head in his hands, making noise.

Dodging a question by the competent seeming officer, she gave a nod to Julius.

Julius: “Allow me to reintroduce myself. I am Julius Juukulius of the Royal Guards of the Kingdom of Lugunica, although presently I am merely serving as Anastasia-sama’s Knight.”

Julius gave Otto a slight bow, who nodded in response to his elegant gesture. Julius then moved on to an introduction of his master, Anastasia.

Julius: “You are in the presence of one the candidates for Monarch of the Kingdom of Lugunica, Anastasia Hoshin, the gifted businesswoman who runs Kararagi's Hoshin Trading Company."

Otto: "Right… Right, yes!"

Subaru: "Don't bow to just an introduction!"

Otto: "—Hk! It was a mistake, the momentum was overwhelming!"

Subaru gave the back of Otto's head a whack, as Anastasia watched, pleased with Julius's introduction.

Subaru: "Don't be intimidated by titles! Our Emilia-tan is a wonderful candidate for the same throne, and she won't lose to Anastasia!"

Emilia: "Mh, that's right. I'm also a candidate, so I'll do my best."

Subaru: "Ahhhh, you're so cute. I can't help but say EMT for the first time in a while!"

Emilia: "I'm somewhat troubled that I find your antics calming…"

Seeing their typical pointless banter, Otto regained his composure and faced the opposing camp.

Otto: "Thank you for your detailed introduction. I'm slightly late in saying this, but I am Otto Suwen, Emilia-sama's Minister of Internal Affairs… Yes, thanks to certain circumstances caused by a certain someone, a Minister of Internal Affairs is indeed what I am."

Subaru: "There seems to be bitterness about that decision."

Otto: "Originally I was going to be a simple merchant, but now what has become of me…"

Although his voice echoed with lament, Subaru stood firm, refusing to give Otto the opportunity to escape. Anastasia stuck her tongue out in a show of sympathy for Otto.

Next, everyone turned to Beatrice. Seeing their gazes, she presented her small frame proudly and squarely, then declared, Beatrice: “Betty is the Great Spirit Beatrice, I suppose. I am Subaru’s Contracted Spirit, I suppose. As you can see, Betty ranks highly both as a Spirit and in cuteness, in fact. I would appreciate some delicious tea and a sweet snack, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Maintain dignity until the end!”

It would always be in Beatrice’s nature to be a mascot character.

Subaru pulled her into his lap and began stroking her hair while she glared, displeased.

Subaru: “Well, that’s why she’s a Spirit in a Contract with me. It’s funny that both of us have the same part as the butt of all jokes, but…”

Julius: “I did believe you had a good compatibility with Spirits, so I would not call this unexpected, but I did not imagine a contract with a Great Spirit like Beatrice-sama would resemble this.”

Subaru: “Don’t praise my Beako too much. She’s just like her family, anything nice will just go to her head.”

Beatrice: “Hmph. I’m declaring my displeasure with that rough treatment, in fact.”

Beatrice gave him a look suggesting that she had barely accepted him, and Subaru tapped her cheeks in response. Now that things had calmed down,

Otto: “Well, introductions are over, and the atmosphere seems to have calmed down for time being. So, let’s talk business, yes?”

As Emilia’s Minister of Internal Affairs, it was Otto’s role to take the lead in conversations like this and prevent them from being derailed. Anastasia answered while fiddling with her white fox fur scarf.

Anastasia: “Eh…? Well, it’s our job as the hosts to entertain our guests. Feel free to do whatever you’d like.”

Otto: “Well then. First of all, what are your reasons for inviting us to Priestella?

Anastasia: “Don’t worry, ya don’t need to be so guarded. I’m not plannin’ anythin’. A year’s passed since the Royal Selection started, and we haven’t had opportunities to see each other as of late, so I thought I’d just set one up.”

Most people would be easily misled by her gentle demeanor, but Otto was a veteran at negotiating. The conversation had turned into a battle between merchants.

Otto: “Taking our situation into consideration, we are present here because you lured us with bait. It is only natural that we would be cautious.”

Anastasia: “Well, we did invite you here for a reason. There are souvenirs in Priestella that ya’d want, right? Think of it as a gift.”

Subaru: “…How did you know which gift we would want?”

Anastasia: “It’s sorta a company secret, Natsuki-kun. We’ll just say that I’m an inquisitive gal and leave it at that.”

Anastasia covered her mouth while laughing. It would be a stretch to say she was making fun of Subaru’s frustration, but that was how it felt to him. Aware of his angst, Beatrice could not help but sigh, while Subaru wondered how Anastasia learned of their circumstances.

Emilia: “It’s not something I was hiding, so it was inevitable for that information to leak.”

Emilia’s frank admission assuaged a part of Subaru’s worries, and Anastasia blinked in Emilia’s direction, who responded by tilting her head.

Emilia: “From this point onwards, I think that it would be better if everyone appreciated what Anastasia’s done, instead of being suspicious of her.”

Anastasia: “…Respondin’ to your enemy in such a well-intentioned way. Besides, I’m not helpin’ ya purely for your benefit, Emilia-san.”

Emilia: “But thanks to you I have a way to find what I’ve been looking for. Thank you. I don’t know how I can repay you, but I truly do thank you.”

Anastasia: “…”

Anastasia’s eyes widened at Emilia’s smiling response. To her surprise, Julius, seated next to her, softened his gaze, earning himself a glare.

Anastasia: “Is something strange, Julius?”

Julius: “No, it is merely that your surprised expression is so rare. I think that it is just as beautiful as your natural, unaffected face.”

Anastasia: “Trying to escape with flattery… Well, I still appreciate those sweet words.”

With the help of Julius’s words, Anastasia shook off her surprise and regained her usual tone. Then she fixed a sharpened gaze on a curious Emilia.

Anastasia: “Emilia-san, it’s been a year and you still have a disadvantage that ya need to work around.”

Emilia: “Mhm, I’m lacking in many areas and causing everyone so much trouble, so I’m trying hard to catch up as soon as I…”

Anastasia: “One correction. Your greatest disadvantage ain’t that. It’s that ya resemble the terrifying Witch from those stories.”

Anastasia exhaled deeply and smiled, causing Emilia to stiffen in shock at her sudden change in attitude. Disregarding her, Anastasia turned to Subaru and Otto.

Anastasia: “What about you two? Will you continue to support her? If you do, her reputation will affect your own.”

Subaru: “I will, and I’ll do my best to, because it’s my policy to praise and support her no matter what!”

Otto: “Because of that, most of the burden lands on me. Funnily enough, I have no way out either…”

Subaru throwing a thumbs-up, Otto glaring with a bitter gaze. Seeing their conflicting attitudes, Anastasia readjusted her scarf.

Anastasia: “Well, it’s fine. You surely understand the value of gratitude, after all.”

Otto: “Gratitude, huh? Gratitude is great. You don’t have to keep it in the inventory, and there’s no deadline attached to it.”

Anastasia: “Yep, isn’t that right? And most importantly—”

Otto’s words matched Anastasia’s as the two each revealed the face of a merchant.

Anastasia and Otto: “—You don’t have to put a price tag on it.”

They spoke unanimously.

Anastasia clapped her hands as Otto drooped his shoulders. It seemed that it was an established saying. Their perspectives on gratitude were chillingly identical.

Anastasia: “Now, back to what Emilia-san needs… Colorless magical ore, one of the highest possible grade of purity.”

Emilia: “Yes, that’s right. Can you tell me what you know?”

On the way to Priestella, Emilia, having consciously realized that she had been acting out of selfishness, had felt guilty and had not intended to involve Subaru and Otto and the others. Nevertheless, with the opportunity right in front of her, she of course needed to act. She was closer than ever to seeing her precious family again.

As Emilia held her breath for a while, Anastasia replied.

Anastasia: “The best supplier of high-density ore is the Muse Company. The person responsible for it currently resides in this town, Kiritaka Muse—A man whose heart was stolen by a Songstress.”

Chapter 7:
The Sinful Man Sets Sail

1

Subaru: “His heart was stolen by a Songstress… Is that a nickname? It sounds like he’s trying to sound cool, but he’s being addressed like that, it’s not cool at all.”

Upon hearing Subaru’s response, Anastasia laughed before playing with the tips of her soft hair.

Anastasia: “You’re right, it sounds more like a nickname than a title. But ‘my heart was stolen by a Songstress’ is what he claims.”

Subaru: “Ehhh, what does that even mean?”

Anastasia: “That his heart was stolen by a woman, and he proudly and publicly announces it—Hey, doesn’t that remind ya of what happened durin’ the Royal Selection meeting at the Royal Capital?”

Subaru: “Leave that dark, embarrassing history out of this.”

Subaru’s face twisted just thinking of his humiliation at Julius’s hands. It made him want to grab his head and roll on the floor. Even though he still believed he had been in the right, his way of expressing his thoughts had left much to be desired. Anyway,

Subaru: “I see what you mean, though. Although I regret to admit it, I can actually relate. Then, what’s he like?”

Anastasia: “The nickname’s rather excessive, but the man himself’s both responsible and flexible. Bein’ named heir to Muse Company takes more than just bein’ the eldest son. There’s no need to doubt him as a businessman.”

Otto: “I can also guarantee that, Natsuki-san. The young master of Muse Company… Kiritaka Muse, is famous indeed. His skill is astounding, even without the Muse Company’s already renowned reputation for dealing with magical ore.”

As a merchant, Otto also knew of Kiritaka. However, after agreeing with her appraisal, he cast a sharp glare at Anastasia.

Otto: “Indeed, Emilia-sama needs pure magical stones from a professional supplier, and we sent an inquiry to the Muse Company… but they were not open to negotiation. It does make one wonder how and why Anastasia-sama is securing their aid.”

Anastasia: “Perhaps it’s a matter of trust? Maybe it’s a matter of sincerity. Whatever the case, one side must be willin’ to approach the other in order to establish a workin’ relationship, don’t’cha agree?”

Otto: “…I guess you could say that.”

Otto gave up on challenging Anastasia, who remained impassive, having been feigning a poor understanding of the situation. He moved on to discuss the magical stones themselves.

Otto: “First of all, do they actually have the rare magical ore we’re looking for?”

Anastasia: “I can understand your suspicions, but I’m sure you realize that if we were simply lyin’ about a prominent trader it’d be obvious by now?”

Otto: “I see. Then, are there any other conditions, or is it alright for us to negotiate with him?”

Anastasia: “You’re quite worried, but it’s fine. Remember, I was simply aware where Emilia-san’s camp could find the magical ore they’ve been lookin’ for, and I’ve already explained why I gave ya that information.”

As Anastasia had said, gratitude required no price tag.

Otto, understanding this, relented his questioning of Anastasia. It seemed that an agreement had been reached on the topic of the magic ore. Seeing their conversation come to a close, Emilia raised a nervous hand.

Emilia: “Umm, is it okay if I ask something?”

Anastasia: “Please, go ahead. Anythin’ related to our business and personal relationships are a matter of trust. We’ll get some peace of mind by clearin’ away those doubts.”

Emilia: “It seems this doesn’t have much to do with money, does it…”

Anastasia: “This is more than just a matter of hourly wages, after all. Well, that’s to be expected. Don’t you agree, Natsuki-kun?”

Anastasia smiled at Subaru, who gave an indifferent shrug in response. Emilia continued to ask her questions,

Emilia: “You’ve told us a little about Kiritaka-san, but I’m still curious about the Songstress you mentioned. Is she someone famous?”

Although it was a simple question, Subaru also wanted an answer. As far as he knew, Kiritaka’s surname, Muse, referred to a Goddess of Song in his world’s mythology. It was an odd coincidence, but it could simply have been his fate to fall for a Songstress.

Subaru: “I wonder if she’s supposed to be some kind of mythical figure. Of course, she’s not as influential as Hoshin of the Wilderness. Actually, if Hoshin had fallen for someone mythical, it would have probably been a disaster.”

Julius: “Rest assured, the Songstress Liliana-san is very real and currently remains in Priestella. Having been taken in by Kiritaka-san… That’s what her position is like right now.”

Subaru: “Right now… Do you mean it is different from her normal situation?”

Julius: “I heard that she was originally a poetic bard who sang and traveled. Kiritaka-san saw one of her concerts, and the situation became what it is now.”

Listening to Julius’s answer, Subaru pictured a bird caught in a birdcage. Birds were animals that would live freely until they caught the eye of a master who would entrap them. Was that what Liliana's situation was like? Did Kiritaka's paranoid affection keep Liliana trapped?

Subaru: "That's an unpleasant story. Her singing should not be kept for just one person, she should do it freely."

Julius: "I do agree with that, but there may be a misunderstanding here. Although, given Kiritaka-san's obsession with Liliana, it may be an inevitable conclusion."

Subaru: "My opinion of this Kiritaka guy has been declining somewhat steadily. Will the negotiation really be fine? It's hard to imagine communicating with someone as eccentric as that."

A greedy and disgusting rich man came to mind, one who was both gluttonous and lustful. As Otto had mentioned earlier, it was strange of him to turn a blind eye to Emilia's seemingly innocent search for magical ore. Subaru's impression of the man was poor indeed.

Subaru: "I'm not looking forward to showing my pretty Emilia-tan to such a person."

Julius: "Him seeing Emilia-sama shouldn't be a problem. Kiritaka-san is a little difficult to handle, but he wouldn't be so indiscreet. However…"

Julius broke off, as if unsure how to continue, leaving Subaru puzzled at his rare hesitation. Finally, Julius sighed quietly and shifted his gaze, first to Emilia, then to Subaru.

Julius: "It might be best not to bring Beatrice-sama with you."

Subaru: "What's that supposed to mean?!"

Anastasia: "Well, Kiritaka-san and I are on good terms, so I've spoken with him enough to imagine what he'd think."

Julius's and Anastasia's words. The opinion of those two led to one single conclusion.

Subaru stood up and,

Subaru: “…He’s a lolicon?!”

Julius: “That is something that people are only able to speculate on. In other words, it is an unconfirmed rumor. In any case, his tastes do not change how charming Anastasia-sama is.”

Anastasia: “Your words lack elegance.”

Elegant or not, Anastasia did not seem to mind what Julius had said. Subaru’s theory stood unrefuted, and so he accepted that it was true, thinking to himself, “are you serious?”

Subaru: “More annoying lolicons, as if Clind-san weren’t enough trouble…”

Recalling that universally competent butler, Subaru wanted to bury his head in his hands. However, there was definitely differences between Clind and Kiritaka’s tastes.

Clind would probably show no interest in Anastasia. What Clind sought was inner youth and it was reflected by his attitude towards Emilia. He saw her inner immaturity and respected her as a mental loli.

—On the other hand, Kiritaka was a person who placed emphasis on external appearances. Anastasia was probably around the same age as Subaru, but she looked significantly younger. Since her body had little potential for further development, she could be considered a legal loli. Kiritaka’s propension to like her was a matter of course. And Beatrice…

Subaru: “Our Beako is a versatile loli that can accommodate the tastes of both Clind and Kiritaka…”

Beatrice: “Betty did not quite understand that, but it feels like it was a very rude comment, in fact.”

Subaru: “Idiot! Ugh, I’m worried about you! You… you have a dangerous appeal. You’ll make me worry if you’re not more aware!”

Beatrice: “I, ah, hm… I-If you’re that worried, then you’re not doing anything wrong, I suppose. Hehehe.”

Although she did not share Subaru’s panic, Beatrice happily grabbed on to the hem of Subaru’s sleeve. For the time being, Subaru was going to hold onto her tightly. As long as they were in this city, it would be a good idea to keep an eye on her.

Emilia: “So, umm, does he just like short people?”

Anastasia: “Such an innocent response. No, it’s more like he’s the type of person who prefers eatin’ fresh, immature fruit…”

Subaru: “Stooooooooop!! Don’t say such dirty things to my angel! I understand now! No more is needed! Yes? Stop, stop!”

Subaru guarded Beatrice with his left hand and Emilia with his right. Anastasia laughed at Subaru’s overprotectiveness while Julius showed a wry smile.

Otto: “Setting aside Natsuki-san’s attitude, we accept your conditions. If possible, I would like to meet Kiritaka-san. Would I be able to find him in Priestella’s Chamber of Commerce?”

Anastasia: “That’s right. Well, Kiritaka-san’s pretty busy, seein’ as he has to run many of the city’s functions. So I wonder whether you would find him there, or in the City Hall.”

Anastasia responded to Otto’s serious question with light teasing, and the latter could only helplessly accept her answer. Otto brought his hand to his chin, then turned to Subaru.

Otto: “As expected, even the first step will be difficult. I would like to set up a safe place to calmly talk things through beforehand, but… where should we go?”

Subaru: “That’s right… Well, to be honest, I have no mental map of this town at all, so I was planning to just wander around.”

From the main gate, Priestella had not appeared to be too large, but as an outsider, navigating the unfamiliar townscape would be a nightmare. Subaru was confident in his sense of direction, but how useful would that confidence be in a town where travel was conducted by waterway?

Otto: “Perhaps, there are people giving tours along the waterway—After all, many tourists come here, and there are probably people guiding tours to capitalize on that.”

Subaru: “That wouldn’t work, I’d definitely get seasick. Once in elementary school, I got so seasick crossing a lake on a field trip that people made fun of me for being drunk.”

Beatrice: “Betty doesn’t quite understand what that means, but you look like you have bad memories of it, in fact.”

Looking at a reminiscing Subaru, Beatrice voiced her pity. In any case, Otto’s suggestion was probably the best, so Subaru would have to accept it. That was when,

Julius: “Forgive me for interrupting your discussion, but that worry is needless.”

Emilia: “What do you mean, Julius?”

Emilia widened her eyes and turned to look at Julius, who smiled faintly.

Julius: “It’s simple. We have already sent messengers to keep in touch with Kiritaka-san. We should be able to discuss the details as soon as the messengers return.”

Emilia: “Messengers?”

Julius: “My younger brother Joshua, of course. Ricardo is accompanying him.”

Subaru was glad to finally know where those two were, but he was also somewhat annoyed. Although they were addressing a natural obligation,

Subaru: “It would have been nice if they were here to welcome us in front of the inn.”

Julius: “Since we invited you, it is our duty to handle these arrangements. You do not need to be worried about the finer subtleties. Those are not worth mentioning.”

Subaru: “Don’t bring them up then!”

Their banter was the same as always. On one hand, Subaru’s respect for Julius’s faction grew, but on the other, he was deeply troubled by his own faction’s lack of preparation. Anyway,

Anastasia: “In that case, all of ya are probably anxious, but we should wait for the two of them to come back. Speakin’ of which, my personal bodyguard hasn’t returned.”

Subaru: “Oh, right.”

Subaru assumed a more relaxed posture and sat down. He prepared himself to answer questions about the absent Garfiel. Anastasia immediately followed that lead,

Anastasia: “As ya can see, Mimi’s absent—what’s she doin’? That child that went with her… the one named Garfiel. I’d like ya to talk about him in detail.”

Subaru: “His name is Garfiel Tinzel. He’s fifteen years old, the age where kids have fancy dreams. He has the habit of biting things and snoring loudly. But, other than that, he’s an honest, straightforward kid. Even if his feelings are battered, his naive way of looking at things won’t change. He’s that kind of pure youth.”

Anastasia: “That’s likely true.”

“I don’t want my cute little sister stolen from me”, seemed to be what Anastasia was desperately, yet sweetly, thinking. Even without considering his potential relationship with Mimi, Subaru thought of Garfiel as a cute little brother, and believed in making his value known.

Emilia: “I wonder what Songstress-san’s famous voice sounds like. I feel reaaally anxious. I wonder if she’d perform for me if I requested her.”

Julius: “Don’t worry, Liliana is someone well-versed in social customs. If she’s present at your meeting with Kiritaka-san, I’m sure she’d be eager to perform.”

Emilia: “Oh, that’s right. That sounds fun.”

—Meanwhile, Julius’s words seemed to further Emilia’s interest in the topic of the Songstress.

Otto, seeing the dialogue between the two pairs of made up of a liege and a Knight, sighed.

Otto: “Since we’re in opposing factions, I thought relationships would be more tense… Did I overthink things?”

Beatrice: “You don’t need to be discouraged, in fact. You’re not thinking too much; Subaru and Emilia simply aren’t thinking enough, I suppose.”

Beatrice’s rare show of sympathy confirmed Otto’s suspicions that he would be mentally and physically overtaxed during his stay in Priestella.

2

Joshua had returned, while Garfiel was soon to arrive as well.

Joshua: “Kiritaka-san is usually busy, but rather than being at the City Hall today, he’ll be at the his office in the Muse Company Headquarters, so this is an ideal time to visit him.”

Anastasia: “That’s that, then. Mhm, you did well, Joshua.”

Joshua, upon returning to his older brother and his lady, made his report. After Anastasia nodded, satisfied, Joshua turned his gaze to Subaru.

Joshua: “…Thank you for coming such a long way. I’m sure you’ve heard the story from Anastasia-sama by now, but we’ve established contact with Kiritaka-san.”

Subaru: “Oh, thanks a lot. That saves us loads of time.”

Joshua: “I do not enjoy helping you, I’m just following Anastasia-sama’s orders. I really wanted to avoid having my brother meet you.”

Subaru: “You’re honest, as usual.”

Julius’s eyes widened at Joshua’s frankly hostile speech, which was something rarely seen. He was apparently unaware of the animosity Joshua held toward Subaru.

Julius: “Joshua. Everyone present, including him, are here under Anastasia-sama’s invitation. Being rude to our guests will hurt Anastasia-sama’s reputation, so please refrain from doing so.”

Joshua: “…My sincere apologies, nii-sama.”

Julius sighed at Joshua, whose gaze had turned sulky. He then turned to Subaru and said apologetically,

Julius: “Apologies, from both of us. Usually, my brother does not engage in this kind of behavior… It seems that the cause is the unfamiliar environment.”

Subaru: “I don’t mind if you guys do it separately, but being picked on by both brothers together in this environment is kinda scary for me, too.”

Julius: “Heh. We’ll keep that in mind.”

Julius responded to Subaru’s words with a mixture of humor and irony. Joshua looked unsatisfied, but when Subaru caught his eye, he turned away. Was the reason intense jealousy?

Emilia: “Well, thanks to your kindness, we can go visit Kiritaka-san now. Can we consider this inn as a place to stay afterward?”

Anastasia: “Feel free to do so. The Water Plumage Pavilion is a lodging with a great track record, both in atmosphere and comfort. Please look forward to dinner.”

Emilia: “That’s true. In that case, we’ll look forward to it.”

Emilia clapped her hands and smiled at the confident Anastasia. Then, running a hand through her long silver hair—

Emilia: “We’ll be sure to speak properly with Kiritaka-san first, so that we can enjoy a delicious dinner without any worries.”

As Emilia finished talking, she stood up to leave the inn. Subaru followed behind her as they made their way towards the ship that Joshua had secured for their trip to the office of the Muse Company, where Kiritaka was currently located.

???: “Oy, Captain! Wait there! I’m tellin’ ya!”

Garfiel hurriedly leapt in front of the inn to intercept them. His shining blonde hair and clothes were slightly dirtied, and his expression was tired as he joined the other four.

Garfiel: “Ah… ah… Found ya. If it weren’t for that dog-faced guy, don’t think I’d have survived.”

Subaru: “By dog-faced guy, do you mean Ricardo? Were you on a sweet date with Mimi, before her big, scary uncle interrupted?”

Garfiel: “A date? This ain’t no joke! As soon as that midget dragged me away, another midget lookin’ like her attacked me ‘n nearly killed me. If I fought back, they’d prolly start cryin’, so instead I just spent the day runnin’ away…”

From Garfiel’s story, Subaru surmised that it had been Ricardo who had prevented that tragedy. Mimi, of course, had two twin brothers who could have caused it. Perhaps it had been Tivey, whose calm disposition could have been hiding a sharper side. Or perhaps Hetaro, fearing that his sister would be taken away, had displayed his siscon tendencies for the first time. Whoever it had been, the situation seemed fine now.

Garfiel: “So, seein’ as I didn’t wanna be excluded from yer plans, I rushed over here, Captain.”

Subaru: “Ah, my bad. We were planning on meeting the guy who’s selling the magical ore. Thinking on it, I guess we should’ve waited for our bodyguard.”

Garfiel: “That’s obvious, yeah?”

Subaru added the relieved Garfiel to his party and made way for the docks. The boat that Subaru’s group was going to ride on had already been prepared. All the boats were fairly small, with only enough room for eight people, including the boat’s sailor.

Sailor: “There’s a city law about boat size. If the boats are too large, the waterways get clogged, and it’s unsafe if boats get too close together.”

The dark-skinned sailor steering their boat was happy to answer Subaru’s questions. Dragon carriages on wide highways weren’t much of a problem, but on waterways, traffic rules needed to be set.

Sailor: “If a collision happens and a ship sinks, that’s usually regarded as the fault of the sailor’s lack of technique. Besides, a lot of these ships have been passed down from generation to generation, so losing one would mean losing your reputation as well.”

Subaru: “Of course. Regarding the ships’ water dragons… Are there any problems with those?”

Sailor: “You should give it a try. In the water, there’s no way you can compete with water dragons, so when you see one, it’s customary to let them have the right of way. Some of the boats are pulled by small water dragons, so you should try those at least once.”

Like ground dragons, they had good instincts and could be trusted to handle a smaller boat. Remembering how he had felt the first time he saw a ground dragon, he was excited by the sailor’s follow-up recommendation. Maybe his first ride with a water dragon would evoke the same sense of wonder.

Emilia: “This is my first-time crossing water on a ship. I’m reaaally excited.”

Subaru: “Is that so? Well, this does feel different than the sea.”

Emilia: “What is this ‘sea’?”

Subaru: “Imagine an endless pool of water. My hometown was right next to it.”

Emilia: “Hmmm… But, that would be nice when you felt thirsty.”

Subaru laughed in response to Emilia’s childlike answer. Unfortunately, drinking sea water when thirsty would lead to death. Regardless, he could not mention that sea water was saltwater without raising more questions.

Otto: “Where there’s a river, there’s usually a bridge, so if you need to smuggle something without crossing a bridge, your only other option is going by boat.”

Subaru: “Sure sounds like you’re talking from experience.”

Otto: “I-It’s not like I’ve ever done anything like that! I-It’s just, second-hand knowledge! Stop casting such strange suspicions on me, really!”

Garfiel: “Ottobro, ya really are sweatin’ over there.”

As if ignoring Otto’s suspiciously specific denial, the boat followed the sailor’s movements as it turned to join the main waterway ahead. Incredibly, the current was flowing against the direction of the boats.

Subaru: “What, how is the water flowing like this?”

Emilia: “Hehehe. I actually know the answer to that. Look, look at the city walls.”

She lightly patted Subaru’s shoulder and pointed into the distance with her free hand. Subaru cast his gaze in that direction and saw the great stone towers stationed on the city’s walls. There were four of these towers, positioned on the north, south, east, and west side of the city.

Emilia: “Those towers control the flow of water in the town. Inside them is a magical device with a sophisticated mechanism, and its operation is powered by a magical water stone. It seems that the big floodgates in the city are also controlled by it.”

Subaru: “Wow, that is incredible. This is even cooler than the travel laws.”

Thanks to Emilia’s explanation, Subaru somewhat understood the mysterious mechanism behind the flowing waterways of the city. Sure enough, the Watergate City Priestella was very different from the others, and Subaru still had much he needed to learn about it, including the city’s laws.

Subaru: “The laws here are closely related to the operation of the city, right?”

Emilia: “Is this about Kiritaka-san? Like I said. I wonder what kind of a person he is… It would be great if he gave us the magical ore upon hearing our story.”

Touching the pendant hanging on her chest, Emilia murmured her hopes, seeming uncertain of herself. While listening to her murmurs, Subaru placed his hands on his chin and closed his eyes. Then, he swayed his head along with the movement of the boat and whispered,

Subaru: “—Eh.”

Beatrice: “…Betty didn’t catch what you said just now, I suppose.”

Beatrice had probably been the only one who could hear him. Upon hearing her loud voice, everyone turned to stare at him. Feeling their gazes fixed on him, Subaru smiled and said.

Subaru: “Crap, I’m gonna puke.”

—In an instant, a fuss was created on board.

Chapter 8:
Traveling with Seasickness

1

Beatrice: “You should be better now, I suppose.”

Subaru: “No, wait a little more. Wow, this is terrible, the world is still shaking. I’m still shaking. Even death can’t cure this sickness…”

On a street facing a large aqueduct, Subaru and Beatrice sat side-by-side, their feet dangling over the side of the waterway. Together, they admired the flow of the clear water. Onlookers smiled faintly upon seeing them. Perhaps they assumed they were siblings, or perhaps they thought they were tourists who had never seen such structures.

Subaru: “Neither of those assumptions are entirely wrong… But it’s sad that they don’t really know what our relationship is. Uuuueh.”

Beatrice: “You should focus on recovering rather than pointlessly worrying, in fact. I wonder why you think Betty is here, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Were you worried that I’d be lonely? Beako is so kind.”

Beatrice: “…That’s irrelevant, in fact. Just hurry up and get better, I suppose.”

In order to accommodate the weight of Subaru leaning against her, Beatrice strained her small frame. Seeing this, Subaru’s love for her increased exponentially. Could it ever stop growing?

About fifteen minutes ago, Subaru had been forced to continue his journey on foot after he had created a fuss with his seasickness. Emilia, Otto, and Garfiel had remained on the boat to head for the negotiations with the Muse Company and Kiritaka.

Originally, Emilia had also wanted to accompany Subaru on foot, but Otto had said, “The longer we keep the other party waiting, the worse our impression will be”.

Heeding his advice, she left Subaru behind. It was most likely the right decision.

Subaru: “Well, even if Anastasia told us to be careful… In broad daylight, most people probably aren’t going to try anything.”

Certainly, there was anxiety in being left alone in an unfamiliar city, after being invited by a political opponent, but the escort named Garfiel had been brought to deal with that.

However, Subaru, who was currently alone, was important enough to the Emilia Camp that an attack on him was not completely inconceivable.

Even so, if Anastasia had malicious intent, she was too savvy to orchestrate an attack on him in the middle of the day. In addition, Subaru trusted that Julius would not support any type of ambush.

Subaru: “As he said, a Knight must remain chivalrous at all times…”

Beatrice: “Subaru. It’s rather annoying when you laugh to yourself, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Wait, I totally wasn’t laughing! Well, I’d never think of that guy and laugh! Anyway, let’s go.”

Subaru stood up and took a deep breath, rubbing his arms and neck lightly. Although they still felt a little heavy, the seasickness was mostly gone. He could more or less move around normally again.

Beatrice: “Well, Betty will help if needed, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Ohhh, I’m counting on you. Even so, I doubt anything will happen. Only an idiot would attack us in broad daylight with so many people around.”

All of the Royal Candidates needed to keep an eye on their reputation. In public, they needed to appear both pleasant and authentic. Emilia, who was a naturally honest and kind girl, did not need to worry herself about pretenses.

Subaru: “In other words, Emilia-tan’s real advantage over the other candidates is her angelic innocence..!”

Beatrice: “Your thoughts are going in an unpleasant direction, in fact—Subaru, Subaru, look, let’s go that way, I suppose. Follow me.”

In the past year, Beatrice had become entirely accustomed to putting up with the easily distracted Subaru. She had been navigating through the unfamiliar cityscape with ease while leading him by hand.

Muse Company’s headquarters was apparently located at the boundary between the first and second districts. Subaru, having been seasick, had only dimly registered the directions, but Beatrice had memorized them all. If there was one problem that they had, it would be the complexity of Priestella’s pathways.

Although they had arrived by following the main canal, they had to take detours around the several small waterways feeding into the main one. Sometimes there were bridges, but on several occasions, Subaru had needed to jump over a narrow waterway while carrying Beatrice.

Beatrice: “Subaru, that is a splendid fountain, I suppose.”

Subaru: “You’re right… Beako, how did we get to the park?”

The fountain which had caught Beatrice’s attention stood in the center of a park. It was surrounded by well-maintained flowerbeds and children playing games. This was indeed a peaceful and relaxing sight. The only issue was,

Subaru: “Is this where we’re supposed to be going? This is the last place I’d picture finding the heir of a large company. If businessmen made deals here, then all of their money would get wet.”

Beatrice: “I wonder if seasickness makes you cynical, I suppose. That’s the first thing you think of upon seeing this beautiful scenery… Betty feels sorry for her partner, in fact.”

Subaru: “The old you would have blushed and tried to hide this mistake, but now you're becoming rather fresh… You're breaking your father's heart."

Beatrice: "Y-You're four-hundred years too early to be calling yourself Betty's father! Subaru lacks tact in discussing such matters, in fact!"

Subaru was unsure why Beatrice had overreacted to the latter half of his sentence, but didn't pursue the issue. Their problem right now was figuring out how they arrived at the park.

Subaru: "Beako. Since you were leading me so confidently, I thought you knew the way."

Beatrice: "I know the destination, in fact. However, the roads were complicated, I suppose. In order to avoid getting lost, I used the 'left-hand-method' that I had read about before. It didn't work, I suppose."

Subaru: "The 'left-hand-method'?"

Beatrice: "Holding out your left hand and following the wall, in fact."

Subaru: "Isn't that for mazes?!"

Beatrice's method was a well-known tactic in conquering a maze. Subaru recognized its effectiveness, but there were a number of drawbacks, too. Namely,

Subaru: "If you start using the left-hand method in the middle of a maze, you might end up touching the inside wall and never be able to leave! Furthermore, we're not in a maze, we're in a city!"

Beatrice: "Hmph! It's just like Subaru to disregard tried and tested wisdom, I suppose. Betty was the Guardian entrusted with maintaining the knowledge of the Forbidden Library. She pities the fool who disregards the wisdom of history, in fact."

Subaru: "I'm not the fool, you're the fool for not using that tried and tested wisdom correctly!"

She was old enough to be self-righteous (four-hundred years) but it had taken her long enough to enter the outside world (four-hundred years), that there was a big enough gap (four-hundred years) between her common sense and time spent in the world. And so, she was a surprisingly unreliable loli.

Beatrice: “I wonder if Subaru has a better idea, in fact. Let’s see you try, I suppose.”

She put her hands on her hips, fixating on Subaru with a disagreeable glare.

—On the other hand, Subaru had just suffered the embarrassment of letting Beatrice see his seasickness and wanted to make up for it by appearing reliable.

Subaru: “Haha. You correctly decided that this place is like a labyrinth, but you were wrong to think that it was a perfect maze and use the left-hand-rule. I have some less flawed, no, flawless tactics.”

Beatrice: “Hoho, you’re pretty confident, I suppose. Go ahead and tell me your plan, in fact.”

Subaru: “Hee, I’ll tell you. Its name is the Caged Method.”

Beatrice: “—?”

Beatrice tilted her head, a question mark floating above her. The name did not convey the actual content of his plan, so Subaru cleared his throat and started to explain thoroughly.

Subaru: “Okay. First of all, we’ll call our current position the starting point. If we proceed, we will eventually reach a fork on the road. We’ll continue until we hit a dead end. Then, we’ll go back to our first fork.”

Beatrice: “…Mhm, continue, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Then, we’ll map out that branch and choose another one. Using the same method as the first branch, we’ll walk until we hit a dead end. Eventually, we’ll have every branch and every path of the dungeon mapped out."

Beatrice: "That would take far too long, in fact! I wonder if we would even arrive before nightfall, I suppose!"

Subaru: "I-Idiot! What's wrong with taking the certain path?! How many people do you think safely survived a dungeon with this method? I'm doing just as you said, relying on the wisdom of history!"

Beatrice: "Losing sight of your goal by relying on wisdom is a bad habit, in fact!"

Certainly, it hurt that Beatrice had trampled on his idea, but even Subaru had to admit his plan had too many faults. It was a time-consuming tactic, and besides, they had no pen or paper with which to draw a map.

Subaru: "Then there's only one other method…"

Beatrice: "What is it, in fact? Betty's confidence in Subaru is significantly lower now, I suppose."

Although the method was reliable, it was not going to improve Subaru's image. Acting in good faith did not make one reliable.

Subaru: "Okay, we'll have to work together here."

Beatrice: "On what?"

Subaru: "Let's humbly ask for directions."

Beatrice: "That's fine, in fact…"

Subaru had accepted that he could not solve the problem on his own. He thought Beatrice's pride would be the only problem, but she seemed okay with it as well. Fortunately, Kiritaka Muse was both a famous merchant and heavily involved in the management of the city. Everyone around would know where his office was.

With that in mind, Subaru looked around, hoping to find someone to ask. But, Subaru: “Even though this is a park, there’s nobody here.”

Beatrice: “The timing is bad, in fact. It’s late afternoon, the perfect time for naps, I suppose.”

Subaru definitely agreed with Beatrice’s words and the temptation to nap in the shade rose. Shaking it off, he decided to head back to the direction of the main canal, where it should be busier, when—

Subaru: “—Do you hear something?”

The faint sound of wind and of a tiny waterflow. It was a voice—no, it was the sound of a singing human voice?

???: “…”

Subaru could hear it only intermittently, but he was drawn toward it, looking for the source of the song that prickled his heart. Beside him, Beatrice also seemed to have noticed that sound.

Upon arriving at the scene, they stood, overwhelmed, forgetting to even breathe.

—A lone girl stood in front of a monument at the back of the park, her voice raised in song.

She was a small girl with dark skin, large round eyes, and a vibrant face. Her crisp yellow twin-tails were decorated with small, strange ornaments. In her hands, she held an instrument between the size of a guitar and an ukulele. She played and sang simultaneously.

The energy contained in the song could only be described as overwhelming.

Subaru, listening to her sing, felt a nonexistent squall by his face and a nonexistent earthquake under his feet. The clarity, the volume, of her song was overwhelming. Her voice, singing a tune like a ballad, was the only sound in existence.

Subaru: “…”

That lone girl, using only her voice and fingertips, created an energy comparable to that of an orchestra.

Subaru was far from the only one who had been utterly captivated by her. There was an audience of around twenty people, all holding their breaths, completely unaware of Subaru. Likewise, Subaru had only noticed the singing girl, whose presence entirely dominated the space.

As Subaru's entire body trembled, the girl's song came to its climax and the audience's enthusiasm came to its peak—

Girl: "—Without money, without a future, without hope, with only vanity. What can I see but the darkness? And beyond that darkness, nothing. The end, the end, the end is approach—"

Subaru: "How is this song so exciting even after calming down, oy?!"

Girl: "Huh?!"

The song which even dreams could not create had been unexpectedly interrupted by Subaru.

As soon as he had surprised her, the girl stopped singing and dropped her instrument. Of course, the music had also stopped—Immediately, the intense atmosphere surrounding the girl vanished. Subaru realized that he had screwed up.

Subaru: "Oh no, I didn't read the mood. Sorry, I didn't mean—that hurts! —hk! —ow! —eh?!"

Beatrice: "Subaru you idiot, it's ruined, in fact. What a waste of a rare and lovely mood, in fact. You just had to thoughtlessly ruin it, I suppose. You've gone too far, in fact."

Before he could apologize, a sharp pain pierced his toes. Looking down, he saw an indignant Beatrice stomping on his foot with her heel. Beatrice seemed to return to reality when the song was interrupted, and considered that interruption unforgivable. Then,

Person one: "Oh… what was that song?"

Person two: “This is a park … just a little a while ago, I was in the darkness.”

Person three: “No, I couldn’t help it at the time, but…”

Person four: “When I grow up, I want to defeat Themion and save Draffin…”

Person five: “I want to support that dream…”

Person six: “Tina-chan…”

Person seven: “Lusbel…”

One by one, the audience who had been swallowed by the song slowly tumbled back into the reality. Everyone turned to the criminal who had ruined the song. Some had collapsed under the influence of the song, and some of the boys and girls were using the song as an excuse to draw closer together, but fact remained that they had all come back to their senses.

After returning to reality, they all glared at the source of the song’s disruption—In other words, to the criminal named Natsuki Subaru, a man with a reputation for failing to read the mood.

Everyone: “—Don’t do thoughtless things!”

Everyone loudly and angrily cursed Subaru, who apologized profusely.

2

Girl: “Thank you very much for your time, everyone. Actually, it was a blast.”

Subaru: “Don’t sound so happy about it. Take a look at my feet, they’ve been stepped on so many times, are they still the same size? Are my feet okay?”

Beatrice: “I wouldn’t care, in fact. For now, don’t consider Betty to be on your side, I suppose.”

Beatrice turned her face away and stubbornly denied Subaru, so he checked them on his own. His right foot had almost doubled in size.

Subaru had poured water on the concert, so their reaction wasn't entirely unexpected.

One by one, the audience had thanked the girl who had sung and shook hands with her, and about half of them had stepped on Subaru's feet before leaving. Subaru had been unable to say anything, and Beatrice had tolerated it, leaving the public's opinion of Subaru as that of an enemy. Subaru prepared himself for both external and internal bleeding in his feet.

Subaru: "Don't you think you should let me rely on your healing magic?"

Beatrice: "It would be a waste of my slowly accumulating Mana, in fact. Wait for it to heal naturally, or ask Emilia, I suppose."

Subaru: "You and Emilia have been taking care of me for a long time, huh."

Ever since he had come to this world, he had sustained a steadily increasing amount of injuries, but they rarely lasted. Even injuries from his daily parkour, such as bruises, abrasions, and sprains, would be promptly healed by Emilia or Beatrice. His fear of pain had not decreased, but there was relief in knowing that his injuries had all found a cure.

Subaru: "Well, I'll just treat the pain as a lesson this time."

That said, Subaru caressed Beatrice's head, who was still turned away. Beatrice gave him her gentle hands.

Beatrice: "Well… Well, I suppose it's fine, in fact. As long as you reflect on it and learn your lesson, I suppose."

Subaru: "Yep, I'll do just that. Sorry, I was wrong…"

Subaru and Beatrice finished their talk, and turned to the girl. Because he had been troublesome for her, Subaru would try to apologize. The girl, who had been watching the entire time, said, Girl: “A flash of inspiration!”

Subaru: “Eh?”

Girl: “Listen—I don’t know the difference between our years.”

Leaving a staggering Subaru behind, the girl pulled the strings on her instrument and instantly found a rhythm. She timed herself, breathed in a small breath, and started to sing.

Girl: “My love, do you see it, do you feel it? The difference between our ages. Even though our surroundings may change, I wouldn’t care one bit. All I care about is our height difference. Wait, my love. Please wait a moment. A little bit, a little bit, just a little bit more. If I stand on the tips of my toes, I can reach you. If the two of us stay so close together, the difference in our ages is irrelevant. So please, only two years, please wait that long. The distance between our love is sweetly melting away.”

Subaru: “As the distance in our love shrinks~, it turns into a quiet, burning love~. Eventually, two cranes will deliver to us two children~, and our future will be a bright love story~.”

Beatrice: “Eeeehhhhh?!”

At the end of the girl’s song, Subaru suddenly joined in with an ad-libbed rap that trampled all over the rhythm of the previous song. Beatrice raised her voice with astonishment, demanding an explanation as he and the girl high-fived.

Beatrice: “Wait a minute! Why… Why is Subaru suddenly part of the song, I suppose? Why did you just accept his addition, in fact?”

Subaru: “Oy oy, what are you talking about, Beako… Does the song cross a line?”

Liliana: “Well said, Liliana’s heart is trembling with excitement!”

Beatrice: “Y-Your attitude that Betty is the wrong is unacceptable, I suppose…”

Subaru, feeling bad for Beatrice who had no one on her side, turned to the dark-skinned girl.

Subaru: “Let me mention that Beako and I aren’t in the kind of relationship that you’re thinking of. Even if she grew two more years, she still wouldn’t be in my target range.”

Liliana: “Eh? She’ll only be thirteen or fourteen by then? Despite how I look, I’m good at guessing ages. Well, I guess this is a skill gained from life experience.”

Subaru: “She’ll be roughly four-hundred-and-two years old.”

Liliana: “Oh, please. There’s no need to be this stubborn just because I hit the mark.”

She dismissed Subaru’s words as an excuse and ignored them, which pained him. Subaru also thought that correcting her would lead to too much trouble. Anyway, the topic had changed too much.

Subaru: “Back to the original topic, was the inspiration you mentioned earlier the song?”

Liliana: “Yeah, that’s right. Despite how I may look, I’m easily moved. Once I saw your interactions, I felt like I needed to immortalize them in song. Be proud!”

The girl, speaking quickly and fluently, raised her hands or her mouth.

Liliana: “Ah, but what I did wasn’t enough. Big bro there helped by adding the bit at the end. That was the first time I’d gotten such a reaction, I was very happy.”

Subaru: “That was because the Rap God himself blessed me, I certainly couldn’t do it again. I don’t have the skill or experience.”

Liliana: “—One single, shining moment…”

The girl made a sad face to Subaru, who looked into the distance.

Seeing the mutual understanding that had been achieved without words between the two drained the patience of the little girl who had been left out.

Beatrice: “Subaru.”

Subaru: “Mhm, what is it… Beako?!”

Beatrice yanked his sleeve down and a shockwave sent Subaru flying. The momentum would not kill him, but he still bounced all over the lawn of the park, causing him to roll his eyes.

—Meanwhile, Beatrice, the culprit, turned to the dark-skinned girl.

Beatrice: “It’s no good for you to take inspiration from us anymore, in fact. Betty is putting an end to it, I suppose. If you resist, you’ll end up like him, in fact.”

Liliana: “Ha… a… Ah, hm, do…”

Beatrice: “Be quiet, I suppose. Only think about promptly responding to Betty, in fact. The reason nothing is happening to you right now is because your song was lovely, I suppose. But who knows how long this mercy will last, in fact.”

Even seeing her trembling, Beatrice’s voice held no mercy. Seeing her hurried nod, Beatrice sighed. The girl was too scared to form words. Then,

Beatrice: “Muse Company, take Betty to where Kiritaka Muse is, I suppose.”

Liliana: “—Eh?”

Beatrice: “I will not say it again, in fact. Lead the way or be subjected to Betty’s anger, I suppose.”

Liliana: “I-I’ll lead you there! I will!”

When pressed with the choice, the girl instantly raised the white flag. Beatrice nodded, satisfied, as Subaru walked back toward them, and Beatrice looked up at his eyes upon his return.

Beatrice: “Tell me if you have any complaints, in fact.”

Subaru: “Is it acceptable to use your accumulated Mana like this, for educational purposes?”

Beatrice: “It depends on the time and place, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Such kindness and consideration, Beako… Was it okay to threaten someone to guide us?”

Subaru scratched his face and looked down. Beatrice looked at him with a sullen gaze. Subaru continued,

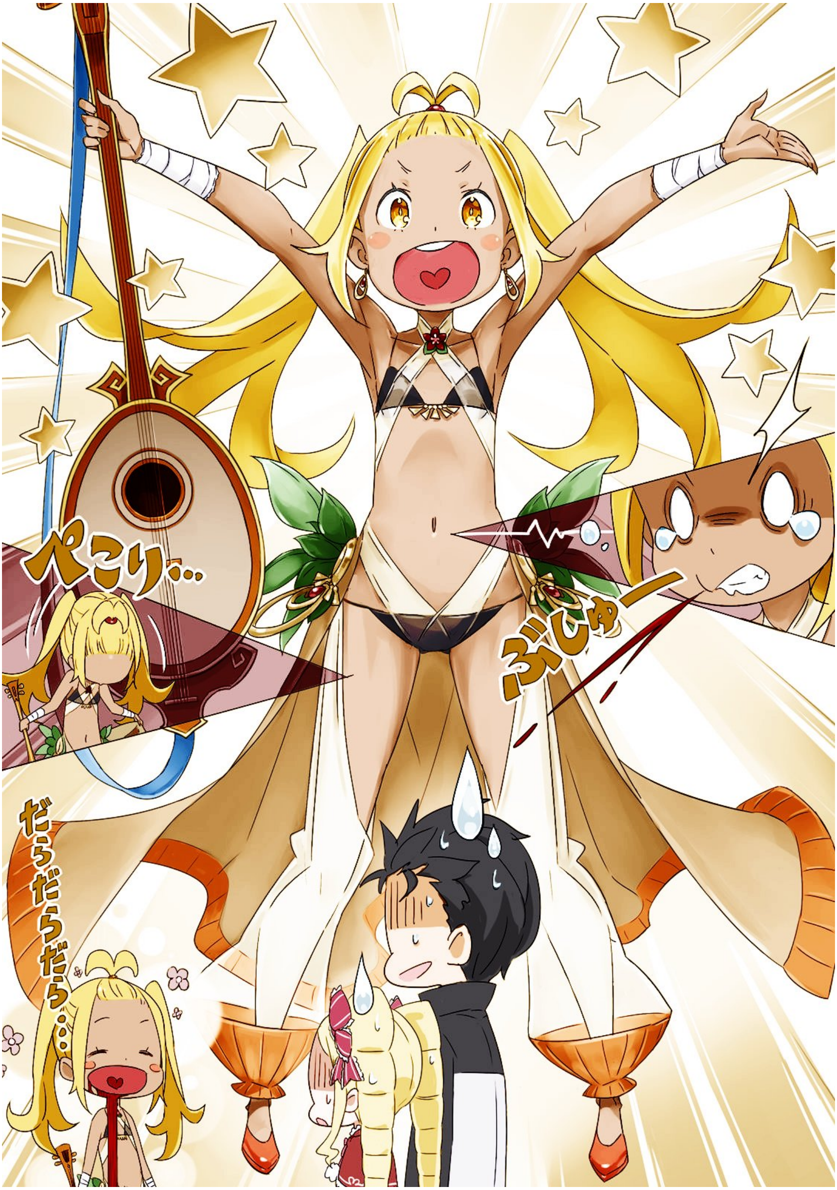
Subaru: “That child is probably the famous Songstress who knows Kiritaka. Maybe we shouldn’t make a bad impression on her.”

She’d mentioned that her name was Liliana earlier, and there was no mistaking that singing ability befitting a Songstress, even if her personality wasn’t what he had imagined.

Liliana: “I’ll do anything you want me to. E-Eh, whether it be guiding you or licking your shoes… All I humbly ask… is that you spare my life…”

There was a girl on the ground desperately begging for her life. Correction, that girl was the Songstress Liliana.

Although, looking at her, no trace of the graceful Songstress could be seen.



ぶしゅー
ぺこり…
だらだらだら…

Chapter 9:
The Value of a Songstress

1

Liliana: “Then, let me introduce myself once again. Although I’m no longer a traveling minstrel, I’m still a free-spirited bard who goes wherever the wind blows me, crossing the continent with only my singing voice. My name is Liliana, please continue to advise me in the future—Hk.”

Beatrice: “You bit yourself, in fact.”

One hand holding her instrument gracefully, Liliana smiled as blood flowed freely from her mouth. Beatrice gently wiped it away for her. It seemed her tongue had been wounded rather seriously.

Beatrice: “It’s rude to bite your tongue like that.”

Subaru: “Have you heard of—Ah, are you the famous Songstress? I know you introduced yourself with her name, but it’s probably kinda rare to just meet her on the street.”

Liliana: “Ah, um, I’m not fond of that title since I’m only a fledgling musician. It sounds so sophisticated. I’m so far from reaching my peak. If people thought I called myself the Songstress, they’d say I’m too conceited.”

Wiping at the bloodied lower half of her face, Liliana’s expression seemed almost coy, leading Subaru to hesitate over his interrogation of her. He decided that rather than interrogate, he would try to casually converse with her. Even so, considering the words she had just uttered, she seemed to have a very high sense of professionalism.

Subaru: “Although I can see where you’re coming from, I think you can accept some praise. That being said, I also sort of admire your attitude about it.”

Liliana: “No, no, it’s nothing so grand. Focusing on getting through each day is fine. So, please.”

Subaru: “—?”

Liliana stretched out a hand to a confused Subaru, who had been admiring her. Since it was empty, Subaru had no idea what she wanted and tilted his head at her smiling face.

Liliana: “Now that you’ve heard the voice of the Songstress, please give me something in return. Did you think listening was free? If so, then your attitude troubles me.”

Subaru: “Then give me back the emotions you made me feel! And take back your moniker as a Songstress too!”

Liliana: “What are you saying?! How do you think a bard ambitions to make a living?! Are you saying I should be giving out feelings for free and eat air as food?! I don’t think so!”

Liliana stomped angrily on the ground. What she said wasn’t wrong, but Subaru’s impression of the Songstress had been significantly lowered. Judging from how cold Beatrice’s large eyes were, he assumed she felt something similar.

Subaru: “Alright. Let’s discuss a tip. How much do you want?”

Liliana: “No, no, the tip should be for the customer to decide based on what his heart feels. Although the more the better.”

Subaru: “For fuck’s sake.”

Taking advantage of Liliana’s laughing, which showed her bloodstained teeth, Subaru pinched her chin with his cold hands. Her face was small, so it was incredibly easy to pinch, and Liliana had to run several laps around Subaru before he let her go. Stepping away dizzily, she muttered “It was just a joke” over and over to herself.

Liliana: “If you’re looking for the Chamber of Commerce in the first place, you should be Kiritaka-san’s guests, right? I wonder if you should be acting this rudely.”

Subaru: “You know, I don’t know you very well, but my impression is only getting worse. I think it’s about time we got going.”

The more he talked to Liliana, the closer Subaru came to reaching the limits of his patience.

When they had found out they were lost, they were already very close to being late, and if they delayed themselves any longer they would very likely miss a critical negotiation. After said negotiations, there would be more challenges and Subaru did not want to lose face by missing the critical first step.

Shaking her head, and her hair with it, Liliana ceremoniously announced, “I understand” and began to lead the way.

Liliana: “So why does the honored guest want to see Kiritaka-san?”

Beatrice: “You don’t understand your position here, I suppose. Stop nosing into matters that you are unrelated to and quietly take us to our destination, in fact.”

Liliana: “Eep!”

Faced with Beatrice’s intimidating tone, Liliana gave a cry resembling that of a small bird’s. Subaru pulled on one of Beatrice’s spiraled twin-tails.

Subaru: “You don’t have to be so angry. Then again, we can’t reveal everything, so a simple, clear explanation would be difficult to give.”

Liliana: “But, I’m Kiritaka-san’s confidant. Isn’t it just a matter of time before I find out?”

Subaru: “Well, if it’s really only a matter of time, then there should be no harm in me taking precautions.”

Liliana: “If you say so… You’re not a person with very good character, huh.”

Subaru: “You’re pretty straightforward, aren’t you? Without your talent for singing, you’d be in serious trouble.”

—There was a saying that geniuses were often strange people. Liliana was probably one such example. Singing was second-nature to her, but her social manners were lacking.

Liliana: “But really, I am a little worried. I’ve been out for a long time, so I’ll probably be scolded when I get back.”

Subaru: “When we’re discussing negotiations, please take care not to speak up. Alright?”

Liliana: “I got it.”

Subaru: “Huh, really?! Convincing you so easily was totally unexpected! You’re blowing my mind.”

Seeing Beatrice and Subaru’s satisfied expressions, for some reason, Liliana puffed out her cheeks in a pout. She raised the instrument in her hands, and began to play.

Liliana: “Inspiration just hit me—Big Waves, Large Waves, Waves of the World!”

Subaru: “No thanks, we’re good.”

Before the solo could start, Subaru hurriedly snatched Liliana’s instrument out of her hands. Liliana made an “Ahh” sound and she stretched to reach it, but her tiny body couldn’t reach Subaru’s hands.

Subaru: “It’s not a human hostage, it’s a musical instrument. If you lead us to the Chamber of Commerce without derailing us, I’ll give it back to you.”

Liliana: “You’re terrible! Evil! Barbaric! Depraved!”

Subaru: “Hahaha, that’s such an overstatement!”

Having just been denounced as the world’s most wicked person, Subaru plucked a string on the instrument. The sound it made was similar to that of an acoustic guitar.

Subaru, who had had a lot of free time at home, had practiced until he'd become fairly skilled. He could play and sing to a 70's folk song without much difficulty. If he introduced that music here, maybe it would take off and the music industry would be revolutionized.

Subaru: "Well, maybe it'll be like it was with mayonnaise."

Even though he had not considered the implementation of the plan at all, the idea had taken root. In original world, finding an application for a good idea was often taken for granted. In fact, Subaru had no idea how to get around to actually implementing it, just like he had no idea how to mass produce and market mayonnaise.

Subaru: "Playing guitar and telling stories to village kids are both within my skill range. Listen."

Liliana: "Wait, wait, please stop! I can't let an amateur play my instrument! If you break it, I can't make a living anymore… Huh?! You're pretty good! And I've never heard the song before! Eh, what is this?!"

As he walked, Subaru surprised Liliana with his folk songs, plucking some chords. Like this, Subaru and his friends began the walk to the Chamber of Commerce.

Beatrice: "Good grief, I suppose…"

An exhausted Beatrice trailed after the two.

However, her footsteps seemed like they had been set to the tune and rhythm of Subaru's melody.

2

The door of the Muse Chamber of Commerce was not very different from the buildings surrounding it. The First Street and the Second Street separated the residents of Priestella from the tourists and the Chamber of Commerce was located directly between the two.

In terms of convenience, it was only natural that the building was located in the First Street, which was directly accessible from the main gate, but its location in the city also indicated the influence of the building's owner. It was both the innermost and the outermost building, highlighting its uniqueness in an almost exaggerated way.

Liliana: "This is it, the long-awaited Muse Chamber of Commerce."

Springing over with a dance-like motion, Liliana indicated the building in front of her. Although there were taller buildings surrounding it, the four-story Chamber of Commerce seemed to stand incredibly tall. That said, Subaru felt a little regretful.

Subaru: "I knew it wouldn't look as grand as it had appeared from the entrance of Priestella, but I'm still a little disappointed… It didn't steal my heart the way the Japanese-style Water Plumage Pavilion did."

Liliana: "The Water Plumage Pavilion, that weirdly-shaped place on First Street? If you use that as your comparison, even Kiritaka-san will look kind of poor. But, that aside…"

Liliana swung her body up and down in exaggerated motions and reached out the palms of her hands.

Liliana: "Weeell, now that I've fulfilled our agreement, can you give Lyulyre-chan back to me? If I don't have it back by tomorrow, then I'm not sure how I'll survive."

Subaru: "Ah, right, right. Here you go."

Subaru had become tired of singing and playing the back-scratcher-shaped instrument halfway to their destination. Liliana hurriedly took it from him, breathing as if in a panic, and checked it for scratches, then began to rub her face against it and gave it a kiss.

Liliana: "Ahhhh, it's good to have you back. I'll never let you go again!"

Subaru: "It's impressive that your attitude can annoy me this much. I think this is the most annoyed I've been at someone's attitude since Petelgeuse."

Liliana: "Hooo, I don't know who he is, but he sounds similar to me.

Tell me about him! If I ever meet this Petelgeuse-san one day, I can't promise he wouldn't be my lifelong rival!"

Subaru: "He's a Sin Archbishop of the Witch Cult."

Liliana: "Here he goes again! Stop being such a joker! That should be your new name!"

Liliana, dressed like a dancer with a lot of exposed skin, showered Subaru with an overreaction. However, she tilted her head at his cold response, and gradually began to assume a serious expression.

Liliana: "Wait, were you serious?"

Subaru: "That's right. You probably won't have many other opportunities to compare yourself to someone who's dead and gone, so make what you will of it."

Liliana: "Wait, wait, wait, wait, wait, wait a minute!"

At Subaru's words, Liliana objected with amazing momentum. Her reaction surprised Subaru, who wondered if she was angry at being compared to a Sin Archbishop. Her next words threw Subaru off even more. They were,

Liliana: "What you said just now, why did it sound like you met a Sin Archbishop?"

Subaru: "…And if I did?"

He did not know what she had meant to ask, but it was definitely something important. He had not expected such a reaction after telling her Petelgeuse's identity as an Archbishop. Although, it wasn't impossible that she had encountered the poisonous, insect-like Witch Cult before, since they seemed to appear everywhere.

Subaru stiffened up, alert, and Beatrice also paid close attention to the situation, ready to act immediately if need be. One slow reaction, and it would be too late for them.

An oppressive feeling atmosphere, with two people looking to see how she would react, Liliana spoke. She said, Liliana: “Are you perhaps the… Lolimancer, Natsuki Subaru-sama?”

Subaru: “Ugh.”

Beatrice: “Ugh, I suppose.”

Under Liliana’s shining gaze, Subaru and Beatrice replied at the same time.

That was the most dishonorable name that Natsuki Subaru, who had been knighted and allowed to call himself Emilia’s Knight in name and reality, had earned in the past year.

—They say, the half-elf’s Knight is a mysterious person who always has a little girl beside him.

Liliana: “You were indispensable in slaying one of the Three Great Witchbeasts, the White Whale, alongside Duchess Crusch Karsten, with the Sword Demon Wilhelm himself calling you his benefactor! And immediately after, you continued to make the world tremble! With help from the famous businesswoman Anastasia-san of the Hoshin Trading Company and the Duchess Crusch, you defeated the Witch Cult’s Archbishop of Sloth! And there are unconfirmed rumors that you are also the hero who defeated the Great Rabbit, which has been plaguing the world for four-hundred years!”

Subaru: “Itchy, itchy, itchy, itchy, itchy!”

Liliana: “What a terrifying reputation!”

Liliana, with two hands raised, wore the expression of a girl who’d found her dreams as she listed Subaru’s merits. Some were accurate, and a few were exaggerated, but he could find no real error in her list.

Even so, her words embarrassed him enough for his entire body to itch, while Beatrice wore a seemingly dissatisfied but happy expression.

Liliana: “And the one being followed loyally by a little girl whose skill in magic is legendary! You’re that Subaru-sama! Aren’t you?!”

Beatrice: “Haha. Betty’s partner Subaru will surpass even the most outstanding figures in history, in fact. He will become the brightest star known to man, I suppose! You should respect him more, in fact!”

Subaru: “H-Hey!”

Beatrice, sticking her nose out proudly, and Liliana, bowing down. The two caused more headaches than any troublemaker, and it seemed like their show at the entrance of the Chamber of Commerce had attracted attention of the staff there. Upon seeing them and finding the kneeling Liliana, they all promptly returned to their work.

Subaru: “You, do you always act so exaggeratedly? Everyone here has a strange ‘oh, it’s Liliana, as always’ kind of expression on their face!”

Liliana: “Ah, please stop. Seeing a legend in front of me, my heart is racing! I’m glad to have a chance to witness you in person. Hehe.”

Subaru’s previous unease had all but disappeared, but Liliana grew more and more frantic, saliva even dripping from her mouth.

Liliana: “Well, could—Could the people you’re meeting with in the Chamber of Commerce really be the ones I’m thinking of?!”

Subaru: “…Who are you thinking of?”

Liliana: “No, it’s just that I’ve made a lot of songs based on the famous Emilia-tan. I know she’s a real person, but in my mind, she’s always been a fictional character! If it’s who I think it is, it’s Emilia-tan! Oh, hehe!”

Disregarding Subaru completely, Liliana flew into the Chamber of Commerce. After falling still for one shocked moment, a dumbfounded Subaru could only chase her into the building.

Beatrice: “Subaru! That girl, she even dropped her instrument, in fact!”

Subaru: “Should she really be treating her lifeline like this?!”

Hurriedly grabbing the Lyulyre from Beatrice, Subaru ran into Chamber of Commerce. Seeing the reception staff gawking at the upper floor, he deduced that Liliana had just run up the stairs.

Receptionist: “Y-You are…?”

Subaru: “We’re with Emilia-sama, who should be with Kiritaka-san right now. They told you we would be late, right?”

Receptionist: “Yes, they’re there right now… but Liliana-sama…”

Subaru: “I know the way, can I go up?”

Seeing the receptionist’s stiff nod, Subaru hurried after Liliana. There was no real reason to be in a rush, but the thought of Liliana and Emilia meeting face-to-face made him uneasy. Or, rather, perhaps it would be better to say that their meeting could bring about a troublesome atmosphere.

Even more frightening was that Liliana’s exceedingly strange personality would clash with Emilia’s, and Emilia’s experience and skill in interaction were overwhelmingly inadequate.

Beatrice: “Liliana was acting strange, Betty wonders if she will stay like that!”

Subaru: “I really don’t want to think about what will happen if we don’t stop her.”

Registering Beatrice’s words, Subaru sped to the third floor. Although he had yet to catch her, he’d saw the back of Liliana’s clothing. Now he just had to aim for his goal! Time to show off his parkour skills!

Subaru: “Come on!”

Flying up the stairs, Subaru began to skip steps entirely, using his hand to do an elegant horizontal rotation, drawing ever closer to Liliana, before finally catching her in front of a room near the staircase.

Subaru: “Liliana, wait!”

Liliana: “Uwaah?!”

Liliana, who was still salivating, yelled in surprise as Subaru reeled back, gasping for breath. He had caught her standing upright.

Liliana: “Oh, you caught up, but I’m not quitting so easily. I’m not giving up!”

Subaru: “If you want to meet Emilia no matter what, I’ll ask her for a private meeting, but she’s in the middle of a very important meeting right now.”

Liliana: “Uh… Well. I guess I got a little carried away.”

Hearing Subaru’s serious tone seemed to cool Liliana off a little. She relaxed her shoulders, and Subaru shook his head and handed her the instrument.

Liliana: “Ah, thanks.”

Subaru: “The tool you make a living off is incredibly important. Don’t just throw it away and run. It wouldn’t have been surprising if the instrument used by the Songstress had been taken and pawned off at a high price.”

Liliana: “Don’t worry, Kiritaka-san gave it to me. He loves shopping around.”

Subaru: “Your sponsor is really not ordinary!”

Speaking to Subaru with a bitter smile, Liliana held her cherished instrument to her chest. Her expression was one of sincerity and disbelief at being able to abandon it so easily. Since she’d thrown it down for her ambition earlier, Subaru didn’t know if he could believe her smile.

Liliana: “Well, I’m fine with saving my meeting with Emilia-sama until later… But first, can I discuss something with Natsuki Subaru-sama?”

Subaru: “Drop that bothersome honorific, it’s itchy! Well, what do you want to talk about?”

Liliana: “There’s so much! I want to know how accurate the stories are. Not just so I can hear them but so I can sing about them, too. I can write so many songs from that inspiration, maybe even a heroic one that will be passed down for generations! Just thinking about it makes my heart race!”

Holding out her clenched hand, Liliana’s eyes shone with energy.

While this puzzling scene was happening, Beatrice finally caught up and stumbled upon Subaru and Liliana’s proximity.

Beatrice: “Ah, you, strange girl. Don’t stand so close to Subaru, in fact. Move away, I suppose.”

Liliana: “Don’t worry, it’s not that big of a deal. Speaking of which, I also have some questions for the young girl who follows Lolimancer-san!”

Beatrice: “Betty is not a young girl, I suppose! She is a proper lady, in fact! How rude!”

Subaru: “You two are so noisy, always arguing like that! Shush! Emilia-tan is doing negotiations inside…”

Beatrice, who was in an awful mood, and Liliana, who failed to recognize that she was the cause. Subaru was caught in the middle of their argument, and, in his frustration, inadvertently raised his voice. And, at that moment—

Emilia: “—Subaru?”

The door opened unexpectedly, and Subaru’s name was called from the inside.

Looking through the open door, Subaru saw what looked like a reception room, where everyone was sitting on a chaise longue, looking at him with surprised expressions.

The Emilia Camp, Otto and Garfiel, as well as Emilia herself. Sitting opposite of them was a lean statured young man who was wearing fine-looking clothes. The one who had opened the door was a middle-aged man who was probably with him.

Subaru: “A-Ah… Emilia-tan. What a coincidence.”

Emilia: “A coincidence? Why were you being so loud… Uh, Kiritaka-san?”

Seeing Subaru making an embarrassed gesture, Emilia wore a look of confusion as she turned to the young man sitting opposite of her, who stood and grabbed something from the table.

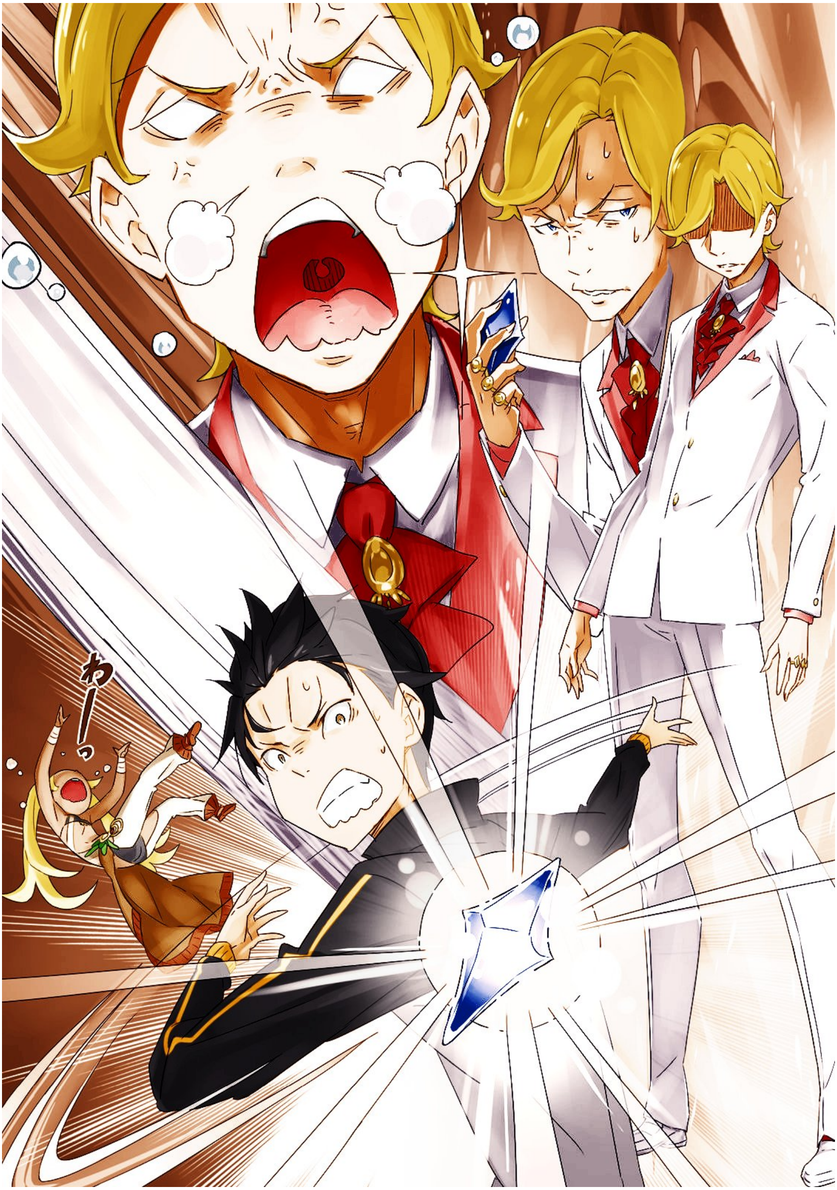
Then he turned where Subaru was standing,

Kiritaka: “Do, do, do, do, do, DON’T TOUCH MY LILIANA!!”

Suddenly raising his voice, the young man hurled a glowing blue piece of magic ore.

Pure, concentrated energy exploded in front of Subaru, whose vision was momentarily engulfed in blue. Seeing it, he faintly registered a thought of “Wow, how beautiful”, before the impact swallowed him.

—Like that, the first day of formal negotiations broke down.



わーっ

Chapter 10:
The Way of the City of Water

1

Negotiations between Emilia and Kiritaka Muse had proceeded unexpectedly smoothly.

Kiritaka, as a businessman, had likely been trying not to show favor to a single Royal Selection Candidate. However, Emilia had approached him directly, meaning that this meeting was a rather major event for him.

Of course, Emilia, who had been taking casual sips of the complimentary tea, was not thinking of her actions in such a way. Garfiel, who had steadily grown addicted to the accompanying desserts, was also not considering the political ramifications of their actions.

It could be said that, in the reception room of Muse Company, the only one who could read Kiritaka was Otto.

Kiritaka: “I understand that you have come a long way. Please excuse me for being unable to meet you at your convenience. Although I understand that it is disrespectful, due to my position, it is unwise for me to travel freely… In addition, I have become quite attached to this place.”

Otto: “Not at all, that is a very reasonable way to think. We are the ones who should be sorry for intruding in your busy schedule.”

Kiritaka: “I will treat whatever you need from me with the utmost priority and care.”

While exchanging polite greetings, Otto scrutinized the man facing him. The famed Kiritaka Muse was well-known, even outside of Priestella. His behavior revealed an image both majestic and stylish.

He was still fairly young, probably somewhere between twenty-five and thirty. His tall, thin body was clad in finely made clothes, and his pale golden hair was meticulously combed to the back of his head. His rather uncomfortable-looking ornaments showed sophisticated taste, and his introverted and concise words and gestures revealed that he was probably highly educated.

Otto, as the Emilia Camp's Minister of Internal Affairs alongside Roswaal, had unknowingly accumulated a rather impressive amount of experience in negotiations. So he had immediately judged Kiritaka's attitude to be almost unmatchable.

Speaking frankly, Emilia was incredibly fortunate to have Otto with her. If Otto had let Emilia face Kiritaka alone, she would surely be swayed by his skilled rhetoric, and would have ended up overspending on expensive but ultimately useless things.

From the past year, that was the impression Otto had gotten of Emilia.

Kiritaka: "May I inquire as to what you need from me? According to Anastasia-san's messenger, the products you are procuring are stocked by our company."

Otto: "It may be too soon to say so. Actually…"

Interrupting Kiritaka, who had begun to address the main topic, Otto looked to Emilia.

Emilia was content to leave the negotiations to Otto. Garfiel, similarly, maintained his usual attitude, eating desserts while fixing a sharp gaze on one corner of the room, staring at a leisurely-looking figure who was dressed from head to toe in white.

In Kiritaka's words, the man in white was present to protect the staff from excessively assertive visitors. "Recently, the world has not been in a peaceful state, so I hope that he can join us", he had said.

Otto had a faint idea of the man in white's identity.

It was said that Priestella's Muse Company made use of a mercenary force known as the Scales of the White Dragon, a group which was well-known even in Lugunica. This man was probably one of its members.

Rumors claimed that their group operated locally, but, a few years back, they had formed close ties with the Muse Company. If those rumors were true, then Kiritaka had been the one who brought them into the fray.

Otto: “We have a special request. That is, we are looking for a rare type of stone, even by Muse Company’s standards. We are searching for colorless magic ore with outstanding purity. I hope that this is something we can buy from you.”

Keeping in mind his evaluation that Kiritaka was not someone he could afford to be careless around, Otto stated his request plainly. Playing around with vague terms would be meaningless. After all, Kiritaka had very likely seen through the true reason for their visit as soon as it had been prepared.

And Kiritaka also understood that he could not refuse a direct request from Emilia.

Kiritaka: “I see. We do indeed stock magic ore… and we do indeed have some spellstones with a higher grade of quality than those stocked by regular merchants. Emilia-sama, no matter how much colorless ore you want, we are also willing to prepare…”

Otto: “Kiritaka-san. Please be straightforward with us. We have stated our request, that is, a colorless magic crystal of the highest purity. That is all we need.”

Kiritaka: “…That is rather discourteous.”

Kiritaka was not simply lacking in straightforwardness. He was merely using a negotiation technique. Despite perfectly understanding Otto’s intentions, he casually dropped the names of other goods that he believed would appeal to Emilia. To him, the goods had been marked as sold long before the negotiation had even started. The only remaining question was the matter of the price.

Otto: “We are indeed requesting something that may be troublesome for you, so as to be flexible about the price, we have prepared something that you will find beneficial. Mining rights to the magic ore in the Great Forest of Elior, part of the territory ruled by Margrave Mathers, who is backing Emilia-sama.”

Kiritaka: “Please do not turn this into the kind of fraud that muddles prices. We are the only formal company that trades raw magical ore, so we cannot consider this proposal. In our line of work, credit is everything to us. I’m sure you would understand, Otto-dono?”

Otto gave a silent sigh. It seemed that Kiritaka knew of his origins.

The Suwen family’s business was nowhere nearly as famous as the Muse family’s, but it was hardly unknown. The main players supporting each of the Royal Candidates were sure to be heavily investigated, along with the candidates themselves.

That said, many questions were left unanswered by these investigations, which were the bane of the Emilia Camp. Garfiel had lived in Sanctuary his whole life, and Emilia had spent a century frozen in the Great Forest of Elior. Both the Lolimancer and his Contracted Spirit were of unknown origin.

Thus, Otto, whose identity had easily been discovered, would certainly have it used against him frequently.

Kiritaka: “Otto-dono? Your complexion seems to have changed. Are you okay?”

Otto: “Of course, please don’t worry about me. I just thought of something disconcerting and it made me a little uncomfortable, that’s all.”

Shaking his head at Kiritaka’s words, Otto decided to save that unproductive line of thought for later. Once again, he urged that Kiritaka provide a straight answer to his question. Kiritaka took on a meditative attitude.

Kiritaka: “Of course, we will not refuse to let go of our commodities no matter how much you plead, and of course we are going to follow Emilia-sama’s request.”

Otto: “Then…”

Kiritaka: “However, the magical ore you are requesting is special. In truth, on the occasion when I was first sent to Muse Company’s branch in Priestella, the president—that is, my father—gave it to me as a gift. Rather than treating it as a commodity, I prefer to think of its sentimental value.”

Otto: “…”

Regardless of whether the story were true or false, Kiritaka had made a cunning move. Hearing Kiritaka’s words, Otto bit his lip.

As Kiritaka had said, the extremely rare magic ore they were requesting was more than a mere trading commodity. Taking into account the magnitude of Muse Company’s transactions, it was too good of an opportunity not to seek extra profit.

So how could even greater value be made even greater? Not with commodities, but with human sentiment. Since the ore being sold had important personal value, that meant it needed to be exchanged for even greater value.

Emilia: “I see… I didn’t realize it was something so important to you.”

Emilia’s expression reflected that Kiritaka’s story seemed to have touched her deeply. Otto could only conclude that Kiritaka wasn’t cut out to be an actor, considering how guilty he looked.

“It took both action and effort to get your desired result”, Otto thought to himself as he cleared his throat.

Otto: “I appreciate your kindness. Even so, we still hope to find what we came here for.”

Kiritaka: “I understand. I am a merchant who sells magical ore, and I know that it is better to have it shine in the hands of someone who needs it than to have it sit as a decoration at my home. I am willing to give it to you. There are only a few conditions.”

Otto: "—Conditions. Let me hear them."

Having established that there would be an additional price tag, Kiritaka commenced the real negotiation. After Otto agreed to hear them, Kiritaka held up three fingers.

What unreasonable conditions would there be? Even thinking about them was enough to give Otto some mild aching in his stomach.

Kiritaka: "First of all. The Muse Company has been holding on to this colorless magic crystal that Emilia-sama has been seeking since some time ago. However, in order to keep it out of the hands of malicious people, we have hidden our possession of it. I hope you understand this."

Otto: "…That is only natural. That you have confided in us your circumstance, without attempting to hide anything, removes all of my suspicion."

At first, Kiritaka had denied any past knowledge of the affairs of Emilia Camp. But in order to bring this deal to a successful conclusion, he gave up this knowledge.

Kiritaka: "Then the second one. As the deal is signed, I want to have the Hoshin Trading Company in presence, leaving it so that the legitimacy of our transaction is confirmed."

Otto: "I understand… That poses no problem."

It seemed there had been also a deal between the Muse Company and the Hoshin Trading Company. It seemed to be intended to semi-publicly reveal that Emilia owed Anastasia a debt. Although it was slightly uncomfortable, it was a legitimate request, so Otto could not refuse.

So far, none of the requests would be considered deal-breakers. So, the third request—as soon as he said it, Kiritaka's true intentions would become clear.

Otto held back a sigh as Kiritaka waved the third finger in front of him.

Kiritaka: “Third—Avoid all contact with the Songstress named Liliana, who is currently residing in this city.”

Otto: “—Huh?”

Hearing a name suddenly appear of nowhere, Otto froze.

Of course, Emilia and Garfiel, who were accompanying him, had the same reaction—No, never mind, those two had remained unchanged ever since the negotiations started. Emilia sipped her tea and Garfiel stared at the figure in white. Although they had left all the negotiations to Otto, seeing their blatant lack of participation irked him.

Otto: “I am sorry, but I think I may have misheard you. Did you just say to avoid contact with the Songstress…?”

Kiritaka: “No, there was no misunderstanding there. These conditions are all we request. If you have any questions, please ask them, and please consider the deal carefully…”

Otto: “If you do not mind, can I ask for the reason? At this point, I can’t recall our deal having anything to do with the Songstress.”

Kiritaka: “…It is not something that necessarily needs to be said. Can you agree to that promise?”

His tone sinking, for the first time, Kiritaka exposed his emotional side. Otto, who could not understand the condition, was lost on what to do.

Put simply, the third request passed the horizons of his imagination. Accepting posed no future obstacles to Emilia, and although she would regret not being able to meet the Songstress she had discussed with Anastasia, it was hardly important enough to scrap this deal for.

That they had so effortlessly come to an agreement was surprising.

Otto had not dared to expect that negotiations could have gone so smoothly, although Kiritaka could, at this point, still change his mind. Subaru, who had been lost halfway, would be here soon, and would certainly turn that matter into something troublesome. Otto wished to tie the deal up before he arrived.

Otto: “Emilia-sama, is this alright with you?”

Emilia: “Mhm. I’m a little disappointed, but I guess it can’t be helped.”

Having earned the confirmation from Emilia, Otto agreed to the deal. Kiritaka was satisfied to accept this commitment, and the most stressful part of the negotiation came to an end. Now, they could discuss the actual monetary price, and maybe pick up a few small items.

Kiritaka: “There are a few other quality goods that you may be interested in… would you like to see?”

Kiritaka stood to retrieve a wooden chest from a shelf in the back. The chest, having been placed on the table, emitted a glow as it opened, dazzling Otto and Emilia. Inside were all sorts of magical stones, carefully arranged on cushions, the most radiant of which was the colorless, transparent one, devoid of any elemental trace.

That was the colorless stone that Emilia had been pursuing.

Kiritaka: “Would you like to inspect it by hand?”

At Kiritaka’s words, Emilia raised her head.

She nodded, drawing a small breath, then stretched her nervous fingers towards the stone. But, at that moment,

Garfiel: “Emilia-sama.”

Man in White: “Young Master.”

Simultaneously, the two guards called to their respective master. They turned to look at each other, and then to face their surprised masters.

Garfiel: “There are two loud ‘n annoyin’ somethin’s comin’.”

Man in White: “There seems to be the sound of footsteps coming from downstairs. Allow me to go investigate.”

He strode soundlessly toward the door as Garfiel tensed his body. The sound of the disturbances drew closer, until they seemed to be right in front of the door—

???: “You two are so noisy, always arguing like that! Shush! Emilia-tan is doing negotiations inside…”

The voice was an incredibly familiar one. As this thought was shared by three people in the room, the man in white opened the door of the reception room, revealing a familiar scary face. With a petite girl on either side of him, this man, Subaru, was truly worthy of the title of Lolimancer.

Emilia: “—Subaru?”

Hearing Emilia’s call, a pale Subaru finally noticed the presence of everyone else. At that moment, Otto wanted to complain, but he decided to observe everyone else’s reactions first and held back.

And so, Subaru held up his hands and smiled weakly.

Subaru: “A-Ah… Emilia-tan. What a coincidence.”

Emilia: “A coincidence? Why were you being so loud… Uh, Kiritaka-san?”

Hearing Emilia’s surprise, Otto’s own reaction was also delayed.

When he finally caught himself, Kiritaka had reached a hand into the wooden chest of magic stones and glared at Subaru with a gaze bordering on frantic. He clutched a blue pure magical stone, and,

Kiritaka: “Do-, do, do, do, do, DON’T TOUCH MY LILIANA!!”

Accompanying his frantic cry, a magical stone was thrown. Without anyone to stop him, the stone arched towards Subaru and knocked his body away in an explosion of blue.

Man in White: “My apologies for that embarrassing spectacle. The Young Master is usually calm, but if matters involve Liliana-san, he quickly flies into a rage… I will try to calm him down, but, for today, let’s end negotiations here.”

After the commotion died down, the middle-aged man in white acted as the mediator who had to calm down both sides. He bowed his head with an apology.

Kiritaka’s frantic voice could still be heard from the closed door behind him. That scene was unsuitable for outsiders, so the members of Emilia Camp had been ushered out of the room.

Liliana: “Kiritaka-san is really troublesome, even taking away my chance to speak to Emilia-sama and Subaru-sama! Ugh, I’m so annoyed, ugh!”

Liliana’s anger, on the other hand, was also endless. Speaking in an angry huff, she announced that she’d come up with a new song titled “The Avant-Garde Master of Life and Death”, causing Beatrice to furrow her brow.

Man in White: “Liliana-chan, please forgive the Young Master.”

Liliana: “…I understand.”

Although it took a long time to understand, Liliana had finally been talked down. Subaru’s interference had rendered a smooth sailing negotiation utterly fruitless.

Subaru: “In other words, Liliana’s a rabid fangirl, and is obsessed with us. Kiritaka knew and wanted to keep us from stealing her. That was the point of the third condition?”

Otto: “And just as I was about to have the deal tied down, Natsuki-san had to come ruin everything. I finally understand now. Does having you around do any good for anyone?!”

Subaru: “I acknowledge that this was my fault, but who would have thought that after getting seasick things would turn out like this… That’s hardly something I had any control over.”

Otto could not hide his dissatisfaction at the result of the negotiations. Subaru spoke lightly, but he was also hardly satisfied, having taken a blow from Kiritaka's magical stone, and realizing that negotiations on the following day would be incredibly difficult based on Kiritaka's angry tone.

Emilia: "Come on now, please don't be so angry, Otto-kun. Subaru didn't do this on purpose, these things just happen sometimes."

Subaru: "That's right. Keep going, Emilia-tan."

Emilia: "Subaru, you also have something to apologize for. You shouldn't have been so loud with Liliana-san. We were the guests there, so we definitely troubled the people working a lot. The receptionist will also be in trouble."

Subaru: "Yes, I'm sorry."

Subaru bowed his head in an apology, and Emilia nodded a "very good". Otto gave a helpless sigh as he watched his master's hopeless attitude.

Otto: "Anyway, today's negotiations have ended here, so we should be getting back to the Water Plumage Pavilion… However, I have something to attend to first. So, I'll meet back with everyone later."

Subaru: "Something to attend to?"

At his unexpected words, everyone turned to Otto, who gestured in the general direction of Muse Company's headquarters.

Otto: "We've gone out of our way to come to the faraway Priestella, so I'd like to take the time to improve relationships here. Although, as for today, it is only necessary for me to go. There may come a day when Emilia-sama may need to come. If that ever happens, I'll have to trouble you, Emilia-sama."

Emilia: "Yeah, I understand. But, why am I not needed today?"

Otto: "If you show up unannounced, they may be unable to sufficiently welcome you. We need to be considerate about where you go."

Emilia: “Yes. I understand. I’ll keep it in mind.”

After hearing Emilia’s reply, Otto gave a “please go home promptly”, as if speaking to a group of children, then disappeared into the depths of the Second Street. As for Garfiel, although he wanted to accompany Otto, he was rejected with “please prioritize Emilia-sama”.

Emilia: “So, Subaru, what were you talking about with Liliana-san?”

Subaru: “Oh? Is Emilia-tan concerned about me talking to other girls? I wonder. I’m glad to see this subtle change.”

Emilia: “No. Don’t get me wrong, I just want to know what kind of a person the Songstress is.”

Subaru: “So it’s better for me to misunderstand, here?!”

Emilia, as always, naturally and mercilessly cut into Subaru’s heart. But, in any case, she gave Subaru a reason to chat with her, so he began to recount his earlier experience.

Subaru: “At first, when we encountered her in the park, I thought her song was super powerful. It was an astounding performance, even as the Songstress. Right, Beako?”

Beatrice: “Betty won’t deny this point, in fact. She doesn’t deny it, I suppose.”

Emilia: “Beatrice looks so distressed, what happened?”

Subaru: “—Talent in one area comes at the price of competence in others. Liliana perfectly showcased the meaning of that.”

Subaru could fully understand Beatrice’s distress. Liliana had poured her heart and soul into music, and in turn became a rather pitiful girl.

Subaru: “In short, rather than striving to be an extremely talented person in one area, you should strive to be a mildly successful person all around.”

Garfiel: “Ooh, that’s pretty philosophical, Captain. If her singin’ makes people think that, it must’ve been amazin’.”

Subaru: “I won’t deny it. Speaking of which, meeting Liliana was worth coming up with that conclusion.”

Everyone decided to return to the inn by foot. If they were to take the waterways again, then Subaru would become seasick again, which would mean leaving him behind.

Emilia: “Like Otto-kun said, it wasn’t easy for us to come here, so I want to take a walk and appreciate these beautiful streets.”

Rather than having Subaru feel guilty that they were walking for his benefit, Emilia phrased her reasoning as a cute request. Subaru had no complaints, and Garfiel and Beatrice did not object.

Subaru: “If I hadn’t been able to accompany Emilia-tan back to the inn, I would’ve gone mad with worry.”

Beatrice: “You don’t need to worry, in fact. If we get into trouble then Betty would place her left hand on a wall, I suppose.”

Subaru: “I think I’ve already told you about the defects of that method.”

Garfiel: “Ya two don’t need to worry, you’ve got my amazin’ self’s nose. Whether it’s the smell of the inn or the smell of that midget devil, my amazin’ self remembers it.”

Subaru: “—Heh.”

Noticing that Garfiel had used Mimi’s scent as an example, Subaru subconsciously gave a malicious chuckle. The little kitten’s reaction to Garfiel, though surprising and puzzling, was probably nothing other than goodwill. Plus, they were of similar age. Subaru thought they made a rather good match.

Incidentally, Garfiel was still the same, wanting to dedicate himself to Ram. And Ram had no special feelings for him, regarding Garfiel as a little brother, nothing more.

Subaru: “In any case, Garfiel. You’re my little bro, so as a big bro I’m praying for your success in love.”

Garfiel: “Ahh? Whaddaya just say, somethin’ all touchy-feely, Captain? Well, yer makin’ me feel sick.”

Subaru wore an expression of “I understand” as he patted Garfiel on the shoulder. Garfiel cocked his head and laughed, exposing his sharp-toothed grin. Subaru hoped from the bottom of his heart that the kind, well-intentioned Garfiel would find happiness.

Emilia: “This is really a nice city. Everything seems so fresh and the people here look so happy. I can’t help but feel excited.”

Their surroundings seemed to delight Emilia, and, seeing her expression, Subaru felt happy as well. She did have a point, though. The architecture in the city must have taken a great effort to design, and everything functional seemed to simultaneously serve as artwork. The icing on the cake was, of course, Priestella’s beautiful waterways which doubled as transportation.

Subaru: “Although the city was built like this, the origins of the design are unknown.”

Emilia: “Apparently its construction pushed the limits of technology at the time, because it had something to do with keeping dangerous Witchbeasts trapped inside the city. But that doesn’t change its beauty, right?”

Emilia stopped at a bridge overlooking the waterway and smiled. Subaru, overtaken by the mood, nodded as if to declare, “Yeah, that’s right”.

For whatever reason, Subaru had arrived here, at this point. The results that he had earned, and the results he was reaching for, as long as they could be reached, nothing else mattered.

Because the most important part of anything was not the beginning, but the end.

Subaru: “That’s what you always said, Mom.”

Emilia: “Just now, did you say something?”

Subaru: “I just remembered the magic words that the woman I respect most in the world said to me.”

The days of those memories were long gone, but even so, Subaru had gained so much courage from them.

It would be impossible to forget them, because the lesson he’d learned from them was something that could not be forgotten. Natsuki Subaru, today, lived with those memories inside him.

Seeing Subaru and Emilia’s exchanging smiles, Garfiel and Beatrice waited on the side. Those two were occupied in their own world, and no one could interrupt them. Even Beatrice recognized this point.

Beatrice: “He has such a foolish expression on that face of his, in fact.”

Garfiel: “When a man’s sharin’ such a good mood with the woman he likes, of course he’ll act like that. My amazin’ self’s relieved, looks like the Captain’s a man.”

Beatrice: “I wonder what that means, I suppose.”

Garfiel: “No, it’s just that the Captain surrounds himself with girls too small ‘n too many men… Supposin’ he weren’t so close with Emilia-sama, a misunderstandin’ might’ve happened.”

Beatrice: “Subaru is a masculine man, in fact! He’s both a man and a pervert, I suppose! He’s always willing to randomly touch Betty and Petra, I suppose!”

Garfiel: “That’s not really a nice way to vouch for him, yeah?”

The two talked at length about Subaru’s preferences, and about his reputation of touching girls younger than him. Subaru and Emilia, satisfied with their view of the City of Water, did not even hear the irrational dialogue taking place behind them.

Emilia: “Well then, it’s about time to go back. Plus, I kinda want to admire the inn again. Its shape was reaaally odd but interesting.”

Subaru: “Wafuu-style architecture. I also want to see it again, although for different, less charitable reasons than Emilia-tan.”

Emilia: “Is that so? Haha, then, we should hurry.”

Emilia withdrew her hand from the railing, and took a few steps backward with an excited smile. Because she was feeling a bit impatient, Emilia had not taken the time to confirm that there was no one behind her.

Emilia: “Ah.”

???: “Whoops.”

She backed right into a man wearing a hood who had passed by them. She stumbled slightly, and the man reached out to steady her.

Emilia: “I-I’m sorry. I… I wasn’t looking behind me…”

Subaru: “Sorry from me too. This girl, she’s so troublesome. I’ll be sure to scold her.”

A flustered Emilia apologized to the man wearing the hood. Subaru joined her side and bowed his head to the man. He took care not to call Emilia’s name, taking the precaution of keeping people from realizing who she was and causing a commotion in the streets. Of course, the hood that Emilia wore was one that hindered recognition.

So, if they made as much as slight contact with someone, it wouldn’t develop into a big deal. This time included.

???: “This time, I was the careless one. After all, I was a little distracted in admiration.”

Subaru: “Hm?”

???: “The miss that I just bumped into has the silver hair of a beautiful girl, doesn’t she? A woman I once wanted to marry had that kind of beautiful hair. Remembering that hair, I didn’t avoid you in time.”

His remark should have seemed urgent, but his voice sounded rather slow and intoxicated.

Judging from his voice, the man, dressed in a long robe, sounded fairly young. Hearing him mention marriage, Subaru froze, and immediately judged him as a man who he did not want near Emilia.

Subaru: “Well, we can consider this a fault from both parties. Since we’ve conveyed our apologies, we can both move on now.”

Emilia: “Wait, Subaru. That was a kind of an insincere and apathetic apology…”

Subaru: “That’s fine, no?”

Emilia: “…”

Subaru pulled her arm, wishing Emilia to leave, Emilia herself seemed lost for words. Seeing their interaction, the man in the hood slowly shook his head.

???: “I don’t mind. I don’t place any anger or blame on you. If you want to leave, feel free to leave. If we are to meet again, fate will provide us with another opportunity.”

Subaru: “Ahh, that’s very true. Well then, maybe fate will guide us to a future meeting.”

Accepting the man’s poetic farewell, Subaru responded similarly and left with Emilia’s hand in his. Subaru stole a quick glance at her. In that moment, for reasons unknown to him, Emilia wore a meaningful expression as she glanced over her shoulder at the man they’d just left.

Subaru: “Sure, my attitude wasn’t great, but I wanted to protect my Emilia-tan and get her away from that strange guy.”

Emilia: “Hmm? Ah, right. I genuinely didn’t think Subaru’s attitude was very nice, since it was my mistake, but that wasn’t what I was thinking about…”

Stopping here, Emilia's eyes reflected her confusion. However, with a meditative expression and quivering lips, she continued,

Emilia: "That person just now, I feel like I've met him before… That's how I felt, but, since his face was hidden, I couldn't be sure…"

Subaru: "Someone that Emilia-tan knows? Well, I should probably know them as well."

Probably because it was still bothering her, Emilia turned around once more. But the figure had disappeared, and she had no idea where he had gone.

Emilia: "Mhm… but, I don't know. Who was he?"

Garfiel: "Yo, Captain. Why're ya lookin' so nervous, clingin' to Emilia-sama's hand? Were ya afraid that someone's gonna steal her?"

Seeing Subaru and Emilia emerging from the bridge, Garfiel approached them, and Subaru stuck his tongue out at him.

Subaru: "Idiot, this is no time for games. If there's some strange guy hanging around, you have to show up to help. If it's an opponent that I can't handle, then Emilia-tan would be in danger."

Garfiel: "Suppose if that happened, then you'd protect her with yer life. That's what makes the Captain a man."

Subaru: "If I acted as a shield then maybe I could take one hit. Then if the enemy kept going, we'd be in trouble. I have no confidence in my endurance, either physically or mentally."

Hearing Subaru's humble evaluation of himself, Garfiel laughed. He doubtlessly believed that Subaru was just humble, but, to Subaru, it was indeed a proper evaluation. It was perhaps better to say that Garfiel overestimated Subaru.

Garfiel: "No cause to worry. If my amazin' self thinks that some bastard's tryin' t'attack ya, they'll be sent flyin', no doubt about it. Besides, the guy didn't move like he knew how to fight. Was just some regular guy, one who didn't know no martial arts."

Subaru: "You can tell that?"

Garfiel: "Just by lookin'. Can also tell the Captain likes to swing swords 'round. My amazin' self could tell as soon as ya moved yer wrists."

Subaru: "Really? That sounds like some kind of magic trick."

Subaru had never told Garfiel of his high-school experience with kendo. Subaru had already realized that his so-called skill would be of no use in this world. But his exercise bore traces, which the knowledgeable practitioners of this world could apparently see.

Subaru: "Having said that, are you still worried, Emilia-tan?"

Subaru put this thoughts to the side and spoke to Emilia, who was still gazing around, before giving up with a shake of her head.

Emilia: "Mhm, it's okay. Sorry to trouble you. Let's go back."

Subaru: "Well, when we get back, make sure to hug Mimi for a while to make you feel better. Oops, I'll be hugging you though, Beako, so there's no need to be worried."

Beatrice: "Betty hasn't said anything yet, I suppose!"

Hearing Beatrice's complaints and Subaru's proud expression, Emilia laughed. Then, covering her mouth, she replied,

Emilia: "That's true, holding Mimi does seem to be very comforting. I'll be sure to do that."

As Emilia spoke, she checked her surroundings once again, then dropped her uneasy gaze in exchange for a smile.

3

???: "—I see. Now I understand the meaning of having come here."

A man spoke into the cuff of his coat, shaking the hem of the hood.

Recalling the girl he had just come in contact with, his mouth curled into a smile, a smile that let off a miserable feeling.

???: “I went out of my way to come here. If it had been for nothing, then I couldn’t let it go as if nothing had happened. Since this is a special reward, this is another matter.”

The words themselves were mild, but the voice which had announced them was feverishly sticky. It was as though the feeling had been cooked in a sticky pot, and then had been left out under the sun and the moon. The feeling held that kind of unpleasantness.

???: “I will never let go of anything I own, and I want what I own to be perfectly suited for me. Since I am perfect, I must be continually satisfied. So, being aware of those missing numbers would, of course, be unsatisfying, and must be filled.”

The man spoke his tongue twisters as he raised his head. At that moment, his hood fell, revealing white hair. With the wind swaying his white hair, the slightly unhappy man announced.

???: “I must make her my seventy-ninth wife, to satisfy that vacancy.”

In the City of Water, the white-haired devil spoke in a voice full of derision.

Chapter 11:
A Surprising Reunion, a Fated Reunion, and an Unintended Reunion

After the meeting with the strange hooded man, the journey proceeded with no further incidents. Occasionally, Emilia would glance into the water, deep in thought, but she covered her discomfort with a smile before anyone could question her about it.

The only distinct feature of the man they'd encountered was that he was a man of similar age, wearing a hood, but he seemed to have some kind of connection to Emilia. From Emilia's perspective, his behavior would have been fairly courteous. He may have been a little extreme in describing her hair but, more importantly, Emilia's silver hair rarely made a good impression like it had on him.

Subaru: "Speaking of which, the recognition-hindering cloak…"

Suddenly, it hit Subaru that the effects of Emilia's magical cloak, the one she always wore to keep her identity hidden, had not affected the man just now. If the cloak had been operating at its normal effectiveness, the man would only have been able to notice Emilia's presence. However, he had apparently seen Emilia's silver hair.

Meaning that the man could resist the cloak's spell.

Subaru: "Beako."

Beatrice: "So you've noticed it, in fact. Emilia and Garfiel haven't, and so they are walking around oblivious, I suppose. Careless children, in fact."

Beatrice, walking by Subaru's side, knew exactly what he was worried about.

As she led Subaru away from Emilia, Subaru brought his hand to his chin and frowned.

Subaru: "I don't think he used any trick, but that guy was just suspicious. The cloak's cognitive obstruction should not be resisted so easily."

Beatrice: "So he is either proficient in magic, or he has some Divine Protection… Anyway, he's not just an ordinary man, I suppose. What a bother, in fact."

Subaru: "Should we say something to Emilia?"

Beatrice: "That's not necessary, in fact. If he were acting with malice then Emilia probably would have noticed it, I suppose. We don't need to scrutinize this too much, in fact."

Hearing Beatrice's assertion, Subaru replied with an "I see", accepting it.

Beatrice had spoken what she believed to be correct. Since she often spent time observing humans, and had been paying close attention to Emilia's attitude, Subaru listened to her. There was no need to unnecessarily provoke unease.

Even so, Subaru and Beatrice must at least remain alert. In this vast city, meeting the man again by chance was unlikely. But there was a chance that he sought to actively contact them, so they needed to be wary.

Garfiel: "Hurry up, Captain. If ya go as slow as Beatrice, then it'll be sundown by the time we get back."

Beatrice: "Stop saying unnecessary things, I suppose. Smelly, annoying creature."

Garfiel turned back at them and was laughing happily in response to Beatrice's rude insults.

Suddenly, his expression changed. His ears moved back and forth, and his nose twitched.

Subaru: "What's wrong?"

Garfiel: "Nah, it's just, near the hotel… I can sorta hear an argument.”

They turned the corner as Garfiel finished talking, and Subaru and the others also heard the commotion. Indeed, it sounded like someone, or maybe multiple someones, were furious.

Subaru: “It sounds like it’ll turn into a fight, what a mess.”

Garfiel: “The Captain caused a fuss during the negotiation and ended up eatin’ some magic ore, do ya really have the right to say what’s a mess? If I weren’t at the Chamber of Commerce, ya would’ve been taken by the guards.”

Subaru: “That’s just my irresistible charm… Emilia-tan?”

Subaru suddenly found Emilia, who had just caught up, running past him. He called out to her, but she paid him no attention.

Emilia: “That voice, it sounds really familiar… Actually, I think that’s Joshua’s voice.”

Subaru: “Ah, you’re right. That does sound like the voice of that weak bastard.”

Emilia: “I’d be worried if he was in trouble. Let’s go.”

Leaving the less tense Garfiel behind, Subaru raced after Emilia. Turning another corner, he could finally see the Water Plumage Pavilion, where—

???: “Alright asshole, how many times are you going to make me say this?! Stop being stuck up and call your master here already!”

Joshua: “You’re so barbaric that I wouldn’t even call my brother here, let alone my master! Please leave while I’m still capable of speaking calmly!”

???: “Can you really not understand what I’m saying, oy? Let’s go, ya bastard!”

A young man with purple hair—Joshua stood with his arms spread in front of the hotel, quarreling with another man. Although he was facing away from Subaru, his physique was clearly quite burly. Judging from his attitude, a brawl with Joshua would be inevitable.

Emilia: “That’s enough!”

In the time it took Subaru to judge the two men’s difference in combat prowess, Emilia had already rushed over and separated them. Having been jerked away, Joshua wore an expression of abject shock.

Joshua: “E-Emilia-sama?!”

Emilia: “I was on my way back from my business when I heard you two. Arguing in front of the inn like this. What’s the reason for your quarrel? Calm down and tell me about it.”

She spoke as if mediating an argument between two children. In that moment, the atmosphere of that place settled down. Subaru sighed with relief, and Garfiel sighed disappointedly, as if to say “Aww, no fight?” as he caught up with them in no hurry.

Joshua: “Everyone is arriving one after another… My apologies for troubling you.”

Emilia: “It’s no problem. Now, please tell me about your argument.”

Joshua: “How could I trouble Emilia-sama with such a petty thing…”

Joshua stubbornly refused Emilia’s intervention in the matter, as if worried that Emilia would use this opportunity to her advantage. If that was the case, then he was being paranoid. Even in a hundred years, Emilia wouldn’t be able to come up with such a cunning idea.

???: “There ain’t much to what happened. I was sent here, but this guy wouldn’t let me in, screaming. So, I was gonna have to fight him.”

In that tense moment, the man arguing with Joshua spoke up. His sharp eyes glared at Joshua with malice, and his voice was dangerous as he complained about his reception.

Joshua: “How many times are you going to make me say it? If you’re going to disguise your identity, at least do an appropriate amount of preparation. Even wearing your neat clothing, you can’t hide your true nature. You can only push a lie so far!”

???: “Oh well, excuse me! Hey, I don’t like dressing up like this. I’m running someone else’s errand! Ah, fucking understand what I’m saying!”

The man scratched his head in frustration, as Joshua refused to accept his claims. Even with Emilia’s interference, along with the others, the two were still stuck in that argument, like a world composed of only them.

Emilia: “Really, how can we set things straight like this? Subaru, how should… Subaru?”

Emilia, puzzled by the situation with the two men, turned to Subaru, who stood with his hand on his chin, frowning in thought in front of her. His gaze rested on the man who had been arguing with Joshua.

Emilia: “What’s the matter, Subaru?”

Subaru: “No, I might be mistaken… But I think I’ve seen him somewhere before…”

???: “Huh? What, oy. Are you picking a fight with… Hk?!”

Hearing the dialogue between Subaru and Emilia, the man’s sharp gaze turned in their direction, looking for a new place to direct his anger. But after seeing Subaru, he immediately stiffened.

His lips trembling, he pointed at Subaru.

???: “Y-You… that time with Reinhard…!”

Subaru: ““That time with Reinhard” is really specific… ah.”

“That time with Reinhard” was Subaru’s main clue. And then Subaru realized who he was. He was much better dressed than before, and his demeanor was slightly different, but his malicious eyes hadn't changed.

Subaru: "Chin! Chin, right?! Wow, long time no see. Why are you here?"

Chin: "Don't act like we know each other! Who is this 'Chin' in the first place?! My name's Rachins!"

Subaru: "So it's Chin after all!"

Rachins: "Shut up!"

Subaru dropped a hand onto Chin's shoulder, and Chin, or rather, Rachins, hurriedly shrugged it off. Subaru pouted at his cold attitude.

Emilia: "Do you know him?"

Subaru: "Ah. Well, he's a familiar face that reminds me of the time I first met Emilia-tan in an alley in the Royal Capital. That was when she rescued me from a robbery."

Emilia: "Eh, that's ri… Uh, a robbery?"

Subaru: "The next time was when you were called to the Royal Candidate Meeting and I got stuck in an alley with Priscilla and he got his friends to attack us. Yeah, he's a great guy."

Beatrice: "To a lady like Betty he sounds like scum, in fact."

Hearing Subaru's words, Emilia and Beatrice reacted thus. Garfiel, who'd been hanging back, cracked his knuckles loudly, and Joshua's expression became even more serious.

As the situation became more sinister, Rachins's already pale face turned white.

Rachins: "W-Wait, wait. So maybe that did happen a long time ago, but let me explain why I'm here and let's forgive and forget. Yeah?"

Subaru: "Garfiel. What do you think?"

Garfiel: “There’s gonna be no pity from my amazin’ self, yeh?”

Rachins: “W-Wait, wait a minute! Really, wait! Waaaaaaait!”

Rachins felt Garfiel’s aura that was distinguishable from a simple thug’s, and immediately realized that he had no chance of winning. You could say that being able to realize this was a skill that Rachins had developed just this past year. He fell onto his knees, begging with his hands over his head, then pointed at the hotel.

Rachins: “It’s the truth! I was summoned here… No, my employer was summoned here! But she said that she’d take a few laps around the city first, so I was sent to the inn to notify them. I’m not lying!”

Garfiel: “Ahh, I gotcha, I gotcha… But hey, why don’tcha try explainin’ more slowly?”

Garfiel’s threatening attitude didn’t change as he approached Rachins. Although Subaru felt bad for Rachins, he found no reason to think better of him. His dress had improved, but his character had not, and so he had no way to make a good impression. It was inevitable that Joshua deny him entry into the hotel. Honestly, Subaru could empathize with him.

Garfiel: “Hey, that’s unlucky, ya bastard. Pickin’ the hotel my amazin’ self’s at was tough lu—Hk!”

Garfiel was backing Rachins into a corner with a clenched hand.

However, Garfiel’s movements were suddenly interrupted when he immediately swung to face the other direction. His eyes widened for a moment, before narrowing into thin, wary lines. His hair stood on end, as his teeth, claws and muscles all reacted as if entering into a war zone.

A reaction too abrupt, too straightforward and too sudden.

Garfiel’s primal fighting instincts had been awakened, and thus Subaru was also infected by a sense of urgency. He, and the others, turned to follow Garfiel’s glare.

???: “Rachins, I was worried you would not return. Why are you making a disturbance here?”

In that moment, Subaru saw an illusion that a flame was standing in front of him.

The flames were shining red, taking a human form that waved its hand. No, not just a human form—they were human. Hair the color of crimson, burning fire, eyes that trapped the clear blue sky in them. His slender body was clothed in white and his neatly arranged face was one that could never be forgotten.

His aura, slamming into everyone nearby, was the aura an ordinary person would feel upon seeing a hero. That was exactly what the situation was.

There was no mistake. This man’s name was,

Subaru: “—Reinhard.”

Upon hearing Subaru’s hoarse voice, the young man in question smiled gently. The smile was a soft one, intended to calm others down.

With just that smile, Subaru felt as if he had been taken into the arms of a guardian of peace. And it was not just Subaru, but everyone else seemed to relax as well.

Reinhard: “It’s been a while, Subaru. I did not expect to see you here. Although our meeting is thanks to Julius, who called me here.”

Subaru: “O-Oh. Long time no see. How are you doing… Wait, are you saying that you were also called by Julius?”

Reinhard: “Technically, it was Felt-sama accepting Anastasia-sama’s invitation. I’m just here as her Knight, and I didn’t expect to see you here.”

As always, Reinhard’s presence dwarfed everyone else’s. Although Subaru had experienced this before, it had never affected him to this degree, and he found it almost difficult to carry a casual conversation.

That Subaru could feel Reinhard's aura, which he was previously unaware of, attested to Subaru's own growth. The more Subaru trained, the more he came to understand the difference between them.

Reinhard: "I see. It has been a year, hasn't it? You seem much better than you were when we last parted ways. That makes me glad."

Subaru: "Don't say it like that, you sound like you're making fun of me. I was a little proud of my growth, but seeing you makes me feel like it amounted to nothing."

Reinhard: "I did not intend any such thing. In terms of my growth, I am rather disappointed. I have not changed much in the past year, so it is honestly rather embarrassing."

That was probably because he'd already maxed his level, or close to it and it was difficult to raise it further. Seeing a man who was obviously already so strong but still wished to be stronger, Subaru could not help but feel intimidated.

Reinhard: "By the way, Subaru."

Subaru: "Hmm, oh, what is it?"

Reinhard: "The one who's been staring at me this whole time, is he your friend? If so, I would be glad if you asked him to relax a little."

Reinhard smiled wryly in Garfiel's direction.

Garfiel himself was incredibly tense, looking as if he was ready to rush forward with his teeth and claws to attack prey. Those were weapons that Subaru had relied on countless times over the last year. However, Subaru doubted that Garfiel was capable of harming the young man standing before him.

Subaru: "Garfiel, stop it. This is Reinhard. He's my… friend. He's not going to hurt you, I wouldn't allow it."

Subaru hesitated briefly before saying "friend".

One time, he had been personally saved by the Sword Saint, and his last parting with Reinhard had been after Subaru's humiliation at the Knights' Training Field. When Reinhard reached a hand out toward shim, Subaru had turned it aside.

However, while Subaru considered all of this, Reinhard nodded with ease.

Reinhard: "Now, I have been introduced by Subaru. I am his friend, Reinhard van Astrea. I would be grateful if you would tell me your name."

Garfiel: "—It's Garfiel Tinzel."

Reinhard: "A fine name. You're well trained. For someone so young, it's amazing."

Subaru was struck by how accurate Reinhard's assessments were.

In the one year after leaving the Sanctuary, Garfiel had learned much about the outside world and gained a calmer temperament. If he were to calm his demeanor and the way he spoke, then Garfiel would look roughly twenty years old, when in fact he was merely fifteen.

Reinhard's remarks indicated that he'd easily seen through this.

Reinhard: "I've heard some of the rumors about Emilia-sama's guards. The Strongest of Shields, Garfiel Tinzel, and the Spirit Knight, Natsuki Subaru, are both famous. It brings me pride to call you my friend."

Subaru: "I'm glad to be called by my proper title, for once."

Reinhard: "I've heard some of the other titles, but they are a little less pleasant. Speaking of which, is the Spirit from the title Spirit Knight that little girl over there?"

Reinhard's attention turned to Beatrice, who shrank down next to Subaru. At some point, she'd taken his hand without him having noticed. Reinhard knelt, to look into her eyes.

Reinhard: "I can tell that you are a revered Great Spirit. It honors me to be able to speak with you like this.”

Beatrice: “…Betty is Subaru’s Contracted Spirit, Beatrice, in fact. Betty doesn’t dislike your admiration, I suppose. Just, you should keep your distance, in fact. Surely you understand why, I suppose.”

Reinhard: “I understand completely. I am sorry to trouble you.”

Unlike Garfiel, she revealed no obvious weariness. However, she clung to Subaru’s hand with unusual tightness, and could not conceal its slight shaking.

However, it was not because she was afraid. This was something else.

And Reinhard, with his respectful, humble words, turned ceremoniously to Emilia.

Reinhard: “Emilia-sama, it has been a long time. Even in my own territory, I have heard about your achievements many times over.”

Emilia: “Yeah, long time no see, Reinhard. It’s really been a year since the castle. We’ve also heard about your achievements, too.”

Reinhard: “We have done far less than Emilia-sama has. I have been able to do little to help my master. Compared to all of Subaru’s achievements, I can only feel frustrated.”

Emilia: “Hahaha. Yeah, Subaru is amazing. I’m proud of my Knight.”

Emilia’s chest swelled with pride after hearing Reinhard’s flattery. Although she’d obviously missed the social rhetoric in Reinhard’s words, listening to what Emilia said made Subaru happy, even if the situation was equally embarrassing.

Anyway,

Subaru: “Looks like we’ve done enough greetings, but did you call Rachins’s name earlier?”

Emilia: “Ah, that’s right. Do you know him, Reinhard?”

Reinhard: “Yeah, I do. He is currently working under the employ of Felt-sama. Although finding places for him to be useful is difficult, Felt-sama has placed high hopes in him.”

Subaru: “That guy, Felt hired him?!”

At that piece of unexpected information, Subaru stared in shock. Reinhard turned to Subaru and frowned apologetically at his reaction.

Reinhard: “My apologies for failing to consider your feelings, especially since I was present in the alley where you two had an encounter. Afterward, a lot of things happened… When I told Felt-sama, she demanded on the spot that I invite them over.”

Subaru: “Ah, well, if you say so then I’ll believe it, but… Seriously, what kind of a coincidence is that? More than that… wait. You said ‘them’, as in plural?”

Reinhard: “Felt-sama has hired three men, including him. Those three are indeed the ones who tried to rob you in the alley.”

Subaru: “The Tonchinkan trio gets to work together?!”

Facing this cruel, mischievous fate, Subaru couldn’t help but cry to the heavens.

Immediately after being summoned to this world, Subaru had been attacked over and over by the same trio. He had not quite forgotten about them, but he had hardly expected to encounter them here, either.

Emilia: “Well, setting Subaru’s surprise aside… Rachins is under your care, and the employ of Felt-chan, correct?”

Reinhard: “That is correct. Felt-sama wanted to walk around the city and sent him to notify the inn of her arrival. I came since he had yet to return.”

Reinhard repeated what Rachins had said, and Rachins nodded rigorously.

Rachins: “Th-That’s right! I kept saying the same thing over and over. Everybody doubted me for no reason. I demand an apology, oy!”

Reinhard: “Rachins. I have said this many times, but your words as a messenger lack the tone required. Although people can grasp the general situation, believing you is difficult.”

Rachins: “Bastard, whose side are you on?!”

Reinhard: “I am on the side of justice. And, in this case, I think it was inevitable that my friend’s younger brother would misunderstand.”

Turning away from a fuming Rachins, Reinhard smiled towards Joshua, who returned it with a rather embarrassed one.

Joshua: “Long time no see, Reinhard-sama. This time, it seems that my blunder has caused your messenger to…”

Reinhard: “The fault is ours, Joshua. Also, that honorific is so annoying. I know it has been a long time, but acting so distant makes me feel a bit lonely.”

Joshua: “Although my honorable nii-sama and Reinhard-sama are friends, right now they are also political opponents.”

Reinhard: “You have not changed. You don’t have to always imitate the olden days’ Julius in that regard.”

Reinhard gave a wry smile, while Joshua seemed to clench his teeth.

—Anyway, the commotion had died down safely. Although the temporary problem was gone, it was replaced by the emergence of other questions. That was,

Subaru: “Even so, if not only us but you as well were called here, then what’s Anastasia planning to do?”

Reinhard: “The invitation sent to us stated that she wished to exchange a useful piece of information in return for something.

Although we initially thought that Anastasia-sama may have been up to something, we did not expect that Emilia-sama and you had been invited as well.”

Subaru: “So are you saying that we should be prepared for something even more shocking?”

Reinhard: “That is a possibility, yes. What do you say, Joshua?”

Once the attention was shifted to Joshua, one of the masterminds of the appointment, the young man shifted his monocle and blurted out, “I guess we’ll see”, to deflect the topic.

With his usual pleasant demeanor, Reinhard turned back to the inn.

Reinhard: “This is a pretty rare structure, the Water Plumage Pavilion. I have heard that this style of Wafuu architecture only exists in Kararagi.”

Subaru: “Ehhh, that’s surprising, you haven’t seen it before either. You’ve never been to Kararagi?”

Reinhard: “Yes. I am banned from going abroad. Because of the fear that the treaty between the countries will be breached, I must avoid the borders too. We are close enough to Kararagi as is, so Priestella is pretty much the limit of where I can go.”

Emilia and Subaru were stunned at Reinhard’s prohibition on travel. Maybe it was his style of joke, but Reinhard, who laughed lightly, did not give off that impression.

Asking about it would feel a little uneasy, so they postponed that line of questioning back.

Subaru: “We’ve been here for a while, and it’s kind of tiring to just linger near the entrance for so long. How about we go inside, since Felt isn’t here yet?”

Reinhard: “Sure, I’m not supervising her right now. Sometimes she runs off to stretch her wings and play. It’s nice to relax once in a while.”

Rachins: "…"Sometimes"? Isn't she always just stretching her wings and playing around?"

Reinhard: "Rachins, did you say something?"

Rachins: "Nope, nothing. So, can I go already? This is fun and all but it's goddamn uncomfortable."

Rachins muttered a curse under his breath after requesting permission to leave. Reinhard couldn't help a sigh.

Reinhard: "Join Camberly and Gaston in guarding Felt-sama. Although there should be no danger, Rom-dono did not accompany us, and if Felt-sama takes any dangerous action, you have to be there to stop her."

Rachins: "Yeah, I got it. What are you gonna do?"

Reinhard: "I'll go into the inn, and stay with Emilia-sama. If anything happens, send me a signal with a Goa, and I'll be there in five seconds."

Rachins: "You ain't kidding, are you, oy."

Having finished, Rachins squeezed past Subaru. Halfway past, he did not forget to give Joshua a hard glare, still wary of Reinhard. He was really the model of petty evils.

Subaru: "Well, let's go inside. We'll say hello to Anastasia-san and tell her that Reinhard's here."

Reinhard: "I believe Joshua's in charge of that. Well, let's get going."

Joshua: "…Yes, I am. I apologize for the inconvenience."

Joshua looked slightly lost. Was it because the situation had played out strangely and he did not fit in? In order to comfort him, Subaru, Reinhard, Emilia, Garfiel, and finally even Beatrice dutifully followed him into the inn.

Subaru: "I'll feel bad if I shove everything onto him."

Reinhard: “I’ll join Subaru in accompanying him.”

Emilia: “Ah, the two of them are going, I will too.”

Garfiel: “If the Captain ‘n Emilia-sama are goin’, my amazin’ self’s goin’ too.”

Beatrice: “Betty doesn’t want to be the only one excluded from the group, in fact… But it wouldn’t be too much of a bother even in that case, I suppose.”

Subaru and Emilia: “Yes, adorable adorable.”

Subaru and Emilia, walking to her left and right, both stroked her head gently. Beatrice swatted their hands away, annoyed, then obediently grabbed the hems of their sleeves.

Joshua: “This place. Anastasia-sama is welcoming other guests right now.”

They were at a different room than the original dining hall. Subaru eyed Joshua wearily.

Subaru: “Guests? Did she invite even more people?”

Joshua: “…You are about to find out, no matter if you look at me with those beastly, menacing eyes.”

Subaru: “‘Beastly’ is quite the harsh wording. Come on, my eyes aren’t that scary!”

Joshua: “You do not need to raise your voice like a Witchbeast for me to understand that.”

Subaru: “That’s even harsher, and what kind of Witchbeast, dog, rabbit, or whale? Pick one.”

These were Subaru’s top three most annoying Witchbeasts, from memory. Although, it seemed to him like there had been another, a Witchbeast with the face of a lion, which had been burnt to cinders, but it hadn’t been very remarkable.

While Subaru was sorting through his faint memories, Reinhard gently whispered “Whale…”, interrupting Subaru’s train of thought. Upon noticing Subaru’s gaze, he spoke.

Reinhard: “Whale, do you mean the White Whale, Subaru?”

Subaru: “…Yeah, that’s right. That’s the worst whale. There were so many times where I thought it was dying and it just refused to die. Thinking back on it, it was such a miracle.”

In fact, the increase in the number of White Whales honestly did make their victory a miracle. That Witchbeast had been such an amazing creature, and the disaster it wrought was likewise extraordinary. It had caused so much suffering that even now, Subaru’s chest tightened in pain at the thought.

Reinhard: “The subjugation of the White Whale, would you mind telling me about it in more detail later? I am not a man who is completely unrelated to that monster. Although, that would be a be a long story to tell.”

Subaru: “—Of course. As for your story, if it’s difficult to talk about then you don’t need to.”

Subaru was only vaguely aware of Reinhard’s experiences with the White Whale. To Subaru, the battle with the White Whale was the fruit of an old swordsman’s decade-long obsession with vengeance. And Subaru also knew of the Sword Demon’s origin, and of his relationship to the red-haired youth. As to what had happened between them, Subaru had no way of knowing.

—This was not the topic that Subaru could pursue out of curiosity, was how he judged it.

Reinhard: “Thank you.”

Thus, Reinhard responded briefly to the Subaru’s thoughtfulness.

Subaru sought nothing other than that.

Seeing Reinhard’s lowered gaze, Subaru gave a long sigh. Emilia and Beatrice looked at him, worried, and Subaru gave them an “I’m alright” smile.

Joshua: “We have arrived. Please wait in this tearoom until their meeting ends.”

Joshua, who had finally led them to their destination, gestured to a cross-style door. The style was so detailed that hanging on the door was a paper scroll. Subaru, although delighted, felt that his Japanese soul had become quite a bit strange.

But his optimistic thoughts would only exist for a brief while.

Joshua: “Excuse me. Would you mind being joined by other guests?”

He directed the question at the guests already occupying the tearoom. Someone inside, who shifted slightly, responded.

???: “—Sure. We do not have much to do right now.”

That calm voice made Subaru frown at start, but then surprise overtook him. It was impossibly familiar, and impossible to forget. Not only that, Subaru had only just been thinking about its owner. No one aside from Subaru seemed to notice it—Or rather, no one but Reinhard. His face became stiff, his blue eyes swaying with hesitation.

Joshua, having not noticed, opened the door. There was a quiet sound of wood on wood, as the occupants of the tearoom came into sight.

Then, the occupants, seated on mats of cloth, looked over to the new guests.

Reinhard: “—Ah, Oji-sama?”

Wilhelm: “Is that, Reinhard?”

The voices of the grandfather and the grandson overlapped.

That was the unintended reunion between Reinhard van Astrea and Wilhelm van Astrea.

Chapter 12:
Crushing Atmosphere of the Tea Room

1

Everyone currently gathered in the tearoom was someone of exceptional importance.

Emilia: “Even so, it’s surprising that Reinhard and Wilhelm are blood-related. It’s no wonder that they’re both skilled swordsmen.”

Subaru: “It’s natural that you did not know, you had no reason to. If families were based on similarities then people would end up with a pretty big family, Emilia-tan.”

The wooden floor beneath the long table was covered with mats, in the style of a traditional Japanese living room, in front of a long table. Emilia and Subaru were seated next to each other, holding a whispered conversation without discussing anything too significant. They were chatting to calm their nerves.

Beatrice: “Betty is already alert and won’t let anyone try anything, in fact. Subaru can stop being wary and looking at everyone with those mean eyes, I suppose.”

Subaru: “You know I was born with a mean look. I’m not staring at anyone warily. Besides, I know what it’s like to be glared at with cold eyes, so please stop.”

Beatrice was also sitting near Emilia, keeping a vigilant watch. Emilia sat with her legs folded underneath her, and Subaru had his legs crossed, while Beatrice sat with a rigid posture. It was a position she’d taken for Subaru’s sake, although she couldn’t resist fidgeting a little.

Subaru: “In any event, Garfiel’s here if something were to happen. And besides, no one here would act so rashly.”

Subaru’s gaze left Beatrice, whose knees were shaking, and directed his attention toward the corner of the tearoom, where Garfiel was sitting. Although he noticed Subaru and wanted to wave at him, his hand was too busy being caught by Mimi.

Right now, several key figures in the Royal Selection were gathered at the table, while the others were keeping an eye on the situation from the corners of room. In other words, Garfiel and Mimi were sitting together. Hetaro and Tivey were also present, glaring at Garfiel with dark malice.

Joshua was also seated in the tearoom, looking extremely uncomfortable.

Reinhard: “I am very grateful for this hospitality. Felt-sama may be a little late in arriving since she is out in Priestella, but she should be here shortly.”

Anastasia: “Ya don’t hafta be so formal, especially ‘cause ya accepted my invitation on such short notice. Oh, but it’s a strange coincidence that y’all arrived so close together.”

Anastasia took a gentle approach to meet the etiquette-conscious Reinhard. Reinhard raised his head and looked at Julius, who was standing by Anastasia’s side.

Reinhard: “It has been a while, Julius. We last met face to face at the Chamber of Commerce.”

Julius: “Ah, that is correct. I apologize for asking everyone to come in such little time. But it gives me peace of mind to know that you have all kept safe.”

After greeting his friend, Reinhard returned to his seat across the tatami room. If seating at the table reflected the positions of the factions, then Reinhard was seated at the lowest-ranking position. Sitting at the head was the host, Anastasia. Next to Anastasia was Emilia and her faction, and Reinhard, who was representing Felt’s faction, was sitting in front of them. Across from Anastasia was,

???: “It feels like it has been a long time since everyone has gathered like this.”

The speaker, who wore a dignified smile, was a beautiful woman with green hair.

Amber eyes which seemed to contain the very picture of harmony, dressed in a feminine navy-blue dress, giving off an air of nobility. Although, if one had known what she had been like before, it would be hard to see her as the same person.

Emilia: “We haven’t seen you in a while either, Crusch-sama. You seem to be doing well.”

Crusch: “Yes, that’s right. I previously caused you a lot of trouble, so let me offer my thanks. I have also heard of quite a few of the deeds that you were involved in. Upon receiving the news, my thoughts were that those were things only you could do.”

Emilia was not afraid to call out to Crusch, who replied to Emilia in a soft tone. Her old decisive personality seemed to have disappeared along with her memory, and she had yet to recover it. She was no longer a savvy, brave politician, but merely a beautiful aristocratic lady.

If the aforementioned events that Emilia had been involved in were to happen to Crusch’s current self, they would have ended in tragedy, for certain.

Ferris: “Really, hearing people talk about nyou like that was surprising. Eradicating the Great Rabbit and becoming a Spiritual Arts User, who’d have expected that out of Subaru-kyun?”

Next to Crusch, a beautiful girl with cat ears— no, a feminine young man with a coy manner spoke up. He was Ferris, both Crusch’s Knight and the supreme healer in the Kingdom.

Unlike his incredibly different master, Ferris hadn’t changed in the slightest. It was reassuring, but, at the same time, he remained difficult to understand.

Subaru: “Well, becoming someone who people can rely on has always been one of the biggest goals in my life. As for my contract with Beako, well, it probably annoys you, but my life was in danger at the time, so I had no choice but to make it."

Ferris: "Even though I gave nyou such a solemn warning? Subaru-kyun would eventually end up overworking his Gate. Without Beatrice-chan, it'll crack open with a bang, so you'll have to be especially careful, nyan."

Subaru: "Understood. And there's no other guy who can make Beako this happy."

Although they both spoke in a teasing tone, Ferris's warning had been serious, heartfelt advice, so Subaru also responded with an equally serious attitude. Dropping a hand on Beatrice's shoulder, whose face was red, he considered this the tuition fee.

Subaru: "Even so… I didn't expect Crusch-san and her faction to have also been invited. I was already surprised to encounter Reinhard outside, but now I'm about to spray nosebleeds."

Ferris: "Ugh. That would be overdramatic. But it is quite a surprise that we'd all coincidentally arrive nyon the same day, though."

???: "Since no specific date and time was established for the meeting, that we arrived together was the result of estimates—It is rare for us all to have a chance to gather together, so this is our good fortune."

That was the last member of Crusch Camp. Sitting next to Crusch was Ferris, who was seated in a woman's pose. Next to him was the old swordsman, Wilhelm, sipping his tea. He was dressed in the same butler outfit as always, but it suited the image of drinking tea in a Japanese-style room.

Actually, due to the seating arrangements, Reinhard and Wilhelm had ended up seated next to one another. However, that was a most heart-rending scene.

Subaru: "They haven't even met eyes yet…"

Subaru whispered his observation to Emilia, who quietly agreed. Wilhelm and Reinhard were, as grandfather and grandson, direct relatives, but aside from offering mutual pleasantries, they had yet to acknowledge each other.

The tearoom was dominated by silence, and Subaru, feeling uncomfortable, took the time to think their situation over. The Emilia Camp was largely unskilled at reading the mood, being composed of airhead members who, whether due to their KY-ness, nature, or just being middle-schoolers or even children, were unable to do anything in the heavy atmosphere.

It was also hard to forget how Joshua, who had returned after being summoned away, had given a scared "Whaa" upon seeing the situation.

The Astrea Family. The name was so well-known that even Subaru knew a little of their family history. 'Sword Saint' was a title that was passed from generation to generation, and the two people in front of Subaru, as well as the previous Sword Saint, formed a lineage of people of such great strength their mere presence changed the battlefield.

Wilhelm's obsession with the White Whale obviously originated from the defeat of his wife, the previous Sword Saint. Connecting these facts would lead to one question.

—Why had Wilhelm chosen to borrow the power of Crusch's faction, rather than the power of his own family?

Taking the question further, why had Reinhard not participated in the fight against White Whale?

Wilhelm had said that he had started chasing the White Whale about fourteen years ago. If this had been a problem ever since the Royal Selection had started, then Wilhelm could not cooperate with Reinhard, who was a member of an opposing faction. That made sense.

But Wilhelm had begun his revenge-driven hunt for the White Whale at a time the House of Astrea had nothing to do with the Royal Selection. Of course, then Reinhard would have been a child at the time, and would have lacked the ability to defeat the White Whale. But, considering his later growth, why had Reinhard never sought out the White Whale?

Wilhelm’s sentiments and Reinhard’s thoughts, Subaru had no insight into either.

—He would love to listen if they were ever willing to discuss it.

However, asking directly would be like unscrupulously cutting into an old wound and rubbing salt under the scabs. And although Natsuki Subaru was incredibly curious, he had grown quite a bit in the past year. He had come to understand that if he pressed the topic, people would find him annoying.

Reinhard and Wilhelm, though in hostile factions, were both valuable, talented people who Subaru had a good relationship with. And so, the trust they placed in him was not cheap enough to be thrown away just because of his curiosity.

So, all he could do was hope that someone else would bring it up.

Emilia: “By the way, Anastasia-san, why did you gather everyone here? I think you had some purpose… Right?”

Unaware of Subaru’s worry, Emilia directed a question at Anastasia, who tilted her head with a smile.

Anastasia: “Of course, I have somethin’ I’d like to discuss with each of ya, but, to answer Emilia-san’s question, I had to think pretty hard to come up with somethin’ that’d lure each of ya here.”

Emilia: “We came for the magic stones, but what about the others?”

Anastasia: “Everyone’s got all sorts of burdens and whatnot. Gettin’ to know that is simple… Just, there are also those where ya just can’t understand what they want.”

Emilia: “Those you can’t understand…?”

Emilia crossed her arms, her face a troubled one, though the problem was nothing so difficult. After all, there were those not present, which made it unnecessary to ponder which Camp was the least open to communication.

Wilhelm: “Priscilla-sama and Al-dono were not invited, were they?”

Anastasia: “Those two are completely set on their own path and I wouldn’t even know where to start findin’ out what they’re lookin’ for. To be honest, even Felt-san treats land and money like they’re completely irrelevant.”

Reinhard: “Regarding that point, we’re at Felt-sama’s mercy as to when she arrives. That said, I do wish she would care a little more about those matters.”

To Anastasia, who had admitted that she had left out one of the Camps relatively easily, Reinhard displayed his understanding, expressing the same opinion.

Hearing that, and agreeing only with part of the content, Emilia raised her hand and spoke,

Emilia: “It’s on my mind too, to know about everyone’s circumstances. I’ve been studying a lot, but given my distinguished position, it’s super-duper tough.”

Subaru: “Who even says ‘super-duper’ these days…”

Emilia: “Hmph, Subaru, you meanie.”

After a short delay, Emilia puffed out her cheeks and pinched Subaru’s right shoulder. Incidentally, Beatrice was also pinching his left shoulder, so he was getting his just dedserts.

At any rate, the positions of the Priscilla Camp and the Felt Camp were clear. Then all that was left was the reason, perhaps the weakness, that led Crusch here.

Crusch: “As to why we came to Priestella, it was because Anastasia-sama seems to have some information regarding Gluttony.”

Subaru: “…”

As if reading Subaru’s thoughts, Crusch replied.

Crusch’s words struck Subaru like a bullet, and it was something that he could not overlook. Meanwhile, Anastasia caressed her scarf with a wry smile.

Anastasia: “I wasn’t keepin’ anythin’ from Natsuki-kun, but there’s a matter of priorities. Under these circumstances, solvin’ Crusch’s problems should take precedence. Ain’t that right?”

Subaru: “Gah, gr… shu… fu… F-Fine, that’s fine.”

Julius: “I see you’ve grown up a little.”

Subaru: “Bastard, I’m already on the verge of exploding.”

Selling to the highest bidder was the basis of decision-making in business.

Subaru had managed to put the brakes on his fury at Anastasia’s explanation, which was fortunate, since Julius had begun to look uneasy.

Subaru: “Who are you, my parents? On that topic, my dad could beat me up ten times better than you ever could!”

Ferris: “Eh… Ferri-chan is scared…”

Subaru: “Don’t be shaken so easily! Are you scared of your own family?!”

Subaru snapped at Ferris, who had snuggled up to Crusch, but he was joking rather than scolding. On that note, his words about his father, Kenichi, were certainly true, rather than humility or exaggeration.

Anastasia’s reason was acceptable. However, it would be another matter entirely if the information were to be given to only Crusch and not Subaru. Information on Gluttony was crucial to restoring Rem, who was still sleeping in Roswaal’s mansion.

Even though he had accepted the reason, he would not be so easily swayed.

Anastasia: “Even though you’re making such a scary face, you’ll feel more at ease after you've heard the full story."

Subaru: "Then… Are you telling the truth?"

Anastasia: "It ain't a lie, and I'm sure Crusch's faction's got no intention of keepin' it to themselves."

Subaru turned to Crusch, who seemed to have some difficulty maintaining a composed expression.

Crusch: "It is only natural. Of course, in order to retrieve my memories, I want the information on Gluttony. However, I also know that Subaru is also determined to defeat Gluttony for the sake of that young girl. Under such circumstances, I have no desire to monopolize the information."

Subaru: "Crusch-san…"

Crusch: "In addition, the more comrades I find who share my goal, the better. The more people there are working against the elusive sinners of the Witch Cult, the more likely we are to win."

Crusch, who spoke in a light tone, gave Subaru peace of mind. Her true desire was, of course, to restore her memories and improve her flaws. But that did not come in-between her goodwill toward Subaru.

Holding an honorable nature which had not been dimmed at all by her amnesia, was this woman named Crusch Karsten.

Subaru: "I'm grateful. Thank you, Crusch-san. I will cherish the opportunity that you've handed me. Definitely."

Crusch: "That said, the information is our priority. We won't concede that."

In response to Subaru's determination, Crusch straightened her back and met his gaze.

Of course. They shared a heated competition. But her benevolent smile was out-of-place for this occasion, so she and Subaru smiled together.

The one who interrupted the moment was Crusch's Knight.

Ferris: "Nyaaau. Seeing Subaru and Crusch-sama like this is really annoying, stop it. Subaru's such a greedy man. Are the two flowers at your side not enough? Really nyow!"

Crusch: "Ferris, that is not a very courteous thing to say. Subaru is not someone who would be swayed by temptations like that."

Subaru: "Yeah, don't say that. Certainly, Crusch-san's beautiful and very cute, but I have a loyal heart… Although it is split in two right now, but—owowowowow?!"

Beatrice: "That's not a very loyal heart, in fact. You should just stay quiet and reflect on what you just said, I suppose."

Subaru, who'd been trying to agree with Crusch, had his ear caught in Beatrice's tight grip. His eyes watered in protest, but before he could complain, he noticed that she was pointing at Crusch.

Following Beatrice's finger, Subaru saw that Crusch was wearing a bright blush, looking downwards. Thinking back, what odd words had he spoken?

Subaru: "Oh no, Emilia-tan, did I say something strange?"

Emilia: "Huh? Hmm, I'm not sure. Subaru, you just talked the way you usually talk to me…"

Subaru: "That's right. Then what did I do? Holding Emilia-tan's hand lets me think better, may I?"

Emilia: "Yes yes. Think hard."

Subaru tapped his forehead with the hand that held Emilia's, as he cast a gloomy look. Meanwhile, Ferris took the opportunity to whisper to Crusch,

Ferris: "See, it's like that. Subaru-kyun is subconsciously excessively friendly to everyone he meets and always tries to play a cool and handsome act. It's like he's messed up in the head. Don't pay it any attention."

Crusch: “Yes, I’ll be careful. Ha, I was a little shocked.”

Crusch placed a hand on her chest with a sigh of relief.

Subaru found this feminine action incredibly cute. Crusch and Ferris, who were unaware of his thoughts, held hands as if making a promise to each other. Anyone who stumbled across this scene would have assumed that they were girlfriends.

Now, everyone had revealed their reasons for coming to Priestella.

???: “Ehhh, there’s a complete set. From what Rachins said, I was supposed to just meet with that older brother and the lady from Kararagi.”

The paper door was thrown open, revealing the girl standing behind it.

She was an agile, pretty, blonde girl with large chestnut-crimson eyes and a crooked smile. Her small face was full of naughty charm and her slim but agile physique seemed a touch more feminine. Just as in the past, she was dressed in an outfit focused on enhancing movement speed, one that also happened to leave her navel and legs exposed.

Felt: “What, surprised I still look this way? It’s only been a year, you know.”

Reinhard: “Felt-sama.”

Everyone slumped their shoulders upon seeing her, and Felt noticed their disappointment. Reinhard, however, stood up to welcome his master as she approached.

Reinhard: “I was sure I left a change of clothes on the dragon carriage, what happened?”

Felt: “Bah! I wanted to go sightseeing in something comfortable. That said, you wanted me to get changed in the hotel, but who’d wear something that looks so itchy? You should know I’m like this by now!”

Reinhard: “That is really just like you…”

Reinhard placed a hand on his forehead, speaking in a helpless tone. Felt, who was dragging the Kingdom’s strongest hero around like a plaything, looked happy to enter the room.

Felt: “Right, and here I am—I am grateful for your hospitality today and I hope our discussions will go well. There, all done with greetings.”

For a moment, Felt looked as elegant as a noble’s daughter. She gave a naughty smile and mimed a curtsy without a skirt, and immediately reverted to her usual self.

Subaru was quite self-aware of his own disagreement with the aristocratic community, but Felt’s attitude toward them seemed to have worsened notably in the past year.

Felt: “Man, this is a really bizarre building. I’ve never seen one like it before, so I got curious and explored a little before coming here.”

Felt sat down on the mat originally occupied by Reinhard, who moved another one over and sat earnestly next to her. By chance, Felt was now next to Wilhelm, separating grandfather and grandson.

Emilia: “Well, long time no see, Felt-chan. How have you been?”

Felt: “It’s weird to have ‘chan’ added to my name. Anyway, I’ve been well. Nee-chan, you’ve been… a little too lively, no? I’ve heard a lot of rumors about really scary things.”

Emilia: “It’s Subaru who’s been lively, not me. As for me, I’ve been lucky to be saved Subaru’s hard work, that’s all.”

Felt: “Ah! That’s right!”

Upon hearing Emilia’s reply, Felt leapt to her feet with a clap of her hands, her eyes fixed straight at Subaru.

Felt: “I’ve heard a ton of ridiculous rumors about you, nii-chan. I’ve just got to know, how many of those rumors are actually true?”

Subaru: “It seems like you’ve decided that they were all fake before even asking me. Your level of faith in me is disappointingly low.”

Felt: “Because they’re all so wild! I heard that you cut the White Whale in half by yourself, you crushed a Sin Archbishop’s skull to bits with your own two hands, and even the Great Rabbit was roasted and eat—”

Subaru: “I really was involved in all of those, but the rumors have been blown hundreds of times out of proportion!”

If Subaru really had done as the rumors said, then he would’ve been hailed the Kingdom’s hero and probably even have been put on the throne. With that authority, he’d have made Emilia Queen and they’d be ruling together.

Julius and Wilhelm: “—Heh.”

Subaru’s reaction had drawn a small laugh from the audience. The two sources of laughter were from people sitting on opposite sides of the room, Julius and Wilhelm.

The two, both of whom seemed to have felt embarrassed at their subconscious reaction, sought each other out and relaxed when they found someone who had given a similar response. Felt, whose eyes had been darting back and forth in confusion, asked,

Felt: “Why did the old man and the Knight laugh? Me, did I say something strange?”

Subaru: “Everything you said was strange! You gave me too much credit. If I did that much, then I’d deserve a Nobel Peace Prize!”

Although Subaru didn’t fully understand what he had earned, he knew that it was meant to be a symbol of honor. Back when he had been presented with some medals for his achievements, he did not fully understand their actual and symbolic value, so he had never personally felt the merit that came along with it.

In fact, the medals that he had received were quite valuable in the Kingdom.

Wilhelm: “Subaru-dono’s contribution was indispensable during the battle with the White Whale. If he were not there, I have no doubt that we all would have perished. It sounds like an exaggeration, but it is no laughing matter.”

Julius: “The same is true of the battle with the Sin Archbishop. No other person developed our tactics and took command. Were he not there, myself and the others who helped would not have been able to subjugate the Sin Archbishop.”

Subaru: “…”

Overwhelming faith from Wilhelm and Julius.

Their straight-forward support for him struck Subaru speechless. The lively atmosphere left his entire body burning with embarrassment. His face was red from ear to ear, and blood was liable to spray from his eyes at any moment.

Subaru: “N-No, stop it! Don’t praise me so much! The higher you raise me, the bigger my ego gets, shouldn’t you all be clear on that?!”

Julius: “No, not at all. Although it is true that you made a fool of yourself at the start of the Royal Selection, you have proven your worth time and time again. You have more than made up for that disgrace. You absolutely deserve to be commended to this extent.”

Wilhelm: “There is absolutely no need for humility. You have had a hand in accomplishing great things. Those successes would never have happened had you not been present. I will be proud to have shared a battlefield with you until the end of my days.”

Subaru: “—Ah, um.”

So far, Subaru had died in a number of painful, gruesome ways. However, this would be by far the most horrifying. Being pelted with compliments.

Subaru, embarrassed to the verge of death, looked to Emilia and Beatrice, pleading for help. However, the two people at his side merely smiled sweetly.

Emilia: “That’s right. Subaru has worked reaaally hard. I’m truly proud to have him as my Knight.”

Beatrice: “W-Well, it’s only natural that he’s so successful, because he’s Betty’s partner, in fact. He’s only going to get more and more amazing, I suppose. So it’s a good habit to get used to praising him, in fact!”

The situation having gone in an entirely unexpected direction, Subaru was stricken with panic. Then, everyone took turns speaking.

Reinhard: “Amazing, Subaru. Everyone praises you for doing something amazing, something no one else could have done. I am glad to call you my friend.”

Crusch: “I would have lost so many loyal men without Subaru-sama’s help, even Wilhelm, who has been supporting me to this day. Allow me to thank you again.”

Ferris: “Although you don’t have any combat ability, you never lost heart during the battle with the White Whale. It allowed Crusch-sama to make the speech that changed the tide of the battle. In short, thank nyou very much.”

Anastasia: “Thanks to Natsuki-kun’s information, both myself and countless other businessmen’re no longer plagued by the White Whale’s fog. We got a lot of money out of it. Ya have my gratitude.”

Mimi: “Oooh! Are we taking turns complimenting onii-san? He’s very strong! He’s very handsome! Only second to Mimi! Your turn, Garf!”

Garfiel: “Ya, I dunno what happened, but deservin’ of praise, that’s the Captain. That’s my amazin’ bro. Ya know, like ‘fame comes with the right deed’ and whatnot.”

People were taking advantage of the momentum and piling flattering remarks on Subaru, who was blushing from all the warm encouragement, shrinking and shrinking. Felt treated him with a laugh, baring her snaggletooth.

Felt: “It sounds like they were true, but… it looks like onii-chan’s nature hasn’t changed. That’s a relief!”

Subaru: “You guys, stop it! Everyone’s ganging up on me!!”

After Felt summarized the farce taking place, Subaru could no longer withstand it and exploded. The tension which had originally cloaked the tearoom melted away with the sound of laughter.

2

Subaru: “Ah, damn, my lifespan’s seriously shortened…”

After the fun in the tearoom dissipated, an exhausted Subaru had left for his room.

Everyone had inexplicably showered Subaru with praise, before occupying themselves with cross faction conversations, as if forgetting about their opposition. Of course, it could not be said that no one had any intent of trying to delve into the secrets of the other factions, but most of the conversations were just idle, fun chatter.

Although the candidates could at any moment end up in a confrontation, from another point of view, they were all women of a similar age, so conversation on topics other than the state of the Kingdom came quite naturally to them.

In fact, Emilia had been very much looking forward to having an opportunity to talk with other girls her age.

Subaru: “Well, it could be said that a conversation between Emilia-tan and Beako would be just like that…”

Beatrice: “Don’t bring up her real age, in fact. Do you want to start a war, I suppose?”

Beatrice reprimanded the imprudent Subaru with a sharp voice.

Turning to see the source of the sound showed Beatrice sitting on a pile of quilted blankets in his room, desperately trying to ease her numb feet.

Subaru: “Even though you’re a Spirit, your feet fell asleep. Are Spirits supposed to have circulation, though?”

Beatrice: “Betty has circulation, in fact. Her body is designed to imitate an actual human body as closely as possible, in fact. Betty will feel the pain that humans can feel, I suppose. Upon diving underwater for too long, I’ll lose consciousness, in fact.”

Subaru: “So you breathe, too?”

Beatrice: “Of course I do… Hey, don’t try to sniff Betty’s breath, I suppose!”

As Subaru’s nose approached her, a somewhat-embarrassed Beatrice pulled the quilts around herself. Subaru took the opportunity to flick her numb foot, which felt like it had sprung back to life. Beatrice’s eyes watered.

Beatrice: “That hurts, in fact… Betty’s about to cry, I suppose… Subaru’s a bully, in fact…”

Subaru: “Okay, okay, my bad, my bad. Come here, come here.”

He patted his knees with a wry smile as he sat down, and Beatrice moved from the quilts to his lap. Caressing Beatrice’s voluminous twin-tails hanging from her head, Subaru said to himself, “But then again…”

Subaru: “The interior decor makes it a nice room, and it looks like the staff did their best to match the rest of the hotel… But here are some subtle deficiencies.”

It was probably caused by the fact that woodworking technology had developed differently here than it had in his original world.

The design of Water Plumage Pavilion felt quite alike the design of a hotel from Subaru’s original world, but despite the presence of wooden beams and paper doors, there was a certain something that felt off.

The beds had probably taken many painstaking attempts to figure out, before the designers had decided on laying animal skins on a wooden bed. The feeling wasn't bad, it was just a slight deviation from what Subaru was used to.

Subaru: "I really can't agree with not sleeping on the floor just because social norms dictate that blankets have to go on beds."

Beatrice: "Putting a blanket directly on the floor is poverty, in fact. Betty cannot accept her partner becoming a man with no earnings, I suppose."

Subaru: "I'm always working you so hard."

Beatrice: "What's that supposed to mean, in fact?"

Garfiel: "What're ya two chatterin' on about?"

Beatrice, who had been engaging in coordinated banter with Subaru, jumped up at the sudden appearance of a third voice. However, her feet were still numb, so she lost her balance and fell into the bundle of quilts on the floor. Subaru quickly reached over and righted her flipped skirt.

Subaru: "Garfiel? Is your adventure over?"

Garfiel: "The midget finally let me go free after spendin' th'entire day. Beatrice, why're ya actin' crazy?"

Subaru: "She's never been so far away from home before, so she's super excited! She even had trouble sleeping, isn't she cute?"

Standing at the entrance to the room, Garfiel laughed hard enough to reveal his sharp teeth.

Because the guest room also had a paper door, Beatrice had not heard it open and was scared at the sudden intrusion. Subaru, on the other hand, was sitting facing the entrance, so he'd seen Garfiel immediately.

Subaru: "So, what's up? Dinner?"

Garfiel: "Nah, dinner prolly won't be 'til later. There's nothin' for me to do alone in my room, Captain, and besides, Ottobro still hasn't come back yet."

Subaru: "Well, Otto isn't a kid, so you don't have to worry too much about him. Even if we incur some debt here, I doubt he'd give us any extra trouble in solving it."

Garfiel: "Right."

Otto had left a few hours ago to go settle a debt. Garfiel had no objection to this, since, after all, he knew what Otto was like.

Of course, when it came to asking Otto for help, there was something incredibly reliable about him.

Subaru: "But those are different things."

Garfiel: "What're ya talkin' about now?"

Of course, Garfiel was used to Subaru's frequent mutters to himself. Garfiel gestured toward the corridor with his chin.

Garfiel: "If ya don't have anythin' goin' on, can ya tag along with me for a bit, Captain?"

Subaru: "Tag along with you? Oh, a bath? A bath, right? You mean a bath? Open air bathing is too good to pass up on. I was looking around earlier, and I found a yukata, and the thought of seeing Emilia-tan in a yukata is enough to raise my spirits! They've been raised already!"

Although the tatami and architectural style were very difficult to reproduce, the yukata appeared to have been commercialized. Subaru praised those in Kararagi who had been responsible for the spread of Wafuu, inside his mind.

However, standing before such an excited Subaru, Garfiel wore a serious expression, one that was somber enough that even Subaru could not continue to joke around. A worried look came to his face.

Subaru: "Garfiel. What's wrong? Is there something you want to do?"

Garfiel: “No, it’s not really that big a deal, but…”

Touching the white scar on his forehead, Garfiel fell silent for a moment. Then he stared straight at Subaru.

Garfiel: “I just wanted to know exactly how strong the world’s greatest hero is.”

Chapter 13:
Peaceful Dinner

1

The Water Plumage Pavilion’s rustic courtyard, paved in gravel, was full of Japanese hospitality. Although expecting an extravagant pond would be too much, the bamboo-like plants on the sides of the stone road were a nice touch.

Subaru: “Even so, Wilhelm-san didn’t join us.”

Subaru sat in a corridor facing the courtyard, picking at the gravel with his toes.

He thought of the white-haired old man had who had indifferently declined Subaru’s invitation with an apologetic expression. What was Wilhelm up to?

Alone in his room, he would certainly feel bored until dinnertime.

Subaru: “That said, he doesn’t seem like the kind of person who’d be concerned with how others spend their time.”

Julius: “Saying it like that makes it sound like we’re spying, even though we were invited here.”

Subaru: “It’s not like I’m here because I wanted to be… even though I am here…”

Subaru replied to Julius with sarcasm, who sat next to him in the hallway with his legs crossed gracefully. Julius nodded with a smile, as if to say “Truly”. However, the man sitting on the other side of Subaru did not want to admit it as frankly.

Ferris: “Oh, please. Haaaa, do you think Ferri-chan is here because he wanted to see it? Subaru-kyun just dragged me here, and he was just too annyoying to protest against it.”

Subaru: “Well, I’m sorry, I guess. You should be here in case anything bad happens. Although, it seems that isn't going to be necessary."

Subaru squinted at Ferris, who was shaking his cat ears in agitation, then looked past him to the fast-paced battle taking place in the courtyard.

Frankly, the battle moved so quickly that Subaru's eyes could barely keep up. Even so, he could plainly assert one thing.

Subaru: "Really, that bastard Reinhard's a damn monster."

Julius: "Although it's hard to deny, I do not enjoy using such a word to describe a friend."

Ferris: "It would be hard enough to deny it under nyormal circumstances."

—The sight that was unfolding before them affirmed their conclusions.

In the courtyard paved with gravel, a fierce match was being staged between a roaring blond teenager and the red-haired hero defending against the former's beastly pressure.

The challenger, Garfiel, burned through an endless flow of motivation as he struck at Reinhard from every possible angle. However, whether using claws, fangs, legs, elbows, or knees, each of his attacks were seen through and evaded with ease. Not to mention,

Subaru: "That guy, is he really just standing there without moving?"

Julius: "It was the original condition, after all. Reinhard would never violate it. Nevertheless, failing to force him to do so is probably humiliating for Garfiel."

Garfiel kept launching attacks at Reinhard from different directions, trying to take those opportunities to expose a weak point. But no matter how much he tried, Garfiel was not going to find a weakness that did not exist. Not only that, but Reinhard was also dodging without much effort.

Reinhard had been standing in the same place since the start of this rash challenge, having never conceded an inch.

As Garfiel rushed at him repeatedly, Reinhard's two feet remained fixed in place.

—At first, when Garfiel visited Reinhard's room to challenge him, Subaru had summed it up as a reckless move from multiple points of view.

Thinking back, that Reinhard even agreed to Garfiel's challenge had been unexpected.

Frankly, the match was solely a product of Garfiel's desire. Accepting the challenge would not provide Reinhard with any benefit. Considering the difference of strength between the two, Reinhard presumably would not have that childish sense of masculinity to flaunt.

If the complicated relationship between Reinhard, the Royal Guards, and his political opponents were considered, then fighting Garfiel was, in some respects, an unnecessary danger. Even if he believed that no one had set up any tricks or traps, accepting the challenge had been unnecessary nonetheless.

Considering this, it had been unlikely for the match to even happen, and Subaru had certainly considered dismissing the idea entirely.

However, from the bottom of his heart, Subaru wanted to witness its fulfillment.

The one who took the responsibility of serving as the fighting power of the Emilia Camp was, without any doubt, Garfiel Tinzel. However, outside conditions could often influence the outcome of a conflict, so achieving victory solely through battle was plainly impossible. Furthermore, Garfiel's flaws were not few in number, either.

Emilia's faction had gained much fame throughout the past year, and much attention had been directed toward Garfiel. Because everyone within the Emilia Camp recognized and praised his strength, Garfiel himself was quite arrogant. He had always been able to live up to those expectations with results and achievements.

However, this one-sided consideration of Garfiel also posed a troubling fact. Garfiel had yet to face enough opponents as strong as him since leaving Sanctuary.

The only person who had fought him on equal footing was the homicidal demon Elsa, during the battle in Roswaal's old mansion, and it had ended in Garfiel's victory. Since then, he had not experienced any hard-fought battles that compelled him to show off his full strength.

Although Garfiel had indeed once lost to Subaru, Otto, and Ram, the conditions of that victory could be entirely attributed to their dirty tricks. In terms of a proper, clean battle, Garfiel Tinzel was a man who had never experienced defeat since birth.

—Therefore, even knowing that it was cruel, Subaru longed for a battle between Reinhard and Garfiel to happen.

To continue without losses, and to remain unaware of his limits. That was not an impossible path. However, if he remained ignorant of his own limits, and merely relied on the luck of continuously facing weaker opponents, then Garfiel would never be certain where exactly his own strength ranked.

And so, Reinhard van Astrea, the hero whom Subaru had only seen in action once. Subaru chose to trust in his power.

Subaru: "I trusted his power… But I didn't think the difference would be this great."

The situation had proceeded in the exact direction that Subaru had hoped it would. However, he was not as surprised as he was astonished, to the point where overreactions would have been superfluous.

Having brought an excited Garfiel to Reinhard's room, Subaru made the blunt request and Reinhard readily consented to it. Subaru had been so surprised he had almost fallen over. Afterward, in response to Garfiel's suggestion of going out of the city to avoid casualties, Reinhard had responded with a smile, "The yard is spacious enough, although we should mention to the manager that we will not be damaging his land."

Reinhard probably had not intended for his words to carry any malice, but they did serve as more than enough provocation for Garfiel.

Garfiel had accepted Reinhard's proposal, exuding an aura of anger so intense that Subaru, who had been standing beside Garfiel at the time, barely retained his composure upon feeling his rage all but stab into Reinhard.

They had then proceeded down towards the hotel courtyard, where a few rules were set. Weapons were not allowed, nor were dangerous Divine Protections. Wounding the other party was also prohibited.

During that time, Subaru had called Ferris in case of any injuries. Subaru also invited Julius and Wilhelm as commentators on the battle itself. Unfortunately, Wilhelm had declined, so it ended up being just Julius and Ferris who watched the battle with him. On that note, Otto still had yet to return.

Subaru: "By the way, I didn't mention this to the women or Mimi's brothers."

Julius: "I think that was wise. If Anastasia-sama learned of this, then she would no doubt turn it into a performance. If it reached Hetaro or Tivey, then Mimi would surely be upset."

Julius agreed with Subaru as they surveyed the courtyard. Of course, with such an exciting battle taking place, people would inevitably become excited.

A handful of spectators gathering was something that Garfiel had surely considered from the very beginning of the match. Rather than regret a poor performance for being unable to go all out, he had wanted the fight to be taken somewhere where real skill would be all that mattered.

The hotel courtyard was spacious, and the scenery could be appreciated, but if it were to serve as the setting for a fierce battle, then it would not spacious enough. And Reinhard had also raised the condition of “no damage to the environment”.

The setting had been chosen as to push Garfiel to either be considerate or to regret being overtaken by anger, as a boy naturally would. What results would come of this?

Subaru: “Hey, Julius, can I ask you one question?”

Julius: “You can ask me more than one if you prefer, but whether or not I will answer is another story.”

Subaru: “Don’t say such ambiguous things. This is why I hate you.”

Subaru dropped his face onto one hand, and began speaking in a serious tone.

Subaru: “In your opinion, how is Garfiel?”

Julius: “—He’s strong. According to the rumors, he is the shield guarding Emilia-sama. It is a well-deserved reputation. Although, knowing of his association with you, my expectations were psychologically lowered.”

Subaru: “I’m going to beat you up.”

Julius: “He is strong. His talent is certainly real. In terms of combat alone, I do not know if I could beat him or not. And he has plenty of room for growth. Once he breaks out of his shell, he will be able to compete at the pinnacle of the martial arts.”

Julius’s powerful assertion revealed that he was excited to see that possibility and that the potential sleeping within Garfiel was quite genuine.

He also seemed to embrace his envious admiration of Garfiel’s talent. This came as no surprise. Julius was also a man of battle.

Ferris: “But, even if there’s a bright future awaiting him, it’s sad that right nyow he’s just being toyed with.”

Ferris spoke a cruel truth. However, no one could say nothing to deny it. It was plain for all to see. Garfiel himself could see it more clearly than anyone else.

Perhaps Garfiel would one day walk amongst the strongest. Perhaps he would be the strongest.

But, right now, facing off against the strongest man in the world, what he was going through would surely best be described as being toyed with.

Garfiel: “—Tch.”

Reinhard: “That’s a shame. Too hasty.”

The Sword Saint reached forward, catching Garfiel’s arm. With a giant swing, he mercilessly threw him down into the hard gravel.

A cloud of dust surrounded him, knocking the wind out of Garfiel. He quickly attempted to get back on his feet, only to find Reinhard’s hand on his forehead, leaving Garfiel motionless before drawing a sigh.

Garfiel: “I lost.”

Even before being scrutinized by others, he admitted defeat.

The ability to make that admission most likely indicated that Garfiel was still maintaining his sense of self-esteem, even if barely.

Subaru hoped that would serve as some small comfort to him, at the very least.

2

—Garfiel did not appear for dinner that night.

Anastasia: “Why’d you go off by yourselves and hide such an interestin’ thin’ from us?”

Anastasia glared at the men as she voiced her bitter complaints, upon meeting them in the tatami room.

Rather than being dressed in her usual white fur, she was wearing a yukata, her purple hair dripping with water. Her white skin was slightly reddish, and there was a faint scent that did not match her childlike appearance.

Julius: “I think it is different from the way you are phrasing it, but I specifically did not invite Anastasia-sama since you seemed to be having friendly conversations with the other candidates.”

Julius met her straight-forward words with a bitter smile and a bow, then sat beside her. The men had finished cleaning the courtyard after the contest and had only just returned.

Hearing that remark, a mischievous smile appeared on Anastasia’s lovely face.

Anastasia: “Ahh. My Knight seems to be speakin’ some rather sophisticated sophistry. We can’t connect everythin’ to money, can we? But my Kararagi spirit, which likes a lil’ noise, is still a little upset.”

Subaru: “The spirit of our Strongest Shield hurts more, so let’s not bring it up again. Ah, he’ll be fine after a night of hanging his head in sorrow, but until then, please let him recover in peace.”

Following what Anastasia had said, Subaru made this request out of concern for his emotionally troubled honorary little brother. Everyone present nodded in assent. However,

Felt: “Anyway, is that what happened? This merciless Knight here doesn’t know how to be nice to opponents and the like. Sorry about that, onii-chan.”

After hearing about the incident, Felt gave Subaru a crooked-toothed laugh as she fiercely pounded Reinhard’s shoulders repeatedly, the red-haired Knight sitting next to her with a wry smile.

Reinhard: “Felt-sama, speaking like that will lead to misunderstandings. I did not exert any undue pressure in the battle just now, and I myself was at risk several times. Both my body and mind were enriched from that experience.”

Felt: “That’s not at all convincing considering how scared Gaston and the others are of you. Did you really have to freak them out so much when you first met?”

Reinhard: “No matter who I face, I cannot afford to be arrogant. If I become too overconfident in my ability, it will result in my failure.”

Faced with Reinhard’s resolute determination, Felt gave a disinterested sigh.

Although their dialogue reflected the nature of their shifty transition to proper master and subordinate status, Reinhard’s words were of greater concern to Subaru. Having witnessed the battle in the courtyard, he clearly saw the root of Garfiel’s concern. In a brief epiphany, he realized that Reinhard’s words contained no irony or hypocrisy.

Reinhard was merely saying what he believed to be true. Although the speech might sound sarcastic, the authenticity of his words seemed to prevent anyone from thinking so.

Perhaps that was his most dangerous ability.

Reinhard: “Speaking of which, Felt-sama. About that outfit.”

Felt: “What is it, you complaining? I was taking a bath with others, and everyone changed into this, so I did too. ‘It’s embarrassing, it’s disappointing’, is that what you want to tell me?”

Reinhard: “Not at all, I just wanted to tell you that it suits you well.”

Felt: “Annoying!”

Those sweet words from the respected, revered, and most powerful Knight Amongst Knights.

Countless women would be incredibly envious of the beautiful bouquet of words that Felt had swatted away by expressing her frustration. The way she wore her bathrobe also suggested that she was someone who was a little rough around the edges.

—As Anastasia had said earlier, the women had been in the bathhouse while the match between Garfiel and Reinhard had been going on outside.

For that reason, all the women attending dinner were in yukatas. Not only Anastasia and Felt, but also Mimi, Crusch, Emilia, and even Beatrice were all dressed in bathrobes.

Subaru: "Beako, you unexpectedly took a bath…"

Beatrice: "After Subaru left Betty alone in the hotel, your partner was captured by Emilia, in fact. She forced Betty to go, I suppose."

Unexpectedly wearing a pale blue bathrobe, the cute Beatrice seemed to be having difficulty figuring out how to correctly don the yukata. Strangely, Beatrice's wet hair retained its usual drill-tailed form. If he yanked on her curly hair, then they would probably bounce more crisply than usual.

Subaru: "So, that's Beako's testimony, but what's the truth?"

Emilia: "Hm? Beatrice looked so lonely when she told me that Subaru left her, and since I'd just been invited to go bathing, I took her with me. I thought she looked happy about it, though…"

Beatrice: "Th-That's a lie, in fact! Don't fabricate the truth, I suppose! Betty or Emilia, who does Subaru believe more, I suppose!"

Subaru: "I'll take that as your confession."

Combining Beatrice's unflattering claim with Emilia's assertive judgment, Subaru arrived at the natural conclusion.

Seeing Beatrice unwilling to yield, Emilia gave a happy smile. She also wore a bathrobe, her freshly washed silver hair gathered in the back. Subaru quietly delighted in seeing the whiteness of her neck.

Emilia: "Subaru, you're breathing heavily. Do you have a fever?"

Subaru: “It’s merely the heat of love. Emilia-tan, can I braid your hair?”

Emilia: “Sure, but food will be served soon. Afterwards?”

Emilia pointed toward the table, and Subaru reluctantly retracted the hand that had been stroking her hair. The people around them seemed to be looking at them strangely.

Subaru tilted his head at the person opposite of him, who happened to be Felt.

Subaru: “What’s so weird?”

Felt: “I don’t know too much about you two, but I still get a sense of distance between you two. This kind of interaction doesn’t have the slightest bit of an erotic atmosphere. Seems your relationship hasn’t changed at all since our last meeting.”

Subaru: “It’s not like erotic flirting happens these days! And there’s no need to bring up what happened at the Royal Castle, and my chest hurts so please stop!”

Subaru reacted to Felt, not understanding what she was saying. Throughout the past year serving as Emilia’s Knight, Subaru’s self-awareness had increased to a sufficient point, and he was aware that the distance in their relationship as man and woman had not been shortened.

In all honesty, their romantic relationship was probably at a lower point than it had been before Subaru had become her Knight.

This was largely in part due to Emilia’s mental age. Emilia’s emotional maturity had yet to grow to a degree where she could accept Subaru’s romantic advances on her. So her getting along with him was nothing too significant.

His love had not faded, but the intent behind his interactions with her had changed. As long as there was no change in Emilia’s emotional awareness of him, their relationship would persist like this, intact.

At the least, Subaru understood that even if he took the first step, nothing would come of it.

Subaru: “Put it this way, this feeling might be something close to what Crusch-san is going through in her relationships.”

Crusch: “My relationships, what?”

Subaru sighed absentmindedly and his hand rubbed against his jaw. Crusch looked over at him, wearing an incredulous expression.

Of course, she had bathed with the women, so she was also dressed in a yukata. The chest that her former men’s clothing had hidden was emphasized by thin bathrobe. Without her inspiring aura, Crusch’s face had been both beautiful and innocent, even in the yukata she had dressed under Felix’s careful instructions.

Crusch glanced to the side, as Subaru rubbed his nose with his fingers.

Subaru: “Yeah. Although Ferris is always clinging to Crusch-san, it could be said that they don’t see each other as man and woman, right? And the starting point between you two is only a little bit before us, so maybe we go about treating the people we like the same way.”

Crusch: “Well, it’s a bit embarrassing when you say it like that. Haha. Right, Ferris?”

Ferris: “Ferri-chan is devoted, even if Crusch-sama rejects my heart.”

Crusch: “…”

For a moment, the air in the room was frozen by what Ferris said.

Crusch’s smile became stiff, and Ferris welcomed her response with a smile. Incidentally, Ferris was dressed in a bathrobe as well, as if competing with the girls. Anyway, now was not the time to dwell on that.

Subaru: “I’m so sorry for revealing the secret that I dug up. Alright, I guess it's time to eat."

Crusch: "Don't run away after digging up a bomb like that!"

Subaru tried to redirect the topic toward food, an idea which was immediately rejected by Crusch's teary eyes.

That was really an unexploded bomb he had dug up, and one Subaru had not been expecting to have to encounter. As Subaru wandered his eyes across the room, wondering what to do,

Wilhelm: "Ferris. Take care to not scare Crusch-sama. Your lively and dangerous side feels more prominent than before."

Before the silence could become awkward, Wilhelm, who had been silent until then, interjected, and the mood shifted again.

The elderly man was the only person on the male side that was present in a bathrobe. It seemed that he had taken to the baths right after the women had left. Both his posture and yukata played their part in demonstrating the harmonious Japanese atmosphere felt when he sat upright.

If he had a sword by his side, his image would have been perfect.

Ferris: "What, why would Wil-jii say that?"

Wilhelm: "A respectful love, a treasured love, a romantic love. Love is often taken for granted. Incurring confusion for the purpose of hiding your feelings is unpleasant for innocent hearts. Should I not speak harshly about this?"

Ferris: "Ha-nyah. Don't say it like that, that's a bit much."

Listening to Wilhelm's heavy sermon, Ferris muttered in a low voice, demonstrating his surrender, and snuggled up against Crusch's shoulder.

Ferris: "It's okay. It was obviously a joke, so don't be so nyon edge. If Ferri-chan were to really upset Crusch-sama, it'd be a huge problem."

Crusch: "Th-That's right, isn't it? Phew, I was a little scared since I was unused to it, but I appear to have misunderstood Ferris's thoughts because I cannot use my Divine Protection to its fullest right now."

Ferris: "—Not at all."

Crusch sighed in relief, and a fleeting emotion flashed through Ferris's eyes as he watched her, leaving Subaru feeling uneasy.

That complex emotion was something that he could not easily reveal.

During this year, Ferris had been the one who had to deal with his master's amnesia.

During that time, he must have tried his best but still felt anxious and guilty, just like Subaru. Even so, his master, lacking the foundation of her memory, had needed to rely on him, and so he could not show any confusion.

???: "The preparations for dinner have been completed. It will be served, does anyone mind?"

As the conversation came to an end, the timing on behalf of the hotel's staff was perfect. Joshua, who had been sitting without presence in a corner until then, gave permission to have a steady flow of food brought up by the manager.

Everyone watched as their meal was arranged on the long table, their gazes colored with wonder. However, Subaru's surprise came from a different vector than the others'.

Emilia and the others were surprised by the variety of dishes, many of which they had never seen before, while Subaru was surprised by the sight of familiar dishes. Since there was no sea in this world, it had been nearly impossible to find such a dish, but Subaru immediately fixed his attention on the sashimi dish before him.

Subaru: "This, may I eat it as is?"

Anastasia: "I guess you're not accustomed to it, since you'd never experience this kind of dish without livin' next to water. The Water Plumage Pavilion's actually famous for this."

Sashimi was not the only thing Subaru recognized. There was a variety of Japanese dishes placed together on the table. In the midst of all the confusion, Anastasia began to bring food to her mouth, and Subaru took that as a cue to start.

He immediately went for the fancy sashimi and soy sauce. Emilia and Beatrice, seated beside him, both issued an "Ah!" Concerns about a species of parasite arose as he swallowed, but, taking into account the class of hotel and the host, it was hardly a plausible worry.

Instead, Subaru simply focused on enjoying the tastes.

Subaru: "Delicious! Ah, it's been so long since I've had sashimi!"

Emilia: "I-It's delicious?"

Subaru: "It's not even a matter of delicious or not, since this is simply a proper delicacy. It's probably due to its freshness, but this probably makes the top of my list. If there's any sushi vinegar and rice here, I could show you guys how proper Tokyo-style sushi is made."

Emilia: "Sorry. I've got no idea what you're talking about. But you're right, it's delicious."

Partially listening to Subaru's train-like speech, Emilia imitated him and dipped the sashimi into the soy sauce. As she tasted it, her amethyst eyes widened as she gripped her hands excitedly, exclaiming, "Mmmm!".

Looking at the honest reaction of that master and servant duo, the others also began to taste the food.

Anastasia, who was dissatisfied for having been deprived of her share, relaxed her gaze as she watched Subaru and Emilia's honest and pure reactions, muttering to herself "Ahh, it's hopeless".

Despite some people having missed the dinner, and despite some anxieties being present, the participants were able to enjoy themselves in relaxation.

—On this night, with its bright moon, the compassionate and forgiving world allowed for this peace.

Chapter 14:
The Sword Demon under the Moon

The dinner party had been one where everyone had forgotten their political hostilities.

After dinner, Subaru retired to his room, where the staff had already made his bed. Looking at the two futons, placed side by side, Subaru felt his admiration for the hotel increase. It followed the Japanese custom that had towels, blankets, futons, and the like all be arranged when the resident had vacated their room.

Although, he had always thought that such a practice left people feeling rather defenseless.

Beatrice: “Subaru. It looks like while we weren’t here, people succeeded in sneaking into our room, in fact—!”

Subaru: “Ah. It looks like the futons and towels you messed up were rearranged or replaced.”

Beatrice: “That…! Yes, it’s definitely a trap to tempt Betty, I suppose. They’re hiding under a guise of thoughtfulness, in fact.”

Subaru: “Sometimes, people just have good intentions. Though, this service isn’t free.”

Beatrice carried herself with an unnecessary level of alertness and diligence, even though she could barely keep her eyes open. Subaru quickly ushered her to bed.

Since officially forming their contract, Subaru and Beatrice had slept in the same room. Although Anastasia had offered Beatrice her own room, she would just have left for Subaru’s room anyway, so they’d respectfully declined.

That wasn’t to say that Beatrice was a child who couldn’t sleep alone. Rather, Beatrice used their nighttime contact with Subaru to sap the excess Mana from his defective gate. Truly considerate of his physical condition.

Beatrice: “So, Betty isn’t here because she wants to be near Subaru, in fact. Don’t misunderstand, I suppose.”

Beatrice, who had originally devised the terms of the contract, had spoken thusly.

But where her intent once laid no longer mattered. Subaru had long since become accustomed to falling asleep to the sound of someone else’s breathing.

Beatrice: “…That green stuff was toxic, in fact. It’s unforgivable, I suppose…”

Happy and tired, Beatrice buried herself in the futon and was promptly dragged into a dream, thinking of the wasabi that had traumatized her at dinner.

Touching Beatrice’s frowning forehead, Subaru took in her cute sleeping face until he was satisfied, then climbed to his feet.

Subaru: “Now then. I’m going to take a bath, too. Have a good rest.”

Next to Subaru’s futon laid an unused bathrobe. If he did not know how to wear it, he could easily just ask a staff member. But of course, Subaru had no issue figuring out the garment, and could wear both kimonos and yukatas properly.

If asked why, he would answer that hit was because he had been got bored during his spare time in his original world.

Subaru: “If Ferris and Anastasia aren’t there, I could also go decorate one of the women’s bathrobes.”

He of course wanted to seek out Emilia’s bathrobe. The other Royal Selection candidates were all lovely maidens, but if Subaru could tailor Emilia’s clothing and dress her up, then he could ensure she would never be inferior to them in the slightest.

Subaru: “Well, it can’t be helped. I guess I’ll be satisfied that I got to do Emilia’s three braids after dinner.”

Although she had let her hair down before bed, they had launched a “three braids wave!” as they came undone, just as Subaru had planned. Naturally long, wavy hair, like Anastasia’s, was also beautiful, but Subaru considered Emilia’s long silver hair the most eye-catching.

Subaru: “The three braids and three braid wave are lovely. Emilia is definitely a shrewd woman. I could never do such a thing with Beatrice.”

Beatrice’s hair inexplicably never left its twin-tailed drills. It was probably because she was an Artificial Spirit. Changing her hairstyle was possible, but it always reverted to its original form as soon Subaru’s hands left her hair. It was so fascinating that he had played with it a number of times.

While looking forward to the next morning, Subaru collected his bathrobe and left for the baths, treading carefully on the wooden floor to not wake Beatrice. Thinking of the people whom he shared the hotel with, Subaru did not feel the need to be alert. He rather pitied anyone who would dare to launch any type of scheme.

Reinhard: “Although I doubt that anything will happen, I will know if anything is amiss. I hope that everyone can spend the night peacefully.”

Those were Reinhard’s reassuring words as they had left the dining room. The sense of safety was not just limited to the hotel, it extended to the entire region. Knowing Reinhard, even feeling safe in the entire city would not be a stretch.

So, for now, Subaru could wander the hotel without taking any precautions. Although it was regrettable that the hotel lacked an open-air bath, Subaru was still excited because he found bathing the most enjoyable part of any hotel stay.

Subaru: “…”

Subaru came to a stop, his relaxed expression shifting as he looked through a corridor into the courtyard, where Reinhard and Garfiel's battle had taken place. In the evening, its atmosphere was different, and rather pleasing.

A round moon floated in the dark sky, blanketed by thick clouds which gave the scene a glamorous charm. A cool wind blew through the garden, where a lone figure stood.

Subaru: "—Wilhelm-san?"

A sturdy back, and long white hair.

At a glance, Subaru could tell that the yukata-clad figure was elderly, and there was only one man he knew who fit the profile.

Wilhelm: "Is it Subaru-dono? Did I surprise you?"

Probably having been long aware of the movement behind him, Wilhelm turned to greet Subaru, a soft look in his eyes. He stood with his hands tucked in the sleeves of the bathrobe. His posture, combined with the Japanese-style garden. Why was the image so perfectly natural?

Wilhelm: "Are you going to the baths next?"

Subaru: "Yes, that's what I was planning on doing. By the way, I came here to see the garden in the evening, not because I got lost since I'm unfamiliar with the hotel."

Wilhelm: "That would not happen to Subaru-dono. I also came to indulge in the beauty of the garden, so I believe that I can understand Subaru-dono's mood."

Subaru: "…It's still embarrassing to be spoken of so highly."

Subaru turned away, scratching his cheek in embarrassment, as Wilhelm, without any trace of exaggeration, spoke of him with unflinching trust.

Wilhelm was the person Subaru had grown to respect the most since coming to this world. There were people who he wanted to stand alongside, and people who he wanted to compete with, but the only person who Subaru looked at with nothing but respect was Wilhelm.

Both as a person and as a man, Wilhelm was Subaru's role model.

Wilhelm: "Subaru-dono probably came here searching for the peace and solemnity of the garden at night. My presence here must be very frustrating."

Subaru: "Not at all. Rather, seeing the Sword Demon in this windy garden is so perfect that I want to forever engrave this image in my heart. I like seeing people who shine in the moonlight."

As far as Subaru was concerned, Emilia's beauty was undoubtedly the most commensurate with that of the moonlit night. Her long silver hair was different from the glow of the sun. Emilia's beauty was like the illusory of the moonlight, and Subaru wanted to be the stars hovering around the moon.

So, seeing the Sword Demon standing under a moonlit night was a sight that Subaru had been longing to see.

Wilhelm: "…Subaru-dono should not waste such heartfelt words on an old man like me. If you whispered them to the woman you love, you would surely capture her attention."

Subaru: "Putting on those airs would just be an insecticide to all the lovely butterflies I've attracted. And at the moment, those words are completely incomprehensible to the one whose heart I want to reach the most."

Wilhelm: "Trying to bring out her flawless smile, searching for the perfect words… That anxious feeling is one of the pleasures of love, Subaru-dono."

Hearing Wilhelm's light tone, Subaru gave a relaxed shrug of his shoulders.

Subaru: "Oh? You seem to be referencing your faraway love story. Did you ever go through that, Wilhelm-san?"

Wilhelm: "Would you like to hear it?"

Subaru: “Be sure to tell me every detail.”

Subaru gave a ceremonious, respectful bow, and Wilhelm’s attitude was tinged with a look of joy, as he said “Then, it cannot be helped”.

Wilhelm: “When I was a young man, I was just as terrible with words as I am now. I never wanted to discuss anything other than swords, since I had no interests aside from swordplay. I must have bored my wife to no end when we first met.”

Subaru: “But, your wife didn’t dislike talking to that Wilhelm-san, right?”

Wilhelm: “She was an open-minded woman. Whether it be the loss of a heavy responsibility which burdened her heart, or escaping a duty, neglecting the thoughts of others, we never discussed any of those in our conversations. She was born a gentle, warm person, and it was probably because of that innate kindness that she kept exchanging words with me.”

Wilhelm closed his eyes with a wistful smile.

Subaru bent silently over the corridor, listening to the old man’s memories.

Wilhelm: “Because I was such an unsociable person, my wife always supplied the topics during our conversations. On top of that, I initially failed to notice how drawn I was to her. Whenever I spoke with her, I avoided facing the abominable agitation in my heart.”

Subaru: “Wilhelm-san was really bad at talking to women, huh.”

Wilhelm: “Really, I devote everything in my being to the sword. When I gripped my sword, I forgot about everything else, as if merely swinging my sword would give me a way of survival—The one who reminded me of the reason I had taken it up was my wife.”

Subaru: “Is that when you realized you loved her?”

Wilhelm: “…You seem to have seen through me, Subaru-dono.”

Wilhelm fell silent, and Subaru followed suit.

Wilhelm was surely unaware of the expression he currently wore. Subaru, however, felt a strong wave of pride wash over him as he saw it. The look in Wilhelm's eyes, the wrinkles on his face, the tone of his voice, were all legendary. The wife he loved just as strongly now as he had then, Thearesia van Astrea.

The old man's expression, attitude, and very existence all generously sang of the love he still held for his wife.

No matter who, anyone who saw him would, without doubt, instantly see that he was in love. Even if everything in the world were to wither and fade, not a single person would fail to understand the depth of that emotion.

That was the depth of Wilhelm's love, clearly something that should be worn with pride.

Subaru: "…"

As Subaru gazed upon Wilhelm's face, his eyes unconsciously welled with tears.

Unbearable feelings arose spontaneously and gathered as heat in his eyes. He did not know why it had touched him so much. Why did his heart feel so warm upon seeing someone in love?

Crying in such a situation would only serve to bother Wilhelm.

Wilhelm: "Like Subaru-dono said, that was when I realized my feelings for my wife."

Subaru lowered his face, pretending to scratch his head as he hid his tears. Although he should have noticed that Subaru had started crying, Wilhelm continued talking.

Was he just immersed in the past, or was he pretending not to notice Subaru's reaction? Subaru had no way of knowing, so he kept silent and continued to listen.

Wilhelm: "The sword was everything to me, but it was only one part of who I was. It was my wife who made me realize this obvious truth, and so, every time I swing my sword, I am reminded of her.”

Subaru: “Is that, true even now?”

Wilhelm: “—That is truer now than it ever was.”

Wilhelm took a moment to formulate a response.

Finally, turning his back to the moonlight, Wilhelm faced Subaru. The feelings flashing across the old man’s face were so complex that Subaru could not quite read them all.

Pride. Remorse. Hesitation. Enthusiasm. Shame. Courage.

—But those all stemmed from his love.

Wilhelm: “I try my best to keep holding my sword, so that I will continue to be reminded of my wife. Even death could not take her from my memory, and, when my time comes, I want to die with a sword in hand. I would be with her forever.”

Subaru: “…”

This was Wilhelm’s awkward, straight-forward way of expressing the love that he could not otherwise.

Subaru swallowed, repeatedly taking deep breaths to loosen the pressure in his heart and the numbness in his tongue, until he finally judged himself as being able to speak again.

Subaru: “When I die and what-not, please don’t talk about such things that have no sign whatsoever of happening. Wilhelm-san is definitely surely completely absolutely totally entirely even younger than super young, and so even thinking about your retirement is certainly going to trouble people.”

Wilhelm: “Subaru-dono?”

Subaru: “Crusch and Ferris both are very dependent on Wilhelm-san. Crusch’s memory loss is a very serious issue, and Ferris who is supporting her hasn’t said anything about it, but I’m sure he’s completely spent himself. So they'll be a mess if Wilhelm-san doesn't help! And, I too!"

Wilhelm: "…"

Subaru: "I also have many, many things I'd like to consult with Wilhelm-san. We're obviously in opposite factions, so maybe that's just naivety, but I…"

Subaru truly liked Wilhelm.

Wilhelm, who had buried in his heart of hearts his love for his wife, and sought vengeance for her, was someone who Subaru truly respected. Even if that had not happened, even if their relationship had remained just as a ten-day mentorship, then Subaru would still have deeply respected Wilhelm's strength and fortitude.

Hearing the Wilhelm that he respected so much speak of death was terrifying to Subaru.

Subaru was far more sensitive to the notion of the people he cared about dying. This was due both to his contract with Roswaal and to Subaru's own views on Return by Death shifting. There was also a part of him who was always secretly worried about Emilia and Beatrice.

Wilhelm: "…I am the just same as before, truly terrible with words."

Upon hearing Subaru's stubborn, desperate words, Wilhelm smiled.

The old man directed a warm look at Subaru, whose breaths were still shallow, and spoke.

Wilhelm: "It was terrible of me to have you worry so much. Despite my earlier words, I am not always thinking of death. Although it is an inevitable truth, I have struggled through the hardest challenge already."

Subaru: "…Ah."

Subaru relaxed slightly as he came to a realization. Wilhelm was speaking of the battle with the White Whale.

Wilhelm had been prepared to fight his fated enemy even at the cost of his life. At that time, surely, he had been prepared for the possibility of dying in battle. But, in the end, he had prevailed, and —

Wilhelm: “I think I am in good condition. I have fulfilled my dearest wish and survived, and now I can live free of shame.”

Subaru: “Wilhelm-san…”

Wilhelm: “I did what I needed to do, and I think there is nothing more honorable than that. Then and now, aside from merely swinging my sword, my chest is shaking with the pursuit of happiness. I have people who I have pledged my support to, and I have visited my wife’s grave. I have received so many blessings.”

Yes, that was it.

That was right. Wilhelm would not do anything unreasonable.

The steady, calm smile of the old man. Subaru, as someone who was young and superficial, had no way of seeing through it. But that smile was by no means a fake or ironic one.

Wilhelm was not unreasonable. And even in the unlikely event that this was the case, he would not have spilled a long-held burden to Subaru.

However, from the beginning, did Subaru’s attempts to have Wilhelm reveal his thoughts not amount to naught but arrogance?

Wilhelm: “Subaru-dono—This is a virtue, but also a weakness.”

Subaru: “…”

Seeing Subaru’s anxiety, Wilhelm spoke quietly.

There was no smile in the voice, but there was no criticism either. Rather, the way he spoke was reminiscent of how an older person would caution a younger one.

Speaking more frankly, it was the tone a grandfather would take with his grandson.

Wilhelm: “My wife did this too, the bad habit of neglecting and shoving aside one’s own feelings while focusing on those of the surrounding people.”

Subaru: “Bad habit, is it… No, I’m hardly such a good person. I don’t want anything like everyone’s happiness. I only wish for the happiness of people I’m close to.”

Wilhelm: “The range of the people who you consider close to you is also a problem. While it was not what my wife desired, she held a great amount of power for a woman, and could reach far more people than she ever wanted to.”

Wilhelm’s wife, Thearesia, had been the previous Sword Saint.

Despite lacking common knowledge, Subaru had heard plenty about her in the past year. The civil unrest that took place in the Kingdom of Lugunica, which came to be known as the Demi-Human War, had been single-handedly ended by the woman who took the moniker of Sword Saint, in a few years.

What she had accomplished with her undue strength was the salvation of the country’s stability. Natsuki Subaru would never be able to compare with such a hero.

Subaru: “I understand, about your wife, but I can’t match up to her in any way.”

Wilhelm: “In peacetime, my wife was just an ordinary woman who admired flowers. Even if she is a hero of legend, she did not always act as such. And Subaru-dono, your reputation is good, and your influence is wide. In the future, your range will surely increase, and you will be able to do more and more.”

Subaru: “This kind of thing…”

Wilhelm: “I am convinced that Subaru-dono is a person who will surely accomplish what he cannot achieve alone, by gathering those who likewise cannot achieve it by their lonesome.”

Subaru: "…"

Speechless. Wilhelm had overestimated him by so much, and that had struck Subaru speechless.

That he was someone who could do such great things, could Subaru really believe this?

He was fragile and weak, his intellect was lacking, and his ideas were often poor and baseless. Because he was a person who could not do anything by himself, all he could ever do was rely on others to solve his problems.

That method would surely show its flaws, one day. For now, he was barely struggling along, but eventually he could certainly face failure. When that time inevitably arrived, Subaru had so many people to disappoint.

Wilhelm: "I apologize for bringing up the same things. It must trouble you to hear them over and over relentlessly."

Subaru: "Wilhelm-san, I…"

Wilhelm: "There may not be many people conscious of it, but it is something that everyone will come to understand one day."

Subaru: "I'm just an immature little child who is clumsy at everything I do."

Wilhelm: "Well, this immature little child who is clumsy at everything he does is one who I'm very fond of."

After a moment, Wilhelm nodded in satisfaction.

Wilhelm: "And the people who think like this will surely increase from now on."

As if deeply touched by Wilhelm's words, Subaru again fell silent.

Part of him was overwhelmed, and wanted to cast the notion from his mind. However, because the idea had come from none other than Wilhelm, Subaru could not give it up so easily.

In the depths of his heart, he could not believe in himself to that extent. But he also could not discard Wilhelm's belief in him.

Subaru decided to keep the feelings he had felt within him, until he had fully digested them.

He was very conscious of his own deficits. So any feelings, encouragement, or words, he had decided to carry within him.

And that was how he decided to treat Wilhelm's words.

Subaru, who was desperately but resolutely sorting his feelings out, failed to notice Wilhelm's tender gaze.

Wilhelm: "…I spoke too much and kept you here for a long time, my apologies."

Estimating that Subaru was done grappling with himself, Wilhelm spoke up. Accepting it, Subaru judged that tonight's scene would end soon.

Subaru: "Me too, I'm sorry for asking so much, but I really wanted to hear your love story with your wife."

Wilhelm: "No, it's been a long time since I've had the pleasure of talking about my wife. Lately, both Crusch-sama and Felix have been busy."

Subaru: "In addition to hearing a love story, I've also gotten insight into how another faction operates!"

Wilhelm: "I was a little bit excessively sentimental. Listening to an old man's long ramble must have been incredibly boring."

Wilhelm's blue eyes lit up with affection as he smiled lightly. Subaru did not notice the fleeting emotion and instead focused on what was just happening.

Initially, Wilhelm had stood alone in the garden.

He had told Subaru that he had come to appreciate the garden at night. The best location for enjoying the view of the garden was the corridor where Subaru was currently standing. In fact, standing where Wilhelm stood meant that much of the garden's moonlit landscape would be hidden.

Of course, Subaru may very well have been overthinking. But, if there were something else that would bring Wilhelm to the garden, then it would be,

Subaru: "…That's where Reinhard stood."

Wilhelm: "…"

Wilhelm's location, where he had been standing all along, was the absolute territory that Reinhard had continuously defended against Garfiel. That patch of gravel was where the handsome red-haired swordsman had stood, the very picture of unflinching immobility.

That Wilhelm had felt that sense of disturbance and had gone to confirm it would have been perfectly natural. However, only Wilhelm knew the reason that he had yet to leave that spot.

Subaru: "Wilhelm-san. I don't want to nose into another family's affairs, and I've graduated from being the lively character who insists on hearing everything that's happened just to satisfy my own curiosity, but…"

Wilhelm: "Ah, feel free to ask."

Subaru: "Do you not get along with Reinhard? Even though you're obviously family?"

The grandfather and grandson, and the complex relationships in the Astrea Family.

Even understanding that he may have been undermining the trust that had built up between him and Wilhelm, Subaru still breached the subject.

He might have chosen not to do so had he not just spoken with Wilhelm in the garden. He watched Wilhelm's profile, which overlooked his grandson's footsteps.

After their exchange, how could he refrain from asking?

Wilhelm: “While speaking with Subaru-dono, I thought of it.”

Subaru: “…”

Wilhelm: “Why am I unable to speak these words to my own grandson?”

Those distressed words came straight from Wilhelm’s heart.

Wilhelm’s face fell flat. He was expressionless, but certainly not emotionless. He was suppressing his feelings to hide his lament behind a hard shell.

What Wilhelm now possessed was pure, unmistakable regret.

Wilhelm: “I am a man with a lot of remorse, but there are three regrets in particular that I can raise no excuses for. One of them is the cause of the distance between me and my grandson.”

Subaru: “But, doesn’t Wilhelm-san regret it?”

Wilhelm: “Even regretting it should not be allowed. The criticisms I spoke to my grandson… to Reinhard, were so harsh. It was something unforgivable, so unforgivable, and stupid, that it cannot be fixed anymore.”

Wilhelm, who was still hiding his feelings under a guise of expressionlessness, seemed to be burning with an emotion, a flame, that had consumed Wilhelm for years. It was one of both anger and regret, one that he had always clung to.

Wilhelm: “I used the crusade against my wife’s murderer as an excuse to avoid facing that remorse, and, after successfully crushing the enemy, I recognize that I should begin to search for a way to reconcile.”

Subaru: “But you lack the courage?”

Wilhelm: “I am honestly so shameful. My grandson certainly resents me even now. Thinking of this, I cannot take a step forward.”

Wilhelm issued a deep sigh of disappointment. Subaru was dumbstruck seeing an old man who seemed to have shrunk rapidly. And, finally, inadvertently leaked a laugh.

Wilhelm: “Subaru-dono?”

Subaru: “I am sorry, I did not mean to laugh, that was inappropriate.”

Wilhelm cast a disbelieving look at Subaru, but Subaru felt similarly disbelieving. Really, this old man, how many times would he surprise Subaru in one night?

Subaru: “Wilhelm-san seems to be thinking that he’s unqualified to call himself Reinhard’s grandfather…”

Wilhelm: “Yes, that is correct. Compared to my grandson, I came to a standstill after realizing my mistakes. He is far too kind to the cowardly person that I am…”

Subaru: “If you put it that way, then I can only see a grandfather who’s afraid of being hated by his grandson.”

Wilhelm: “…Huh?”

Wilhelm shook off his gloom and looked Subaru in the face. Subaru waved his hand, still fighting an impulse to laugh.

Subaru: “I don’t fully understand the reasons for the poor relationship between Wilhelm-san and Reinhard, so I might be misunderstanding. But to the eyes of an outsider, Wilhelm-san wants to reconcile with Reinhard and looks to be seriously trying to apologize, so making an apology would be a good idea.”

Wilhelm: “But Reinhard will not forgive me.”

Subaru: “If he doesn’t forgive you at first, keep apologizing until he does. You’re not apologizing to be forgiven, you’re apologizing because you want to apologize, right? The person making the apology has nothing to worry about, because they’re not a bad person.”

Wilhelm: "…"

This time, it was Wilhelm's turn to fall speechless at Subaru's extreme theory.

Of course, Subaru understood that his words were very headstrong. Even so, he believed it was necessary to keep insisting.

In order to motivate Wilhelm. In order to let him face Reinhard.

Subaru: "Of course, after being alienated for so many years, a sudden apology would initially be thought of as «What's going on with this guy?». However, if many apologies were made, then «What's going on with this guy?» would give way to either «There's no helping it, then» or «Ugh, this guy's too annoying»."

Wilhelm: "I think things would deteriorate."

Subaru: "But at least they will change. Don't you think that any change is better than being stuck in the worst-case scenario your situation seems to be in?"

It was universally acknowledged that Subaru had presented an awful initial impression to many people. Breaking through interpersonal barriers was nothing to Subaru.

Subaru: "After a few years, if you give him some pocket money, you could immediately soften his attitude toward you. Although his impression of you may be poor, if you do something nice for him, won't he come to think of you as a nice person? Reinhard is incredible to deal with, and even I unexpectedly became his friend right away."

Wilhelm: "But… it won't be that simple with Reinhard…"

Subaru: "—Reinhard said he wanted to hear about the battle with the White Whale."

Subaru spoke in a humorous tone, and, bit by bit, Wilhelm seemed to relax.

Subaru told Wilhelm of what Reinhard had said outside the tearoom, immediately after meeting Subaru. Upon hearing that, Wilhelm suddenly opened his blue eyes.

Subaru: “I don’t know if the White Whale is related to your poor relationship, but if it is, then Reinhard’s definitely concerned about it. Of course, he’s certainly heard of how Wilhelm-san crushed the White Whale, and I’m sure he wants to know about how you avenged his grandmother after ten years.”

Wilhelm: “…”

Subaru: “That guy is surely also looking forward that your frozen relationship starts moving, right now.”

Subaru had no way of knowing Reinhard’s intentions.

Subaru had always seen Reinhard as a man who was ridiculously perfect beyond perfect, and had never associated him with powerlessness or ignorance before.

But those were flawed ideas. Reinhard was also human. He had worries just like anyone else.

Even the man Subaru had regarded as superhuman, Wilhelm, was, beneath the surface, an ordinary man and ordinary grandfather, filled with ordinary troubles and shortcomings. It would be no surprise if the same held true for Reinhard.

Subaru’s words just now had surprised Wilhelm, who closed his eyes as if he were meditating on them, examining them. Time seemed to be flowing by with the still wind.

Then, after a moment of silence between the two, Wilhelm reopened his eyes.

Wilhelm: “My grandson… Reinhard would listen to me.”

Subaru: “Annoy him with a hello first and bounce back if he rejects you. That’s happened to me with every girl I’ve met aside from Emilia-tan.”

Wilhelm: “Really—”

After hearing Subaru’s reply, Wilhelm shook his head.

Then, the old man looked up, leaning his head back and fixing his eyes on the moon hanging in the sky.

Wilhelm: “Subaru-dono is invincible.”

The words were spoken with the hint of a smile.

Chapter 15:
A Deafening Silence

1

The next morning, a bleary-eyed Subaru stood in the sunlit courtyard. Feeling the hard gravel and sand through his shoes, he took a deep breath of the cool morning air.

Emilia directed a smile at the pleased Subaru as he gave a relaxed, “Mmm!”.

Emilia: “What is it? Subaru seems happy today, did something nice happen?”

Subaru: “Many nice things happened. An important event happened last night, Emilia’s charming braid was an unexpected treat, and the baths were spacious and comfortable.”

Emilia: “Ah, I can say the same. I also took a very comfortable bath yesterday. The bathhouse in the Roswaal mansion is great, but the bath surrounded by stones here is so fresh.”

Last night, the beauty of Emilia’s melodiously flowing silver hair, as the braid Subaru had made was unraveled, had been breathtaking. Although her usual long straight hair also showed her frosty, snow-like beauty, seeing an unusual hairstyle on her had its own sense of privilege.

The conclusion really was that, no matter what, a cute girl would always be cute.

With that in mind, Subaru turned his attention back to the present as Emilia spoke again.

Although indoors, the bath went as far as it could to resemble an open-air bath, and the decorations evoked a natural image of the outdoors. Cobblestone covered the ledges along the bath’s wall. If it had been made of marble instead, the bath would have lost much of its uniqueness.

Emilia: “Since I saw this type of bath for the first time, I ended up having a lot of fun frolicking with Crusch-san and Felt-chan.”

Subaru: “That’s a prime fanservice scene from a gyaru game. It’s a CG that’s absolutely necessary to collect.”

Emilia: “C… G?”

Subaru: “It’s nothing, I was just teasing you. You seem happy, and most importantly, did you enjoy it?”

Emilia: “Mhm, very.”

Emilia, whose happiness was shared with Subaru, also seemed joyful at a glance. This feeling alleviated the initial anxiety and suspicion that had accompanied both master and servant on their trip to Priestella. The issue was—

Subaru: “Those two over there have such unhappy, gloomy looking faces.”

Beatrice: “…It’s nothing, in fact.”

Otto: “Please don’t mind me… hic. I just had a little, hic, too much to drink.”

Standing where Subaru was pointing was a loli sporting twin-drills and a frosty expression on her face, and a man whose usually elegant features were pale.

Needless to say, these two were Beatrice and Otto. After some careful consideration, Subaru decided to say hello to the almost transparent Otto.

Subaru: “Otto. You were a no-show at dinner yesterday, where did you go?”

Otto: “Like I said when we parted ways, hic, it’s rare for me to have a chance to come to Priestella, and while, hic, we’re here, I wanted to establish some connections.”

Subaru: “What’s up with you? You’re even more drunk than you were when we first met.”

Otto: “…? My memory might be messed up, but, hic, my first meeting with Natsuki-san didn’t seem to involve alcohol…”

Subaru: “Well, it’s your own memory, so think what you will.”

Otto, who was reproached for an unknown reason, wore a helpless expression, although Subaru’s comments were all moot.

From Subaru’s perspective, he had numerous first meetings with Otto, but the first one had been with a frustrated Otto in a tavern, who had been as equally pale as the current one. Shortly afterwards, however, Subaru Returned from Death. Therefore, from Otto’s point of view, their first meeting had been the embarrassing one in which Subaru had been responsible for saving him from the Witch Cult.

Of course, it was futile to argue, since both would be wrong.

Subaru: “Don’t do things that would give Beako bad habits. Well, I can understand that you were in a rush to help our faction.”

Otto: “I did this all of my own volition—Even though I have no idea why I did this to myself.”

Otto, whose head seemed to be feeling rather heavy, was unable to respond to Subaru. After a moment he looked up at the courtyard, changing the course of the conversation with an “Actually…”,

Otto: “What happened to Garfiel? It is unusual that he is not up at this time. Isn’t it convention for him to get up earlier than anyone so he can find the highest mountain to howl from?”

Subaru: “There’s probably not anywhere high up here, but that isn’t why he’s not here. Though, that would be his own juvenile secret. Please be gentle with him the next time you meet.”

Otto: “To someone who has no idea whatsoever as to what happened, aren’t those words too misleading…?! Ahh, my head still hurts.”

Subaru: “You’re certainly self-destructive.”

Watching a nigh-comatose Otto collapse onto the floor, Subaru smiled. He then turned around and looked at Beatrice, who had been silent since the beginning of their exchange.

Subaru: “So, what’s up, Beako? Yesterday, you were so lively, but now you’re all gloomy. That’s so not cute.”

Beatrice: “Don’t just assume things, I suppose. I’m not feeling gloomy, in fact. Betty just suddenly remembered a few things, which she has to carefully scrutinize, I suppose.”

Subaru: “What’s the matter? If you have any trouble, spit it out. If it’s something dangerous, you might not know how to handle it.”

Surprised at what Beatrice had said, Subaru narrowed his eyes slightly and gave a gesture indicating his readiness. Emilia also nodded as if she were listening carefully.

Beatrice bit her lips, revealing a rare hesitation, before choosing her words with a pompous air.

Beatrice: “It started yesterday, after Subaru abandoned me to play with Garfiel, in fact.”

Subaru: “A questionable interpretation, but go on.”

Beatrice: “Betty had gone to look for Emilia to kill time with, I suppose. On the way to her room, I ran into an employee, who I made a little bit of small talk with, in fact.”

Subaru: “Beako… making small talk…?!”

Learning that Beatrice’s ability to communicate had somewhat improved left Subaru speechless. He turned to Emilia, shocked, and she gave an eager nod.

Incredible! The notion of Beatrice initiating conversations with strangers was entirely unexpected. Maybe the freshness of travel had let Beatrice experience an unexpected growth. After returning home, he needed to update the Beako Growth Diary with this development as soon as possible.

The diary, which recorded Beako's daily growth in detail, had already reached three volumes. Thanks to this journey, he could add a new page.

Unaware that her daily activities were being recorded, Beatrice found Subaru and Emilia's attention annoying, and reacted with a dissatisfied "You're exaggerating, I suppose!".

Beatrice: "I'll keep talking, in fact. When the waiter saw Betty, he said he had news and put on a very mysterious expression, I suppose. He told me, «At night, something scary will haunt this hotel», in fact."

Subaru "…"

Beatrice: "Honestly, when Betty heard she hesitated to tell anyone so as not to create unnecessary confusion, I suppose. Although, I still decided to do some preparation last night as a precaution, in fact…"

Beatrice's voice rose as she became worked up, and she did not notice how Subaru had fallen silent. Then, she dropped her voice to a whisper, as ceremoniously as if she were spreading a little-known secret.

Beatrice: "In the middle of the night, Betty heard something strange, I suppose. I didn't want to wake up Subaru, who had a stupid expression on his face as he slept, so I quietly left our sleeping quarters alone to investigate, in fact."

Subaru: "You shouldn't stare at someone else's sleeping face, it's creepy."

Beatrice: "O-Of course I didn't stare, I suppose! I just gave a glance, as a lady's etiquette dictates, in fact!"

She might not have looked at the sleeping Subaru at all, but it was so cute that Subaru put the matter aside for time being. Beako took Subaru's acquiescence as a sign to continue, and her mysterious expression reappeared.

Beatrice: “Betty noticed an unusual presence hovering near the hotel, so I tracked it, I suppose. After a while, I finally found its source on the front porch…”

Subaru: “You found it?”

Beatrice: “Well, there was a dangerous pale face slowly emerging from the darkness, I suppose. It seemed to be dangerous to Betty at a first look, so she confronted it, in fact.”

Beatrice’s petite forehead shone faintly with sweat, as if she were fully immersed in the grim situation she had been involved in last night. Although Subaru did not understand how a Spirit’s sweat glands worked, it made the atmosphere rather tense, so he chose to not comment on it.

Beatrice: “Shortly after, probably due to its fear of Betty’s power, the figure slowly melted back into the darkness, I suppose. After repeatedly confirming that there would be no trouble later, Betty returned to the room, in fact. Then I stepped over the idiotically sleeping Subaru to return to the futon, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Don’t peep on someone sleeping, it’s indecent.”

Beatrice: “I only confirmed that you were okay, I suppose! Absolutely no such thing like touching your forehead or eyebrows happened, in fact!”

This was certainly a self-admission, but because it was so cute, Subaru again neglected to mention it.

All in all, that seemed to be the end of Beatrice’s horror story. Subaru held his chin and nodded slightly as he began to consider what she had said.

In a Japanese-style inn, a ghost story had occurred.

As a matter of fact, after living in this other world for a year, Subaru had come to realize that such ghost stories were not widespread here. That was most likely because spirits were already well-known as invisible beings. If the existence of invisible beings was acknowledged, there was no need for such things like ghost stories

Even so, that kind of weird rumor still existed here, and that the hotel had even inherited a story about Japanese-style spirits was really rather incredible.

Subaru heartily admired this phenomenon, as he took a conclusive breath.

Subaru: “So, what happened last night, Otto?”

Otto: “Ah, I remember now. As I lay on the porch, still on the verge of vomiting, I noticed that Beatrice-chan was staring at me, but I was unable to speak at the time. Finally, I couldn’t hold back and went to vomit in the bushes, and once I’d come back, she’d vanished.”

Subaru: “That would be it, then.”

Beatrice: “…How is this, how is it possible, in fact?”

It was almost too much for Beatrice to handle.

It was, at this point, incredibly obvious that the true face of the so-called specter was actually a drunk Otto, and she had no idea what to say.

What she had been certain she had seen was relentlessly rejected, and Beatrice looked as if her ability to reason had vanished. Subaru stroked her as though comforting her, but in his heart, he concluded that Beatrice was bad at sleeping in unfamiliar surroundings.

The waiter, who described the specter to Beatrice, had surely seen that Beatrice had the unusual aura of someone who was gullible, and would take any kind of prank too seriously.

Her red face, full of remorse and dissatisfaction, was so adorable that Subaru gave it the highest level of praise.

Felt: “Yo, everyone’s gathered here already.”

Then, a light female voice cut into the crowd of laughter.

Looking to the source of the sound, Subaru spotted a figure in the corridor— a girl shaking out her short, golden hair, Felt. She had replaced the yukata with her usual light attire, swinging her slender arms with ease. Although she had grown to be a touch more feminine, she looked like she was still firmly rooted as a girl from the streets.

Subaru: “Morning. You’re dressed so casually, I can just feel Reinhard’s lament.”

Felt: “Don’t preach me about it. That guy annoys me with it so much, and even Rom-jii is on his side. It’s such a bother.”

Voicing her dissatisfaction, an impatient Felt leapt from the corridor and landed beside Otto, who was promptly ignored. She then turned towards Subaru and crooked her head to ask,

Felt: “Having said that, there’s a thing that I’ve been curious about.”

Subaru: “What is it?”

Felt: “Ah, that is to say, why have you all been doing this weird dance together?”

Felt wore a curious expression as she watched Subaru’s strange dance—his everyday habit of morning radio gymnastics.

Whether before starting a long journey, or taking a few steps on the road, everyone would start their morning with radio calisthenics. This scene had long appeared every morning in not only the Roswaal mansion, but across the entirety of the Mathers territories.

Subaru: “Oh, it’s just the secret to health and longevity. Performed by everyone, from the children to the elderly, the age of the popular «radio calisthenics » of healthiness will reign. After Emilia-tan becomes the Monarch, our radio gymnastics will become a government-mandated morning activity!”

Emilia: “Yeah, I’d be happy if everyone could do it together.”

Felt: “That’s… I can’t help but feel that if such a thing becomes reality, your reputation as a Monarch’ll be ruined…”

Scrutinizing their movement, Felt muttered her cynical thoughts.

It was saddening to see, but sooner or later, even those who had not wanted to follow along were drawn into it after realizing the benefits of this easily performed activity. The popularity of this movement after it has spread to the various villages was indeed high.

Subaru: “Beako and Otto were also reluctant from the very beginning, but now they even participate despite having suffered through a lonely night of fear of ghosts, or a morning of a hangover!”

Beatrice: “Betty was dragged into this by Subaru, in fact.”

Otto: “I obviously just wanted to sleep off my headache, but then I heard the claps and saw the dancing…”

Beatrice: “Even if I’ve become sick of this, I’m addicted.”

Otto: “Utterly fascinating.”

Beatrice and Otto gave a somewhat weak explanation, while Subaru and Emilia stood proud. Felt scratched her white neck as she pondered the two distinctly different sets of responses.

Felt: “Indeed, I often hear of popular, strange activities happening in onee-chan’s vicinity. Strange dances, hollowed-out pumpkins, women carefully baking food for their beloved as a gift. Events like that…”

Subaru: “Although now they’re only unique occurrences in the border territories, I know that one day it will be turned into a project popular across the nation. Considering this, we could try using Anastasia-san in our schemes.”

Valentine’s Day would revolutionize the snack industry, and the markets would broaden. If the topic of large economical shift came up, Anastasia would immediately find a way to capitalize on it. If it wasn’t too late to do that, Subaru considered trying to catch Anastasia in her free time to discuss those opportunities with her.

Felt: “Has onii-chan always given off that kind of feeling?”

Emilia: “Well, Subaru has always been that way. It seems like he’s teasing, but he really wants to improve things, even if he always pretends to be fooling around.”

Felt: “Yeah but, you don’t even know if he’s joking or not until the dust settles…”

Emilia’s answer slightly frightened Felt.

Occasionally this kind of thing would happen due to Emilia’s mental age. Sometimes it would be hard to tell which one was younger or older, and Felt was no exception to that.

Felt, who struggled and crawled her way up in slums, had her unique way of living, too.

Emilia: “Why is Felt-chan all alone, isn’t Reinhard worried when you’re not together?”

Felt: “I’m not some kid who needs to be taken care of, and besides, that guy’s just annoying when he’s near me, so I just told him to go off somewhere, since onee-chan and everyone else would be here. It’s so annoying, as soon as anything happens that bastard arrives in the blink of an eye.”

Emilia: “Right. Then I feel at ease.”

Emilia carelessly chuckled at Felt’s complaint. Receiving a response which did not match her expectations, Felt gave an anxious sigh and began playing roughly with her blonde hair, revealing her irritation.

Emilia: “Felt-chan, you have such beautiful hair, you shouldn’t play with it so crudely. I’ve been taught by Subaru and Frederica-san to respect hair.”

Felt: “Damn, you’re so bossy… Let me mind my own hair, and didn’t I say to stop adding «chan» to my name? It gives me goosebumps!”

Emilia: “Even if you say so, I can’t drop this habit all at once. I’ll try my best, but if I can’t hold back, I’ll be very sorry. Is that fine?”

Felt: “It’s not fine in the slightest!”

Because Emilia did not hold any maliciousness, Felt could only give a low, cat-like growl to vent her irritation. On a surface level, people hearing their conversation would smile, as it looked like a happy exchange between best friends.

Subaru: “Well, our radio calisthenics are done, so feel free to go to bed. Or you could take a bath, they’re nice and refreshing.”

Otto: “I have already taken a bath… but, sadly, the smell of liquor did not seem to wash away.”

Subaru: “Before Garfiel shows up to yell at you, you’d best hurry up and wash it away. In my hometown, there’s a saying that any issue can be solved with a few hot baths.”

Otto: “It would be a catastrophe if he saw me like this… since you gave me your advice, I’ll follow it while I still have my life…”

Subaru lifted the depressed Otto to his feet and gave his weak shoulder a pat. Otto sighed, still despondent, as Subaru gazed up at the sky.

A sky full of smiles. Thin clouds hung in the early morning sky, reflecting the calm weather. Just as Subaru came to note this,

???: “—Good morning, citizens of Priestella.”

Subaru: “Huh?!”

A loud sound seemingly appeared out of thin air, echoing in everyone’s ears, surprising the unprepared Subaru.

It was no illusion; as Subaru looked around in panic, he saw Emilia, Felt, and Beatrice also glancing around, alarmed.

Subaru: “Hey, what’s this? It’s a really loud voice.”

Felt: “It’s not some kind of fantasy, it’s just a loud voice in the streets…”

Felt whispered softly to herself, while Subaru also made his own commentary, while suspecting that it was not unrelated to magic.

Speaking of magic that could send sound to an entire group of people, Subaru recalled the spell that made it possible to share one’s consciousness, Nect, that Julius had used before to connect everyone’s consciousness. However, it was simply a way of connecting people mentally within a limited range, and could not deliver sound directly to the ears.

Pondering this, Subaru thought that he had found a suitable answer. That was,

Subaru: “Something like a loudspeaker?”

Felt and Subaru had provided similar comments on the phenomenon, talking about a loud voice.

Resounding from the sky, the noise was loud enough that the entire city was probably able to hear it, in a very similar way to announcements made from a loudspeaker.

The only problem was that, in this world, there had no been any sign of such a scientific and technological development so far.

Otto: “Ah, you didn’t know? This broadcast functions with the help of a Mana-powered instrument in Priestella’s Metropolitan Government Hall.”

Subaru: “Mana… so it’s magic!”

Otto answered Subaru’s question, nodding as if to say, “Yes”.

Otto: “What I heard yesterday, when I was drinking with a great variety of people, was that every morning the City Hall would use a magical device to deliver an announcement to the citizens of Priestella.”

Subaru: “Huh, that’s such a strange daily routine.”

Otto: “Information that needs to be conveyed to all of the city’s areas can be heard immediately and conveniently. In the event of an emergency, evacuations or directions can be given easily. In order to keep such a stressful time from being too chaotic, doing this every morning allows the citizens to get used the speaker.”

Subaru: “Oh… I wouldn’t have thought of that.”

Using a magical device to prepare for emergencies.

Small villages were trouble enough, but if an accident took place in the city, handling it would quickly devolve into pandemonium. It was never a waste to come up with pre-emptive countermeasures to deal with such problems in advance.

It was unusual and fairly innovative for someone to take the time to ensure that the citizens would be well-prepared for it.

Subaru: “It looks like a pretty smart guy is responsible for this, maybe the Mayor?”

Otto: “No, it seems that it was Kiritaka-san who provided the magical device in the first place, and came up with the habit of using it for broadcasts. So it is only natural that he is involved in the management of the city.”

Subaru: “Eh…”

His admiration was suddenly interrupted by that impact.

Kiritaka had most likely been the one who’d yelled “Don’t touch my Liliana!” yesterday. Scenes of the negotiation flashed through Subaru’s mind. The screaming. The flash of the magical stone. The elegant man who had cried for Liliana afterward.

Subaru: “No, no.”

Beatrice: “No way, in fact.”

Emilia: “That seems a little…”

At Subaru, Beatrice, and Emilia’s perfect synchronization, Otto smiled wryly.

Otto: “I thought that you would reply like that, but the person in charge of the broadcast is in fact Kiritaka-san. Listen, isn’t that voice familiar?”

Kiritaka: “This is a magical device which can transmit my voice throughout the entire city. If I startled anyone unfamiliar with this, I offer my apologies. You’re very lucky to be hearing this broadcast today.”

Subaru: “Who’s that?”

Despite Otto’s follow-up, Subaru still had difficulty associating this voice with his impression of Kiritaka. He was so serious that it did not sound like a lolicon at all.

Subaru: “No, wait. Clind-san also doesn’t seem like a degenerate… could it be that lolicons are clever at disguising themselves? Lolicons with high social status are terrifying.”

Subaru again recalled the omnipotent butler. He had overwhelming intelligence and ability, but it was mixed with that kind of helpless inclination. Although it wouldn’t be quite right to call Clind a representative of all lolicons, it wasn’t impossible that there would be case of a high-class lolicon who resembled him.

Subaru: “Well, this Kiritaka guy is still very suspicious, and impressions from voices aren’t the most reliable…”

Kiritaka: “And to those who are listening, allow me to deliver, filled with my feelings… no! Filled with your feelings, a world of blessings! The morning has finally come… This is the Songstress Liliana, please be sure to listen!”

Liliana: “Ah, it’s me.”

In the midst of the mess, the man in Subaru’s memories and the man making the broadcast finally aligned.

This bother had decided to plague Subaru even in the early morning. He heard the shuffling sound of people changing locations, and then a slight cough which seemed to contain a smile.

Liliana: “Weeeell, hello everybody, this is Liliana, who was just introduced. Doing this every morning makes me feel the weight of expectation, but I still want to do my best to sing and play to create joy. Please oblige me.”

Subaru immediately recognized Liliana’s characteristic way of speaking, and felt as if he could see her odd behavior even through the magical device.

Curiously, unlike Kiritaka’s voice, which intermittently faded through the magical device, not a trace of Liliana’s voice was lost.

Subaru did not know if there was such a concept as an affinity for magical devices, but if there were any such blessings, those would suit the girl whose voice was loved by the Goddess of Song, so she would be able to sing clearly through the static.

Liliana: “Well, I’m eager to sing. Please listen—The Sword Demon’s Love Song, Act Two!”

Liliana inhaled gently as she prepared her instrument before playing it.

The song’s title stole Subaru’s attention from Liliana’s speech. If the song was indeed the tale of what he thought it was, then—

The song about to be played was the touching tragic love story about a woman, and a demon who lived by the sword.

2

The Songstress Liliana’s act of terrorism ended with her song, and Subaru returned to the living room for an early breakfast.

To be honest, the existence of the Sword Demon’s Love Song had struck Subaru like an unexpected bolt of lightning.

He should have realized long ago. No matter in which world, at any time, any heroic deeds that had been accomplished would be preserved for future generations. They could be documented in a number of ways, such as in writing or paintings.

It was not inconceivable that the heroine who had ended a civil war and the Sword Demon who took that heroine as his wife were immortalized in song.

Of course, even if Subaru had been aware of this possibility, he could not have done anything regarding what had happened this morning. He had not even known about the magical device, and he could not have known to tell Liliana to think about her actions.

Now, he could only curse the Songstress who had chosen her song at the most inopportune time without any regard for the situation.

His already poor impression of the Songstress had somehow plummeted even further at her inexplicably poorly timed enthusiasm. Liliana was an idiot, Kiritaka was a fool.

Subaru: "Has Wilhelm-san… come here yet?"

The earliest to arrive in the living room were the previous occupants of the courtyard, with the exception of Felt, who had parted with them after leaving. She would probably come later together with Reinhard.

Thinking of the song he had just heard, recalling Wilhelm's thoughts on his wife and grandson, and picturing the old man's smile, Subaru was unable to suppress the feelings that sprung up in his chest.

As for the words to say upon seeing him, Subaru had no idea how to find them. Even so, as long as there was communication, Subaru would be glad. Still, he seriously hoped that Wilhelm had somehow missed the song.

Subaru: "That group of overly-serious people, it's impossible that all of them would be sleeping in on the same day."

The three main members of Crusch's faction, and even Felix, worked and rested on a balanced schedule. Even having lived with them only a few days, Subaru was well-aware of this.

On a journey to an unfamiliar place, they would probably be nervous and maintain their schedule even more rigorously, so it was impossible that they would have missed the broadcast.

Emilia: “Subaru, you look awful, what’s wrong?”

Emilia leveled her gaze at Subaru, who sat on a cushion, rapidly tapping his feet in anxiety.

After the broadcast had ended, Subaru had immediately proposed that their faction should go to the tearoom. After confirming that the tearoom was empty, he claimed its undisturbed peace.

Emilia and the others simply savored the tragic lyrics of the Sword Demon’s Love Song and indulged in Liliana’s voice. They were unaware that the Sword Demon recorded in song was Wilhelm, or of any of the origins of the Sword Demon.

Therefore, it was no wonder that they could not empathize with Subaru’s anxiety.

Even more frightening was that Liliana’s song had captured even Subaru.

Subaru, who had been plagued with a sense of trepidation upon hearing the song’s title, could not bring himself to leave the courtyard while listening to it. Or, rather, that kind of thought did not even surface at the time.

Liliana’s singing must have contained magic. Because of this, even after recovering, Subaru could not shake off a sense of anxiety when thinking of that hasty brunette.

Subaru: “…It’s nothing. Nothing, nothing, just, I’m a little hungry… You see, even though the inn’s food is delicious, isn’t it a little lacking in quantity? My body wants me to pilfer snacks so I can eat them and grow.”

Emilia: “Subaru, I don’t believe you.”

Although she was usually easily deceived, Emilia saw right through Subaru’s bluff at this critical moment. Was he so easy to read?

Subaru's confidence vanished.

Otto: "Really, Natsuki-san. Although I do not know what you are anxious about, we are discussing our plans for the afternoon. You should be paying attention."

Subaru: "This afternoon's plan, oh yeah, the second negotiation with Kiritaka. Hmm… Could we take Liliana hostage so we can exchange her with the magic stone we want?"

Otto: "Why in the world would you propose such a forceful plan?!"

Otto, amazed by Subaru's words, raised his voice as his face adopted a gloomy expression. Seeing that, Subaru tilted his head with an "Eh". Perhaps it was due to his still-burning anger towards Liliana, but it probably wouldn't serve to raise the plan's success rate.

Otto: "In any case, this afternoon, we'll be attempting negotiations with Kiritaka-san again, and the one we should try to win the trust of is that member of the Scales of the White Dragon, who is the most likely person able to persuade Kiritaka-san.

Subaru: "Scales of the White Dragon, that's such a cool name. Was he at the meeting yesterday?"

Otto: "Yes, the Scales of the White Dragon is a well-known mercenary group in this area. Although they were established a long time ago, they were recently hired as a private force by Kiritaka-san. That man was their representative."

Subaru: "Of the people who were there… Ah, he's probably the best person to talk to."

While he had not been there to observe the room the negotiation had taken place in, Subaru had a vague recollection of the presence of a middle-aged man in white before the magic stone's light engulfed him.

Compared to Kiritaka, who was mad for Liliana, who was often in a state of madness herself, Subaru was certainly eager to talk to someone more rational than the two.

Otto: “Judging by this morning’s broadcast, Kiritaka-san’s anger should have calmed down somewhat, and he should be willing to listen to us. However, if Natsuki-san is going to be present, then he will be significantly less reasonable, most likely.”

Subaru: “I know my scary eyes put people off the first time they see me, but I didn’t expect such an aggressive reaction. That kinda hurt.”

Emilia: “It’s okay, Subaru. I don’t dislike those fierce-looking eyes. My Mother also had very fierce eyes, but she was such a gentle person.”

Beatrice: “Subaru’s face isn’t that bad, in fact… Actually, I was mistaken, I suppose.”

Subaru: “No comfort is preferable, actually. Don’t make me face the truth.”

Subtle bore the gentle and stern words of the two women, before urging Otto to continue. Otto went on saying, “So,”

Otto: “During today’s negotiations, I think Natsuki-san should not accompany us. Is that okay?”

Subaru: “No matter what, I don’t have a choice but to agree, but if you succeed, then what’s the point of me being here?”

Otto: “Between having just Natsuki-san come for nothing, and having all of us come for nothing, we should choose the smaller loss of just Natsuki-san, who only runs around playing with Beatrice-chan.”

Beatrice: “I feel like you’re underestimating Betty, in fact! It’s annoying, I suppose!”

Beatrice’s anger was dismissed, and their plan of action was finalized for the time being. Nevertheless, Subaru had also considered what Otto was likely thinking.

Subaru: “Then this afternoon I’ll go with Emilia-tan to take a walk with Beako.”

Emilia: “Ehh? I won’t be going to see Kiritaka-san with Otto-kun?”

Otto: “They have surely anticipated that we would come to negotiate again, and if we were to take Emilia-sama, we would be making a sudden, unannounced visit, and we will fail just as we did yesterday… Natsuki-san, I am glad you realize this, but I cannot help but think that you’re up to something.”

Otto glared at Subaru, who responded with an innocent whistle.

He had told Otto about meeting Liliana yesterday, but he had neglected to mention where they had met. And Kiritaka had most likely predicted that the Emilia Camp would be looking to negotiate again.

Now, what would Kiritaka do with Liliana if he did not want her to meet Subaru and the others? The clue was Liliana’s actions on the previous day.

Subaru: “I found a nice park, and I’d like Emilia-tan to come with me. We could take stroll with Beatrice holding our hands between us.”

Emilia: “Wow, that sounds like fun. But I wonder if it’s okay for us to relax like that. Well, Otto-kun?”

Otto: “I can’t refuse if you stare at me with such expecting eyes. Well, Natsuki-san and Emilia-sama both cannot attend due to a variety of circumstances, so I will visit the other party with Garfiel. Please do not cause any trouble.”

In affirmation of Otto’s words, Emilia and Subaru nodded earnestly. But Subaru also stuck his tongue out at Otto’s back as an apology.

Liliana would almost certainly not be present at the Muse Chamber of Commerce today. In that case, Subaru could only assume that she would go to the same park as yesterday. If she were not to be found there, Subaru would accept that there was nothing he could do, but he still wished to establish a relationship with her if he could.

If Kiritaka truly loved Liliana from the bottom of his heart, there was quite a large possibility that he would agree to a direct request from her.

Of course, he wasn't just thinking of using Liliana. If he abused her good intentions, Emilia would oppose it, and Subaru's own conscience wouldn't let him walk free. Thus, Subaru decided to tell Liliana his story without any reservations.

Subaru hoped that the result would be honest, even if it strayed from the heroic biography that she had been expecting and ended up disappointing her.

Immortalized in history as a hero, in song. Just the thought gave Subaru goosebumps, but if he had to add fuel to the fire, he wanted to leave an honest impression. At the very least, his audience would be disillusioned about Subaru's famed heroic deeds upon learning of his miserable mistakes along the way.

Anastasia: "—Good morning. You're all up early."

Just as Emilia's faction decided on their internal and external plans of action, the door of the tearoom was opened, revealing the figure of Anastasia. Today's Anastasia wore her usual fox scarf coupled with a kimono.

It was indeed a surprise to suddenly see a kimono, and Subaru was excited. Emilia's eyes gleamed for a different reason; she was delighted to see the unusual clothing. Anastasia gazed at them with pride.

Anastasia: "Very nice, very nice. I'm glad to be shockin' people so early in the morning."

Emilia: "Anastasia-san, that dress is so beautiful. Is that what you were talking about yesterday?"

Anastasia: "Yep. This is the kimono I mentioned at the bath yesterday. Although it looks a lot like a yukata, it takes a lotta preparation to wear."

Anastasia turned delightedly, showing off her blue-dyed clothing, which was charmingly patterned with floating, scattered petals. He never ceased to be amazed at Kararagi's ability to recreate the Japanese style. And what he had thought to be nearly-certain, now turned out to be certain.

—Kararagi clearly shared much with the Japanese culture Subaru was familiar with.

Subaru: “That type of clothing, has it been handed down from generation to generation?”

Anastasia: “Well, you’re quite knowledgeable, Natsuki-kun. This type of clothin’ did seem to be more common at the time of Hoshin. Though, that method of production was temporarily lost, and only in the past decade or so did craftsmen start bein’ able to reproduce them.”

Subaru: “Hoshin’s era.”

This mysterious man, Hoshin of the Wastelands, appeared once again. Now, Subaru had no choice but to suspect that Hoshin, like Subaru and Al, had been summoned. However, unlike Subaru and Al, Hoshin had been from four-hundred years ago.

Subaru: “The priority is figuring the current situation out, but afterward I might want to take a good look at this Hoshin…”

On the matter of his summoning, Subaru did not intend to start digging for knowledge at this point.

He did not know anything about the mechanism of summoning, nor did he know the purpose of the summoner. However, this call was one-sided, only attracting him to this place. There was no such convenience that would allow him to go back home.

On this matter, just considering it would be like fishing for the moon in a puddle. There was no solution. What Subaru wanted to know was what predecessors he had had, what kind of footprints they had left in this world, and where they had ended up. Nothing more.

Reinhard: “Good morning, Subaru. Did you sleep well last night? You were a great help in reminding Felt-sama to return to her room this morning.”

Felt: “How annoying. It wasn’t my intention to go back there.”

After Anastasia, Reinhard strode into the tearoom with Felt in tow. He deposited her on a cushion, giving no indication of whether he had heard the song that morning or not.

He certainly must have known that the Sword Demon’s Love Song was referring to his own grandfather.

Reinhard: “Anastasia-sama, you look more beautiful with each passing morning. I had been a little concerned about your modesty, but now it seems unfounded.”

Anastasia: “Hehehe, this is my treasured possession. I can’t go into Priestella without preparin’ myself. On that note, I still to have to show off to Julius.”

After that, Julius also joined them, and Anastasia showed off her garb to her Knight. After she had received her due flattery, Anastasia tilted her head at him.

Anastasia: “Didn’t Mimi and the others join you?”

Julius: “Ricardo said he had something to do and went out to the city last night, but Mimi and her brothers… they seem to be following Garfiel of the Emilia Camp.”

Emilia: “They’re following Garfiel?”

Emilia looked up upon hearing the name of one of her servants. Julius nodded.

Julius: “Mimi found Garfiel leaving the inn, and immediately gave chase. Then Hetaro went after her, and Tivey, who cleans up their messes, said that he would handle it, so they all left Joshua.”

Anastasia descended upon Joshua with her hands on her hips, the latter hiding behind the tall Julius. The handsome young man bowed his head to his wrathful master as he stepped forward timidly, looking extremely pale and concerned.

Joshua: “I am deeply, extremely sorry… I desperately tried to stop them, but Mimi and Hetaro were not listening at all. Tivey said to please leave everything to him."

Anastasia: "Well, if Tivey's there, they shouldn't cause any problems. Let's put it aside, we're the hosts, but we're makin' quite a spectacle of ourselves in front of our guests.

Patiently patting the ashamed Joshua's shoulders in a sign of forgiveness, Anastasia turned to face everyone present with a gracious smile. She shook her supple hair, her fingers playing with her scarf.

Anastasia: "As you've just witnessed, this embarrassin' fiasco is happenin', I hope ya'll excuse it… Our adorable deputy captain, seemingly distracted by her first love, is having a hard time fightin' her impulses."

Mimi was obsessed with Garfiel and wanted to cling to his side, everyone present could see this. Everyone, with two exceptions. Emilia had tilted her head in confusion, and Joshua issued a sigh of "So that's what it was".

Subaru: "By the way, Felt, I didn't see that Tonchinkan trio at all. Are they all staying here?"

Felt: "You mean Gaston and the others? Well, having them living here would be a waste and a joke, and they're so unused to places like this that they'd feel awkward. They're living somewhere cheaper in the city, but…"

As she answered Subaru's question, Felt grinned, showing her teeth.

Felt: "Hey, that Tonchinkan nickname ain't so bad, since their names are Gaston, Rachins, and Camberly. It's not confusing at all, and they don't seem to mind it."

Subaru: "I also think it's a great nickname, I want to praise the me from a year ago. When I first heard their real names, I thought a miracle had happened."

Tonchinkan were called Tonchinkan, cheers to his past self who hadn't made them Anpontan. And it seeming that he was somehow pleased with that, cheers to the future of Tonchinkan, who he would continue to call primarily Tonchinkan from this moment onwards.

Crusch: “—We are late, it looks like we are the last ones here.”

Finally arriving in the tearoom was Crusch’s faction. Today, she had worked her long green hair up, and fitting of her new self, wore a gorgeous ladylike-like floral hairpin.

She took a brief walk into the room, followed by Felix and Wilhelm, who was, as always, solemnly dressed, his back upright. Looking at the old man’s posture, Subaru couldn’t help but shake his shoulders. He swallowed, trying to steal a glance at the old man’s face, and Wilhelm caught Subaru’s gaze.

Wilhelm: “…”

He showed a faint smile, giving a slight bow. Witnessing this action, Subaru received the message contained in the earlier smile: “You have nothing to worry about”.”

Subaru’s heart began to beat faster, until he saw Felix, sitting at Crusch’s side, winking and giving a peace sign.

—No worries, we’ve taken care of it.

That was the message Subaru received from Felix. Perhaps he had noticed Subaru’s attention. He ceased making his gestures and began to cling to Crusch’s side as he always did.

Subaru was conscious of what it was like to be useless and was afraid of appearing nosy.

Crusch and Felix certainly knew more than Subaru about the connection between Wilhelm and those songs. They were more sensitive and had greater proximity with Wilhelm. That was natural, because they were his companions. Subaru did not need his worries.

Subaru: “Better to say that it is our negligence that we couldn’t help Garfiel.”

This was not to say that he should not care about others. Rather, it is better to first do something for your own faction, which would leave you free to help others.

However, the turbulent depression in Garfiel's body was something that could only be overcome by Garfiel's own efforts, so that line of thought would solve nothing.

Anastasia: "Well, there's still a few people who haven't shown up, but in all likelihood, they won't be comin'."

Clapping her hands, Anastasia declared so. Although the number of occupants was less than that of last night's attendees, the number was still impressive. After all, among what happened last night, eating itself had also been very exciting.

What to put on this morning—with a short pause of anticipation, Anastasia smiled and said,

Anastasia: "Bring it in."

At her orders, an employee of the inn opened the door, and, immediately afterward, a large heated block of iron was carried in by staff.

Anastasia: "Today's treat is the traditional Kararagi breakfast—the daisukiyaki pancake!"

Anastasia rolled her sleeves up slightly, raising her voice.

In front of a silent crowd, the inn's staff coated the iron with a layer of oil and carried in an assortment of ingredients one by one into the room.

The daisukiyaki pancake—from the name, the iron plate, and the assortment of ingredients, Subaru saw something incredibly familiar. Something called,

Subaru: "A Japanese… okonomiyaki…?!"

As something that had been passed down as daisukiyaki, the Japanese okonomiyaki pancake arrived on stage.

3

Emilia: “Subaru, Subaru, look at my masterpiece!”

Beatrice: “Subaru, this is the best pancake made by Betty, I suppose. You can have it, in fact.”

Emilia smiled earnestly, and Beako’s face was a little flushed. Each placed their best pancake in front of him, each one a daisukiyaki that had failed to become a daisukiyaki. To Subaru, they were just charred blocks of black charcoal. The two, however, were completely unaware of their lack of skill, and Subaru did not disdainfully throw away their feelings.

Subaru: “Try it yourself before you recommend it to others.”

With this sensible suggestion, Subaru held back a look of pain as the two obediently started on their pancakes, and turned his attention to the other factions.

Reinhard: “Finished, Felt-sama.”

Felt: “Oh, it’s good, make me some more. I’m always grateful for your skill in cooking and making delicious sweets.”

Reinhard: “If you count on me for anything else, I’ll be living up to my honor as a Knight.”

This was Felt’s faction. Reinhard made perfect pancakes at an impossible pace, and Felt gobbled them up just as fast. Hidden somewhere in Felt’s slim figure was King of Stomachs. Or she was just gluttonous. Either way, she ate far more than her share.

All in all, Reinhard had yet to eat, while Felt had already polished off ten.

Incidentally, Emilia’s faction was faring awfully as mentioned earlier. As had just been demonstrated, Emilia and Beatrice had not pulled their weight, and the only successful members were Otto and Subaru.

Otto: “Look, Emilia-sama and Beatrice-chan. I cooked them properly. Oh, eat this… Ah! Emilia-sama! Self-reflection is good, but don't eat them raw! Beatrice-chan, that's too much sauce!"

Much thanks to Otto, who acted like a father, stomachaches could be avoided for a while.

Of the other factions, the person that stood out the most was Anastasia. This was the surprise breakfast that she had planned herself. She had both deep confidence, in herself, and love, for the daisukiyaki.

Anastasia: "Watch carefully! This is the real daisukiyaki!"

She flipped the pancakes neatly and smoothly, and put beautifully-made pancakes onto Julius's plate.

Julius: "I am unworthy of eating Anastasia-sama's food, but I think they would be better if they were cooked for a shorter amount of time. Of course, I do not mean to bother Anastasia-sama."

Anastasia: "Yeah, yeah, they need to be less charred. Even though Julius's a man, he speaks like a tender maiden."

Unlike Subaru, who redirected his offerings and told the people who had presented him with a gift to reflect on themselves, Julius not only ate the slightly-burnt pancakes, but kept a straight face and gave Anastasia pointers to improve.

That person was a role model as a Knight. Subaru absolutely did not want to imitate him, and lacked the ability to do so anyway.

Sitting at their side, eating sticky raw pancakes, was Joshua, looking pitiful. His monocle seemed to be fogging over, preventing him from seeing properly, and he desperately tried to hide his struggle. He would feel mortified if Subaru, who he hated, noticed this embarrassing spectacle, so Subaru did not call out to him.

After seeing the difference in elegance between the brothers, Subaru could only conclude that the most stable faction was Crusch's.

Felix: "Oh, Crusch-sama, Ferri-chan made really beautiful pancakes, take a look!"

Crusch: “Hmm, you certainly have, but I will not be defeated.”

Like a passionate competition between two women, Crusch and Felix conversed. Their confidence was supported by their results—the pancakes they had made were perfect. Felix had even added cat ears to his.

Felix: “Please enjoy my daisukiyaki, they’re filled with Ferri-chan’s love. Crusch-sama, open wide!”

Crusch: “Hey, hey… That, um…”

Although, the happy scene did feel a little off-putting. That may have been because Subaru knew they were man and woman, or because he knew that Crusch’s temperament had changed after her memory loss.

Anyway, master and servant appeared to have no problems. The last member of their faction, sitting next to the peach-colored space, and focusing on his own pancake, was Wilhelm.

Wilhelm: “Hmmm…”

Wilhelm, who had been trying to turn the dough over, closed his eyes and sighed. It seemed that his pancake had been torn apart after Wilhelm had left it on the iron for too long, causing it to stick.

He had unexpectedly seen Wilhelm’s clumsy side.

Subaru: “I feel like I saw something I shouldn’t have, but in that case…”

Feeling that he should help Wilhelm, Subaru climbed to his feet, then sat back down, reconsidering. He then nodded to Wilhelm,

Subaru: “Wilhelm-san.”

Wilhelm: “…Subaru-dono?”

Hearing his name, Wilhelm lifted his head. Noticing that Subaru had seen his clumsiness, his brow furrowed in shame.

Subaru gave him an encouraging nod, and gently pointed to his neighbor with his jaw.

Wilhelm, who understood his meaning, swallowed quietly.

Wilhelm: “…”

Moving to the place indicated by Subaru, Wilhelm took a seat next to Reinhard. He obediently followed each of Felt’s instructions, producing pancakes without halt and failing to notice the exchange between Subaru and Wilhelm.

Although, Subaru had already communicated everything he wanted to say to Wilhelm.

Consternation, confusion, hesitation, doubt, all wavered in Wilhelm’s eyes. He took a long time to reach a decision. Finally,

Wilhelm: “—Reinhard.”

Reinhard: “…”

Reinhard froze as Wilhelm forced himself to call his grandson's name.

His spatula hovered in midair as his hands stopped moving, and Felt plated the pancake with a perfect catch.

That act was inelegant, but Reinhard took no notice of it.

The red-haired youth faced Wilhelm with wide eyes. Wilhelm met his gaze head on, without so much as drawing a breath.

Wilhelm: "…"

Reinhard: "…"

Abruptly, silence fell.

Not just between the two, but also between the people around them who had noticed. The entire room stilled, and the only remaining sounds were those of daisukiyaki burning on iron plates.

Time seemed to stagnate as everyone held their collective breaths.

Wilhelm: "I, um, that is…"

Reinhard: "What is it, oji-sama?"

Wilhelm: "I… I am not so good at this, so, you, if you know any kind of trick to make it easier, could… you teach it to me?"

Those were Wilhelm's clumsy, stuttering words.

Only Crusch, Felix, and Subaru widened their eyes, understanding what kind of resolve Wilhelm had needed to choke those words out. Wilhelm himself seem to sag with exhaustion after posing the question.

Wordlessly, Reinhard swallowed as he considered how to answer. His fair features stilled as an unfamiliar emotion washed over his blue eyes.

Reinhard closed his eyes and buried that emotion into a soft sigh. Then,

Reinhard: “Yes, I understand, oji-sama.”

The corners of his mouth turned up as he closed his eyes. That expression could only be described as a smile.

It was not the reassuring smile he usually wore to give others a sense of security. This may have been the only time anyone had seen the young man named Reinhard step out of his role as the Sword Saint, and show a genuine smile.

Wilhelm’s dumbstruck expression slowly reclaimed its composure. He lowered his face, closing his eyes as if he were enduring something. He probably had difficulty processing that feeling immediately.

However, the real genuine feeling was there. Once delivered, it only needed to be accepted.

The long divide between the two, grandfather and grandson, could only be offset by a corresponding amount of time.

Subaru, seeing such a possibility play out in front of him, clenched his fist with a plethora of emotions.

From the bottom of his heart, he wanted to greet Wilhelm with joy. And,

???: “—It will not be so easy, Honored Father. Don’t think your relationship will be fixed with just that.”

Suddenly, a red-haired figure threw open the sliding door of the tearoom.

The face of the red-haired man who had spoken those words carried so much malice that everyone froze on the spot, forgetting the flow of time.

Chapter 16:
Uninvited Guests

1

That touching moment was spoiled in the worst way.

The red-haired man’s behavior and attitude all betrayed an ugly nature. A rather repulsive smile spread across his unshaven face. He looked to be in his forties and carried the unpleasant scent of alcohol about him.

Although his actions and appearance all evoked a sense of disgust which seemed to reflect his character, the man underneath the poor grooming was quite handsome.

The beautiful characteristics—their desired form, were contaminated by something that was completely different. Something about the tall man’s posture exuded an aura of repulsiveness.

Subaru: “…Who are you?”

???: “Ahh?”

The first to break the shocked silence that had fallen across the tearoom was none other than Subaru, who reached the back of his own waist, and gripped the handle of the weapon there.

Having lost his cool, Subaru’s spinning head drove him to act impulsively. There was nothing that could have angered him more the interruption of the reconciliation between the clumsy, awkward duo of grandfather and grandson.

Only Subaru knew why he was in such a frenzied rage.

It was not just a reconciliation between a friend and someone he respected that had been interrupted. It was reconciliation between family. The beginning of a family looking for a connection. To dare to treat it like that,

Subaru: “Answer me. Who the hell are you?”

???: “…You’re really casting a hostile look at me, kid. As a Knight, you do know who you’re trying to provoke, right?”

Subaru: “Don’t make me laugh, mister. The one being provocative is you. I’m just asking you exactly what you’re doing here.”

His patience reaching a breaking point, Subaru stood from the banquet on the spot.

Beatrice, who was sitting next to him, saw the feelings fueling his reaction and shifted her position so that she could take his hand at any time. His reliable partner had accurately sensed flames of anger residing in Subaru’s heart.

Glancing at Subaru with an unpleasant expression, the man scratched his head with a rude gesture.

???: “You’re so annoying, kid. Hey, Sword Saint. Or Juukulius too, or even Argyle. Cut down this rude kid for me.”

Subaru: “—Hk!”

Pointing at Subaru with the hand he had been scratching his head with, the insolent man casually gave an order to three people in the hall, Reinhard among them.

Seeing that humiliation to his comrades, or rather, to people who he could call his comrades, Subaru wanted to strike at that grin with his whip.

Julius: “Please pay heed to your words.”

But he was interrupted by Julius’s words before he could move.

Julius, who had stood up at some point, gently placed a hand on Subaru’s shoulder from behind. Julius nodded slightly at the frozen Subaru, then turned to face the man.

Julius: “Currently, Felix and I, and Reinhard as well, we three are on temporary leave from our normal duties as we are serving our specific masters. Therefore, even the Deputy Commander should not hold the right to command us.”

Felix: “Yep. Ferri-chan is now an obedient servant to the venerable Crusch-samaaa~. Therefore, I have nyo obligation to comply with the order.”

Keeping his sitting posture, Felix held Crusch’s arm as he offered an immediate follow-up to Julius’s words. Although Crusch, whose arm had just been taken, appeared a little surprised, she still filled her eyes with her strong will as she turned toward the red-haired man.

The expression on everyone else’s faces were similar; no one hid their hostility toward the man. That was natural. They had just shared a pleasant atmosphere, which had been torn apart by the man.

However,

???: “Ohh, ohhhh, I’m scared, how scary. Wasn’t it obvious that I was just kidding around? It’s not like I don’t know the gravity of my orders as the Deputy Commander.”

Subaru: “The… Deputy Commander?”

The alcoholic man seemed to find something funny, slapping his legs in laughter at Julius and Felix’s reactions. During their exchange, a word he could not let slip past reached Subaru. And so, he frowned, and posed his question.

In response, the man once again leveled his mocking gaze in Subaru’s direction.

???: “That’s right. That’s my delectable adornment. Deputy Commander of the Knights of the Kingdom of Lugunica, Heinkel, that’s me.”

Subaru: “Don’t give me such a righteous look.”

Heinkel: “Hahaha, this kid’s voice is really harsh. It hurts, hurts, hurts me… I'll shut your worthless mouth, you dog."

Subaru: "—Hk!"

The darkness twinkling in the man's narrowed eyes sent a shuddering chill down Subaru's back. It was different from the awe-inspiring presence of a strong person, or an overwhelming being like the White Whale or a Witch. It was something far more unspeakable.

That something was familiar to Subaru, and yet it was impossible to recall exactly what it was. There was nowhere to escape that sense, and Subaru felt a ringing in his ears.

Julius: "Calm down, Subaru. Don't let the atmosphere of the Deputy Commander swallow you."

Julius, who stood by his side, spoke to Subaru, his head dizzy.

Hearing him, that man—Heinkel, faced Julius with a dark smile.

Heinkel: "Ha! A worthy reply. An exemplary, polite answer. To show that respect as a Knight, you truly are the Finest of Knights."

Julius: "Allow me to accept the compliment, Deputy Commander Heinkel… If I may ask, what is the reason for your visit? If my memory serves correctly, your duty as Deputy Commander should be guarding the Royal Capital."

Heinkel: "Drop those sarcastic words. Just how great of an influence on the vigilant defense of the Royal Capital can the absence of one man make? Captain Marcus-sama can handle it perfectly alone, far better than I could… Ah, although, a Royal Family who could suffer disaster is missing."

Wilhelm: "Heinkel!"

Considering his position, Heinkel's speech was incredibly disrespectful. Upon hearing it, Wilhelm roared his name in fury. The Sword Demon, shaking with anger directed a sharp glare at Heinkel, who merely shrugged his shoulders.

Wilhelm: “Heinkel…”

Heinkel: “Just calling me once is fine. I’ve yet to lose my hearing from old age. Well, treat that as a drunken idiot’s nonsense and ignore it. More importantly—”

Heinkel responded to Wilhelm’s bitter voice by sticking a finger into his ear as he closed his blue eyes. Then, he opened them to look at Wilhelm.

Heinkel: “Isn’t that a very nice feeling? I want to offer you my congratulations for your defeat of the White Whale, but you’ve been avoiding me. This is a feat that took fourteen long years to accomplish, after all. I’d think that I also have the right to join the joyful celebrations. Isn’t that the case, Honored Father?”

Wilhelm: “Heinkel, I…”

Heinkel: “Reinhard, what about you?”

Reinhard: “…”

Heinkel viciously stabbed his words into Wilhelm’s chest.

Although the old man’s face showed the pain of being cut by a blade, Heinkel showed no sign of caring. Instead, he directed his malice at a new target, Reinhard, who had silently observed the situation until just now, slowly looked at Heinkel upon hearing his name.

Heinkel: “Shouldn’t you also be congratulating Honored Father on the burden that’s been lifted off his shoulders? Since he’s carried out a wife, a mother, a grandmother’s vengeance. At least offer him some nice words. That said…”

Reinhard: “…”

Heinkel: “—With this, Honored Father has finally avenged the previous Sword Saint who you’d murdered, isn’t that right?”

—Subaru withdrew his original assertion.

Saying that Heinkel wore a malicious look on his face had been a mistake.

Rather, he was the face of malice itself.

Heinkel's words, expression, attitude, tone, behavior, and gaze—all of these were manifestations of his intent, one that could only be described by the term "malice".

Indeed, every bit of Heinkel's demeanor contained nothing but pure malice.

Subaru: "Previous Sword Saint, murdered…?"

Subaru quietly blurted out those impressionable words. In his consciousness, there were other questions swimming about, but Subaru could not reasonably sort through them.

However, malicious intent would always spring on such an opportunity.

Heinkel: "Yeah, the predecessor Sword Saint, murdered. Although I don't know exactly how ignorant you are, but you have to be familiar with the title of Sword Saint, right? Our current Sword Saint is the most powerful hero of our day… But that was something he got from murdering his predecessor, robbing it from his own grandmother. Although that fact was immediately hidden from public knowledge."

Wilhelm: "Silence, Heinkel! You… Just how far are you intending to go?"

Heinkel: "If you want to say something that sounds nice, then please stop, Honored Father. If nothing else, you simply don't have the right to disagree with me. After all, when the last Sword Saint died, the first to condemn Reinhard was none other than you."

Wilhelm: "—Hk."

Heinkel's words contained a dense, noxious poison of abhorrence. And the contents of his speech were no more than vulgar curses.

Reinhard had murdered his predecessor? Inconceivable.

Wilhelm had bitterly condemned that Reinhard? Inconceivable.

After all, to Reinhard, his predecessor had been…

And to Wilhelm, Reinhard was…

So obviously, that could not have been possible.

Reinhard and Wilhelm: "…"

Neither Reinhard nor Wilhelm would deny it, closing their mouths.

Why? If either of them denied it, if either of them uttered a simple "no", then Subaru would instantly believe it.

A comrade and a beloved mentor. A malicious man covered with the scent of alcohol. There was absolutely no question as to who Subaru would believe. Therefore, he wanted one of them to deny those words.

Heinkel: "Is it hard to communicate now? Of course it is. It's been this way for fourteen years. Neither you nor my father have changed at all. Without change, it's impossible for you to reconcile. That'd be too convenient. Would Thearesia van Astrea forgive such a selfish affair?"

In the silence of the tearoom, only Heinkel's profane words echoed.

The previous Sword Saint—She had been Wilhelm's wife, as well as Reinhard's grandmother. And, to Heinkel,

Heinkel: "My dead Mother is cursing us. Three generations, and none of us have been forgiven."

Reinhard's father. Wilhelm's son. Considering Heinkel's words and deeds so far, Subaru correctly deduced his origin.

Subaru: "Heinkel van Astrea…"

Testing the name out, he found that it echoed with the sense of correctness.

The man in front of him was undoubtedly a member of the Astrea Family. Even if his nature as a human was completely different from the other, upstanding Astreas that Subaru knew.

Heinkel: “Don’t attach the «van» to my name, kid. I haven’t been given that honor. It’s just Heinkel Astrea.”

Subaru: “…?”

Hearing Subaru’s questioning breath, Heinkel clicked his tongue and looked away.

For the first time since arriving here, bitterness flashed over his half-visible face. His eyes, which had contained only sadistic glee as he’d insulted his family, seemed to carry a look of pain.

—As soon as he’d begun to ponder what had happened, Subaru was interrupted.

Emilia: “So… what did you come here for?”

Subaru: “Emilia?”

Everyone had been shuddering at Heinkel’s unforgivable attitude. However, it was Emilia who first stood up and questioned him.

Her silver hair floating behind her, she stood next to Subaru, who could feel a wave of anger emanating from her. To Emilia, not feeling anger over the ruined atmosphere of the room or over such impolite behavior was impossible. She only ever became seriously angry when the situation concerned the feelings of others. And even she was aware of how Reinhard and Wilhelm had been hurt.

Emilia: “We were dining happily. To deliberately spoil such a peaceful moment, what exactly do you intend?”

Heinkel: “…Oh, this is unexpected. Are you not Emilia-sama? I’ve heard the rumors. A poor half-devil girl who stands no fighting chance but struggles along anyway.”

Emilia: “Although I’d like to one day talk to you and ask how you think of me, right now I only want to hear one answer from you. Why did you come here?”

Heinkel: “…”

Was he attempting to throw Emilia off with insults? Subaru saw through him, and the surprised Heinkel felt disappointed. The members of the other factions also seemed surprised at Emilia’s calm demeanor.

It was a stark difference from the innocence Emilia had shown in the past. To say that she was pretending to be innocent would be a lie, however. This was Emilia being true to herself.

Emilia: “The reason why we all gathered here, was because we were invited by Anastasia-san. It’s very rare that we are all gathered in the same place, so I don’t think you would have randomly targeted such an opportunity. If you are someone important among the Royal Guard, then please tell me exactly what you want.”

Heinkel: “Tch. Not the same as the rumors…”

Emilia: “Answer me.”

Heinkel, who had been again scratching his head, was shaken by Emilia’s momentum.

Although Emilia was angry, she was by no means preparing an attack. The pressure emanating from her had nothing to do with magic. It was merely the strength of her feelings.

Felt: “You marched in with confidence, just to back down when a girl glares at you. Mister, that’s pretty embarrassing.”

Anastasia: “That’s right. Just when I was lookin’ forward to sharing a fun story, too. Songstress-san’s apparently quite the whimsical character, that’d be more interestin’?”

Crusch: “Well, is that so? Then, I’d appreciate it if this puzzling man would leave, since I’d love to discuss these rumors about Songstress-san with everyone here.”

Heinkel: “—Hk.”

Following Emilia, Felt, Anastasia, and Crusch spoke up as well.

Like Emilia, who still faced Heinkel, the three joined their domineering forces in opposition to the man. Facing the pressure and intimidation of all four, Heinkel’s face could not help but twitch.

They were on completely different levels. Considering his title, his position was rather lacking.

Julius: “I am sorry, Deputy Commander. If there is nothing else for the time being, then I believe, for the benefit of all parties involved, that you should take your leave.”

Heinkel’s reaction, and the attitude of the Royal Candidates.

Julius calculated that this would be the right time to bail Heinkel out. Subaru would have preferred to crush Heinkel on the spot, but changed his mind after seeing Reinhard and Wilhelm.

He did not fully grasp the situation, and so he could not make hasty judgements.

Heinkel: “Grr…”

Julius: “Deputy Commander. Please make a decision. If possible, it is better for both parties to say nothing more…”

???: “—There is no need for that, commoner.”

That lustrous voice shined with the self-assurance of one that looked down on everything.

The owner of that confident voice, which could shake the will of its listeners, seemed able to impose their own superiority wherever they went.

Capable of dismissing common sense and establishing a new set of rules, ones which allowed no protest or objection.

All the people in the tearoom looked at the sliding door near where Heinkel stood.

Everyone was fully aware that someone was about to stride in from the corridor. Heinkel had long since ceased to exist in anyone’s mind. There was only caution against the sun’s burning scowl that lit the corridor as it walked down.

???: “So, all of the trivial people have arrived? You have prepared a stage for mine debut. You deserve praise for your behavior, and that only.”

A boldly exposed chest hugged by a blood-red dress, a mouth coquettishly covered by a fan. Her arms were crossed under her ample chest, pushing it up in the glamorous act of showing off her white skin without reservation. The behavior of a villainous woman.

Her bright red eyes resembling the licks of a flame, a seductive atmosphere that amounted to an enchantment capable of mesmerizing all the men in the world.

Even seeing her once would scorch her violent beauty into one’s memory forever. Excessive beauty would go as far as to become violently so—Her existence proved this.

A teenage girl named Priscilla Barielle.

The uninvited fifth candidate of the Royal Selection.

2

Priscilla: “So is this it? Frozen faces in a lifeless environment. Do you like this stale air so much? Or is it that every time we meet, such an atmosphere forms? If so, that’s incredibly pitiful.”

Priscilla frowned as she looked throughout the room and spoke in a provocative tone while fanning her face.

Due to her abrupt debut, no one was able to rebut her insults.

Priscilla: “What a poor reception. I deliberately graced this place with mine presence. Placing your forehead on the floor and treating me with admiration and praise is what the correct reaction would be.”

Subaru: “…That’s how people would treat a deity. It won’t happen unless you actually become the Monarch.”

Priscilla: “Hmm?”

Subaru couldn’t help but comment on Priscilla’s arrogance. Hearing his mutter, Priscilla turned to look at him, trapping Subaru with her bright red gaze.

Subaru: “What?”

Priscilla: “…Who are you? I had heard that this would be a gathering of fools who know not their place and would compete for the throne. Of course, they would also bring fools who support them. But why is a vulgar commoner like yourself present?”

Subaru: “Are you for real?”

Subaru was halted by the hostility facing him.

Priscilla’s words were neither joking nor mocking. Or rather, she was being genuine. Priscilla had honestly completely forgotten about Subaru’s existence. Although they had gone for a year without seeing each other, Subaru’s idiocy in the Royal Capital should not have been so easily forgotten.

Although it would be correct to say that it was a very Priscilla-like attitude, it was not an attitude that was particularly appreciated.

???: “Princess, that’s a bit much, isn’t it? Although I don’t know how much he’s worth to you, to me he’s almost like a brother. He’s a very interesting opponent, yeah?”

Then, a frivolous voice cut across the heavy atmosphere that was about to get worse. That voice sounded muffled, and was accompanied by the sound of metal. A man with a single arm spoke soothing words as he entered from the corridor to join Priscilla’s side.

His face was entirely covered by a jet-black helmet, and his solid, broad physique gave the impression that he was a strong man. He was both a servant to Priscilla and, like Subaru, a summoned man from another world. Al.

And, of course, he had accompanied his master here, inserting himself between Priscilla and Subaru.

Al: “Hey, you remember, right? It’d be hard to forget a guy appearing in the Castle and doing something dumb to embarrass himself in front of so many people. It’s that guy. Princess even clutched her stomach when she had a good laugh about it.”

Priscilla: “I have no impression whatsoever. In the first place, Al, I would never laugh so hard that I would need to clutch mine stomach. Do not belittle an honorable presence such as my own to the level of a casual commoner. I shall not be this tolerant next time. I shall cut off your head.”

Al: “You see, brother? Sorry, I couldn’t do anything. Maybe if you work hard to become better.”

Subaru: “Give me a little more credit for the things I’ve done in the past year!”

Al soon gave up trying to jog his master’s memory and instead turned to apologize to Subaru, his head bowed in apology. Subaru sighed, feeling like Al had not changed at all this past year.

Although, for the middle-aged Al, undergoing a noticeable change from his light-hearted demeanor would be fairly impossible.

Heinkel: “You’re a little late, Lady Priscilla. How long were you going to make me act alone? I’d heard that you were supposed to be coming earlier…”

Priscilla: “Silence, commoner. You shall dance as ordered to. Until I give the order to stop, you are expected to dance until you die. Those who misunderstand their duties or attempt to correct a mistake they believe I have made are condemned to death.”

Heinkel: “Guh…”

On the other hand, Heinkel, realizing that the atmosphere in the room had changed, immediately turned to Priscilla, who was standing behind him. However, any type of argumentative attitude taken toward Priscilla would be entirely futile.

Although Heinkel was embarrassed by the uncompromising Priscilla, Subaru raised his gaze after listening to their conversation.

Subaru: “Priscilla. Did you bring that guy?”

Priscilla: “Listen, commoner. Just who allowed you to dare to speak to me without the proper honorific? Even the compassionate and generous I, when faced with such a helpless person, have a limit to my patience.”

Al: “Princess.”

Al called briefly to her as he saw the brutal look lodged in her eyes as she glared at Subaru. Then, Priscilla closed one eye and gave a slight breath.

Priscilla: “For some reason, my servant seems to have taken a liking to you. To Al, who spared your life… No, there is no necessity to thank Al. Worship mine forgiveness. If you do so, I shall spare you.”

Subaru: “…Thanks for your generosity and consideration. Then, the answer to my question is…”

Priscilla: “If you are under the impression that I brought this commoner here, then you would be correct. He is present at mine calling.”

Subaru: “For what purpose!”

Subaru raised his voice at the assertive Priscilla and questioned her purpose.

Uninvited guests upon uninvited guests had arrived. What kind of plot was brewing here, Subaru needed to know.

However, in the face of Subaru’s question, Priscilla merely tilted her head, and—

Priscilla: “Perhaps because I thought that it would make an interesting sight.”

Subaru: “…An interesting sight?”

Priscilla: “That is correct. Distorted family disputes, and the joy and sadness that comes from relationships. Such ugly performances are so very exciting. In fact, do you see? The Sword Saint and the Sword Demon acted rather human. Such a sight is very rare.”

Subaru: “Priscilla!”

That twisted, crooked perspective enraged Subaru.

As Priscilla said, Reinhard’s family dispute was hardly seen. And that sea of bitterness was hardly something that needed to be known by anyone in the world.

If Heinkel had not appeared, such a dark history would never have come to light. Without him, the mending of the normal relationship between grandfather and grandson would have been underway.

To have torn that—

Al: “Stop, brother. There’s no meaning to have a fight happening here. Princess’s poor character isn’t a thing that’s been here for a day or two. Just think of it as bad luck… as bad stars, and try to let it go.”

Subaru: “If you know your master has a poor character, then you should be trying to lead her onto the right path by reining her in. Indulging a rampaging horse is just irresponsible.”

Al reached for Subaru with his single arm, slowly shaking his head. Since his hand was grabbing Subaru’s wrist, if anything happened, he would not be able to draw his sword on such short notice.

In other words, his actions were indicating that he had no wish whatsoever to fight.

Noticing this, Subaru took a long breath. He looked around and found that he was the only one who had acted on his impulsive anger. Outsiders aside, even Julius and Felix had not wanted to start anything.

Of course. This was a gathering for the candidates to the throne. No one wished to entertain the possibility of anyone getting hurt here.

Subaru: “But, even in this case, no matter how much their hearts suffer…!”

Emilia: “Subaru…”

Emilia’s wavering eyes called to Subaru, who continued submerged in his fury. Feeling a tug on his sleeve, Subaru also knew that Beatrice was granting him her support.

Feeling the support of the two, Subaru was unable to bow his head.

Anastasia: “That vicious hound’s fury’s lookin’ like it’s over. I’m wonderin’ something… even though I didn’t send ya an invite, how did you come to learn of this meetin’?”

Priscilla seemed ready to take her leave and carry on her agenda. However, Anastasia took an opportunity to halt her.

Although Anastasia’s tone was soft, she was quite alert.

Anastasia: “After all, a child runnin’ their mouth shouldn’t be allowed to run free.”

Priscilla: “Don’t talk to me with that affectation, mine ears are decaying. I am more than capable of keeping up with a quick-thinking fox.”

Anastasia: “Oh my. Could it be that you’re neglectin’ to mock me as a “commoner”?”

Priscilla: “If you have yet to see what you should have, then that level of ignorance places you in the same category as all of those other fools. Could it be that you are foolish enough as to want me to overlook you?”

The two were engaged in a battle of words—However, Priscilla may or may not have been deliberately provoking Anastasia’s natural business focused rhetoric.

Anastasia leisurely caressed the scarf on her neck.

Anastasia: “Leaked information is quite worryin’, ya know.”

Priscilla: “Anything that reaches someone else’s ear has been leaked from a mouth lacking caution. And the more one learns, the more holes that can be found; this is self-evident. You are not the only one who observes and listens to others.”

Anastasia: “Ah, but ya see, I’d thought of you as someone who wouldn’t engage in espionage to deal with the likes of us.”

Priscilla: “A flying insect buzzes near mine ear. But what can I do without knowing its location? I would have to catch the insect using my eyes and ears, which is precisely what I have done. Of course, the same holds true for you.”

Priscilla’s implication was that she treated every opposing candidate as a fly near her ear, indicating that she was never to be overlooked.

Subaru held the same opinion as Anastasia. It was inconceivable that Priscilla had actually adopted the appropriate tactics and put them into practice against her enemy factions.

And the result of Anastasia’s negligence brought about the worst of happenings on this day.

Felt: “That mister is Reinhard’s father, yeah?”

Ignoring the conversation so far, a frivolous voice shifted the topic.

Her gaze sweeping across the room, the still-eating Felt, her mouth still soiled with daisukiyaki sauces, she found Priscilla’s gaze, and glared back.

Felt: “After all, I’ve had some experiences at the Castle, so I caught what was going on from the conversation. I’m not really interested in this guy’s family relations. Only, if Reinhard and the mister are together, that's different."

Priscilla: "…Ho. And what did the little girl from the ghetto notice?"

Felt: "Although I don't really care about him, I'm not unrelated to him. The lands of the House of Astrea are in fact a lifeline for us. Except this guy hasn't actually given Reinhard the lands. The power of the family is still in the hands of that mister."

Next to Felt, Reinhard's cheeks stiffened slightly. Subaru, and the others, caught on to Felt's concern.

Having been raised as an orphan, Felt had nothing to her name, and was currently using Reinhard's parents'— The Astrea Family's lands as her base, where, bit by bit, she accumulated support by producing results.

However, those lands were not Felt's own. They were the assets of the Astrea Family, and were on loan to her and Reinhard.

But those were not Reinhard's own territories. Even he had borrowed them.

Heinkel: "Heh. Looks like you've finally realized the seriousness of the situation, idiot."

Interjecting in their conversation was Heinkel, who wore an expression of pride and laughed with an "as I expected". He looked as if he had been waiting for the topic to return to Reinhard and Felt, his gazing shifting back and forth between the two.

Heinkel: "That's it. The head of the Astrea Family is still me. I haven't passed the position on to Reinhard, nor do I intend to pass it to him. After all, the cumbersome affairs of politics shouldn't burden our busy Sword Saint."

Felt: "A family head in name only. You should be ashamed. When we went to the Astrea territories, only a handful of civil servants and maids with bloodshot eyes were maintaining it. Now that we've been restoring it, you actually dare to return to rule it?"

Heinkel: “Even if only in name, even if I’m irresponsible, the crown of family head is still mine. What’s more, haven’t my lands begun to improve? The people should be crying out in support of their lord now. I’m so loved by my people, I’m moved to the point of tears.”

Heinkel relentlessly mocked Felt, who tried to swallow her rage.

At those vile and poisonous words, Subaru’s vision turned white with rage. The room was filled with anger at that disgusting sight.

All the while Heinkel, bathed in a rain of contempt, kept a joyful face.

It was clear now. This man was completely abnormal.

Heinkel: “Your sense of crisis is right, Reinhard’s master. The Astrea territories are mine. However, I’ll never support you. You can clearly see who I’m supporting!”

Heinkel stood as if on a stage, expecting thundering applause. He gestured towards Priscilla, a clear declaration that he would support a different candidate than his son and father.

Heinkel: “I’ve heard about your achievements in the past year, taking my place, the lord’s. In addition to agreeing that is a great achievement, I will also say—it is time for you to take your leave of them now. If you understand it, hurry and hand them over to me…”

Priscilla: “Hey, commoner.”

Heinkel: “—Ahh? What is it, Lady Priscilla? I’m doing something very important right now.”

Priscilla: “Shut up.”

The ensuing violence had to be seen to be believed.

Shortly after she had finished speaking, Priscilla thrust her fan at Heinkel, who widened his eyes. Following the unfolding fan was a terrifying gust that slammed Heinkel’s slender body toward the ground with powerful momentum.

Heinkel’s eyes rolled back in his head, having lost his consciousness after the impact. But Priscilla’s attack went one step further.

She kicked him into the air with a swipe of her foot, and swiftly reached her hand up to meet his body.

Al: “Princess, end your anger here. Otherwise, he’s going to die.”

Priscilla: “…”

Priscilla was stopped before she could deliver the final blow with her arm by Al, who had predicted her outrage. Priscilla then turned to her helmeted servant, in response.

A sword of red crimson had appeared in her grabbed wrist. It had a Western-style curve and a narrow blade, but it was engraved with wave-like flames. It was a most unusual sword, having instantly materialized in, and disappearing from, Priscilla’s hand in the blink of an eye.

Witnessing that, Al slowly released Priscilla’s wrist.

Al: “Really, spare me. You even drew your Yang Sword, that’s really not good for my hear—Gah!”

Priscilla: “That was very rude, Al. From whom did you receive permission to dare to touch mine flawless skin? You won my favor on a whim, so to defile mine body is a mere dream laying at the end of a dream.”

Priscilla forcefully slapped her freed hand on Al’s stomach, bringing him agony. She exhaled loudly from her nose, then looked down at the pitiful Heinkel who was writhing on the ground.

After witnessing the brutal look in his eyes, he had certainly deserved this. However, what Al said was also true.

Priscilla: “However, there is some truth to what you said. It would be excessive to kill him.”

Al: “If you think so… then I hope you’ll be gentler with me in the future, gah.”

Priscilla: "Quiet. I am not a demon. I will allow you to lick mine feet later as a reward."

Al: "Don't put it like I get turned on by that?! It'll lead to misunderstandings!"

Al, who had fallen to his knees after receiving a blow, desperately defended himself, but did not receive Priscilla's attention. She gazed at Heinkel with her blood-red eyes, having calmed down for the time being, and snapped her fingers.

Priscilla: "Schult. Move the commoner out of here. Although dull, he is seemingly a worthwhile recruit. Considering the trouble of bringing him into the fold, giving him up would be a shame."

Schult: "Yes, Priscilla-sama."

In response to her call, another figure emerged from the hall.

It appeared that a child who was many years from being fully grown had been waiting in the corridor.

He had pink fluffy curls, a slim figure and a fair face that would easily be mistaken by a woman's, and a high voice which indicated that he had yet to reach puberty. Seeing an undeveloped child dressed in a butler's uniform felt unethical.

Schult was the name of the young boy who, if going solely by appearances, looked to be around Beatrice's age.

Schult: "I apologize, Heinkel-sama."

To the unconscious Heinkel, Schult grabbed Heinkel's feet and began to struggle to pull him outside. Of course, it was very unreasonable to expect a child to carry Heinkel out. However, Schult made no complaint about Priscilla's order, and at the same time he treated Heinkel with an attitude of respect.

Al: "Schult-kun always tries to be brave and strong, no matter what kind of an order he receives. Princess needs to remember to praise him later."

Priscilla: “That is only natural. He is under mine employ and serves me wholeheartedly. And I am not so merciless as to let mine loyal subjects go without reward. Later, I shall allow him to lick mine feet.”

Al: “Schult-kun wouldn’t realize that you’re joking and would tearfully do exactly as you request. Please give him a more conventional reward.”

Priscilla: “Hmmm. Then perhaps I shall give him the honor of being held by mine body as I sleep.”

Al: “…Well, that shouldn’t be a problem. But now I want to take his place.”

That was the listless dialogue between Priscilla and Al as they watched Schult and Heinkel leave.

Finally, all the outsiders had been removed. Now, only the members of the Royal Selection’s factions remained.

Felt: “So, what’s going to happen with that guy? You seriously want to drive us away from the Astrea territory to weaken us?”

Priscilla: “You do not have to treat that commoner’s words with such gravity. Were you not responsible for the revitalization of that territory? If the lord returns to his house intending to drive you away, then who would follow him? Although the people are foolish and ignorant, they are not heartless fools who forget their grace. If you make a large wave, a correspondingly large wave will return to you. He shall not be able to summon any waves.”

Felt: “…Then, why was that guy invited?”

Priscilla: “It has already been said, has it not? I found the situation interesting. Sooner or later, all I want shall be in mine hands. That is an established fact. In that case, my route shall only vary depending on what is entertaining and what is not. And that route is precisely decided by me. To that end, I brought him in as a toy to kill time.”

No matter what happens, the outcome cannot be changed—The absolute confidence Priscilla held transcended common sense and unreasonably imposed her will upon the world. The only way to deal with it would be to give up and bow down, or to fight it with a similar attitude. And so,

Candidates: "…"

Here, four candidates met her gaze without hesitation in an expression of confrontation. Accepting those glares, Priscilla gave a hearty, delighted laugh.

Priscilla: "Excellent. The outcome has been decided, but mine journey will naturally have its share of happy excitement. Mine self has decided that you are all a cut above the commoners. And, once you have become worthy of being mine opponent… Then, I shall of course welcome you with my full capabilities."

"You are not worthy as my opponents", was the judgement Priscilla had just made.

No, she had said so long ago. She still treated Emilia and the others as insects. She did not even recognize them as enemies at all. Then,

Felt: "I'll be sure to make you cry and regret that arrogance."

Felt's declaration was a precise representation of the will of all the occupants of the room.

Chapter 17:
That Ever-Present Armor

—Fully recovering the meal's original atmosphere was now impossible.

After hearing Felt's sharp words, a satisfied Priscilla had left the hotel with Al in tow. It could probably be said that she was delighted at having achieved all her goals there.

Considering the damage she had wrought, she really was selfish.

Everyone soon returned to their meal in the tearoom, unable to chat as happily as they had before. And so ended the dinner event.

Her impact had been incredibly hurtful to everyone present. In particular, the feelings of both Reinhard and Wilhelm must have been unimaginable to outsiders. Even so, the fortitude of those two men was strong enough that neither would allow any of their anxiety to show in their expressions.

Of course, the imminent reconciliation of grandfather and grandson could only be postponed. Just that was enough for a hard knot of grief to take root in Subaru's heart.

Otto: "We were incredibly lucky that Garfiel was not present."

Those were the words left by Otto as he departed for the Muse Chamber of Commerce following the meal.

As he had said, it would have been a serious matter if Garfiel or someone else prone to rage had been present during the meal. It was not difficult to imagine Garfiel flying at Heinkel in a rage and causing a violent tragedy.

Everyone at the breakfast had, for the most part, calm and rational natures— Maybe Priscilla had even factored that into her satisfaction.

Subaru: "…How could that be? That'd really be a coincidence among coincidences."

The luck which Priscilla arrogantly prided herself on was next to impossible. It had only brought them the worst of results. Although irrefutable, it was painful to admit.

The worry Emilia and Beatrice felt had been surely more painful than any indignation Subaru felt.

Even Felt had been acting reasonably, leaving Subaru the only one who had let his emotions get the better of him. To both foe and friend, Subaru wanted to give apologies for his lack of consideration.

Emilia and Beatrice had returned to their rooms for a short break, before accompanying Subaru on their walk.

Subaru took the time to try to walk off his frustration, his footsteps harder than usual. The inside of his shoe pressing against his foot felt rather like a reflection of his frustration.

Landing on that train of thought, Subaru began to apply more and more pressure in his steps, trying to relieve his feelings, until—

Julius: "Do not step so hard on the floor, Subaru. You will cause trouble for the staff of this inn."

Subaru, who had been gazing down at his feet, turned his head toward the sound. He had apparently unknowingly walked into the corridor facing the courtyard. Standing in the courtyard was Julius, who was bathing in the wind.

His hand swept his purple hair back in a practiced gesture, and it withstood the cool breeze with a dramatic image.

Julius's handsome face, as always, inspired envy in Subaru, who clicked his tongue at the other young man before taking a seat next to him at the porch.

Julius: "Emilia-sama and Beatrice-sama are not with you, correct?"

Subaru: “That’d be the case. They’re not children. They’re at the age when they want some private time, and I have the decency to respect that right. I’ve set up a time and place for a date later.”

Julius: “Although I am unfamiliar with some of the phrases you used, it seems that even you have learned to better understand the thoughts of others.”

Subaru: “Ugh, you…!”

In a breach of convention, Julius was the one who first spoke words that instigated quarrel. However, after seeing Julius’s expression, Subaru’s annoyance dissipated.

Julius shook his head slightly,

Julius: “Apologies. If you were truly one incapable of being considerate of others, you would not have been able to denounce the Deputy Commander with such anger in front of everyone… I should offer you my gratitude.”

Subaru: “That sounds like a thanks, so please don’t give me one. That guy just rubbed me the wrong way. Compared to everyone else who maintained their cool, I must have looked awful.”

Julius: “No such thing happened. It was precisely because of your rash atitude that others could calm down, even myself included. Your impulsive reactions were helpful, it seems.”

Subaru: “You, you weren’t planning to praise me from the start, were you?”

Subaru frowned at Julius’s genuine tone.

Julius’s words were always accompanied by the traces of a taunt when spoken to Subaru, although said taunting came from both sides, so Julius was not solely at fault. In any case, it was nigh impossible for Subaru to accept that compliment in earnest.

Subaru: “I know. I should be calmer and more collected to be like a Knight. Even holding the position of Knight, I’m aware I still cannot consciously keep a cool head, even though that’d all be outlined in a schoolboy's book of manners."

Julius: "That is correct. Indeed, from a knightly perspective, your behavior was by no means commendable. However—"

Facing the uncomfortable Subaru, Julius fell silent. However, his next action led Subaru's eyes to widen in surprise.

Subaru: "What are you doing?"

Julius: "It is as you can see."

Subaru: "All I can see is you bowing at me."

Julius bent down and inclined his head to Subaru.

This was not a Knight's courtesy. Nor was it a ceremonious ritual. There was no formal inspiration of his motion at all. It was pure courtesy, one that was completely ignorant of position. It was a behavior completely unlike Julius.

Julius: "Thanks. Thank you. Thank you for showing the indignation that I could not."

Subaru: "…I have no idea what you're talking about at all."

Julius: "Valuing the honor of a Knight means that, no matter the occasion, you must act with virtue. Even if your own friend is being disdained, even if your own friend is treated with inhumane words, you cannot indulge in behaving according to your own feelings. But you are not like that."

Maintaining his posture, Julius repeatedly gave Subaru his share of thanks. For the latter had compensated for the former's shortcomings.

Subaru could only feel puzzled at the unexpected reaction.

Julius: "Caught between my Knighthood and my emotions, I quickly repressed my anger. However, seeing your passionate rebuttals, I felt ashamed of myself. So I wish to thank you."

Subaru: “Thanking me for being angry in your behalf, huh…”

Julius: “…”

Subaru uttered a sound of understanding, and Julius finally looked up.

With just one sentence, Julius had finally revealed his genuine feelings, reflected in his gaze. Seeing him, Subaru could only give him a snarl.

Subaru: “What a stupid thing to say. Really, stop kidding around.”

Julius: “…Stop kidding around, huh?”

Subaru: “Of course. Why would I be angry in your place? I was angry purely because I’d personally been ticked off, not because there was someone else who wanted to snap at that bearded guy. I could never do something as clever as express someone else’s anger.”

Subaru spoke these genuine thoughts to Julius, feeling like he had misunderstood the matter.

Subaru did not consider his anger to be some kind of noble indignation. After all, only Reinhard and Wilhelm could understand their own feelings.

Subaru was an outsider who had simply been angry that such an atmosphere had been defiled. His anger was purely for his own sake.

Subaru: “If you were angry, why didn’t you say something? I couldn’t have calmly dealt with the old man alone, but if you’d been backing me up then we might have fazed him.”

Julius: “No matter what, he is still the Deputy Commander of the Royal Guards. It would be fairly troublesome if I made an enemy of a commanding officer.”

Subaru: “This has nothing to do with your rank. Not to mention, you just blurted «no matter what», don’t be so narrow-minded.

You're constantly thinking about behaving like a Knight, or acting with a Knight's demeanor, or whatever. Is even your heart coated in a Knight's armor?"

Julius: "…"

Facing a silent Julius, Subaru rested his elbows on his knees and with his cheeks in his palms, and gave an exaggerated sigh.

What a stupid quarrel! Subaru had not only rejected Julius's gratitude, but had also been enraged by him.

Thinking of the cause of the incident, including Heinkel, made him even angrier.

Julius: "Even my heart is coated in a Knight's armor… Ah, that is pretty harsh."

Subaru: "Although I think my wording was pretty cool and artistic, just ignore it. I was only kidding."

Julius: "No, I will keep it in mind. I am glad that I am learning a lesson from you. This is something that I never would have thought possible a year ago."

Subaru: "That uncomfortable stuff might be over with, but I still have nightmares about it."

He still sometimes had dreams set in the Knights' Training Field, about his confrontation with Julius and his subsequent brutal beating.

Although the physical suffering he had experienced at the time was painful to recall, what he had gone through mentally and emotionally in the aftermath hurt far more to remember. The memory of his own incompetence had been clearly imprinted into his mind, where, from time to time, it played like a movie.

Although, of course, his nightmares were not merely filled with his duel with Julius, but that event was something that could rival the memories of several deaths.

Julius: “If you can help it, I would rather have this not continue. Thinking of meeting you in your dreams every night is unpleasant.”

Subaru: “That’s rich, coming from the culprit. Don’t you think I’d rather share my dreams in intimacy with Emilia-tan?”

Julius: “So your pursuit of her has been reduced to relying on dreams, rather than your own ability. That suits your style.”

Subaru: “You bastard, don’t treat me like trash after praising me. Take a damn look at yourself!”

Julius: “Anastasia-sama is a lovely woman. There is no greater honor than being able to serve her in at a distance. Naturally, I think I should be very happy with my place.”

At Julius’s calm response, Subaru gave a cat-like growl.

The uncomfortable atmosphere vanished along with his bow as Julius recovered his usual image. Subaru frowned in relief, cleared his throat with a cough, and changed the flow of the conversation.

Subaru: “About that bearded old man… he said he was the Deputy Commander or whatever, is that true?”

Julius: “Your doubts are understandable, but that is indeed true. That man was the Deputy Commander of the Royal Guards of the Kingdom of Lugunica, Heinkel Astrea himself.”

Subaru: “Are they blind? Or deaf? Or messed up in the head?”

Julius: “You truly do question everything. Of course, none of the Royal Guards or other squires can question the qualifications of the Deputy Commander. In fact, the title of Deputy Commander serves more like a decoration, and no one has seen him perform his duties as of yet.”

Julius answered with a shake of his head, and Subaru’s imagination swam with the mental image of a senior official.

To be given incredible rewards while shirking any truly important responsibilities—that was exactly how Subaru envisioned the majority of high-ranking government officials, and that was indeed Heinkel's situation.

On top of that, the people around him even understood his incompetence and knew of his demeanor.

Subaru: "Could it be that he's taking advantage of his status as the Sword Saint's father?"

Julius: "…That is not the complete picture. Taking the role of the Deputy Commander is not something that would escape the attention of his son, Reinhard. Although Reinhard's fairness is universally acknowledged, but what if it concerns his family? Not everyone would trust him."

Subaru: "I don't think that Reinhard would be willing to bend his moral code for his father."

Julius: "Even so, he is still Reinhard's father. No matter what others think, to Reinhard, he is undoubtedly a family member who shares his blood. No one can know what he himself feels."

Julius spoke calmly to appease the heated Subaru. Grinding his teeth, Subaru voiced a groan.

It was exactly as Julius said. No matter how mediocre he was, as long as he was Reinhard's father, then only Reinhard's own heart would know whether or not he should renounce their relationship. As a Knight who values fairness and civility, he should not be deceived by paternity. But it would not be easy for Reinhard himself to freely cut off such a relationship.

Obviously, outsiders could hold a firm stance on what Reinhard should or should not do, but to do so would be incredibly arrogant.

Subaru: "«That is not the complete picture», you said, so are there other reasons? What else could there…"

Julius: "He's also the Head of the House of Astrea, and the son of Wilhelm-sama. To put it bluntly, he is related to the Kingdom's best Knight and the previous Sword Saint. The possibility that not gifting him a high-ranking position would lead to treason cannot be overlooked.”

This was Julius’s brief, emotionless reply.

Hearing those, Subaru only needed a few seconds to understand the implication behind it.

Subaru: “This country! Whether it’s Reinhard! Or Wilhelm! I’d never believe that! If Heinkel resented the country, then the Sword Saint’s family would turn against it…?! Treating them so cautiously, as if they were a time bomb, if that’s how it is…!”

If so, wasn’t that an insult to Reinhard and Wilhelm? Their honor was so obvious, yet the country still believed them capable of treason?

The anger that Subaru now felt matched its earlier intensity, back when he was facing Heinkel. Julius shook his head and pressed a hand to Subaru’s shoulder.

Julius: “Your anger is expected. However, the Kingdom has to deal with every possibility.”

Subaru: “Something impossible isn’t a possibility! That kind of thing would clearly, obviously never happen!”

Julius: “…Wilhelm-sama is the former Commander of the Royal Guards.”

Subaru: “—?!”

Subaru, who had been trying to escape Julius’s grip, unconsciously stopped moving after those words.

Julius: “Fourteen years ago, a member of the Royal Family was abducted in the Royal Castle. At that time, Wilhelm-sama was the head of the Royal Guards, and was placed in charge of the search for the kidnapped member of the Royal Family.”

Subaru: “So, what about it? Even I know about famous events like this.”

Felt was the member of the Royal Family who had been abducted in childhood—A story that had become widespread. Subaru, who had already dismissed the story, did not catch the meaning of Julius's words.

Subaru: "I know the Royal kid was never found. So what about it? Wilhelm-san took responsibility, and then resigned as a Royal Guard, so he has a reason to hate the Kingdom? But then…"

Julius: "At that time, the former Sword Saint was sent out to subjugate the White Whale, on what became known as the Great Subjugation. That happened at the same time Wilhelm-sama had been searching for the kidnapper, away from the Royal Capital."

Subaru: "…"

Pondering Julius's words, Subaru fell into a void of thought. Something Wilhelm had once said seemed to fill that blank in.

Wilhelm had said it. He had said that he had not been able to be at his wife's side at the time of her death.

Subaru: "…He said he had not been able to be with his wife when she died, and the Royal Family investigation kept him from that. So do you mean that Wilhelm-san ended up having a grudge against the Kingdom, or something like that?"

Julius: "I do not know what Wilhelm-sama's true intent was. However, it is true that after the search for the abducted princess was terminated and the Great Subjugation ended in failure, Wilhelm-sama withdrew from the Royal Guards. After that, the branch of the Royal Guards would have collapsed if it were not for the steps Marcus-sama took to reorganize them."

Subaru: "I don't give a damn about that! I'm trying to talk about Wilhelm-san! You… Is that what you think? That Wilhelm-san would resent everyone because of his wife? That… That's…!"

Raising a banner of rebellion toward the Kingdom, due to his own resentment.

Was that really how Wilhelm van Astrea was seen by everyone?

Why, after seeing someone who was so deeply in love, and willing to give up everything for his love, could anyone think that? Had they never looked him in the eye, or gazed at his steady back?

Had they never seen the Sword Demon's frank, honest blade?

Subaru: "That person would never do such a thing, why does nobody understand!!"

Julius: "…"

This time, Subaru indeed threw off the hand on his shoulder, and shoved Julius's chest. He stood and backed up, glaring at Julius, and losing his momentum.

The yellow eyes looking back at him seemed to almost admire Subaru's anger. He understood. He knew that this degree of anger was inappropriate.

What Julius had said to Subaru had not reflected his own views. Julius's own attitude was plain for all to see.

After all, one year ago, Julius had been led by Wilhelm after the latter had slain the White Whale. He had comforted Wilhelm, who had spent fourteen long years trying to avenge his wife. There was no way that he would have ever suspected Wilhelm to intend to rebel against the Kingdom.

Subaru: "…Sorry. I was being an idiot."

Julius: "No, do not apologize. You are in the right. I am the one in the wrong—If anyone should apologize, that would be me."

Dropping their gazes, they both closed their eyes. They both felt an unbearable weight.

Their helplessness in doing anything to change the country's doubt in Wilhelm. Subaru and Julius both, even if they vented their feelings, were still ultimately powerless.

Subaru: "So is it the same thing for Reinhard?"

Julius: “…Following that same logic, Reinhard would resent the Kingdom for sending his grandmother to her death and, in turn, killing his predecessor. But that is not the case.”

Subaru: “Then…”

Julius: “However, the Kingdom does not doubt that Reinhard has no intent in holding a rebellion. Rather, that suspicion goes to Heinkel-sama.”

With the drop of Reinhard’s father’s name, Subaru’s eyes widened.

Even though it was a name he did not want to hear, he could not just plug his ears at the topic. Any conversation involving that name would not be pleasant.

Subaru: “How is Reinhard’s relationship with his father? Aside from the obvious blood one.”

Julius: “There was a period of time when Reinhard gave Heinkel-sama his complete, utmost obedience. That might seem natural since they are father and son, but… There was a time it exceeded the bounds of what it should have been.”

Julius averted his eyes from Subaru’s, as if speaking regretfully.

The relationship he had said “exceeded the bounds” of a typical parent-child relationship. His words were vague enough that it was difficult to know what he had meant. However, Julius did not look eager to elaborate, and returned his gaze to Subaru.

Julius: “As Reinhard grew to be more self-reliant, that attitude should have disappeared. But, without decisively knowing whether Reinhard would still listen to Heinkel-sama’s words, those doubts could not be dissipated.”

Subaru: “…So, to keep Heinkel from giving Reinhard an order to turn against the Kingdom, Heinkel was shown favor, right?”

Julius: “Perhaps it was even worse than that. Although this is still a rumor that is considered hearsay, I will tell you, because you are also Reinhard’s friend, and because you felt anger for his sake.”

With that troubling opening remark, Julius looked over their surroundings with a sweep. Confirming that there were no eavesdroppers, he stood close to Subaru's side. Then,

Julius: "The Deputy Commander was a suspect in the investigation of the abduction of the Royal Princess fourteen years ago."

Subaru: "—?!"

Julius: "There was no conclusive evidence. However, he has been repeatedly questioned about his suspected involvement."

Subaru: "If that's true, then, the abduction was…"

Julius: "The truth of that matter is no longer relevant. Such a suspicious character is in the position to command the Kingdom's greatest military strength. That is the crux of the problem now."

The glorious blessing following the title of Sword Saint.

However, as more and more of the situation came to light, Subaru began thinking the title to be more of a curse than a blessing.

Subaru: "However, if he's really related to the abduction, then Heinkel is the reason why his father and mother couldn't meet face to face one last time."

Julius: "…That's not all. I have also heard that it was Heinkel-sama who recommended that Thearesia-sama, who had already set her blade aside, be the one to take his place in the Great Subjugation against the White Whale."

Subaru: "He actually sent his mother to battle against the White Whale?!"

Julius: "There is an accurate record of this. The Deputy Commander refused to battle with the White Whale, and instead recommended that his mother Thearesia do it."

Utterly speechless—Subaru could not find it in himself to formulate a response.

Unlike the unfounded rumor before, what Julius had just said was backed up by real evidence. Records and witnesses meant that this was fact.

Heinkel had sent his own mother as his replacement to the battle with the White Whale.

That is to say, his mother subsequently died in battle, and his father took up the blade of revenge because he could not be with her in her last moments. However, rather than face any punishment, Heinkel used his son's talent as a shield to protect his comfortable and stable life.

How could it be? How could there be a human who was capable of this?

Subaru: "There has to be a mistake somewhere, right…?"

He did not want to believe it.

It was not about wanting to believe in Heinkel's humanity. Subaru had already accepted him as the worst kind of person, and anyone who spoke to him could instantly tell.

However, he was reluctant to admit that such evil beyond evil, such immorality, such depravity even existed. He hoped to believe in ethics, or honor, human nature, and had thought there was a limit to how much evil human nature could permit.

However, things that would be a sin even in imagination could happen in reality.

Julius: "…Apologies. That is not something I should have told someone who had not fully prepared themselves."

Julius whispered to the speechless Subaru, his voice shrouded in gloom.

Subaru could fully empathize with the feelings which Julius's tone had given away, something which was entirely unlike the always calm and rational Julius.

Subaru: “It’s… It’s not your fault, I was the one who wanted to hear about it. Although it would be a little easier if I could blame you.”

Julius: “I am not in a position to accept your words. Obviously, what I relayed to you were just rumors about the business of another family, but I still spoke of them as if I had witnessed them myself. No matter how you look at it, I spoke without thinking of the gravity of those rumors. As a Knight, I really should be ashamed.”

Subaru: “But you witnessed it, didn’t you? Since you’re Reinhard’s friend.”

Subaru replied to Julius’s self-deprecation.

Julius again lifted his head toward Subaru, who nodded back at him.

Subaru: “Although I don’t know the specifics of your friendship with Reinhard, I can still see that you’re worried about him. So I won’t condemn your anger or call it too aggressive. I don’t think it’s right to just withdraw from something like that solely because it’s not your business.”

Julius: “…Then, what would you do?”

Subaru: “Is it wrong to interfere if you hear others around you crying? If I saw my friend feeling hopeless, I’d certainly call to him. If you care about Reinhard, doing so would be completely natural. Especially since your feelings aren’t like mine.”

If Julius were to interfere for nothing other than his curiosity, Subaru would regard him with contempt.

However, Julius’s feelings, as proven by both his attitude and his words in their exchange, were nothing so shameful.

Subaru: “Didn’t I just tell you? There’s no need to adhere so rigidly to you knightly honor or whatever. And even if there is a need, occasionally taking off your armor and becoming Juli wouldn’t be so bad. Who’s to say that acting casually wouldn’t lead to a better situation?”

“Juli” was the pseudonym Julius had given during the battle with the Witch Cult.

Due to his position, Julius was unable to join any mercenary group, so he had elegantly hidden his identity with a slightly falsified name. In the end, however, no one ended up using it, not even Julius himself. However, that Julius was the one least like a Knight so far.

Julius: “Juli, huh… That is quite the nostalgic name!”

Subaru: “It was from so long ago, and it was only used once. I’m pretty impressed with myself for remembering it.”

Julius: “«There’s no need to adhere so rigidly to your knightly honor or whatever», you really have stated some difficult things. I am sure you know what they all call me.”

Subaru: “It’s because they’ve been calling you the greatest and whatnot that you’ve become so physically and mentally stiff. You should shed that armor when you bathe, and do some stretches with me before putting it back on.”

Subaru bent over, affixing his palms to the ground as if showing off his newfound flexibility. Although his body had been quite stiff before he had started learning parkour, the first thing he did was to learn how to move with more softness and pliability.

Then, to Subaru who was showing off his flexibility,

Julius: “If you are trying to show me up, I really cannot do anything but sigh.”

Subaru: “Oh?!”

As he spoke, Julius spread his legs apart and reached toward the ground. Subaru could not help but admire his control over his slender legs and the suppleness of his hips as he lowered himself to the ground.

Was that to say that Julius could easily surpass Subaru in any area?

Subaru: “Gah… But, but! If it were playing a Lyulyre, or sewing, I’d definitely win…!”

Julius: “Although I cannot see the merit of triumphing in hobbies, I have also taken up playing musical instruments. Although I would have to say that tailoring is fairly difficult.”

Subaru: “Grrr! You really had to say it! Hobbies! A hobby held by a guy like you can’t be anything but superficial. I’ll never form a band with you. My lead singer role will be taken away!”

Julius unwound his feet and stood with a flourish.

He suddenly flicked his bangs at Subaru, then smiled at the sky as if boasting a victory.

Julius: “I see. As Juli, gazing at the sky and bathing in the wind feels like this.”

Subaru: “Eh?”

Julius: “In retrospect, the sky I saw back then was also somewhat different from how it usually was. So this would be the reason, then.”

Subaru: “You keep getting more and more unreasonable. You fake bastard.”

Subaru shrugged his shoulders in annoyance and flopped onto the floor of the corridor. Julius narrowed his eyes, being dazzled by the sun, displaying a wry smile at Subaru’s attitude.

At last, the uncomfortable air surrounding their conversation had dispersed.

Of course, what they had discussed was still lodged in their memories, and lumps still remained in their hearts. But, even so, they could at least work through their frustration together.

—Looking at that image from a distance, the two would seem like a pair of ordinary friends.

Chapter 18:
A Time for Song and Dance

1

Subaru finished his simultaneously important and trivial conversation with Julius and left the Water Plumage Pavilion with Emilia and Beatrice.

Emilia: “In the courtyard, you were chatting in a friendly way with Julius for once. What were you talking about?”

Subaru: “First of all, thinking that I was getting along with that guy was a mistake, but what do you think we were talking about?”

Emilia: “Where should we go play next time?’ Something like that.”

Subaru: “Are we school friends?!”

Even if Emilia’s casual assumption about their relationship was right, even assuming Julius and Subaru went to the same school, they would be in entirely different social groups. Schools, just like society, ran on a hierarchy.

In a sense, didn’t something like division between classes exist universally, not just the aristocratic society?

Subaru: “Whether in this world or another world, those hardships are the same…”

Emilia: “Hey, hey, what did you talk about?”

Subaru: “I was anxious to ask about those recent hostile events at the tearoom. What exactly happened earlier? What preceded that? What’s going to happen next? Those kinds of topics.”

Emilia: “Isn’t that being friendly?”

Emilia tilted her head in question. Subaru followed suit with a sigh.

Looking at only their trivial words at the end of their conversation, maybe they did look like friends. But it was himself and Julius, so that wasn't possible. He wasn't a friend, he was something infinitely more annoying.

Although it was impossible to say exactly what that was.

Subaru: "Well, he's definitely not a friend. There's no doubt about it."

Emilia: "Honestly…"

Emilia turned around to look to Beatrice, who wordlessly sighed in response. Subaru felt somewhat alienated by the air of mutual understanding between the two.

In any case, his conversation with Julius in the courtyard had concerned Reinhard, Wilhelm, and their relationship with Heinkel Astrea. So if he truthfully conveyed the contents of their conversation to Emilia, then Subaru would feel rather guilty. In addition to hesitating to reveal the private affairs of the Astrea Family, Subaru did not want to cause unnecessary stress for Emilia.

—After all, it was a helpless, tricky situation.

The deep scars in the history of the Astrea Family were something that outsiders could not easily approach. Julius had been involved in the history himself and, acknowledging Subaru's concern, had relayed everything to him.

—And still, Subaru felt a nauseous itch in his stomach.

Emilia: "So, Subaru. Although it's a pleasure to take a walk like this, what are you planning?"

Subaru: "…"

While Subaru wrestled with his inner anxiety, Emilia suddenly smiled and uttered such a remark.

Subaru, taken by surprise, was momentarily lost for words. He hurriedly blinked and shrugged.

Subaru: “That’s harsh to hear, Emilia-tan. I just had a pure wish to wander the beautiful Watergate City with Emilia-tan. At most, I have only a trace of a temptation to lure you too close to a spot with water dragons and appreciate your appearance when soaked with water.”

Emilia: “Huuuu, Subaru, to say such a thing. You really are a stubborn person. Even I know that something so trivial isn’t your real intent.”

Beatrice: “…”

Emilia raised her pouting cheeks, and Subaru pressed a hand to his forehead, uncomfortable. He looked to Beatrice for aid, however, the young girl walking between Emilia and Subaru gazed up at Subaru with the same expression Emilia wore.

Without any support, Subaru quickly raised his hands in surrender.

Subaru: “Okay, I surrender. I’m sorry. I’ll give up on the Emilia-tan Wet Clothes Plan.”

Emilia: “Su-ba-ru.”

When his name was called out in anger, Subaru dropped his raised hands and surrendered for real this time.

Emilia: “Subaru, you’re naughty.”

Subaru: “You saw through me, Emilia-tan. Although, I was your mentor, so I should be rewarded… Right, right, I’ll be serious now.”

Emilia: “Stop it already.”

In response to Emilia, who’d raised her hand in an “I’ll hit you” gesture, Subaru could only smile wryly.

Subaru: “I wasn’t trying to hide anything, I just wanted to give you a little surprise. Right now, we’re headed to Priestella’s city park, where I unexpectedly met the Songstress, yesterday.”

Emilia: “Wow, Songstress-san? Um, then, will she be there today?”

Subaru: “Your shining eyes are adorable. Yeah, I have the famed Songstress’s contact information. Although I have faith in Otto’s ability to negotiate, I also have faith that his bad luck will probably cost us this opportunity. So, this is insurance.”

Emilia: “I see. And if we’re on good terms with Songstress-san, then she herself could ask Kiritaka-san to trade us the magic ore as a personal favor.”

Subaru: “That’s it. Well done.”

Subaru gestured his arms over his head in the shape of a circle. Emilia was so innocently happy.

In fact, although the transaction would hardly be as simple and straight-forward as Emilia had said, there was no need to point out her mistake. Emilia was only purely looking forward to getting along with Liliana. Subaru could handle all the other stuff behind the scenes.

Subaru: “I can’t help but feel that the likes of Emilia-tan and Liliana will have some kind of a chemical reaction…”

Emilia: “Chemical reaction?”

Subaru: “From the looks of it, I think Emilia-tan and Liliana will get along well.”

Emilia: “Will we? Haha, I hope so.”

Although somewhat apologetic to Emilia, who was just looking forward to the meeting, Subaru had already been somewhat beset by the fatigue that would surely follow any meeting with Liliana.

Even while hoping that Liliana would be in the park to fulfill his goals, Subaru prayed that he would not have to see her again. Of course, if she wasn’t there, the afternoon would just be a date with Emilia—although he wished to avoid that, Subaru couldn’t deny that he would enjoy it.

Subaru: “Emilia-tan, don’t you want to go cruising on a water dragon with me? I think that’d be fun, and it would strengthen our bonds.”

Emilia: “I’m not sure what cruising is, but if it’s anything with a ship, I think Subaru would get seasick if we did. That would tire you out, so we should avoid it.”

Beatrice: “Not to mention, the park is right in front of us, in fact. Now isn’t the time to give up, I suppose.”

Beatrice pulled on an uncomfortable Subaru’s wrist, and led him onwards as she continued to walk forward.

They had arrived at the destination without any hesitation, and Subaru gave up any resistance after seeing the entrance to the park. The fountain located at the center or city’s park showed an unexpected spectacle. The audience gathered in the park was even larger than the one on the previous day.

Subaru: “Since we came here earlier, I was prepared for the possibility that Liliana wouldn’t be here…”

Seeing the crowd gathered, however, that thought turned out to be merely a worry. Today’s performance seemed upbeat, with both rallies and applause from fanatical listeners, an atmosphere which dominated the park.

Subaru: “Clapping and yelling?”

Beatrice: “Today looks quite a bit livelier than yesterday, in fact.”

Met with the same confusion as Subaru, Beatrice tilted her head to the side.

Like the magical broadcast that morning, Liliana’s singing was typically peaceful, and quietly drew its audience away from reality. It was precisely because of that nature that the presence of this frenzied crowd seemed off.

The expected situation had been mixed with something unexpected.

Emilia: “Everyone seems to be enjoying themselves. She really deserves to be the Songstress-san.”

Although Emilia was eager to push through the hustle and bustle to have a good look, Subaru had a bad feeling about the entire situation.

As they approached the front of the crowded audience, Subaru began to feel an uneasy sense of regret.

Subaru: “…”

However, he could not quite vocalize that feeling, and so Subaru had no excuse to stop.

Not to mention that Emilia was looking forward to seeing the commotion for herself. After all, Subaru could not betray those amethyst eyes which sparkled with expectation. Or rather, he could not make a decision in time.

Soon after, the fanaticism of the masses turned into a thunderous round of applause as they continued to push through the crowd.

That is to say, the cause of that commotion was coming to an end. The place where the crowd’s excited sight was concentrated became visible. And there,

???: “That was a really amazing dance! After seeing that extraordinary dance I started to lose myself!”

Priscilla: “Not at all, your performance and singing were what captured mine attention completely. Just as it deserved to. It has been a long time since I’ve seen such a display of skill.”

There, talking and shaking hands tightly with each other, were the Songstress and a woman of crimson.

Subaru’s intuition had been right.

2

Today, Subaru again bore witness to an audience shedding tears to Liliana’s playing and singing.

If something today were different from yesterday, it would be the presence of Priscilla, who stood beside Liliana, also being showered with “your dance was too powerful”, “so touching”, “I’ll definitely come again”. The recipient of all this generous praise, Priscilla, fanned herself and spread her arms wide in response.

After that rough interaction with their fans, the only people left were Subaru, Emilia, and Beatrice. Noticing their obtrusively idleness, Liliana’s twin-tails bounced once more.

Liliana: “Oh, hey! If it isn’t Natsuki-sama and Emilia-sama! And Natsuki-sama’s little girl-sama! What are you all up to?”

Beatrice: “I wouldn’t know who this girl-sama is, I suppose. Subaru, explain it to me, in fact.”

Subaru: “Why don’t we let the one who came up with the name explain it? Here, I’ll give you some tasty candy, so behave.”

Beatrice: “You won’t mmm… fool me like this, I suppose, mmm…”

Setting aside Beatrice, who was busy sucking on the sweet in her mouth, Subaru turned to Liliana, whose twin ponytails bounced eagerly like dog tails. Although Emilia widened her eyes in response to the Songstress’s exaggerated reaction, Liliana’s presentation of her odd behavior was only just beginning.

Subaru: “Although it’s only been a day, here you are, staging another grand performance. Were you kicked out by Kiritaka again?”

Liliana: “Eeeh! Weeeeeeell, that would be right. The one who loved me gave me such an earnest plea, so I complied. Isn’t that the mark of an excellent woman? I think it is.”

Subaru: “So, even after being booted out, you thought that holding a performance would be perfectly fine…”

Liliana straightened her thin chest and stroked a nonexistent moustache. Next to her, Priscilla stood with arms crossed across her ample chest. Catching sight of Subaru, she snorted at him with contempt.

Priscilla: “What have you been doing? Even if you were taken in by mine allure, resting your gaze upon me like that is incredibly rude. Men who are obsessed with mine beauty are at most allowed to inhale my scent to fuel their sweet dreams.”

Subaru: “I didn’t see your dance, but even if I had I wouldn’t have been too excited. I only like delicate type girls like Emilia-tan, so your alluring body doesn’t do much for me.”

Priscilla: “Preferring a half-demon over me is a mark of utter helplessness. Of course, I am not so narrow-minded as to not accept strange tastes. Moreover, if you cannot understand true beauty, then your gaze can only be dismissed as hopelessly short-sighted.”

Subaru sensed a certain futility in attempting to argue tit-for-tat with her. Their values were too different. Subaru could not use his common sense to compete with Priscilla, who genuinely believed that the world itself belonged to her.

Anyway,

Emilia: “«An amazing dance», that is to say, Priscilla was dancing?”

Priscilla: “Feel regret that you missed it. Dancing is not something I do lightly. That is to say, this artist’s song had something to offer.”

Priscilla presented Liliana to the stunned Emilia.

Subaru was shocked by her answer, while Liliana rolled her eyes at him. Ignoring Liliana, who began to pretend she was blowing bubbles, Subaru stared straight at Priscilla.

Subaru: “You danced for people? Hey, that’s completely unexpected.”

Priscilla: “Then, how would you regard the frenzy of that crowd of fools just now? Although the artist’s song did have magic in it, without the presence of mine dance, the audience would have merely fallen into a stupor and become puppets who could only listen. Although that could be said to be a form of enjoyment, I am not too fond of it. Fools shall remain fools, and the ignorant shall remain ignorant. Why not have color added to both mine and their day?”

Subaru: “…In other words, fools indulging in foolishness will be happier?”

Priscilla: “Ho. You are obviously a commoner, but you are quite adept at comprehension.”

Feeling grateful at Priscilla’s praise would be impossible.

Not to mention that Priscilla showed no sign that she had remembered his earlier presence in the inn. He would settle for being happy that Priscilla remembered Emilia.

Liliana: “But, but, Priscilla-sama and Emilia-sama. So many exciting people are assembled here, I really appreciate it.”

Liliana had withstood the sinister atmosphere and offered that reaction.

She had picked up on the rivalry between the two and had designated herself as the mediator, rather than the awkward Subaru doing so. Maybe her odd quirks and air-headedness were just a front.

Liliana: “Ehehe. Was my song so beautiful? Honestly, that just embarrasses me. Hehehehe.”

Subaru: “Nope, this is her real nature.”

Liliana was blinded by her delirious state and fell into a fidgeting embarrassment. Subaru realized he had overestimated her and slumped his shoulders disappointedly. Then, he suddenly noticed that there was no one around Priscilla.

Subaru: “Are you alone? No Al, nor that piece of shit, nor the cute butler?”

Priscilla: “I allowed Schult to go for a walk, but he seems to have gotten lost. He tries very hard, but is a good-for-nothing at everything he does, that is the cute kind of child he is. Since Al’s constant nagging is annoying, I sent him out to look for Schult. As for the piece of shit, I am unsure. Perhaps he is at a tavern somewhere."

Subaru: "So «piece of shit» is actually a common language between us…"

Subaru was thrown off by the unexpectedly serious reply. It seemed that Heinkel was poorly received even by his own faction.

Although he fully understood why Heinkel was treated that way, why had Priscilla bothered to invite someone like that to her faction?

Subaru: "She'd definitely say something like «because having him nearby would interesting», though…"

Priscilla: "You seem to understand quite well. Well, I have collected him for some rather small reasons. Those who approach me and attempt to market themselves shall be welcomed so long as I can find them a purpose for mine amusement. If they become an obstacle, they can be discarded at any time. That man is, at best, that kind of person."

Subaru: "No, how do I say this… He doesn't seem like he'd live up to your expectations in any way whatsoever."

It seemed as if it was precisely because her expectations had not been met that Priscilla had flown into a violent rage. But perhaps Priscilla had even already long forgotten that event.

Subaru: "But don't you feel like this is dangerous? Right now, I'd never let Emilia-tan go out alone."

Priscilla: "What danger is there to me, now that my three attendants are absent? The only advantage they would grant me would be the ability to see what is behind mine self."

Subaru: "Ah, is that it?"

That was quite a disdainful judgment of the capabilities Al and the others possessed. However, after seeing Priscilla in action, that perspective was understandable. At the tatami room, the ability that Priscilla had demonstrated was far superior to what was possible for a human.

Subaru: “Speaking of which, I’ve also been kicked in the jaw before.”

During the loops that had happened in the Royal Capital, Subaru had once displeased Priscilla enough to have been kicked in the face. His body had flown so high it had hit the ceiling, and he had been put in a half-dead state with just one shot.

Remembering it made Subaru feel severe pain, like his jaw had been broken.

Subaru: “So, you threw Al aside and came to see Liliana?”

Priscilla: “This mere urban landscape has done well to soothe mine boredom. Unlike the narrow structure of the Royal Capital, the city has many a place worth viewing. As I explored, a lovely river of song flowed to me.”

Liliana: “Yeah~, at first when the dancing created a frenzy, I really had no clue what would happen. Sometimes there are people who recklessly join my performance and change the mood. Although most of the time my song hits them, and they change their minds.”

Subaru: “You really don’t act like the Songstress should at all…”

To just invade a song like that was too bold of a move.

And, indeed, it was rather a shock that Priscilla had joined in with a dance. That the audience had been so taken with it meant that her dancing was on par with the song itself.

Priscilla: “Although it would be a stretch to say you can win hearts and minds like I can, there is in fact a certain value in your voice. How about it? Come to mine side. Let mine influence give you status, and allow me to offer you the honor of playing for mine mansion.”

Liliana: “…”

In other words, Priscilla rather appreciated Liliana's song and gave her an unreasonable demand. Although the idea painted Liliana as Priscilla's personal musician, darker implications behind Priscilla's words were present as well.

If her anger at being unable to win Liliana reached the same level as her appreciation for Liliana's music, what would she do? It was that terrible implication.

Then, Liliana replied,

Liliana: "Thank you very much! That's such an uplifting evaluation, and it makes me really happy! But! but! but! Please allow me to refuse…"

She did not know about Priscilla's terrible anger, nor was she capable of reading the mood.

With that horrifying ignorance, she rejected Priscilla's proposal with casual enthusiasm.

Priscilla: "Ho, you refuse. Why?"

Sure enough, Priscilla's voice lowered, and her gaze darkened.

Shivering. Subaru, who was completely unrelated to the situation between them, felt a blade of cold brush his back.

In one sentence, the atmosphere was about to turn deadly.

In her own world, free of tension, Liliana stroked the box which held her instrument.

Liliana: "I am Liliana, a traveling bard. Although it is true that I am being asked to stay in the city like this, I am a traveler who will return to wandering in the wind sooner or later. Not bound by land, not bound by others, that is how I serve my profession—such a way of survival that has long been decided."

Priscilla: "Therefore mine invitation was refused."

Liliana: "Whether my mother, or her mother, or her mother's mother, my family has always walked that path. We are all people who have chosen to forsake everything that is material, so we may carry on, leaving only song in the hearts of others. Just as no one can capture the wind, no one can stop a song. Therefore—"

Priscilla: "…"

Liliana: "Although I am very happy about your invitation, please allow me to refuse. After all, even I do not know where my song will travel, because every decision has been entrusted to the wind."

Lifting her instrument, speaking proudly, Liliana's expression bore no trace of hesitation. Her usual tricky expression was gone, as was her deliberately affected atmosphere that existed to provoke the nerves of others.

There was just a bard—the pride of such creatures who wished to preserve their stories in song.

After listening to Liliana's reply, Priscilla held one hand aloft and closed one eye. With her other eye, she trained a scorching crimson gaze, like boiling magma was held within them, at Liliana.

Then, at Liliana's unwavering expression, Priscilla suddenly gave a sigh.

Priscilla: "—Excellent. That determination is also pleasing. Forgive me, the vulgar one here seems to have been I."

Liliana: "No, no, not at all. I am very, deeply sorry."

Toward Priscilla, whose mouth was on the verge of blooming into a smile, Liliana offered a heartfelt response.

Really, the interaction between the two left Subaru dumbstruck. Squinting at his frozen expression, Priscilla frowned as if displeased.

Priscilla: "What is it, commoner? You seem bothered."

Subaru: "It's really nothing other than shock. I thought you were going to bisect Liliana after she rejected you, and I started to shiver…"

Priscilla: “That is a rather ridiculous worry.”

No such thing would happen, was what Priscilla’s “Hmph” indicated.

However, before she had heard Liliana’s reasoning, Priscilla had no doubt intended to kill her. Before that decision had been consciously reached, however, Liliana’s opportune words had the balance to tilt in a lucky direction. At least, that was how Subaru saw it.

Emilia: “But, I was also a little surprised. Since Priscilla-san seems like a «I’ll take whatever I want» kind of person.”

The landmine that Subaru had taken pains to avoid was unexpectedly triggered by Emilia.

Emilia bluntly blurted out her impression of Priscilla. Subaru involuntarily straightened his back and spun around to face Priscilla. But, Priscilla merely closed her eyes, and—

Priscilla: “What foolish words, half-devil. How could your clouded eyes ever judge mine character? There is a limit to how many impolite insults I shall allow.”

Beatrice: “What an unforgivable girl, in fact. If you have time to muse on the helplessness of others, then you should reflect on yourself and your own demeanor, I suppose. Betty thinks that would be more meaningful to both parties, in fact.

Emilia: “Beatrice…”

As she listened to Priscilla’s relentless derision, Beatrice gripped Emilia’s hand, who had a troubled face. Priscilla, however, raised her eyebrows, looking at Beatrice as if noticing her for the first time.

Priscilla: “Such a little girl dares to speak like that. Mine magnanimity is not determined by age. If you hold the incorrect notion that your youth will spare you mine wrath, you would best change your attitude right now.”

Beatrice: “Your meddling really is unnecessary, I suppose. Watch who you call little girl, in fact. Taking Betty’s appearance at face value will cost you dearly.”

Flames of hostility burst into existence between Priscilla and Beatrice.

The two girls dressed in elaborate dresses seemed to have terrible compatibility. Although Subaru never doubted for a second that Beatrice would win, he knew that these conflicts were inevitable when the Royal Candidates met. This was just the type of relationship they had.

Subaru: “Don’t be so stubborn, Beako. Priscilla’s just volatile like this, and arguing with her is pointless.”

Beatrice: “Subaru, do not stop Betty, in fact. Aren’t you angry that Emilia is being belittled, I suppose? Show me some evidence you’re a man, in fact.”

Subaru: “Could you not say such terrible things?! Not to mention…”

Subaru was shocked that Beatrice, who rarely showed concern towards people besides him, was angry for Emilia’s sake. Even Emilia, the recipient of that concern, was surprised.

Emilia: “Beatrice, I’m fine.”

Moving Beatrice’s hand out of the way, Emilia gently touched the girl’s head. For a second, a tearful expression appeared on Beatrice’s face.

But it lasted for merely a moment. Beatrice adopted her usual expression as she turned back to Priscilla.

Beatrice: “Be grateful that you’ve been spared, I suppose.”

Priscilla: “That is how you should feel. Thank your own adorable face.”

Both Beatrice and Priscilla snorted slightly.

Although at the end Priscilla had ended up praising Beatrice's appearance, the infuriated Beatrice was completely unaware. "I'll let you go because you're cute", that was an odd explanation. Subaru did not understand it at all.

Subaru: "You really are an irrational woman…"

Priscilla: "Of course. Are you so arrogant that you believe yourself capable of seeing through any woman, let alone I?"

Subaru: "Are you saying it's my fault…? What really started this incident was you telling Liliana you wanted her."

Priscilla's reasoning for allowing Liliana to escape the palm of her hand remained a mystery. Subaru directed a curious gaze at her. Unexpectedly, Priscilla covered her mouth with her fan.

Priscilla: "Everything in this world is already mine. As such, there is no necessity to hold all that is beautiful and lofty in mine palm. Those things just need to exist. As long as they continue to exist, then there is no problem."

Subaru: "…"

Priscilla: "This world is already mine courtyard, that is to say, where a songbird sings is unimportant. Placing her into a cage? Vulgar. Guarding her from an outside enemy's hands? Vulgar. In fact, those are all rather troublesome actions."

Priscilla's views drove any of Subaru's presumptions into the ground. Her alienation from even alienation left Subaru speechless.

That was not to say that Subaru was unable to understand what she was saying. However, what she saw was just too different from what Subaru saw.

Therefore, Subaru would never understand her for as long as he lived.

Frankly, he thought it was horrible. But maybe it could be seen in another light. This terrible feeling, perhaps, might also inspire admiration or longing in others. Maybe that was exactly why Al chose to follow Priscilla.

Liliana: “Hey, hey, hey! Now that everyone’s calmed down, let me serve as an ambassador and show off goodwill as I show off my voice! Yeah, I’ll do just that!”

In this way, slicing through the atmosphere, Liliana abruptly made her own proposal. She took her Lyulyre and flicked its strings at tremendous speed, before concentrating on swaying her own body along.

Liliana: “Only this time, Priscilla-sama doesn’t need to join in with a dance, just enjoying the song is fine. I will open fire with the full passion of the Songstress! Please listen carefully!”

Priscilla: “Ho?”

Liliana’s words brought an expression of interest to Priscilla’s face.

Liliana: “Emilia-sama also seems to have first arrived just as my first song ended. I hope that instead of seeing me as a singer whose selling point is her cuteness, you’ll come to see me as poet who has earned a little bit of money with her blessed singing voice and her excellent playing technique.”

Emilia: “Wow, really?”

Liliana: “Although I’m not the most qualified of musicians, I hope you’ll be satisfied.”

Regardless of Liliana’s assertion, Emilia was undoubtedly interested in her performance and singing. That was why Emilia, who had been taken in by their previous interaction, looked forward to Liliana’s proposal.

Taking note of the subtle sense of distance between Emilia and Priscilla, Liliana appeared to enter a state of preparation. She discreetly waved Subaru over and said in a quiet voice, Liliana: “Natsuki-sama, Natsuki-sama. Although this is just my personal opinion, are Emilia-sama and Priscilla-sama on poor terms?

Subaru: “That’s hardly a matter of opinion, it’s obvious from their exchanges. Besides, Priscilla doesn’t get along with anyone, of course there’s tension with Emilia-tan.”

Liliana: “This is huge!”

Liliana seemed shocked, and her hair jumped like an alert dog’s tail. Were nerves linked to her hair? He really wanted to reach out and grab it.

Liliana: “So, so, let me come here and cut that tension away, and unite the two in a world of charm and song. Ah! Just now, did your imagination just annoyingly turn somewhere dangerous when I said «cut»? That’s no good!”

Subaru: “It’s exhausting when you say both inspiring and uninspiring things in one sentence, so don’t do that anymore.”

Subaru marveled at Liliana, who seemed like a madman, yet was capable of caring for others. Sweeping away the bad air with a song was something simple and straightforward.

Both were companions in shared interest to Liliana’s singing. Even Priscilla would not act cynically towards Emilia as she listened to the Songstress she so admired.

Liliana: “After the song ends and they chat again, shouldn’t we prepare food and drinks for them, Natsuki-sama? Indulging in sweet snacks will certainly create a mood that will close the distance between them, don’t you think so?”

Subaru: “No, I don’t think so.”

Liliana: “After the song ends and they chat again, shouldn’t we prepare food and drinks for them, Natsuki-sama? Indulging in sweet snacks will certainly create a mood that will close the distance between them, don’t you think so?”

Subaru: “Is this a parody where I can’t advance unless I say yes?”

Liliana presented that false choice with the same inflection and tone, and Subaru had no choice but to give up and choose “Yes”.

Liliana's expression suddenly became open again.

The high degree of difficulty in communication between the human species and the Liliana species was certainly a matter to be considered properly in the future.

Subaru: "Alright, I'll buy some snacks while Liliana sings. Emilia-tan, I'll be right back, so don't argue with anyone and wait here quietly, okay?"

Emilia: "Really. You don't need to worry so much, and besides it wouldn't happen anyway. I don't want to fight with Priscilla-san."

Subaru had cautioned Emilia just to be sure, but she wore a large smile. Although he did not doubt Emilia, even if she did not initiate an argument, Priscilla's presence made the likelihood of one rather high.

Subaru: "Beatrice. If something happens with Emilia-tan, I'll leave it up to you."

Beatrice: "I know, in fact. If that girl tries to talk again, I'll turn her into ash, I suppose."

Subaru: "You won't argue either, right?"

Committing that task to Beatrice, who was much more volatile than Emilia, Subaru prepared to leave the park. But, before that,

Subaru: "Priscilla, is there anything you won't eat?"

Priscilla: "How unexpected. A commoner like you is actually showing consideration. Well, in that case, prepare something interesting. If you find something boring, I shall present it back to you along with your decapitated head."

Subaru: "Guessing what you'd like would be like playing rock-paper-scissors, why'd you have to impose that cruel condition?!"

Subaru thought about giving her the first delicacy he could find. Priscilla being Priscilla frowned at his answer.

Priscilla: “Rock, paper… scissors?”

She tilted her head to the side.

Since she had once forgotten Subaru, maybe she had even forgotten that they had played rock-paper-scissors, in the past.

Subaru had no idea what to say. She truly was impossible to deal with in every sense of the word.

Emilia: “Subaru, be careful.”

Beatrice: “If anything happens, call for Betty, in fact.”

Sent off by Emilia and Beatrice’s gazes, Subaru waved his hand. Afterwards, he waved his hand and winked at Liliana as if flirting, then ran from the park.

Soon afterwards, the light melody of Liliana’s Lyulyre arrived on the wind.

Hearing it, Subaru thought of returning to the park as soon as possible, thinking that he had to be a part of the recital at all costs. He injected more power into his running stride.

3

It had been ten minutes since Subaru left the park.

Subaru: “I’m so worthless, really.”

After leaving the store, Subaru looked at the contents of his paper bag and sighed.

In order to procure proper desserts, the errand boy Subaru went for the first suitable store he found and completed his shopping as soon as possible. Although he was intrigued by Priestella’s famous delicacy, a rare product called Gina Jelly, he didn’t have the courage to bring it back to Priscilla.

Although phrasing it as fearing the of deterioration the relationship between the two factions sounded nice, what Subaru in fact feared was Priscilla's unsatisfied reaction itself.

Subaru: "But, I wonder if this tastes the same as Eel Jelly. Although I do feel ashamed about lacking the courage to confirm it for myself, I don't quite hate myself."

Subaru whistled at his complicated self-examination, running along the road to the park at a brisk pace.

He had counted ten minutes since he had left, and there had been no change in his contract link with Beatrice. Even so, his masculine pride bid him to return as soon as possible, but,

Subaru: "Gah, sorry."

Turning quickly around a corner, he nearly collided with someone. Although he had hurriedly avoided them, Subaru turned his head to make sure.

Subaru: "Sorry, my bad. I don't think I hit you, but are you okay?"

???: "Hey, bro, is that any way to apologize? You should show me more sincerity!"

The man who Subaru had almost collided with replied in a rough voice, his expression changing as he saw Subaru.

At the same time, Subaru himself was also stunned.

Subaru: "Whoa, is it Chin? You were even hired by Felt, why are you still up to the same mischief?"

Rachins: "You're so damn annoying! I've told you that it's not Chin! And what are you even doing here?!"

The man who angrily spat those words was yesterday's messenger. The one who had made a mess of delivering his message. According to what Felt had said, he had supposedly been instructed to spend the night at another hotel in the city.

Subaru: "You're all alone, and not with Ton and Kan? That's really curious."

Rachins: “Curious or whatever, what do you even know about me? There’s nothing between us, so why do you keep trying to start something? You’re so annoying, goddamn move already.”

Subaru: “You’re so cold, even though we have a relationship of life and death.”

Rachins: “I don’t remember that kind of thing?!”

Rachins, who was unfamiliar with Subaru, made an irritated face as he tried to avoid him.

Even Subaru himself had trouble understanding why he felt such kinship. Perhaps the ordinary person sensors in Subaru’s heart treated Tonchinkan as ordinary people. So many of the people in this world were ridiculously strong, so facing them would have Subaru breathe a sigh of relief.

Even though they had obviously killed him once before. He was really getting bolder.

Rachins: “Anyway! Don’t bother me! I’m working right now!”

Subaru: “You used to screw around and mess with people, and now you’re doing proper work… I’m so happy for you.”

Rachins: “Who the hell is this «you»?!”

As Subaru pretended to weep, Rachins escaped from him and headed for the crowd. Having received a cold reaction, Subaru scratched his head in self-reflection.

If one had the bad habit of not taking the initiative to talk to people, there would also be a lingering sense of distance.

Watching Rachins disappear into the sea of people, Subaru turned toward the park again. And then his feet suddenly stopped.

Subaru: “Hmm?”

Subaru turns his head and begins to feel suspicious. Before his eyes, in that subtle moment, is the reason that Subaru stopped—there were people who had stopped.

The crowd that Rachins had headed towards were all frozen in their tracks, and Subaru inadvertently followed suit. Rachins curled his lip and pushed his way out of the crowd.

Rachins: “This guy, that guy, and this guy too! What’re you all looking at?!”

Filled with irritated insults, Rachins also aligned his gaze with the gaze of the masses, which were directed at the top of the roof of a towering building.

An exceptionally tall building that acted as a clock tower, inlaid with a mosaic of crystal engravings, and a magic crystal fitted at the very top. In any metropolis or town, this building would be taken for granted. Each city or town would have several of these clock towers.

In the city of Priestella, there were also a number of clock towers scattered about. The clock tower here was merely one of many. However,

???: “—Gosh, honestly. Please excuse me for making a ruckus, my sincere apologies.”

There, a figure stood, staring out from the open window of the clock tower, dangerously close to its edge. The figure’s attire drew the attention of everyone nearby, and its voice trembled as if bathing in the weight of all that attention.

???: “Thank you. I really only need just a little bit of it, so please let me borrow your time.”

It spoke words of apology, but, compared to genuine words of regret, its words felt far more self-righteous, as if prioritizing its own intentions.

That shivering voice broke, sharply. Listening to it was painful on the ears, and there was a fierce, desperate need to remove that discomfort immediately.

The reason for that strange feeling could perhaps be traced to that figure's off-putting appearance.

—The figure's head was entirely wrapped in bandages, leaving only its dazzling eyes uncovered. Its body was wrapped tightly with a black coat, and both wrists were captured by a long chain, the ends of which dragged on the ground, swaying both left and right as their owner paced the tower.

It offered the masses a strange gesture—a smile, perhaps, but the bandages concealed and distorted its mouth too much for the expression to be comforting.

???: "My apologies, I am a Sin Archbishop of the Witch Cult, representing Wrath."

After saying that terrible title, the figure reported its name.

???: "—I am called Sirius Romanée-Conti."

With malice, she smiled.

Chapter 19:
Theater of Malice

1

Those words were spoken with both intimacy and graciousness.

Hearing the bandaged figure's opening speech, the crowd could only gaze up in stunned silence. The figure standing high above them had a peculiar, striking appearance. Its voice was ear-piercing, yet incredibly entrancing.

However, those notable features were secondary to something much greater.

The reason why no one dared to move their eyes from that figure was, in fact, incredibly simple. Calling that reason biological instinct would be no exaggeration.

—No one would be so foolish as to heedlessly look away from a life-threatening enemy.

???: "Huh, what?"

???: "What did that person say just now?"

???: "This a joke, right? The Witch Cult, what's with…"

Delayed understanding gradually spread through the crowd.

However, no one took action. Everyone merely questioned the people near them, as if doubting what they had heard.

Rachins: "Just now, what did that bastard say? Did you hear it?!"

Rachins, who had raced back towards Subaru, shared that reaction. Although he crossed the crowd and approached Subaru while keeping an eye on the clocktower, Subaru, standing at a distance from the crowd, did not let his gaze waver for even a second.

A disaster would surely occur as soon as he looked away.

Considering the identity of that figure, that was a doubtless fact.

—That is, that figure was a creature of the same breed as Petelgeuse.

Subaru: “Also, claiming to be a Romanée-Conti…?”

The bandaged figure had given its name, Sirius Romanée-Conti.

Ridiculously enough, Romanée-Conti was in fact Petelgeuse’s surname, although it was impossible for that Spirit of evil to have blood relatives.

Subaru: “It doesn’t feel that all the Sin Archbishops have that same family name.”

An entire family named Romanée-Conti would be far too much of a nightmare to handle.

A wicked religion spreading the teachings of the Witch, and a family under the name of Romanée-Conti, producing Sin Archbishops for generations? Even just the thought seemed so distorted and foul it made Subaru feel a proverbial nauseating stench.

At the same time, an endless wave of anger towards the Witch Cult rose inside Subaru.

Although it was not the Gluttony that he had been pursuing, if this was someone who could give him a lead, then—

Subaru: “—I’ll try to capture it and force it to spew everything out.”

Although difficult, that could force open a path to Gluttony.

Determined, Subaru calmed his blazing heart, and focused on finding his connection with Beatrice. Beatrice would appear for Subaru as soon as she was summoned.

This was an effect of the contract between a Contractor and his Spirit. Deep within himself, Subaru grabbed onto their connection, and prepared to seize it, when,

Sirius: “—Alright! That’s enough!”

Subaru: “—?!”

Just as he was about to call Beatrice, a shrill, dry voice called loudly from above.

That voice gave the impression that it could permeate the entire city. The bandaged person clapped its hands, and Subaru opened his eyes to see it watching the crowd beneath.

Sirius: “It took twenty-two seconds for everyone to fall quiet. However, thank you all for your attention. I am very happy. In addition…”

Despite the irony in those words, the bandaged person, Sirius, kept its arms crossed as its entire body shook. Although it looked incredibly happy, the friction between the chains hanging from his arms and the walls of the clock tower created a nerve-wracking sound.

Sirius: “You and you there, and the two buddies there, and you there too. My apologies, but please do not be so angry. I am very sorry to take up everyone’s precious time. Sorry, and thank you.”

Subaru: “What…”

Sirius twisted his body around, as if it were genuinely complaining.

Subaru had been prepared to yell “what a joke”, but, before the words started leaving his mouth, he noticed that he had been included amongst the four people who Sirius had pointed a finger at when saying “do not be angry”.

Looking around, he saw the other people who Sirius had pointed out—They all seemed to possess some amount of skill. A demi-human with a sword at his waist, a woman in a blindfold, and Rachins, each sporting blushed faces.

Those who had been named had all been people who had been prepared to take some action against Sirius. This was a warning that their plans had been seen through.

Subaru: "…"

Subaru felt cold sweat begin to bead his forehead, and he stopped calling for Beatrice.

He had long understood how terrifying an attack by the Witch Cult was, and knew that survival was everything. In the square around Subaru, no fewer than thirty people had gathered.

If he was not able to find an advantage in any way, then his situation was already deadly.

Subaru gave a wink to the other four who had been mentioned by Sirius, forming eye contact.

The demi-human, who looked like an adventurer, caught his eye, and the blindfolded women sensed his intention, as did a sharp-looking city merchant. Only Rachins's face revealed vague confusion as he looked away from Subaru.

Rachins held the most powerful card—the ability to summon Reinhard.

On the previous day, Reinhard had cautioned Rachins to remember to signal him in case anything happened. So there was a well-established signal between them, and as soon as Rachins used it, Reinhard would come. And as long as Reinhard rushed to the scene, then Witch Cult or Sin Archbishop or Sirius or whatever, any enemy would be cut down without fail.

However, there would certainly be casualties as soon as Rachins made the signal. That was probably what led Rachins to hesitate.

If sacrifices were disregarded, that would be the best way to deal with Sirius.

But did they have to resort to that immediately? Would those sacrifices be worth it?

Sirius: “Okay, thank you. It looks like we have all calmed down a little bit. I understand your restlessness. Hearing the name «Witch Cult» did not give you a good impression, did it? I am not planning to do anything too special. The reason I took everyone’s precious time today is because I wanted to confirm a matter.”

???: “To confirm… a matter?”

Sirius: “My apologies, but please do not chatter so much. My head is not too good, so if everyone speaks at the same time, I will feel troubled. Then I will be very sad. That would not be good, would it? If there is anything that is currently bothering any of you, please tell me. I am taking up everyone’s time, and I feel very guilty, so no matter what the question is, I will answer. Is that okay?”

Sirius, from beginning to end of that speech, spoke in an intimate, rational manner, but that attitude was off-putting. That was a given, considering the sense of disgust people would direct towards a bandaged figure who revealed only its teeth and eyes.

Presumably, everyone thought like this. Even at Sirius’s suggestion, the crowd remain silent and eyed the people near them. In that case,

Subaru: “With all due respect, may I ask you a question?”

Since no one took the initiative to raise their hand, Natsuki Subaru spoke up, raising his hand.

Subaru, detecting himself at the center of a wave of surprise, kept his gaze fixed intently on Sirius, who looked down to Subaru.

Sirius: “Yes, please do. Thank you. You were someone who had gotten a little angry earlier, so I am very happy that you are willing to talk to me. What do you want to know?”

Subaru: “Although I don’t know what’s going on here, I’m keeping some girls waiting. Four of them, actually. So it’d be nice if you could let us go as soon as possible.”

Sirius: “Oh, my! That is truly terrible, my apologies. But I did not expect that of you. Is it a man’s dream to have four girls to serve?

That is really bad. Is it not sad to leave some of them crying? We have to put an end to this unallowable disloyalty that absolutely cannot happen that must be completely banned."

Subaru: "O-Oy?"

Sirius's voice grew more and more energetic halfway through the speech, before dropping into a whisper. However, after hearing Subaru's puzzled voice, Sirius raised its face suddenly.

Sirius: "No, no, I just got a little emotional. My apologies. Although I try so hard to remain level-headed, I always become unwittingly excited. Thank you for worrying about me. Well… you asked when I would let everyone go?"

Subaru: "…Ah, that's right. We'd appreciate it."

Sirius: "My apologies to bother you, I am really very sorry. But there is no problem. Even though I am in the Witch Cult famous for not being calm and quiet, I honestly hate troubling anyone. The others often worry other people, and I feel very sorry about that."

Unexpectedly, dialogue was fairly easy to establish, but Subaru noted something mysterious.

A soft demeanor, an extremely humble attitude, and the dialogue they had exchanged—taking all that into account, could it be that Sirius was a woman?

The bandage rendered that face invisible, and the body was covered with a coat, so it was difficult to discern. The voice was high, but rather than sounding feminine, it sounded unnatural and mechanical, so that was also difficult to use as a criterion for judgement.

"But maybe it is a woman", Subaru thought indifferently.

In fact, judging from Sirius's behavior and attitude, there was no danger in particular.

Her abnormal appearance and the way that she had introduced herself led to several people being on guard, but if these factors were disregarded, then she was easier to establish dialogue with than Priscilla.

In the surrounding crowd, the lingering tension gradually soothed, as people watched on curiously, as if waiting for her to make her point.

Subaru did so too, although he felt slightly nervous still.

Sirius: “Thank you. And I am sorry. It looks like I scared everyone. But I am very happy that all of you are willing to hear me out like this.”

Subaru: “It’s not like we won’t forgive you. But let’s get down to business already.”

Sirius: “Right, right, thanks for reminding me. Let us talk about the main topic. I appeared in front of everyone to affirm something, in the first place.”

Sirius shook her body while rubbing her two chains together, creating a jarring sound.

In fact, rather than being off-putting, that action looked humorous. She seemed much more like a jester or performer than someone dangerous.

Subaru’s face eased into a smile, and his apprehension vanished. He no longer found it necessary to call for Beatrice. He just hoped he could quickly hear Sirius out and leave.

Subaru: “So, what do you want to affirm?”

???: “Yeah, yeah, hurry up and tell us!”

???: “Yeah, I’m about to be late for work!”

As soon as Subaru urged her on, a pandemonium of chattering began.

The last man speaking pointed at the magic crystal on top of the tower Sirius was occupying, and burst into laughter. As the whirlpool of laughter spread, Subaru couldn't help but relax even further. Sirius looked like she had lost to the atmosphere and put a troubled hand on her head.

Sirius: "Sorry, my apologies. Really sorry. I know everyone is busy. I will finish my speech immediately, so please stay with me for a while."

Subaru: "So tell us already!"

Sirius: "Okay! Well, here it goes. The matter I want to affirm is very simple. To put it bluntly, there is something I want to say about Love. Wow, that was embarrassing."

Although the bandages should have covered up any blushing, Sirius covered her face with a hand, trying to cover her shame up. As everyone laughed silently and infectiously, Sirius's appearance began to seem increasingly out of place.

Sirius: "Although I expected that I would be laughed at, it still makes me feel troubled. Thank you for listening to me. Thank you, and I also have a request."

Subaru: "Request?"

Sirius: "I think, if everyone can stay with me for a while, I can affirm that Love. My apologies, I can really say some unruly things."

Sirius stumbled through her words, rubbing her hands and chains together as she made her suggestion.

Faced with such an adorable sight, the crowd reacted with a "What, is that all?" Subaru also crossed his arms, nodding as he felt the joy spread through the crowd.

Sirius lit up and began clapping her hands.

Sirius: "Really? Thank you, thank you! My apologies. The world is truly very gentle. Full of love and tenderness. Whenever I understand this, I cannot help but want to express my gratitude. People are able to understand each other and care for each other.

Maybe I am saying «thank you» and «my apologies» so that I can confirm that."

???: "Yeah, yeah, we get it, Sirius! So what next—?"

Sirius: "Ah, my apologies!"

The blindfolded female adventurer had cheered at Sirius. As if hearing the voice of a classmate she had been friends with for a decade, Sirius caught her gaze and began laughing with her.

Then, as if finally remembering her purpose, Sirius retreated into the clock tower and reached out a hand to its window. And there,

Sirius: "Sorry to keep you waiting. Well, come here."

???: "—!"

She spoke with a friendly voice as she pulled someone through the window.

A little figure moaned and writhed in her grip—a little boy whose entire body was bound by chains.

He was only about ten-years-old, and his entire body, from ankles to shoulders, was wrapped around with a chain. He was also gagged with that chain, the corners of his mouth dripping blood. Only his neck and above were free, and he desperately moved his head, crying as if pleading for something.

Sirius: "My apologies that I have scared you so. However, as a man, crying like this is not good. Although I wanted to keep that a secret for you, you look like you are about to urinate yourself. If everyone gets to know that, you will be embarrassed and sad."

???: "Mmm! Mmgh!!"

???: "Yes! It's so embarrassing!"

???: "If you're a man then don't cry!"

???: "Men only cry three times in their lives, and even then, for only a moment! Haha!”

As Sirius comforted the crying boy, the crowd below mocked that little boy.

Everyone had gone through a period of time where they cried over little things, so their teasing was not malicious, but their lack of thoughtfulness was clamorous.

Sirius: “Alright, that is enough, everybody! It is true that this child is a little clumsy, but he is in fact very brave. Isn’t that right, Lusbel-kun?”

Lusbel: “—!”

The boy, who was bound by chains, was probably not very light, but Sirius easily held him up with one hand as she reproached the crowd while stroking his head. Lusbel, as the boy was so called, desperately moved his head as if to place distance between himself and Sirius’s face.

That sight was rather humorous, and although knowing that it would be demeaning to the boy, the crowd still unconsciously laughed.

Sirius: “Excellent. Well, please pay attention. My apologies. This is Lusbel, a nine-year-old boy who lives in Priestella. His family name is Kallard, so his full name is Lusbel Kallard.”

Lusbel: “Mmph! MMMMMMMPH!!”

Sirius: “His father is named Muslan Kallard. Muslan-san works to maintain the stability of the waterways. Ina Kallard, Lusbel-kun’s mother, is pregnant. Her stomach has just started to grow larger, and so Lusbel-kun is looking forward to having a younger brother or sister. The Kallard family lives on Third Street. They often go to the city park with a family friend, Tina. Lusbel-kun and Tina-chan are childhood sweethearts, and they love each other dearly. Lusbel-kun’s dream is to have Tina-chan stand at his side and support him. Tina-chan is a girl with pale blond curls, and her growing beauty as she blossoms into adulthood is much anticipated. That Tina-chan also wants to support Lusbel-kun's dream. Upon hearing of the song "Delphin Betrayed by the Sunset", Lusbel-kun wanted to become an adventurer just like Delphin. It is a very commendable dream for a boy of his age. Although there may be people who would laugh at that childish dream, I would not do so at all. Who could laugh at that manly spirit? I believe that Tina-chan also thinks this way, which is why she gives Lusbel-kun her heartfelt support. Right, although Lusbel-kun's dream is to be an adventurer, he is also really looking forward to meeting the child inside his mother. His original plan was to immediately embark on the journey of adventure, but he put it on hold, out of consideration for his newborn brother or sister. Because of the large difference in their ages, that child will certainly be very much loved. Lusbel-kun is a good kid who is considerate of others, so I think he will be a very good brother. I would also be happy if everyone could support Lusbel-kun's feelings. Ah, yes, we cannot forget about Tina-chan. In fact, the one I originally wanted to bring here was Tina-chan rather than Lusbel-kun, because I think girls are closer than boys to the kind of Love that I want to affirm. However, my heart was impressed by Lusbel-kun's desperate pleas. Sorry, I am not a very strong-willed person. So I changed my mind… Ah, although, being temperamental is just my usual attitude. When I talk about my Love, I speak wholeheartedly. Oh, how annoying, I am so embarrassed. Really, my business does not matter. We should be focusing on Lusbel-kun and Tina-chan. Because they already love each other so much, I do not know how much they will come to adore to each other in the future, so separating them would make me very, very sad. So I decided that I would respect Lusbel-kun's feelings and help him. So, although Lusbel-kun was just slightly scared and even cried a little, he is, in reality, a very brave child. Thanks, and my apologies. I have finished talking in a way that is convenient for everyone."

Lusbel: "Mmph! Mmmph! Mmgh!"

Listening to that child's, to Lusbel's, life, everyone understood and agreed.

It turned out that, although mixed with a little bit of shame, Lusbel's courage was indeed commendable. With that in mind, Subaru wanted to hit himself for having such a ridiculous, demeaning thought earlier.

But this was not the occasion to blame himself. Showing support for the boy was far more important than taking the time to be self-deprecating. And so,

Subaru: “Lusbel, don’t cry! You’re the best!”

Subaru shouted loudly, praising the courage of the young boy who shed tears.

Knowing the true courage buried under those tears, how could he laugh at that shame? Rachins, who stood next to Subaru, joined in the encouragement.

Rachins: “Yeah, don’t cry anymore! You’re a man, right?! If so, show us your cooler side, kid!”

???: “Yeah, listen well, Lusbel! You’re Priestella’s pride!”

???: “Lusbel—! Amazing—! You’ll be a great man!”

The audience cheered up, and everyone present began clapping.

That was not only a scene of praising a young man’s dedication and courage, but also a beautiful scene showing the kindness of human nature.

No matter how weathered or desperate one appeared, what mattered was their will to protect what they valued, and that light was what attracted people to them. For such a revelation, people could not be thankful enough.

Sirius: “Ah… Thank you, thank you, thank you! Ah, this is amazing! I believed that we could all understand it. I knew everyone would praise Lusbel-kun’s courage. Because he demonstrated Love in his courage! If you know him, you will love him. Because of this mutual understanding, everyone now has an in-depth understanding of each other’s Love!”

???: “Sirius—! Thank you, thank you so much!”

???: “Lusbel-kun—!!”

Sirius’s eyes widened as tears began to flow freely. Seeing the bandage around her eyes becoming stained with those tears, Subaru felt something hot welling in his own eyes.

His shoulder was gently nudged. Rachins, who stood by his side, was laughing at the crying Subaru. However, the tears in his eyes, even as he smiled, did not escape Subaru’s notice.

Looking around, the surrounding groups of people also seemed to share their emotions, joining arms with one another. Subaru remembered watching the Football World Cup. When people stood together against the world, people always look to connect and share their joy with those who they were not acquainted with.

And now, that sort of Japanese spirit was gradually spreading. There was indeed a solid bond between people.

Sirius: “Our inability to understand each other creates barriers between us. Our minds being unable to empathize leads to antagonism. Our inability to reach conclusions has us giving up on one another. That is all very heartbreaking. In fact, it is a tragedy. But now, everyone, are you sad? Do you feel heartbroken?”

???: “Not at all! Sadness or whatever, none of us feel that way!”

Sirius: “Thank you! So, do you feel happy? Does everyone feel happy?”

???: “Of course! It’s been a long time since I’ve been so happy! Thank you, Sirius! You’ve worked so hard, Lusbel!”

With a splash, a whirlpool of applause formed, giving birth to a circle of gratitude for the exalted Lusbel. Now, the heart of everyone here was in one single place, thanks to the two standing on the clock tower.

Lusbel twisted his body and sobbed, finally opening his mouth, disregarding the chain and screaming through his broken teeth,

Lusbel: “Guh, gah! Wake up, save—! Please, …me! Hel… hk!”

Sirius: “I want to commend your courage, your love, Lusbel-kun! Please look below. Everyone, so many people are affirming your feelings! Ah, thank you! My apologies, Lusbel-kun. Although you were a last resort, I just want to affirm this scene. Ahh, ahh, the world is so gentle!”

Sirius hugged Lusbel tightly in her arms.

In the face of this beautiful sight, thunderous applause echoed. Subaru put his hand to his mouth and whistled. The recipient of that warm applause, Lusbel, stared in surprise.

That was a man who had struggled his hardest. Even if he had no strength left to even cry, not a person laughed at him.

Sirius: “Sure enough, there it is. We have Love. It existed, here. Everyone’s heart became one, and that became one with a scene of joy as well. We do not need tragedy. We are tired of a world which would have us cry. No one wants such a world. If our hearts want to connect, then they should do so through sharing joy and happiness. Whether it be tragedy! Or Wrath! No one needs any of it!”

???: “That’s right! Tragedies or whatever, we don’t want any of it!”

Sirius: “Ah, that forbidden Wrath that causes hearts to tremble so! Rage, that passion! If the deadly sin of passion is rooted in our hearts, if we are unable to unroot that retribution, then we should fill it with joy! At this moment, everyone’s heart is connected as one!”

Sirius cried loudly, and once again lifted Lusbel into the air.

However, the movement did not stop there. Sirius, bathing in everyone’s admiration, tossed Lusbel into the air.

Sirius: “Please give! Thunderous applause!”

Crowd: “…”

Sirius had given the flying Lusbel the best possible stage.

Watching the young boy soaring through the sky, as if flying into the sun, Subaru took the initiative of leading the crowd into a round of applause.

Roaring thunderous applause, a heavenly blessing to Lusbel, who skated through that sky.

That little body spun and spun, but as soon as it reached the top of its trajectory, it began to arc downward. Lusbel headed straight to the ground. The crowd vacated where he was about to fall in a hurry.

That was the triumph of a hero.

Endless applause, praise for the falling boy.

???: “MMMMMM!!”

Lifting his head and seeing the ground rushing toward him, Lusbel moaned.

He desperately wriggled his small body that should have been exhausted, wanting to do anything he could to avoid that rock solid ground, tirelessly fighting to his last moment.

Everyone shed tears at seeing the unwavering tenacity of humankind. Then,

Sirius: “—Ah, the world is so gentle!”

Before the fierce collision, Sirius let out a shout. The applause of the crowd, who heard that voice, became louder and louder—

Crowd: “…”

As if eggshells had fallen to the ground, the sound of something breaking echoed, and everyone’s field of vision was dyed red.

The whole body was crushed by the hard ground head-first, and what was once Lusbel’s body, which had once contained the breath of life, became a splatter of flesh in the square—the courageous boy was scattered.

—And just after seeing that scene.

Crack.

The sound of eggshells breaking echoed like a round of applause. The square became a pool of bright red.

That, was an ending.

2

Liliana: “After the song ends and they chat again, shouldn’t we prepare food and drinks for them, Natsuki-sama? Indulging in sweet snacks will certainly create a mood that will close the distance between them, don’t you think so?”

Immediately after Subaru thought he had blinked, a dark-skinned girl stood in front of him.

She put on a clumsy, flirtatious attitude as she stuck out her tongue and scratched her cheek.

As if in a trance, he turned his head to see a smiling silver-haired girl watching him from nearby, and a red-haired woman wearing an irreverent attitude. And then a petite girl who held his hand—

Liliana: “…Ah, ah, what’s going on? Ignored? Are you ignoring me?! P-Please stop it, don’t look at me with that bitterness. Ah, ah, stop it, stop it… D-Don’t sigh like that after hearing my song… Don’t look so disappointed, forgive me… Gk.”

Faced with his silence, the girl in front of him, Liliana, shuddered as if remembering something she was unwilling to recall.

Witnessing this situation, Subaru opened his mouth, and,

Subaru: “…I feel sick.”

Liliana: “Huh?! Did that actually just happen?! Looking at a girl’s face so intently, at such a close distance, and the first thing you say is that you feel sick! I, Liliana, am even more ashamed of Natsuki-sama than your mother is!”

Liliana pretended to be tearful, turning her face away, still keeping an eye on Subaru's reaction, but Subaru could not even notice her annoying attitude. He shook where he stood, and could not help but collapse on the ground.

Emilia: "Subaru? What's wrong?"

Beatrice: "What's wrong, I suppose. Subaru? Subaru?"

Beatrice, who was holding his hand, and Emilia, who stood nearby, looked down at Subaru, who had collapsed on the spot, with concern. Subaru grew so pale that the two could not help but hold their breath.

Subaru: "—Disgusting."

It had been a year since he had last Returned by Death, and the overwhelming incident that had just preceded his death left him on the verge of vomiting as he held his shaking knees.

Thus, the spiral of death began once more. This time, the cycle of nightmares was staged in the city of Priestella.

—Once again, the curtain rose.

Bonus Short Stories

Priscilla's Cheers for Me:
Drunk Father Part

1

…The stench of blood and booze mixed together pervaded through the room.

Collapsed, broken shelves; fragments of splintered ceramics scattered about; crude swords and bloodstained cudgels; all of these things served as proof that a nasty, chaotic fight had broken out.

There was not a single beautiful thing here, only contemptuous filth.

Therefore, the girl in crimson who'd walked into this filth not only stuck out like a sore thumb, but was so alien, to the point you'd have reckoned the world had messed up in casting her role.

Her orange hair shimmered like the sunshine, her deep crimson eyes were like that of scorching flame, and her blood-red dress was emblazoned with terribly expensive jewelry. Yet all of those flashy gems didn't hold a candle to the girl's beauty itself.

Her beauty was the sort that would overrun your mind the moment you laid your eyes on her. Were the notion of extravagance be made into an attack, then the girl's beauty was its very quintessence: a violence that painted over the sense of beauty held by all humanity with its own tinge.

The girl, who'd ended up coming to the wrong stage, glared at the dimly-lit room with her crimson eyes.

The spectacle in front of her was a miserable, nauseating one. The traces of fighting left around the surroundings were as aforementioned, however, the detail which caused the biggest impression was omitted from the explanation.

Tons of human remains lay down on the ground. And what's more, some of their limbs had been cleaved off, their innards removed from their bodies, to the point that a lake of fresh blood had been formed.

The stench of it was absolutely stifling, and the faint, yet pungent smell of booze, was also overwhelming. Most likely, the casks of alcohol lining the walls had received some damage, causing their contents to spill out.

The stench of blood and booze filling the air made the atmosphere an epitome of the world's decadence. And, in this decadent room…

???: "…The hell's up with you, women shouldn't be coming into a place like this."

…Was present a sole survivor, who sullenly hurled those words at the girl.

The lights were off in the room, so they couldn't see each other's faces clearly. However, she could tell that he was a man, that he was tall, that he was pissed off and that he was drunk on blood and booze.

She could tell some other things as well, but she'd ignored them since they were but trivial compared to the current information. Instead, she let out a snort, covering her mouth with the fan she held in her hand.

The Girl: "Don't go treating me as if I were one of those maids or village girls, saying woman and all that. Unavoidable as it may be, that fools will always be fools, it would be beyond prideful of me to have you beseech forgiveness for that act of foolishness."

The Man: "…Shit, is the alcohol going to my head? I don't get a single word of what you're saying."

The man grimaced in annoyance as he took in her words. He placed one of his hands on his head before then slowly shaking his head left and right, so as to stave off his tipsiness. Then, with his opposite hand, the man readied his Sword—his Knight Sword.

The Man: "Well, whatever. Phantom or not, things are gonna be way easier if I cut ya down."

The Girl: "What a rash man. I shall praise you only for the notion of not trying to squander my time."

The Man: "Get lost, phantom woman…!"

Right after he said those words, the figure of the man closed the distance between them in one fell swoop. The distance between them vanished in the blink of an eye, making it so the girl's slender neck was in range of the man's sword.

You could even call his sweeping blow rather flashy, in stark contrast to his shabby appearance.

Specifically, his sword slash was one from which you could really feel the training he'd put in to fell his enemies with a single stroke —No doubt, this was what had produced all those bandit corpses strewn around the room.

Likewise, the girl was going to have her head lopped off by his attack and find herself among the corpses. —Just before she ended up like that though, the man's Knight Sword was beaten back with a shrill clang.

The Man: "What the…!"

The man drew back, letting out a cry of astonishment at having had his blow blocked. He probably wouldn't have been this agitated if that had been the only reason. However, the girl's behavior had been weird.

She'd warded off his blow by uppercutting the back of his sword with the tip of her fan. Then, as he remained stupefied by that fact, the girl's body vanished from in front of him…

The Man: "Where did sh… Bh!"

A blow struck him on the side of the face a split second after he'd let his gaze wander about, leading to his tall figure spinning around in mid-air before slamming into the wall. And just like that, the man bounced off in reaction, then one blow after another, totaling three, slammed into his back, causing him to cough up blood as he collapsed into a pool of blood.

As the man foamed blood there, a high-heeled shoe stomped down on his head.

The Girl: “The absolute disrespect of pointing your sword at me, you ought to thank your lucky stars.”

The girl imposingly spat those words out at the man she’d knocked down, trampling down on him to the point his skull creaked. Naturally, the fallen man didn’t possess the awareness to reply back to her; and if he stayed like this, he’d probably drown in his pool of blood.

???: “…Princess, Princess, how did things end up like this?”

The girl let out an irked sigh as she heard the voice coming from behind her, before turning herself around. She saw a strange figure wearing an iron helmet standing by the entrance, illuminated from the back.

The iron helmet gazed at the inferno inside and the man who was being trampled over by the girl, and said:

The Helmeted Figure: “I reckon he’s gonna die if you keep up like that, so could you take your foot off him?”

And thus he proposed that, to save the wretched man from the hell found in the pool of blood.

2

Currently, the Barielle Barony was going through a period of change.

The trigger behind that rested with the Royal Selection taking place in the Dragon Kingdom of Lugunica—with the five girls who’d been selected as candidates in the ceremony to elect the next King in place of the Royal Family which had succumbed to disease.

One of these five candidates, Priscilla Barielle, was the famed “Sun Princess” of rumors.

Originally, her husband, Leip Barielle, had been the one to rule the Barielle lands. However, he was full of ill-repute in regards to his conduct as its governing lord.

In reality, the citizens who’d been subjected to the laws of his territory had suffered in poverty, passing their destitute days not knowing what the morrow would have in store for them. —Yet a change came to them during those days.

Leip fell gravely ill all of a sudden, around the time the Royal Selection properly set into motion. And thus, his young wife, Priscilla, took over from her ill husband as the governing lord.

Her excellent skills purged the Barielle land from its stagnant atmosphere in a flash. And even though Leip ended up passing away, things moved along under Priscilla, fulfilling the will of her deceased husband.

The way she was so honest and sincere was a salvation for the citizens of the barony, who’d suffered under its misrule.

Thus, its citizens revered her as a Goddess of Salvation, and with everlasting gratitude and respect, fondly referred to her as the “Sun Princess” in honor of her beautiful appearance so reminiscent of the Sun.

Priscilla: “So then, what shall it be? Hanged to death or decapitated? Given that I am so generous, I shall let you choose.”

The “Sun Princess”, Goddess of Salvation, said that to the bound man with a cruel smile.

They were now in the largest building in the nearby village of Agante, away from the bandit’s den that had stunk of blood and alcohol—in one of the rooms of the village chief’s abode.

Of course, regardless of whether this was the best house the village had to offer, it still didn’t come close to Priscilla’s level; however…

Priscilla: “A shabby house, complete with insipid furniture. And to make matters worse, the quality of the food here is terrible, nary a single thing is worthy of me… Nevertheless, they did their utmost to make us feel at home. Who am I to pose blame for that which is unattainable. It would be futile to subject them to petty blame.”

That was what the “Sun Princess” ordained, so her subordinate, the iron helmet—Al, remained silent.

However, just as he thought Priscilla had shown an attitude that could even be labelled as merciful, she’d gone and forced these cruel choices on the captured man. He really couldn’t fathom her at all.

For the time being, he’d go ahead and metaphorically put his hands together in prayer for the wretched man. Actually, in regards to that, it was impossible given he didn’t have a left hand so nothing to be done there. That said…

Al: “Still, aren’t you scaring him a little too much, Princess? Be like that, and you know how it goes, even those who can talk, ain’t going to.”

Priscilla: “What are you babbling on about, Al. When did I threaten him? All I have done was to be merciful.”

Al: “Oh, you’re really in the mood to take his life…? That was a little unexpected.”

Al was trying to change the subject, but the girl—Priscilla—had eyed him with a gaze full of scorn, leaving him to fiddle with the seams of his helmet in exasperation.

???: “You people know who the hell I am and you’re still treating me like this?”

The wretched man bound by rope was the one interrupting their exchange. Al had a bad feeling in reaction to what he’d spewed out.

He wasn’t specifically uneasy about what he’d said, rather he was uneasy about Priscilla’s reaction, who’d heard him.

Priscilla: “Hoh, “Who am I”, he said. A commoner who runs his mouth saying such amusing stuff. Did you hear him Al?”

Al: “Yeah, I did. I heard him, and exactly ‘cuz I did, I can’t help but worry whether you’re gonna fly off the handle, Princess. How about I propose that for now we listen to what he has to say?”

Al chose his words as neutrally as possible and proposed that, as Priscilla sure enough smiled in interest. Yet, the man’s scowl grew deeper, as if he’d interpreted his words as backing him up.

The Man: “That oddball there sure as hell gets it. Hey, getting these ropes off of me as soon as possible would be wise. Making me angry isn’t going to get you people anywhere…”

Priscilla: “Enough chatter. Hurry up and reveal who you are. Did I not tell you back in that vile pigsty, that the only thing you have going for you is that you had not squandered my time.”

The Man: “…I am Heinkel Astrea.”

In an instant, the man was overwhelmed by what Priscilla said, his blue eyes full of grim emotion as he named himself.

Al stopped fiddling with his helmet as soon as he uttered his name. Perceiving that from the corner of his eyes, the man—Heinkel—said: “It seems like you knew” in triumph.

Heinkel: “Astrea, I’m an Astrea. I’m gonna say it one more time, just so that foolish woman can understand. Astrea, that’s my surname. There’s no way you don’t understand what that means, right?”

Priscilla: “Well, I don’t. What sort of meaning is that name supposed to have for me?”

Heinkel: “Whoa.”

The man’s triumphant face froze in place as soon he felt her fan right against his neck. Instantly, cold sweat ran down the man’s face, it was as if the memory of being almost killed earlier had come flashing back.

Priscilla: “Do not get the wrong idea, foolish commoner. The one who has got the right to decide things here is me, and only me. No matter what your name is, no matter what peerage you're from, and no matter who's father you are, they shall not sway my choices."

Heinkel: "Gh, kh…"

On the receiving end of Priscilla's cold words, Heinkel was left completely speechless. Most likely, the seriousness behind her words must have gotten through to him as he looked into her crimson eyes.

Nevertheless, Al couldn't turn a blind eye to the red hair, blue eyes and make or break power the man who called himself Astrea possessed.

Al: "Enough with this, Princess. This guy's the Sword Saint's… Well, going by how you said it just now, this guy must be the Sword Saint's father, right? We'll end up getting in a real mess with that one if we were to kill him."

Priscilla: "What, Al, are you thinking that I would lose to such a twisted guy?"

Al: "You probably wouldn't, Princess, but I'm saying I'd be a goner. Schult-chan would fall into peril as well."

Priscilla: "Ugh, since when did you up your negotiation game so as to bring up Schult."

Priscilla furrowed her shapely eyebrows and glared at Al as the latter gave her a polite bow. She let out a small snort at his attitude and silently pulled her fan away from Heinkel.

Right after he was set free from her murderous intent, Heinkel began to breathe heavily, as if he'd just remembered.

Heinkel: "Hh, hhaa, hhaa… Wh-What is with you people? You know that I'm an Astrea, and yet…"

Al: "Oh, if I tell ya that this beautiful, noble lady right here is up there as the cream of the crop, a candidate for the Royal Selection in the Kingdom of Lugunica, Priscilla Barielle-sama… you'll get what position you're in, right?"

Heinkel: "A-A candidate for the Royal Selection…?"

Having heard something so unexpected, Heinkel's face went pale. Realization had probably sunk into him, of which position, between his and Priscilla's, was seen as being more important in the Kingdom currently.

Plus, it wouldn't be at all strange if he knew about Priscilla's reputation due to the position he was in.

Heinkel: "But what was a woman in your position doing in that den of bandits…"

Priscilla: "Miscreants have threatened my citizens right here in my lands. So what's so strange about me getting involved there?"

Al: "Or well, she says these things like she really cares about her people, but in actual fact, she was just in the vicinity by chance and heard something that sounded interesting, so that's why she headed over."

Heinkel: "Something that sounded interesting…?"

Al: "A Knight-Errant heard it from the villagers, and thanks to his chivalrous spirit took it upon himself to deal with the bandits, heading alone to their den deep in the mountains. That's quite the moving tale a poet would be fond of, no?"

Al shrugged his shoulders, as if he were messing about with him, causing Heinkel to close his mouth in silence. Even Al could immediately perceive that his silence wasn't one born out of awkwardness.

Brief as their time in contact had been, Heinkel was not the sort who possessed such a virtuous nature. There was no way he'd taken up his sword for a reason like not being able to bear watching someone suffer.

Priscilla: "I can fathom a guess at what you are aiming for. Most likely you were after this thing, that which the bandits had in their possession?”

As she said that, Priscilla held something up in front of Heinkel. A cup of dull-silver hue. A wave of muted emotion flitted across Heinkel’s eyes as soon as he saw it. Dejection at having laid his eyes on something so disappointing—Or perhaps feelings which bordered loathing.

Priscilla: “It seems like the bandits were claiming all sorts…, like “If you pour liquor into this cup and drink it, you shall be cured of any malady in the blink of an eye.”, passing it off as being true. Indeed, it must be a “Meteor”. However…”

Heinkel: “That crap is just a sham that turns alcohol into a drug to alleviate pain. It’s not like using it on someone who’s sick is gonna cure them. It’s a dud.”

Priscilla: “And so you found out after you slew the underlings who refused to hand over the “Meteor” to you. Hah, how amusing. That bunch who died due to their exaggerations are even more asinine than you.”

Priscilla spat her words out and tightened her grip on the cup in her palm. Right after that, the cup was engulfed by flames, burning to nothing in the blink of an eye.

Heinkel peeled his eyes open in shock, not at her melting the silver, but rather at the raging hellfire. In contrast, being quite familiar with it, Al just cracked his neck bones and said,

Al: “Princess, it freaks me out when you don’t tell me you’re gonna do that, plus aren’t you going to burn your pretty little hands?”

Priscilla: “Cease with your misguided concerns. More importantly, you ought to send this foolish commoner over to that slum girl. This time I shall overlook things, due to the fact he spared me the trouble of hunting down these bandits.”

Leaving those words behind, Priscilla turned away from Heinkel, the look on her face indicating she’d lost interest. Actually, she’d probably completely detached her interest away from him. Safe to say, that was a lifesaver for Heinkel.

Yet, he spoke towards her turned figure…

Heinkel: “You mentioned you are a Royal Selection Candidate, didn’t you? Then I think I can be of use to you.”

Priscilla: “…”

Priscilla stopped in her tracks in response. She turned back around and looked down at Heinkel. Shivers ran down Al’s spine as he caught a peep of the look in her eyes from the side.

Were Heinkel to make one mistake with his words, he would lose his head in the blink of an eye. If it came to that, then they wouldn’t be able to avoid coming to blows with the camp that had the “Sword Saint”. That said, Priscilla’s point of attention was already focused on Heinkel. If Al were to interrupt her now, he’d be the one inviting her displeasure.

Worried about his own skin, Al waited for what Heinkel would say next, feeling like he was in prayer.

Priscilla: “Speak up. What can you do if that’s the case?”

Heinkel: “…The Sword Saint’s brat is a nuisance to you, right? I’ve got a plan that can handle this kid who says she’s the boss and makes his loyalty into her plaything. Heh, Heheh.”

Heinkel informed her of his hostile intent towards his own son, as well as towards the girl whom his son had sworn as his master, all the while flashing a wicked grin. —This left Al somewhat impressed.

And it seemed Priscilla was as well; she batted one of her eyes shut, and said,

Priscilla: “And what would you wish from me in return?”

Heinkel: “Blood.”

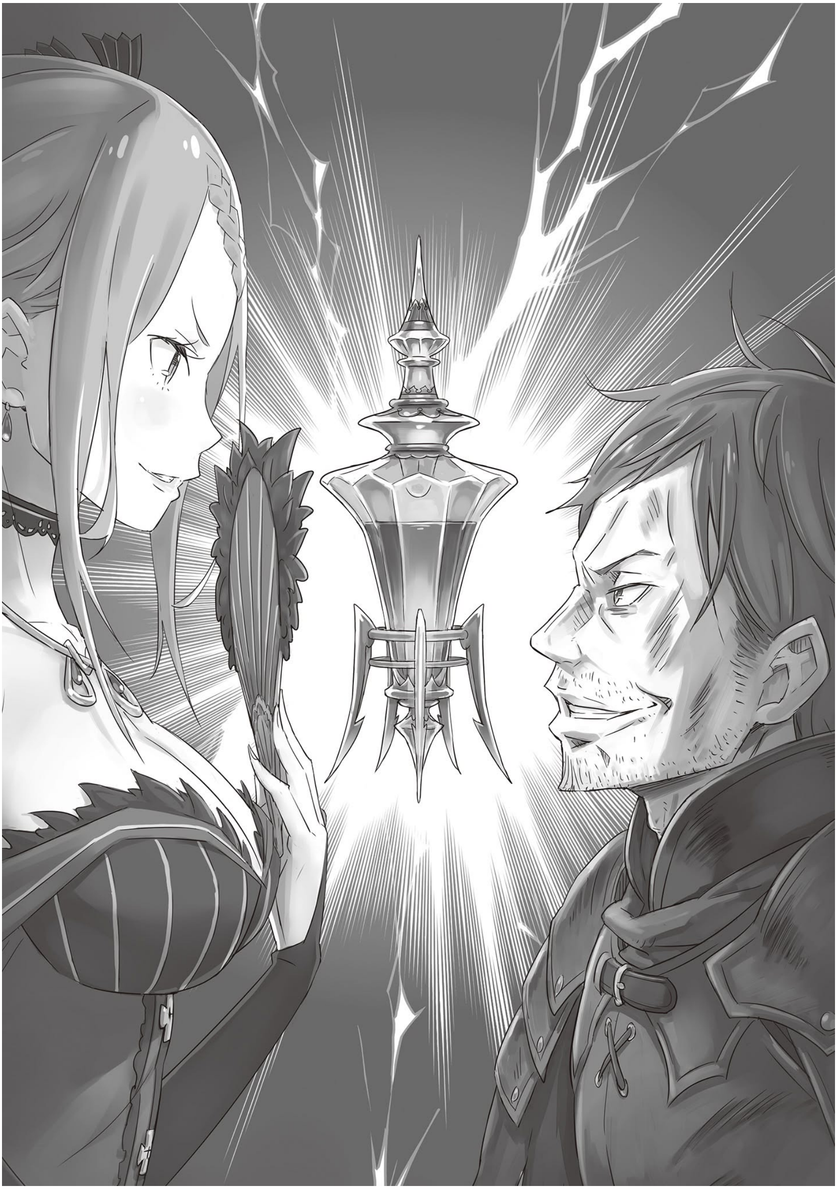
Priscilla: “…Blood.”

Heinkel gave her a firm nod as she repeated the word just to make sure.

Then, the father of the “Sword Saint”, the man who used the name “Astrea”, spoke up with his expression contorting.

Heinkel: “When you become King, give me the Dragon’s Blood that’s kept in the castle. I… I need a miracle for her to wake up.”

END



Petra’s Emilia Camp Struggle:
Page 1
(Edited Machine Translation)

1

Petra: “Really, everyone thinks that I won’t be angry, they’re all so pigheaded.”

A young girl with a puffy red face, Petra vented her frustrations.

This is a girl with slightly bright reddish brown hair, and clear round eyes. Although she is not yet mature, her body is already slightly feminine, you can use the word "endearing" in order to describe this combination of features.

Her budding body is wrapped up in her usual maid’s uniform and exudes an aura that makes people think that she’ll grow up to be a beauty just by looking at her.

Frankly speaking, she is a beautiful girl whose future deserves to be looked forward to.

But right now, this beautiful girl with such potential is clenching her fist, giving an extremely passionate speech with great enthusiasm. And the content of it is…

Petra: “Emilia-neesama is a total airhead, Ram-neesama just slacks off all day, I’ve asked Otto-san to take a break but he still works crazily non-stop like a machine, Garfiel-san keeps burying the knives that he bit into deep in the soil of the garden, Subaru-kun does not notice my feelings, Beatrice-chan is so cunning, the Master does not reflect, and Otto-san does not sleep at all!”

Petra, who was employed at the Roswaal mansion, listed the names and problems of everyone she thought were close to her. The girl, who was counting on her fingers, had in her mind the people who were very important to her but at the same time very were worrisome to her.

Then, after quickly venting her dissatisfaction with these people, Petra gently stroked her slightly bulged chest.

Petra: “Really……… The only one who can ease my mind is Frederica-neesama, it truly gives me a headache.”

After a long sigh, it all came down to the woman she respects.

Petra’s words did not sound like a complaint or an anecdote about a frivolous love affair (of course, this should not be heard by the people mentioned above), nor did it sound like a one-man play with a wall.

So, who is Petra talking to?

???: “Pe, Petra-chan, why are you telling me all this? “

The person who said that was a blue-haired girl the same age as Petra, lazily looking at her head.

She is a girl with long hair that ends in a braid, and is wearing thin black pajamas. The young girl’s looks were no less comparable with Petra’s, and her body exudes an aura that does not match those of her age.

The young lady tilted her head and yawned while covering her lips..

???: “I don’t think there is anything I can do for you.”

Petra: “No! I just want to talk to you about it.”

In response to the girl’s cold response, Petra fearlessly leaned towards her. Maintaining her composure, Petra continued.

Petra: “Because …… Meili, aren’t you bored being alone all the time, right? I’m here to talk to you.”

Meili: “Petra you… you really are a good person.”

Facing Petra’s nonchalant claims, the girl called Meili was left a little speechless, and then she shrugged helplessly and parted her lips.

2

Petra Leyte is only thirteen years old and is the youngest girl in the Emilia camp.

It should be said that she is still a child, and everyone in the camp loves her unconditionally. Regarding this fact, she felt love from everyone and felt very blessed.

However, although Petra accepts this blissful fact, she is unwilling to rely on such an environment.

Petra still remembers that there was a time when she was too prideful and made too many mistakes that were unwelcomed and shameful. After an in-depth reflection, she secretly made up her mind.

Before relying on others, she must do her best to do everything that she can.

For Petra, who holds this kind of mindset, the people in the mansion are tricky enemies.

After all, these people will spoil Petra whenever they have a chance. And in unison, they relied on the fact that they were older, insisting on the adult theory, that it is only natural for adults to spoil children.

This is too cunning. No matter how hard Petra works, she can't change her age. Therefore, they are really super cunning for using this as a weapon.

Having said that, Petra hopes that the people who wielded an invincible weapon, the banner of adults, would show a consistent attitude.

Although Emilia and Beatrice always proclaimed to be older, they look too adorable on the outside to come off as adults. Otto is indeed very smart, and Garfiel is also fairly strong, but isn't the cunning and powerful Roswaal the pinnacle of human trash? In other words, both Otto and Garfiel are both useless existences.

On this point, Subaru is neither too strong nor too smart, but he's super gentle, so his score is only worth one million points. It's just that Subaru always makes himself suffer in order to protect others, he is very worrisome. Although she wants to support him normally and get close to him, but because she has never given up on her admiration for him, she can't guarantee that she can accomplish these wishes "normally".

In addition, there is Ram who can obviously do anything she wants, but has a lazy attitude and poor taste for men. At this point, Petra's evaluation of the members of the Emilia camp has ended. In summary, all of the members require Petra's help.

If this were to be heard by people who claimed to be adults, Petra would be afraid of her image being defined as an evil instructor who evaluates scores without mercy.

Petra: "…Of course, everyone except for Frederica-neesama."

Meili: "Petra-chan, aren't you just too deeply invested in the role of being an old and caring mother?"

Listening to Petra's complaints Meili, who was playing with a doll while sitting on the side of the bed, sighed.

The place where they talked is the secret confinement room under the Roswaal mansion. It is a basement that simply bears such a name.

For the time being, it has a design where you can only lock the entrance from the outside, so it can also lock the people inside, and except for that, it doesn't have any other special jail functions. A bed, desk, living room and even clothing, all kinds of daily necessities are readily available, in addition to the "goodwill" care, the interior decoration is also luxurious.

100万点

This is the home of the girl who was sent to Roswaal’s mansion as an assassin and attempted to take the lives of Petra, Subaru, and the others, but was imprisoned because of her failure.

Of course, this method of dealing with the defeated Meili also caused considerable controversy in the Roswaal mansion.

Considering her position, she is undoubtedly a dangerous individual who has been hostile towards them. In addition, she has the "Divine Protection" that can manipulate demon beasts as she pleases, so it is very difficult to completely subdue her.

Despite this, they still decided to keep her in the mansion, on the one hand, to find out her behind-the-scenes relationships, and on the other hand, there is also Subaru’s defense of her… However, the main reason for this decision is because the latter has greater influence.

Meili: “Since I failed my mission… If I go back like this, I will definitely be killed.”

Speaking frankly without any fear, Meili also expected the way she would be imprisoned.

As a result, Meili was confined as a prisoner in the basement of the mansion and lived a life of imprisonment. Of course, Petra has also been warned by the people in the mansion that even if Meili is already imprisoned, she must not let her guard down around her, but…

Meili: “… I don’t even know when it started, you don’t even bring guards with you anymore.”

Petra: “…? Meili, did you just say something?”

Meili: “I said, this mansion is full of careless and worrisome people”

Petra: “Ah, Meili, you think so too? Me too!”

In response to Meili’s sigh, Petra giggled in agreement.

It feels that everyone’s high level of vigilance towards Meili has become nominal. During this year, Subaru and Emilia were completely ensnared by Meili, who was not even resisting. They were completely defenseless.

And this kind of defenseless performance can be clearly seen throughout this confinement room. For example, Meili received carefully handmade dolls by Subaru, as well as the bedding selected by Emilia, and so on.

…It is guessed that, besides Petra, Otto is probably the only one who is still keeping a good eye on her.

Meili: “Petra-chan, you really are a capable child.”

Petra: “Yes, that’s right. My memory is especially good.”

Taking a sip of the tea she brought, Petra smiled brightly at Meili’s words.

Yes, she has a good memory. She can do anything smoothly and thoughtfully, and most of her work can be done quickly and easily. In addition, her face is also very cute. It is because of these things given to her by her parents that she can stay here.

Petra will never forget that Meili once set off a fierce demon beast fiasco in her home village Arlam. The same was true for the mansion battle following it.

Only the fact that Meili is a dangerous girl, she will never forget. She comes into contact with her with such topics consciousnessly in her mind.

Meili: “…That being said, why do you come here often?”

Petra: “If the feelings arise, even if you have any intentions, you would naturally choose to give up. Therefore, I will speak to you. It is fine for you to like me just like this.”

Meili: “…”

Seeing Meili, who lost her interest in an instant when she heard those words, Petra's mood lightened a little.

Facing Meili, whose attitude is like that of an adult, is extremely disproportionate to her appearance. Petra wonders when she began taking revenge in this kind of way. If these bickering conversations continue, will she one day choose to forgive her?

Petra was clueless about the future.

Meili: "…Despite Petra-chan being so gentle, she can't forgive that strange clown makeup wearing nobleman?"

Petra: "The Master is another matter. I can't see any form of reflection from him, so that's why I can't forgive him."

Turning her face away, Petra expressed her dissatisfaction with Roswaal, who still treated her as if nothing had happened.

Roswaal, who was carrying out various strange plans in the "Sanctuary" and in the mansion, was reprimanded by Emilia for his conspiracies and seemed determined to change. …It should've been like that, but it is doubtful as to whether that will really happen.

His unpleasant attitude still exists today, and Petra is plagued by it every day.

Petra: "Emilia-neesama said that Master is just a child who likes causing trouble."

But in fact, Emilia's evaluation of Roswaal is very accurate, and Roswaal does not refute this, which is very interesting.

Having been a maid for a year, Petra has a clear image of Emilia's image as a candid, innocent, and a downright good person, as well as her being defenseless against other people. Such a beautiful adult is really a miraculous existence.

However, it is precisely because Emilia has such a clear pair of eyes that she can see through Roswaal's twisted nature. It's really awe-inspiring.

Of course, respect and antagonism are two different things, and Petra's girlish heart is really complicated.

Meili: "But, don't you still have to go out with the Master? Isn't the travelling plan made by onii-san and that half-devil neesan a mistake?"

Petra: "En, um, yes… really, super unlucky"

Meili: "Aha. Petra-chan is really revealing a very unpleasant face. It's not cute at all."

Petra answered in a deep voice with a serious face, while Meili laughed loudly.

…The meeting of the Western Border's Leaders, this is the name of the meeting to be held in a few days.

And the one who is to preside over this meeting is Roswaal, the great nobleman who was appointed as the kingdom's court magician, and held a vast territory with many people. In this way, he promised to provide full-support as the backer of the candidate Emilia in becoming the next king.

Therefore, people in his territory must naturally adopt a policy of supporting Emilia. However, the progress of its work was unable to proceed smoothly due to the matter of Emilia's lineage.

In order to persuade these anxious and opposing powerful people, Roswaal ran around everywhere this year, and the final adjustments are to be made during this meeting.

In other words, this is an important meeting discussing the future of the Emilia camp, and Petra herself voluntarily agreed to act as an entourage. For Petra, who has to learn everything, this is an opportunity. As a member of the camp, she wants to participate in the learning process. However…

Petra: "That meeting unexpectedly collided with Subaru and the date of their travel…"

Meili: “Aren’t they just going on a trip? And now, even if it’s a little trip, the distance between those two won’t grow any closer!”

Petra: “I don’t have that kind of worry. I want to see the Watergate City too!”

Petra immediately refuted Meili’s suspicion, then sighed at her ill luck.

Watergate City Priestella. This is the name of the city where Subaru, Emilia, Beatrice and the other two are about to head for. They are setting off to the city known as the city of water, one of the five largest cities in Lugunica. The invitation came from one of the candidates for the election who’s in the same position as Emilia.

Petra: “However, their work cannot be finished within one day…”

Meili: “Originally it might have been possible to go street-shopping with onii-san.”

Petra: “That’s right…Ah, don’t let me have unrealized fantasies! Really, Meili is really cold-hearted!”

Meili: “Of course. I’m an assassin.”

Meili smiled while snickering, pointed to herself and reported her dangerous profession. Petra’s eyes widened at her attitude, and then she shrugged helplessly.

Meili: “Ahla? What kind of reaction was that?”

Petra: “It’s this kind of place, Meili is acting just like the Master.”

Meili: “…”

Meili squinted her eyes when she heard Petra’s words.

Acting like a wicked person, pretending to be a dangerous person, she must be doing this in order to keep Petra away from her. This naive approach must have stemmed from her negative thoughts.

In a sense, she is also a troublesome child like Roswaal.

Petra: “However, comparing you with the wicked things that Master would do, he wins. I’m sorry, Meili, I compared you with the Master.”

Meili: “The clown who can make Petra-chan say such a thing is probably indeed more excessive.”

Of course. That kind of supervillain, Roswaal is the only one. Petra will probably never forgive him for a lifetime. Therefore, Roswaal will also never forget what he has done for the rest of his life.

However, thinking this is also playing right into Roswaal’s hands, and the thought of that makes her frustrated.

Petra: “Ah, it’s already that time, it’s about time for me to start preparing to go.”

Looking at the engraved magic crystals on the basement wall, Petra realized that she had stayed too long.

By the way, the engraved magic crystal is cutely decorated by the skilful hands of Subaru and Emilia, which wiped out the depressing atmosphere that should have belonged to the confinement room.

Meili: “If Petra-chan goes out, is the one staying in the mansion Petra-chan’s favorite onee-san?”

Petra: “No, it’s going to be Ram-neesama. Meili, are you okay with not eating for a week?”

Meili: “I really hope you can give a good reminder to the onee-san with pink hair…”

Petra: “Fufu, just kidding …probably.”

Even if it’s Ram, she probably wouldn’t forget to give food to Meili. However, Petra was still a little worried, so she made up her mind to leave a letter to convey the matter to her well.

After packing the tea set she had brought, Petra looked back at Meili. Then, gently put her hand into her pocket.

Petra: “Meili, I’ll leave this to you.”

Meili: “…? What is this? A handkerchief?”

Petra: “Yes, a handkerchief. I want you to tie it on my right wrist.”

To Meili who tilted her head and looking confused as Petra gave her a white handkerchief, Petra smiled towards her

This is a spell that protects the journey. …Although it is different from the original meaning of the spell, it has the feeling of doing something big, like embarking on a journey. Even if it is only a superstition, it is still meaningful.

Meili: “Petra-chan really is an amazing person.”

Feeling Petra’s energetic aura, Meili smiled knowingly, and then gently tied the handkerchief that was handed over on Petra’s slender wrist.

Meili: “Be careful on the road. Be sure to pay attention to your surroundings.”

Petra: “Meili you too, you will gain weight if you eat up all of the steamed potatoes.”

The two girls looked at each other and smiled, and said a brief parting.

Although it was a little strange or even a little out of harmony, it was still a conversation between friends.

…This is a page that exists in Petra Leyte’s blissful life.

END

Mimi Pearlbaton’s Bite of Love and Passion

1

The moment she caught a glimpse of that person, lightning rumbled and thundered throughout Mimi’s entire body. “Woaaa.”

“Huh? What’re you starin’ at, ya little pipsqueak?”

While being struck by the lightning, Mimi easily brushed off the impact and looked at her opponent. It was a blond boy that had crinkled his nose.

He had short hair, sharp emerald eyes, jagged fangs that had been forged by chewing on hard objects often, and somewhat of a wild, edgy outfit. Everything about him rumbled and thundered through her.

“I see, I see. You are quite good. Mimi has liked you quite a lot.”

“Huh?”

“Name! You are good to tell your name! Mimi is Mimi! Duper strongest Vice Capain!” Mimi pointed her hands towards the sky and energetically announced her name.

The boy was puzzled for a second after he heard her announce her name, but he immediately changed his expression into a competitive one. He proudly hit his chest and shut his mouth, making a loud sound with his fangs.

“Hah! That’s really bold of you to declare yourself the strongest in front of my amazin’ self! It’s the thing called ‘Galaown’s declaration of war’!”

“Galaoun! I have no idea what that is! Is that your name?”

“Not at all! My amazin’ self is Garfiel Tinsel! Lady Emilia’s Shield and the Perfect Guardian! I’m the Gorgeous Tiger!”

"Oooh! That's amazing! Which one is your name?!"

"Garfiel Tinsel!"

"Garfiel!" Mimi repeated excitedly.

The boy—Garfiel—made various poses by vigorously moving his arms and legs around, making Mimi point her orange ears up and jump up dramatically in the heat of the moment. The staff in her hand slipped out and hit the foot of the slender young man next to her.

"Ouch?!" the young man screamed, but Mimi paid him no mind.

"Garfiel… Umm, Garfiel…"

"Don't call my name again and again. What just…ouh!" Garfiel frowned at Mimi, who'd crossed her short arms and was tilting her head, then looked behind him and screamed.

A certain maid was standing there. It was a pretty girl with pink hair and pink eyes. She'd pinched Garfiel's waist from behind with a sly glare, not considering the negative impact it had on her prettiness. "How long are you going to keep our guest standing at the entrance? Hurry up and show them the way, Garf."

"Huh, ain't it your job as a maid to show them the way, Ram?"

"You don't get it at all. A man who is good at things should naturally take over the work of a woman who can't do anything… Wait, who are you calling a useless woman? I'm going to smack you."

"My amazin' self hasn't said anythin'!"

"Hmph." The maid sneered at Garfiel after making an unreasonable demand.

Mimi's eyes widened with surprise at the exchange of words occurring in front of her and then jumped, landing on the foot of the young man who had picked up the staff. "Not again!" he screamed tearily.

Mimi, not seeming to care, pointed her finger at Garfiel. “Garf! Garf seems better! Mimi will call ya that too! Garf it is!”

“Hey, only my family can call me… Ahh, she’s seriously throwing me off my game. The hell is she?”

“She’s a guest,” Ram informed him. “A rather cuddly-looking one at that.”

Garfiel roughly scratched his head, his expression a mixture of caution and confusion. Mimi nodded repeatedly as she watched the girl next to her hugging her elbows.

“Garf,” Mimi repeated the short yet pleasant sound under her breath. She rolled the lightning that had struck her heart and felt the pleasant sensation of playing catch with it.

—This is probably the thing that Roshi was takling about! Rumble rumble boom’s passionne!

That was Mimi’s first impression of Garfiel, which she kept forevermore.

2

Mimi Pearlbaton was the eldest among the three siblings, which essentially made her the strengthiest by default. It didn’t quite make sense, but that was ok to Mimi. She was the elder sister to her two brothers Hetaro and Tivey, so she was obligated to protect them.

Since she needed to protect them, she needed to be the strengthiest. That was her logic. The eldest sister always being the strengthiest at everything was the philosophy that made Mimi the person she was. It was a conclusion that both the pink-haired maid and the blond maid would strongly agree with. In fact, Mimi had been following that logic and living full of vigor to this day.

All of this is thanks to ma’lady–Anastasia—who has given us three a job and a house to live in. And because of Ricardo, who’s like a parent to Anastasia. And, and it’s also thanks to everyone in the Iron Fang. Mimi will include Julius and Joshua in it, too.

Joshua might cry if Mimi forgets about him, so it can't be hepled. And Mimi was about to forget, but Roshi's existence is pretty big for Mimi since he taught us a lot of things in the beginning.

Roshi is a strange old man who saved Mimi and Mimi's brothers when we were wandering around the slums and on the verge of dying. He's something of a savior to us.

"If it hadn't been for Roshi back then, it would have not ended well for Mimi!"

As Mimi recalls, Tivey was about to get caught by the kidnappers and Mimi somehow stopped it but got stabbed in the belly by Mimi's opponent. Mimi got stabbed four times, and Mimi was still two years old, so Mimi was only at the beginning stage of being the strenghtiest, so even Mimi was in a near death situation.

While they were running for their lives while Hetaro was dealing with a stomach wound as bad as Mimi's, an old man suddenly appeared in front of Mimi when her wound started to feel better.

"Blease zave, big bro and elder sis…"

Mimi remembers Tivey crying and screaming with his elder sister and brother on his back. Even Mimi felt regret after hearing that. Since it's a failure of the elder sister to make the younger brother cry. That was the only time Tivey had ever cried like that. Whenever Mimi asks Tivey about that time, he responds with, "There wasn't such a time, there wasn't." He is a forgetful child.

Mimi is getting way off topic. Anyway, the old man who appeared was Roshi. He took the three of us, who were worn out in many ways, to his shack, tended to our wounds, and fed us.

"Well, there isn't any deep meaning behind it," Roshi said. "It's justa that I felt like I wanta live a life that the Sun would be proud of, so I couldn't leave the three dirty cats abandoned on the street behind."

Roshi, who had picked up Mimi and her siblings, laughed with his dirty clothes and his ugly face with a chipped tooth. After that, the three cat’s and Roshi’s life began somehow. The three of them didn’t know anything, as they were just kittens. The three kitten siblings were taught the means to survive by Roshi, who was very knowledgeable.

The energetic Mimi was taught how to fight. The kind Hetaro was taught how to live cautiously. And the wise Tivey was taught knowledge regarding various things. Roshi had always said that it would help the three of them in the future.

There was something else he said often; Roshi often talked about three important things.

“Listen, Mimi. Don’t talk bad about people. And don’t be someone who breaks promises. Just one more thing: have one thing that you’re second to none in.”

“Hmm, hmm, hmm. Hmm! Why thouhg?”

“It’s obvious. A person who talks bad about others will end up being alone. It’s far wiser to not speaka bad from the beginning. A person who breaks promises will also end up being alone. So, it’s obviously better to follow this advice. And the last one…”

“The last one is?”

“…You’ll see tons of good and bad things while you’re alive. You might only see the bad things in the people you are with, but it can’t be helped. But it isn’t like everything about that person is bad. Humans are just a cluster of flaws. So, be the best you can be at one thing, and that will…”

“And tat will?”

“Give you full points. My cute, dirty, cat daughter, you will be able to be a full point.”

After saying that, Roshi smiled, showing off his chipped teeth. His teeth were yellow, his face was full of wrinkles, and his white hair seemed like it hadn’t been washed in a while and reeked, but Mimi liked that smiling face. And the word ‘Full point’ made her heart flutter. She felt like a full point was something amazing. A woman who'll become a full point, Mimi.

“So, what if it was a hundrd things instead?” Mimi asked.

“Hm?”

“If ine can be a full point then what would it be if there were a hundrd? Would Mimi be more amazning than Roshi?”

“—Aha-ha-ha, ha-ha-ha! That sounds amazing! A hundred you say! A hundred things that you are second to none in! In that case, if one can give you a full point, then a hundred things will make you a hundred full points!”

“Oooh! A hundrd full points! That sounds really amazining! Mimi would be a giant ameng men!”

As Mimi puffed her chest and hopped dexterously, Roshi slapped his knee. The walls of the shack broke and tilted but the two at the moment didn't care about it.

Roshi picked up Mimi and held her high in the air and said, “Listen, hundred full points daughter! You may have many things happening in your life from now on, but don't forget my teachings, and keep up that high spirit of yours… Well, it's not something that I need to tell you!”

“Yeah, you don't need to tel me! De-ha-ha-ha-ha!”

“Oh wait, you need to stop laughing like an idiot like that. Since you won't be able to grasp hearts that way.”

“Grasp hearts? What's that? Mimi is strong so everything can be grasped easily!”

“Whoa, this has nothing to do with strength. But it's difficult to explain. And on top of that, I guess it's parental love? It makes me feel deeply uneasy when I think about whether you'll be able to grasp hearts or not. Bloody hell!”

“Bloody hell!” Mimi mimicked Roshi's energetic voice and waited for him to continue.

Seeing her wait, Roshi scratched his nose, looking uncomfortable, and continued. “Whatever, the hell with it. Listen, Mimi, I won’t feel like explaining it no matter what. But you’ll know it anyway when the time comes. Oh, you know what lightning is, right?”

“The one that goes rumble rumble boom?”

“Yeah, that. A time will come when the lightning makes your chest go rumble rumble boom. That’s a sign, so hold on to it tight and don’t let it escape.”

“Tight… What should I not let go of?”

“Heh.” Roshi laughed at Mimi’s question. And after taking a pause, he smiled at her with his chipped teeth. “It’s obvious—the thing called fate.”

3

And so, the rumble rumble boom has happened, and this is Mimi’s fate. Mimi hasn’t asked about it in detail, so Mimi doesn’t know much about it, but if the person who has made the rumble rumble boom happen is Mimi’s fate, then Mimi’s fate is Garfiel.

“Stare, stare.” While shaking her legs on the sofa in the drawing room, Mimi observed Garfiel sitting opposite her.

Mimi has been looking at him for a while now, but his impression hasn’t changed. It hasn’t changed, but Mimi’s heart is pounding passionnattely. Fate is something to be feared. Mimi thought that Mimi was just going to be Joshua’s guared but Mimi has stumbled upon something huge.

“Nom.”

“Mi-Mimi? I want you to stop chewing on my sleeve…”

“Ooh! Joshua’s clothes are kinda damp, what happened?”

“You chewed on it! What on earth is up with you?! You’ve been acting weird for a while now!”

Joshua was sitting next to her and making a fuss while swinging his drool-soaked sleeve.

‘A kid who isn’t calm in someone else’s house isn’t a good kid.’ That’s what ma’lady had told Mimi. Mimi sighed. “Joshua, don’t be too noisy, alright? We didn’t come here to play,” she said, urging him to take the situation into account.

Joshua’s thin shoulders trembled, and he reluctantly hung his head.

“Argh… I have a lot of things to say, but you are right about this…!”

The silver-haired girl in front of them—Emilia—laughed when she saw how the two of them were acting. “A-ha, you two are reaaally close, aren’t you? It felt funny watching you two.”

“I’m… I’m embarrassed to show you such a thing as a messenger…” Joshua said with reddened cheeks.

The young man in green sitting next to Emilia lowered his brows at that. “No, don’t worry about it. It might not be the right thing to say, but I feel closer to you this way…”

Joshua became more timid after hearing that, and Mimi nodded as if she knew what was happening.

Joshua is thin and weak, so Mimi has to protect him as a guared. Julius has told Mimi to make sure that he doesn’t push himself too hard. Mimi accepted Julius’ request saying it can’t be helpd. Just like how Mimi is the eldest sister, Julius is also an elder brother, so he carries a lot of burdens too. So, Mimi is going to concentrate on being a guared and—

“Yo, pipsqueak. Do you have some business with my amazin’ self?”

“Woahaaa!”

Mimi had been staring at him, and, unable to focus at all, kept looking away. She was startled and jumped when the person who was the reason behind that spoke to her up close.

Garfiel, in front of her, had his eyes wide open in surprise. “Wh-What’s wron’ with you?”

“—? Why did Mimi just jump? Everything is a mysterie!”

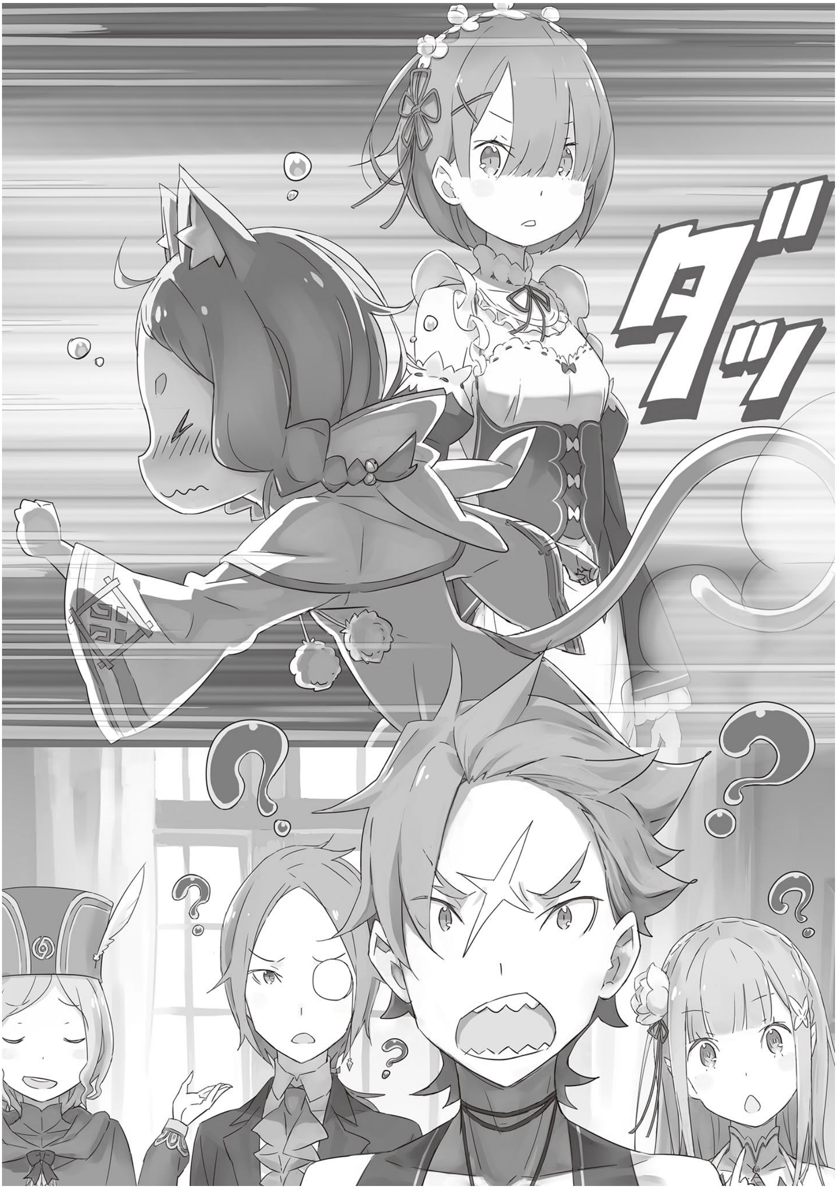
“Hah, the hell are you saying… I don’t get you at all, hey,” Garfiel said, smiling lethargically.

Mimi thought of that as his ferocious smile and became more and more restless. And then…

“—Excuse me. I had Petra go get Barusu just now. He will eventually… Oh my.”

“Hiyaaah!” Mimi shouted.

At the exact moment the pink-haired maid opened the door, Mimi slipped through her side and jumped into the hallway. The maid raised her eyebrow at the suddenness of the situation, but Mimi’s back kept getting farther and farther away.



ダッ

“What was all that about?” Ram asked.

“My amazin’ self has no idea either. And wouldn’t it be dangerous to leave her like that?! Who knows what that little pipsqueak will do inside the manor.”

“…” The maid scowled with her well-defined brows at Garfiel’s words. Then she glared at him, looked out of the room once, and closed the door softly.

“Hey, Ram? The hell are you thin…gaa ouh?!” When Garfiel challenged her decision, the maid flicked his forehead and sighed in exasperation.

“Shut up, Garf. She isn’t going to do anything bad even if we leave her be…it’s simply that it was getting hard for her to be here.”

Garfiel, Emilia, and Joshua tilted their heads after hearing her words.

Only the young man in green was smiling wryly, which the maid sneered at it.

“Ah well…leaving aside Lady Emilia, you men are so inconsiderate.”

“—? Why was I given special treatment?”

Emilia tilted her head, and the maid didn’t respond. She just recalled the side profile of the small kitten-human girl as she slipped by her and ran to the other side of the closed door.

I’ll keep the fact that her face was as red as an appa to myself, Ram thought.

—That was her own way of showing mercy as a fellow maiden in love.

END

Ex 3:
Sword Demon Love Story

Sword Demon Love Story: The Bride's Father

1

—Anxiety was something that Wilhelm had never felt.

He could understand feelings of tension and caution, in which both the body and mind became tense, but such feelings were inseparable from the battlefield, and those who were not perceptive to them didn't live for long.

Thus, Wilhelm was used to being under pressure. And that was why he couldn't help but be surprised at how he was currently acting.

"…" Wilhelm's limbs felt slightly numb, and he felt parched. Those sensations had come out of nowhere, and they were eating away at his mind and body.

"It seems like I, too, am a human being at the end of the day…"

"Wilhelm? Hey, Wilhelm, are you alright?" A voice called out to Wilhelm, who'd just loosened his collar and let out a hot breath. The person with that worried voice was looking at him with concern in her beautiful blue eyes.

Wilhelm psyched himself up after seeing her concerned gaze. He shook his head. "It's nothing. I am just a bit thirsty."

"Really? But you've been drinking tea this whole time… Are you perhaps nervous about something?"

Wilhelm held his breath when she asked that, as she was spot-on.

But the girl's—Theresia's—expression changed instantly when he answered her question with silence. "I see… So that's how it is. Wilhelm, you're nervous."

Her concerned look became somewhat joyful, and he got caught in her mischievous gaze. Making him feel uncomfortable, he clicked his tongue.

“Oh, you clicked your tongue. Don’t do that when he is around. Me, Grimm, and the rest won’t care, but I think the people meeting you for the first time will care a lot.”

“I’ll do my best… What’s taking him so long?”

“Patience. He should be here soon…oh,” Theresia replied, hiding her mouth with a hand after Wilhelm looked away.

Right after that, the parlor’s door opened, and the person they were waiting for appeared.

“Mother, Father,” said Theresia, her eyes shining as she got up from the sofa.

The two on the receiving end of that had just entered the parlor. One was a graceful woman with her beige hair tied behind her head—a beautiful lady with clearly marked features. She was donned in a fluffy dress with long sleeves that suited her perfectly, and her eyes, which were sizing him up, caught his attention. The other person was a man with red hair and blue eyes—which matched Theresia’s—and it was clear at first glance that he had descended from a special bloodline. Those features were unique to the house of the Sword Saint, which had existed in the Dragon Kingdom of Lugunica for generations.

“…” Wilhelm also stood up—albeit a little after Theresia—after witnessing that. He bowed to the two who had appeared, being conscious of his body that had become stiff. He felt like it had become even heavier the moment they appeared. That was only natural, however. Since…

“Welcome back, Theresia. And thank you for coming, Mr. Wilhelm.”

The one who had said that was the red-haired man—whose name was Veltol Astrea, the head of House Astrea. But Wilhelm had a more appropriate way of addressing him.

“I heard you had something important to discuss… But what brings you here today, I wonder? I have no clue why you are here. None at all."

While smiling gently, Veltol kept repeating the same thing, gradually making his tone stronger. Veins bulged on his forehead, and his blue eyes weren't smiling at all.

Wilhelm—thinking him to be a tough opponent—felt slightly hurt as he sat in front of his future father-in-law.

2

Wilhelm and Theresia had traveled to the Astrea domain in the southern part of the Kingdom of Lugunica—and they were currently at Astrea Manor, Theresia's home. For Theresia, she was just returning home, and for Wilhelm, he was just visiting the home of his beloved, but this trip was much more important than that. To put it simply, Wilhelm was there to greet Theresia's parents and ask them for her hand in marriage.

In short, all hell was about to break loose.

"But I'm really glad that you chose Wilhelm. He seems like a sincere man. She has always been somewhat shy, so I was worried about what kind of man she would take a fancy to."

"Geez, Mother… Don't embarrass me like that."

A table between them, Mother and Child were engaged in conversation. Theresia and her mother—Tishua Astrea—had been making small talk about the past and future, holding a cup of tea in one hand, since the first, simple greeting. Tishua seemed to be rather welcoming of Wilhelm. He hadn't directly mentioned anything about marriage, but her joy was evident in every word she uttered. He honestly felt comforted by the fact that the mother of the bride was on his side.

However…

"So, Mr. Wilhelm. What is your status, what is the rank you hold?"

"…My apologies. I am a knight, though I was only knighted recently."

"Oh my! So you're just a knight! I see…so that is how it is."

The one speaking as if he had a hidden meaning behind his words was Veltol, who was sitting in front of Wilhelm. The future father-in-law had a magnificent beard and regal features, and he was keen on finding out whether Wilhelm was a suitable partner for his daughter or not. And it seemed like he wasn't the least bit happy with his title.

"Of course, becoming a knight without any sort of backing is no mean feat. I'll give you that. But I think it happened far too quickly. I wonder who knighted you. I can't wrap my head around why they would do such a thing…"

"Father, the person who knighted Wilhelm was His Majesty Gionis."

Once Theresia added that piece of information in, Veltol did a complete 180. "As expected, His Majesty is wise! I can do nothing but admire his decision!" Looking distant, he then muttered something under his breath. "His Majesty shouldn't have done that…"

But peculiarly, his voice was loud enough that everyone could hear.

He's not very good at hiding things, Wilhelm thought.

Although they had only been together for an extremely short period of time, Wilhelm discovered several things about Veltol. That he loved his daughter a lot, that he wasn't okay with his daughter getting married, that he wasn't good at hiding things, that he was—anyway, he learned quite a bit about Veltol.

"…" He took a quick glance at the women next to them and saw that Theresia was somewhat nervous as she looked at them talk. As for Tishua, she baffled him with a gentle smile that was devoid of all emotion. To be honest, if she were the one that had disapproved of him, the unpredictable Tishua would have been more of a challenge. That's why you could say it was a good thing that the predictable Veltol was the one who disapproved of him. Nevertheless, how the bride's father was treating him was abnormal, and there was something else that was making him uneasy.

—The nervousness that made him feel like his body was becoming numb was growing stronger by the minute.

“What is the matter, Mr. Wilhelm? It seems like you are, a bit pale?” said Veltol, expressing his concern for Wilhelm as he was being tormented by extreme thirst and stress eating away at his body. But there was no way he could tell him how he was really feeling.

If I do, he’ll deem me a failure of a man who can’t even control his own emotions.

What Veltol was saying wasn’t wrong. Wilhelm had come emptyhanded. He didn’t have a title, and neither was his future laid out for him. In fact, he had whisked away Theresia’s future as the Sword Saint. That being the case, he needed to make something of himself and prove his worth.

Wilhelm began the conversation with a serious air. “Lord Veltol, Lady Tishua, there is something I want to say to you.”

“You do not have the right to call me your father!!” Jumping to conclusions, Veltol tried to crush him right away.

“Honey, you are jumping to conclusions. Wilhelm has not called you that yet.” Tishua pointed it out with a gentle smile. “But.” She paused. “I am fine with you calling me mother anytime.”

“Huh?! What the hell are you saying, Tishua?!”

Veltol stood up looking white as a sheet after hearing Tishua’s words. His eyes darted to-and-fro, and then he looked at his beloved wife and beloved daughter.

“Our family is, our family is on the verge of breaking apart as we speak! How will we be able to protect Theresia from this scoundrel if we do not unite here?”

“Father! Stop calling him a scoundrel! Wilhelm isn’t like that at all! If that’s what you think, are you insinuating that His Majesty Gionis has poor judgement?"

"Yo-Your father has said no such thing! How dare you speak like that to me, Theresia! I will see to it that you are properly disciplined for this. I can't marry you off until then…" Veltol declared with an evil face.

"F-a-t-h-e-r!" Theresia ferociously shouted at him.

Wilhelm was a bit overwhelmed by their vigor.

"I am sorry, Wilhelm. These two are always like this." Tishua calmly apologized to Wilhelm before noticing that the cup in his hand was empty. "Oh my, your cup is empty. I do apologize for not noticing. Allow me to give you a…"

"—Hic! Stop, Tishua! I will pour it for him myself," Veltol declared suddenly, hurriedly standing up and bringing the teapot from the serving cart over to give Wilhelm a refill. As hot steam and the rich smell of tea leaves wafted through the air, Veltol stroked his beard proudly. "Go ahead and drink to your heart's content. Don't be shy. You must have been anxious since we took time to get ready, right? Do drink, do drink."

Wilhelm frowned after being pressured to drink more. Indeed, it had taken quite a while for Veltol and his wife to arrive at the parlor. Thanks to that, he'd spent quite a lot of time drinking tea and killing time, so much so that he became aware of his nervousness. As a result, he talked less and worried that his parents-in-laws had developed a bad impression of him. Maybe all of this anxiety and worry is what is making my body feel numb, he thought, and as he was about to bring the cup to his mouth…

"—Wait, Wilhelm. Don't drink that tea."

The one who had leaned forward and stopped him was Theresia. She snatched the cup out of his hand and looked at the tea by narrowing her blue eyes.

That made Veltol start panicking.

"Hey!" Veltol exclaimed with a husky voice. "Do not act so unladylike. If you want a refill, then tell me. It has been quite some time since your father has shown off his skills, and…"

"That's right, it's very rare. What on earth happened for you to be making tea for someone?"

"Oops!"

"Did you just say oops?" asked Wilhelm.

Veltol went pale, as if he wasn't expecting to be questioned like that. On top of that, his face started to break out into a cold sweat, and it was clear that he was in a bit of a pickle.

"A-ha-ha…" Tishua looked down and quivered her lips after leering at Veltol's situation. Her beautiful cheeks became red, and her moist eyes looked at her panicking husband alluringly. Although it was still hard to guess what she was feeling, it seemed like she was enjoying the situation.

Wilhelm vaguely understood what was going on. "You mean, Lord Veltol did something to everyone's tea?"

"More like, he only mixed something into your tea. Father?"

"Eek! I'm innocent!"

Veltol, who was being glared at by his daughter, said a cliché line that people who did something bad say. Wilhelm looked at his tea as he listened to his words that almost sounded like a confession, and then things clicked. It was indeed unnatural. I felt thirstier the more I drank. My body felt strangely numb and tense. I thought it was due to the anxiety of visiting my lover's parents' house, but…

"Besides, it seems like I didn't use the right ratio when I mixed in the drug. Since he looks completely unaffected even after drinking so much…"

"The person who drugged the tea shouldn't admit to it like it's nothing! What did you try to make Wilhelm drink? Could it be that, you poisoned…"

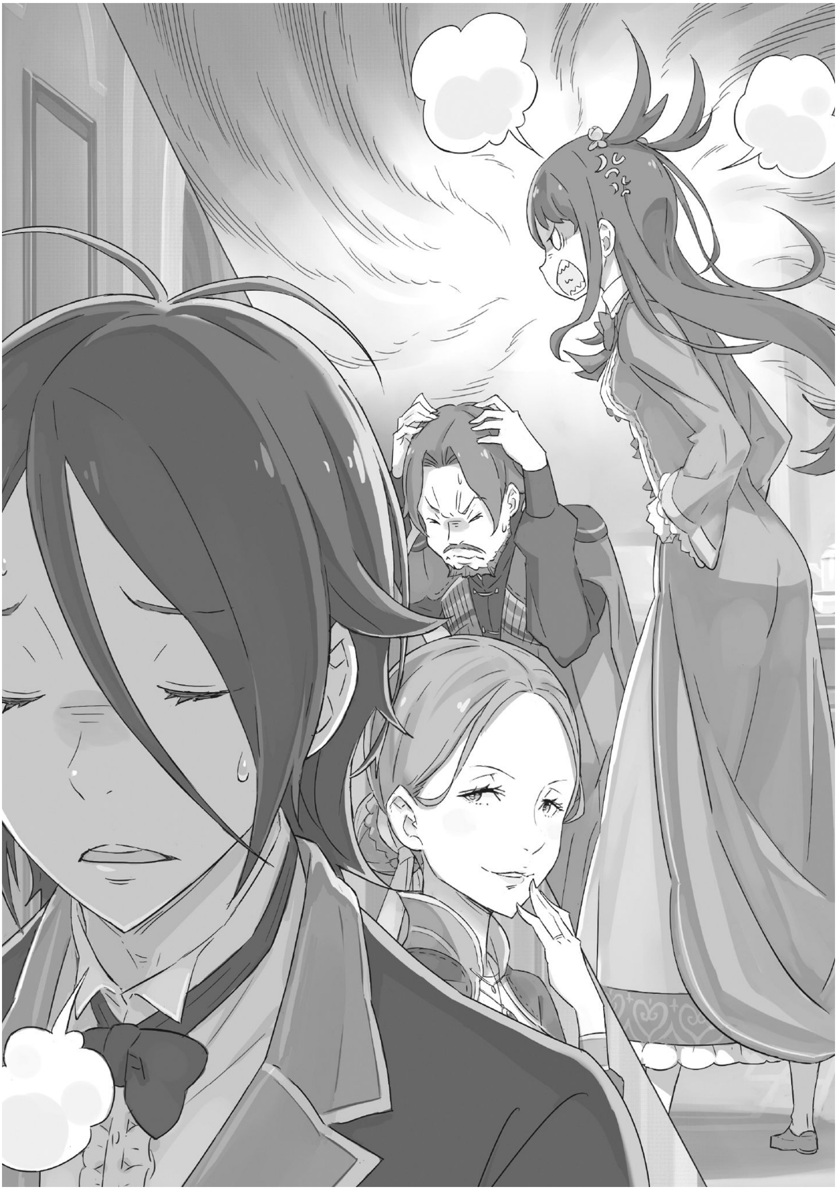
“I would never do something so horrendous! All I did was mix in a small amount of a drug that makes you lose control of your bladder…” Veltol confessed like a timid child, tapping his index fingers together in front of his chest.

The drug he had prepared was something that caused polydipsia. In short, no matter how much tea he drank, his thirst would never be quenched, and the urine filling his bladder would eventually leak out—

“You’re such a conniving man, Father! Even if Wilhelm peed himself because of that, I wouldn’t stop loving him! I would love both him and his pee!”

“What?! Are you serious, Theresia?! You’re fine with being with a man that peed himself?!”

“I didn’t pee myself…” muttered Wilhelm, a bitter expression on his face, but the father and daughter ignored it and started arguing again.



As they completely ignored the person at the center of their argument and argued about whether he had peed himself or not, Wilhelm lost the energy to intervene. Either way, the thing he needed to do was—

"The bathroom is right at the end of the hallway after you exit the room."

Sensing Wilhelm's intentions, Tishua briefly told Wilhelm where to go.

I wonder how much this lady knew about what her husband was up to.

"—Thank you for telling me the way so courteously."

Wilhelm felt like it was far scarier to ask about that, so he turned his doubt into words of gratitude upon standing up.

"Speaking of which, Wilhelm. —This is how our family is, so do you think you will be able to adjust?"

Wilhelm narrowed his eyes at her question. Veltol and Theresia were still arguing, and he didn't feel like he had the energy to join them, but…

"—I wonder, Mother. Father seems like a hard man to get along with."

"A-ha-ha, you get full marks."

Tishua evaluated Wilhelm's answer with a big smile. Looking at that smile, he was convinced that Theresia and Tishua were mother and child.

I feel like I'll be able to connect with Veltol, at least when it comes to being pushed around by our wives.

With such feelings in his heart, Wilhelm hurriedly stepped out of the door while listening to the argument between the father and daughter.

END

Sword Demon Love Story: Earth Dragon Capital Flanders

1

“Eek… Woah, it’s really high up!”

The view had drastically changed when the crouched earth dragon stood up. Naturally, it was different from what she was used to, making her let out a gasp of excitement.

“The breeze up here feels so nice… This makes me feel like a princess.” said the beautiful young red-haired girl sheepishly while clinging on to the thick neck of the earth dragon. She was saying it jokingly, but if you were to consider her pretty appearance, you wouldn’t be able to laugh it off as a joke. At least that’s what Wilhelm, who was supporting her, thought. Wilhelm was riding on the earth dragon with the young girl and had his hands wrapped around her slim waist. The innocent attitude of the cheerful young girl brought a slight smile upon the face of the man known as the Sword Demon. His usually cold demeanor towards others melted away in the presence of the pretty girl.

“Hey, Wilhelm, are you listening to me?”

The girl turned her head towards Wilhelm. She pouted her lips, annoyed by his lack of response.

“My bad, I wasn’t listening. My breath was taken away.”

“You mean by the scenery?”

“No, by you.”

“—Hic, st-stop, saying things like that.”

He was just being honest about how he really felt, but the girl reacted dramatically to his words. She looked forward, turning her head away from him, her ears and nape of her neck turning bright red.

She probably doesn’t want me to see her blushing as red as an abble. I don’t know what I did to make her blush, but I want to see her adorable flushed cheeks.

Wilhelm removed one of the arms holding her waist and tried touching her cheek.

“No-don’t…I don’t want you to see my face, right now.”

“I want to see it.”

“You’re so mean! Oh, honestly…”

Wilhelm became further amused when she looked down shyly and writhed uncomfortably. Then he leaned forward and gently grabbed the girl’s chin, turning her around—

“—Leave it there, Trias.”

A sharp and deadly sword-like aura struck Wilhelm from the side.

“…”

Wilhelm glanced around and saw another earth dragon running next to them. The sword-like aura was coming from the person riding it. It was a beautiful swordsman with blonde hair and green eyes, and she was directing her aura mercilessly—no, the tip of her long sword—at him. Wilhelm was amazed that she was willing to go that far and then spoke up while thinking so.

“I’m…no longer a Trias,” he retorted tiredly, leaving aside the frustration of his expression of love being interrupted.

2

“Carol, you shouldn’t be so quick to draw your sword. The people of the ranch also got really surprised, you know.” The red-haired young girl scolded with puffed cheeks and her hands on her hips.

The person being scolded—Carol, the blonde female swordsman—lowered her head in deference. She was no longer emitting a murderous sword aura, so Wilhelm didn't feel in danger anymore, but…

"My apologies, Lady Theresia. I lost my composure at Trias's insolent behavior…"

"Don't make me repeat myself. The House of Trias is no more. I am no longer a Trias. And you don't seem sorry at all."

Wilhelm directed a harsh glare and harsh words at the still hostile Carol. She glared at him and opened her mouth to stir up the futile fight all over again.

However…

"Alright, that's enough! Both of you, no fighting!"

The one who came between and stopped the fight before it started was the red-haired girl. Wilhelm and Carol were considered to be formidable swordsmen of their own right, but the red-haired girl was undaunted by it.

If she couldn't handle a fight like this, then how could she have accomplished the great feat of stopping the Demi-Human War. Setting aside whether her unwavering bravery was a quality he wished for himself, Wilhelm could not have achieved such a great feat. The red-haired girl's name was Theresia van Astrea. She held the title of Sword Saint, which only the best swordsman was given, and was also a champion that had stopped a lengthy war. Nonetheless, she had relinquished her title and had just begun her life as a newlywed.

"Come on! Why does everyone keep getting in our way?" asked Wilhelm. "You know exactly what I'm talking about, don't you?"

"Don't get carried away, Tri…Wilhelm. I have been ordered by Lord Bertol to keep an eye on you so that you don't go too far with your insolent attitude towards Lady Theresia. I'm definitely not acting like this due to a personal grudge."

"The only reason you answered like that is because you feel that way…”

“Youuu guys are fighting agaaain!” Theresia shouted, stopping the two who were about to go at it again.

But Theresia, who usually had a soft spot for Carol, had begun to feel closer to Wilhelm during their time alone together. She put her hand on Carol’s shoulder and said, “Carol, I’m happy that you are worried, but…we’re on our honeymoon, you know? So please. Give us some space.”

“But Lady Theresia…” replied Carol. “I’m worried.”

“Yes, I know. But I have a really dependable husband.”

Theresia, who had straightened her posture, leered at Wilhelm sitting behind her. It was a very seductive gesture and she was unaware that it was a bad move.

Seeing Theresia growing closer with the likes of Wilhelm was making Carol more and more hostile towards him. But, even so, Carol turned towards Wilhelm with a look of pain, saying, “Wilhelm, take care of Lady Theresia…”

“Does it really torture you that much to trust me to take care of her?”

It was probably after going through a lot of pain that she decided to trust me with Theresia, but she’s really acting like she doesn’t want me to be with her at all. And like—

“—She’s just going to ride an earth dragon for the first time.”

Wilhelm’s sigh came out in vain on the plateau of the Earth Dragon Capital, Flanders. The rancher holding the reins of the earth dragon in the distance could be seen waiting with a lost look on his face for the three of them to settle their dispute.

3

Theresia had ridden dragon carriages before but had never ridden an earth dragon. She had unexpectedly told Wilhelm that on their journey to Flanders.

“We had earth dragons back at home and my eldest brother was a master dragon rider but…”

“But you didn’t have any talent for riding them?” inquired Wilhelm.

“No, it isn’t like that…it’s just that I was afraid of touching animals,” she replied with a lonely smile, holding her hands close to her body.

Her fear of touching animals was something that arose due to her divine protection: the Divine Protection of the Death God. How it created wounds that would never heal when she cut something made her sensitive and terribly afraid of wounding others. That was probably the reason why she had been hesitant about interacting with earth dragons. However, now that she had given up the sword and had better control of her divine protection, she felt like she had the right to give riding an earth dragon a try, something she wasn’t able to do as a child. And she was going to exercise that right of hers here in the Earth Dragon Capital while on her honeymoon.

“And then there’s this retainer here who won’t leave us the hell alone.”

Wilhelm cussed at Carol, who was trying to get in the way of their fun by complaining about everything.

Theresia smiled gently at Wilhelm’s words. “Forgive her, Carol is just worried about me. Thames…my eldest brother…was a lot like her.”

I’ve heard that two of her elder brothers and her younger brother were killed in action during the civil war. In short, it means that the overprotectiveness of her brothers are lodged inside Carol alone. I guess if I think about it that way I can see why she’s constantly interfering.

“Although forgiving her for that is a different story.”

“Hmmm, well, yeah, you’re right…”

Theresia smiled wryly and Wilhelm squinted looking at her smile. And then they heard the rancher. “We are ready to go,” he said.

I wonder if he was waiting for us to finish talking. We’ve really been troubling this kind-looking rancher for a while now.

While feeling sorry about that, Wilhelm held Theresia’s waist again and made the crouching earth dragon stand up.

“—Hic.”

Theresia trembled with a faint sensation of excitement as the view became higher instantly. She had been interrupted the first time while she was still trying to enjoy the view. This time, however, the pest didn’t get in the way, and Wilhelm, well aware of her feelings, didn’t do anything to ruin it.

Naturally, Theresia was in a position where she was looking down at the wind-swept plateau. She narrowed her blue eyes that looked as if a clear blue sky had been locked within them and gazed compassionately at the world below.

“Hey, Wilhelm, do you know? About the different types of earth dragons and where their names came from?” Theresia asked the silent Wilhelm out of the blue. Wilhelm thought about her question for a bit and then shook his head. There were several types of earth dragons that had adapted to their local climates and environments. To start with, there was the Flanna species, which was the most numerous and versatile. Next was the Eliq species, which had adapted to the cold regions of the world. Then there was the Agaress species, which were suitable for desert environments. And lastly there was the Diana species, which were said to have the most superior blood of all. These are some examples of existing earth dragon species.

But apart from their species, I’ve never really thought about where their names came from.

“Flanna, Eliq, Agaress, Diana…it’s said that all of them were flowers that existed long ago,” Theresia explained. “All earth dragon names adopt the names of flowers.”

"The names of flowers…"

"Yes. Isn't that wonderful?"

I'm not sure if it's wonderful or not, but I can't stop thinking about the fact that earth dragons are named after flowers. I don't know who named them, but I wonder why they named these friendly and loyal creatures after flowers.

"…It's just as I had heard, they don't try to harm people at all," muttered Theresia while riding the earth dragon with Wilhelm and rubbing the scales on its neck. The initial wave of nervousness melted away from her expression, and she seemed to have fallen into a sense of ease riding on the earth dragon's back.

In fact, a lot of people who get on top of earth dragons are surprised by their calm temperament and their consideration for the riders and come to trust them.

This reminds me of my own first time. I was a child, and it was before I started learning swordsmanship. I think my brother was the one who helped me.

"…"

Wilhelm also had two older brothers. Both were now deceased, however. He had carried his grief, accepted it, and overcame it. He thought he had gotten over it, but doing this with Theresia reminded him of the past, and—

"Wilhelm?"

"My two older brothers were no good when it came to the art of the sword. Though they were both bookworms, and reliable individuals, so dad and mom gave the domain to them."

Theresia hadn't anticipated Wilhelm's response to her call. Nonetheless, after widening her eyes once, she immediately closed them and listened to what he had to say.

"…"

It was Wilhelm’s first time telling Theresia—no, anyone—about his family. Everyone involved in the war knew that his family, House Trias, had perished in the midst of the Demi-human War. Theresia knew it, too. That’s why neither she nor people close to him asked any questions that might open up old wounds. He then came to the sudden realization that he had been taking their kindness for granted. Unable to keep quiet now that he was aware of that, the memories he had of his family flowed out of him unreservedly.

I was scolded often by my eldest brother. I always fought my elder brother. My father lamented my behavior that it wasn’t befitting for an aristocrat, and my mother often hid my sword. But my eldest brother patiently tried to talk to me, and my elder brother always came to help me even if my foes outnumbered me. My father instilled in me the customs and the manners of the aristocrats saying that I’d never know when and where it would come in handy. My mother often hugged me whenever I did anything reckless.

That’s the kind of people they were. —We were once that type of family.

“…I see.” Theresia replied in a faltering voice after Wilhelm had finished speaking.

—But he felt that he was able to truly mourn the family he had lost for the first time.

4

“Hey, Carol! Over here! Hurry up!”

“La-Lady Theresia! Please slow down… Wait for me!”

Carol, who was unable to speak properly, yanked on the reins and chased after the excited Theresia. The two earth dragons ran like the wind, and Wilhelm watched it from a distance and was impressed by Theresia’s skills, who had improved by leaps and bounds in a matter of just a few hours. As one would expect, she improved immediately after she got the hang of it. Perhaps it was down to the earth dragon’s considerate nature, but now Theresia’s riding skills had surpassed Carol's who was a veteran rider. Wilhelm would also be in danger of falling behind if he didn't practice.

“The madam is riding wonderfully,” muttered the smiling rancher next to Wilhelm while watching Theresia try to do a difficult maneuver like trotting.

We made this man, a rancher in Flanders, accommodate us a lot since it's Theresia's first time riding an earth dragon. I want to repay his kindness somehow, but…

“That earth dragon has become completely attached to the madam, so…how about that one?”

“…”

He's good, Wilhelm thought, narrowing his eyes, before observing the yellow earth dragon that Theresia was riding. The bright color of its scales matched well with her red hair.

“What's its name?” Wilhelm asked.

“Yes,” answered the rancher, smiling gently and rubbing his hands together, “the name of that earth dragon is…”

Wilhelm gazed in wonder after hearing his reply. And then he laughed out loud, which was something he rarely did.

—Since the name of that earth dragon was also a flower that held a lot of memories for Wilhelm and Theresia and was very precious to them.

END

Sword Demon Love Story:
The Other Side of The Honeymoon

“Over here, Carol, come on.”

“Lady Theresia, you’ll hurt yourself if you run off like that.”

With that, the girl frowned and chased after the young girl rushing ahead. Despite the slight commotion they were causing, no one raised an eyebrow at them. After all, when it was a pair of great beauties producing such a ruckus—as the two girls were—it was considered less of a disturbance, and more of a spectacle, as though they were watching a scene in a play.

Theresia and Carol, unaware of their surroundings, walked through the streets of the merchant city of Picoutatte—marking the interlude of the honeymoon. Though the two stood on good terms, they were not newlyweds. Theresia was linked to her beloved husband, Wilhelm, and Carol was their attendant on the trip. However, Wilhelm was currently unable to enjoy his honeymoon. Because…

“He’s a fortunate man to survive a wound of that magnitude,” sighed Carol after catching up with Theresia and linking arms with her. Her gaze moved towards the clinic on the other side of the street. Two of their companions were hospitalized at said clinic, one of them being Wilhelm.

Wilhelm was on a trip, but for reasons unknown had been forced to a duel with a powerful enemy, and in exchange for reaching his goal, he had been seriously wounded and was charged with bedrest.

So, Theresia and Carol found themselves strolling through the commercial district…

“Yeah, he’s caused me a lot of grief,” began Theresia, “but he has such bad luck… That’s dad for you.”

“That’s not what I…!” cried Carol, the color draining from her complexion. “Lady Theresia, I wasn’t referring to Lord Veltol…”

“I know. I was just kidding,” Theresia said, flashing Carol a mischievous grin.

Along with Wilhelm, the other person who was also hospitalized was Theresia’s father, Veltol. In truth, his condition was at one point critical and the fact that they were now able to laugh was by virtue of a string of miracles. One being Wilhelm’s efforts, and the other being…

“Oh?” Something caught Theresia’s attention, causing her to stare in wide-eyed wonder.

She has the most exquisite sky blue eyes, thought Carol. No matter how long I stare into them, I never grow tired of them.

Following Theresia’s gaze stood a man buying sherbert from a street vendor. He was a lanky fellow dressed in a white surgical gown. His eyes narrowed in displeasure due to what seemed like nervousness, but as Carol watched him devour the frozen treat her impression of him completely changed. Maybe that’s how he always looks. There’s only one person who scowls like that.

“Oh, it’s you two.” The familiar face also seemed to have noticed Carol and her friend standing on the street.

Carol and Theresia returned the bow of the man holding a bowl of sherbert. “Are you taking a break now, Dr. Galić?” asked Theresia.

“Yup,” replied the man in the gown with a spoon in his mouth. “I can finally take a breather after dealing with all those people who fell into the river.”

He was refreshingly ill-mannered, but strangely enough, she couldn’t bring herself to complain. It was no wonder then, that Veltol’s miraculous recovery was in no small part a consequence of the doctor’s efforts. Without Wilhelm’s brave fighting or Galić’s efforts, Veltol wouldn’t be alive today. For this reason, Theresia lowered her head in respect. “I’m sorry to have created more work for you, Doctor,” she apologized. “We completely destroyed that bridge, and it looks like a lot of people got caught in the middle of the commotion…”

“What? They were just onlookers at the duel,” said the doctor. “They were prepared to get a little roughed up. I’m sure you were too. Fortunately, no one was seriously hurt, though some of them might catch a cold.”

Theresia’s apology referred to the duel that resulted in Wilhelm’s hospitalization. The duel, which took place on the city’s main bridge, ended with the adversary escaping. In doing so, they collapsed the bridge, resulting in many of the onlookers falling into the river. If one were to believe in Galić’s recounting of the events, it sounded like no one was injured, but Theresia felt strongly remorseful all the same.

“Lady Theresia, please don’t feel too upset by it,” said Carol. “The responsibility lies with the miscreant who collapsed the bridge. It wasn’t your fault.”

“But…”

“In that case, your father will pay for the bridge repairs, as well as the treatment of any onlookers,” Galić assured her. “No one will complain then.”

Carol wanted to ease Theresia’s guilt as much as possible and was grateful to receive support from Galić. Although the doctor in question didn’t seem to have such intentions, on the contrary, he had said the exact right thing to Theresia. This was perhaps due to an overlap in his inconsiderate manner and her honest character.

“Thank you, Dr. Galić,” Theresia said. “That makes me feel a little better.”

“That’s great… In that case, while you’re thanking me, I’d like to ask you something.”

“Me?” questioned Theresia, tilting her head in puzzlement. “What can I do?”

Galić, happily tucking into his frozen treat, frowned and said, “The thing is, your father refused to listen to me when he recommended me for a position in the royal capital. I wonder if you could somehow get him to reconsider."

"My father?" Theresia looked back with wide eyes at the sour-faced Galić's request. Then she glanced at Carol, who was standing next to her. "Is it a bad thing to be recommended for such a position…?"

Carol thought for a moment and shook her head. "No, it is a great honor. Lord Veltol's recovery is partly because he is now free of the ring's curse, but also in a large part due to Dr. Galić's efforts. I'm sure Lord Veltol appreciates your work, which is why he recommended you."

"But I'm saying that I don't want to go…"

Galić appeared reluctant to further discuss the topic.

Perhaps he didn't aspire to push his career in medicine any further.

In fact, despite his overbearing personality, Veltol, the head of the Astrea family, held a high degree of influence. With his recommendation, it would be as good as guaranteed that Galić would prosper in the royal capital.

"Does that mean you've put roots down here?"

"It's not that I don't want to go to the royal capital. It's more to do because…the mother of my son lives there," muttered Galić bitterly.

"Huh?" Question marks hovered over the confused Theresia and Carol.

That's a funny way of putting it. So that means she's…

"Your wife?"

"No, she is just the mother of my son. He's mine by blood, but I'm not married to his mother. A contractual relationship would be a more accurate way to describe our connection."

"Um… What do you mean by contractual relationship?"

“To put it simply, I was asked to give her my seed,” replied Galić matter-of-factly.

“!!!” Theresia and Carol both blushed at the unexpectedly radical confession.

Registering their shocked reactions, Galić put his hand to his head and said, “Sorry, I didn’t mean to shock you two. But that’s my current situation.”

“W-We should be the ones who should be apologizing for asking about such personal matters… I guess that means you don’t want to meet the mother of your child?” asked Theresia.

“I think it would be better for everyone involved if we didn’t see each other. I can’t say I’ve been a good father and it’s hard to imagine she’s doing a good job as a mother. So…”

“I think this is up to your son to decide.” Theresia, shaking off her embarrassment, shot Galić a serious look. “Happiness is ultimately a choice and one that we can only make for ourselves. It’s up to you, Doctor, if you don’t want to see your son, but…please don’t jump to conclusions as to what your son will feel. “

“…”

“I’ve been through a lot too, but I can proudly say that I’m happy now. Even if you think that you haven’t been a good father, maybe things will be different from now on.”

Clearly, Theresia had given the delicate situation a great deal of thought.

Standing next to her, Carol couldn’t help but feel proud and loved her all the more. Look at her, she thought. I want to stand at the top of the world and exclaim, “Take a look at this fine young woman.”

“Well, this is amusing. Your companion holds herself in a more dignified manner than you.” Looking at Theresia and Carol, the sickly-looking Galić laughed.

The scrawny healer laughed, tilted the bowl of now melted sherbet, and poured it down his throat. He exhaled a chilled breath. “You’re right,” he said. “Happiness is up to the individual. I pretended it was for my son, but I was just making excuses. I should be ashamed of myself.”

“Doctor, that’s not what I…”

“Well, I’ve made up my mind. I won’t go to the royal capital because I don’t want to see him.”

“Huh?”

Theresia’s eyes widened in disbelief. Her attempts at persuading the doctor resulted in the opposite of what she was expecting. Galić flashed a toothy grin.

“If my happiness is up to me to decide, then I choose to not go to the royal capital. It’s not as simple as whether my son wants to see me or not… But now is not the right time.”

“Oh, well I can’t argue with that… Carol…” replied Theresia.

“It’s unfortunate,” began Carol, “but you have managed to make Lady Theresia’s honest intentions work in your favor… “

In truth, Carol had never conspired against others before, and the same was true for Theresia, who couldn’t wrap her head around the doctor’s train of thought. As they metaphorically raised a white flag, Galić puffed his nose in a good mood and said, “I’ve made up my mind and I have you to thank, my lady. Now, all we have to do is to convince your father to throw in the towel.”

“Um, about that…”

“Yeah?”

Theresia covered her mouth as Galić cleared his throat. She then looked over at Carol, who nodded in agreement. They may have lost this battle, but they still had Veltol to win the war. He was known to be childish and absolutely relentless.

“Who would’ve thought there would come the day I’d hope to see

Lord Veltol act in a less than graceful manner…” Carol admitted.

“Let’s see which of them can turn the tables in their favor,” giggled Theresia.

“What a pair of sinister grins…” said Galić, looking at the two girls.

Carol had known Veltol for a long time, so she and Theresia were confident in their victory. But even so…

“What kind of person is she? The woman who um…isn’t your wife…” asked Theresia.

“I can’t speak for others, but she’s an eccentric woman. She has excellent abilities, but is difficult to handle,” replied Galić. “I’m not sure if her decision to bear my child was because she wanted to or…she desired the genius of a healer for her child.”

“That’s an unusual mindset for one to have. It’s not something one sees much in this day and age.”

Marriages were a way of introducing superior bloodlines and preserving them. It was much rarer nowadays, but it was much more common hundreds of years ago. There were select families such as House Astrea that were so strong that regardless of new blood introduced to the lineage, it could not dilute it, and so the concept of pedigree was lost.

“She had an old-fashioned mentality, but it didn’t feel that way to me,” explained Galić. “When push came to shove, I couldn’t keep up with her fiery passion…plus she was a real beauty.”

“Men are such simple creatures…” Theresia gave a look of disdain at Galić’s impertinent manner. Carol also shot a similar look of disgust and Galić roared with laughter.

He laughed in such a manner that could strike a nerve in others. “That’s why,” he said, “you may advise your father to not be concerned with an immoral man like me. And don’t worry about your husband straying away. I know a fastidious man when I see one.”

"It pains me to say it, but I agree with him on that one," said Carol, reluctantly siding with Galić.

"Oh, Carol…" Theresia flushed at their affirmation, which Carol grudgingly had to admit was adorable.

Wilhelm thought the world of Theresia with his whole heart and soul. That was why he fought in that duel with no regard for his own life. He was met with fortune and successfully accomplished his goal. It was a feat that Carol herself could not have accomplished, to her shame.

"But that doesn't prove that my feelings are worth any less than that man's."

"Um, Carol? Why are you suddenly so enthusiastic…"

"You have no idea how much I've been thinking about you, Lady Theresia. And my feelings are no less than his. You know that!" Carol was so stirred up that she clutched Theresia's hands with her own.

Feeling overwhelmed by the momentum of their conversation, Theresia gawked back in astonishment. She looked away. Her pale cheeks blushed slightly, her lips quivering. "Oh, um Carol… I appreciate how you feel, but…"

"Yes!"

"It can get pretty packed here with people, so don't get too excited… Ok?" cautioned Theresia with a gentle smile.

Carol quickly came to her senses and felt startled by what she saw around them. The eyes of the entire street were on her, who up to that point had been boldly expressing her feelings. Her cheeks turned into a shade of vermillion red, causing Galić to chuckle at the sight. "As a healer, I would advise you to get something cold for those hot cheeks. I highly recommend the frozen treats they have just over there."

"Um, er… Well…" Carol bit her lip in frustration at the doctor's teasing manner.

Theresia tugged her sleeve. “Don’t mind him,” she told her. “Alright then, we’ll go with your suggestion. I’ll treat you to a bowl of sherbert, Carol.”

Then, whether this was what Galić had in mind or not, Carol let out a pathetic cry. “L-Lady Theresia…” But in the end, Theresia’s allure was too much for her to resist and so she staggered along behind her.

“Hehehe! All the best, you two!” chortled Galić as he turned around with a smile.

Biting back the urge to lash back at the doctor, she held herself for a moment. At least, she hoped that her time with Theresia would make up for her humiliation and green-eyed jealousy of Wilhelm.

“Hey, Carol, what flavor do you want?”

However, such a feeble wish was nothing compared to the smile of the girl standing next to her, so Carol ran to join her mistress’s side.

END

Volume 17

Chapters 20-36

Chapter 20:
Shared Empathy

1

Squatting on the ground, breathing heavily, Subaru finally endured the urge to collapse.

Emilia and Beatrice surrounded him, wearing looks of concern, and even Liliana seemed worried. Priscilla seemed faintly interested, cooling her face with her fan.

Bathed in their concerned voices and gazes, Subaru gradually reoriented himself.

Feeling like time was slowly accelerating back to normal, Subaru realized what the taste in his mouth was.

He was reminded of switching channels on a television. There was nothing like a loss of the sense of smell, taste, or sight, but his surroundings had suddenly disintegrated into powder, and transformed into something entirely different.

Subaru's eyes, ears, nose, and skin had all adapted to the new world, but his consciousness could not forget the previous channel, so there was a sense of violation.

All he could do was ignore it, to chew, chew, chew, and swallow the sense of unease that came from switching channels until it was finally over.

Subaru: "…"

Subaru clenched his teeth and finally climbed to his feet.

He shook his head and looked around. The park was full of bright sunshine, a place of relaxation with fountains and green lawns, and a colorful spread of flowerbeds.

Subaru was presently surrounded by four beautiful girls—Emilia, Beatrice, Liliana, and Priscilla. He had heard Liliana's words twice now.

Emilia: "Are you alright, Subaru? Your complexion doesn't look so good."

Subaru: "…Emilia-tan. Just now, did Liliana say that she'd sing another song?"

Liliana: "What do you mean?! I, Liliana, was ignored to such a degree that this situation shocked and hurt my heart! Compensation! I demand compensation!"

As she spoke, Liliana seized Subaru's sleeves in a frenzy, declaring a lawsuit, only to be shaken off by Subaru. He ignored the indignant "Hey!" the Songstresses issued and turned to Emilia, who seemed to pick up on Subaru's seriousness.

Emilia: "Yes. Liliana said that she'd sing us another song that we missed. Then Subaru and Liliana started quietly chatting in secret about something."

Subaru: "That happened just now? I got it, thanks… thank you."

Just saying those words of gratitude, he felt an unspeakable sense of disgust.

Subaru could not help but raise a hand to cover his mouth. Seeing him in this state, Emilia made a puzzled frown.

Emilia had not done anything wrong. Needless to say, his appreciation was not bitter. However, it evoked the incomparable malice in the previous world.

Subaru: "So, this means that I…"

"Died", he finally realized, but he was unable to vocalize the word.

—Natsuki Subaru had died.

After he died, he would return from the time he said goodbye to the world. Although he was relieved at his successful return, remorse also rose in his chest.

Obviously, Subaru should have been prepared.

In that forest a year ago, in Sanctuary, during the Trials, Natsuki Subaru had resolutely rejected death, and the grievances that accompanied it.

But he had still died. And so easily, too. Without resistance, without a sense of defiance, without even awareness.

Why was that? The situation had obviously been abnormal, but even Subaru himself had no clue what had happened. He had clearly experienced it himself, but he could not understand any of it.

Subaru had not even realized how abnormal that situation had been. And not only Subaru. Everyone present had been afflicted with the same madness as him. They had obviously seen the chained-up, howling boy, but they had all frenziedly cheered for his solidarity. Not to mention the insane round of applause that had accompanied the child's fall, welcoming him to his death.

What exactly had triggered all of that? And how exactly had he died without even realizing the reason?

He had not been able to recognize an agent for his death and, even now, he could not find one. Or, perhaps, it had been in front of him all along, and he had failed to see it as a threat. But he could not trust anything he had felt. Although he had registered the abnormality of the situation after his death, until that very moment, he had not been able to think clearly.

How had he died, in the end?

Were there any explosives attached to the falling boy's body? They could have exploded upon his impact with the ground, blowing up the surroundings. In fact, that was almost exactly like the memory of this instant death.

It was all very vague. His memory at the instant of his death was greatly blurred by his madness at the time. Even if he were completely calm now, the state of mind he had been in at the time prevented him from being able to comprehend that memory at all.

If Subaru had truly been in a state of madness, then it would be virtually impossible to unravel the insane memories of his death.

Emilia: “Are you really okay, Subaru? Even Liliana’s wearing such a bothered expression.”

Liliana: “I’m not doing anything so pointless. How Natsuki-sama thinks of me doesn’t make me sad at all, so please don’t get the wrong idea.”

Emilia: “See? It’s so obvious that it’s really bothering you.”

Even someone as clueless as Emilia had seen through Liliana’s brazenness. Through their dialogue, Subaru remembered his current situation.

At this point in time, Subaru was supposed to take advantage of Liliana’s song to go run an errand and buy reconciliation sweets. And shortly after buying something, he had met the monster called Wrath.

—There were less than fifteen minutes before that nightmare of a speech would begin.

Subaru: “You’re kidding me…”

In his experience with Return by Death, never had the time between the save point and the death been so close together. Time ranging from a few hours to a few days, that was what Return by Death had always given Subaru in the past. The time he had now was extremely short.

In just fifteen short minutes, what could Subaru do?

But even while he puzzled over this, time flowed on.

In this situation, merely avoiding death would be incredibly simple. Subaru only needed to avoid the place where the speech would be delivered. That way, the cause of death, such as the possible bomb, would not affect him.

It was incredibly unlikely that a bomb affecting the entire city had been prepared.

So, if Subaru only wanted to live, he could simply not go. Sirius would not target Subaru.

Pure, indiscriminate malice. And Subaru just happened to be just there.

Therefore, even if Subaru were not present, that square would still be Sirius's crime scene. The speech unrelated to Subaru's presence would happen regardless, and everyone there would be affected.

At the very least, no matter how that turned out, that falling child was doomed to die.

Subaru: "I have to stop it… Damn, I have to…!"

Subaru scratched his head and arrived at a decision.

He couldn't not save him. Lusbel was not guilty of anything. That poor child was looking forward to a newborn brother or sister, and had taken his childhood sweetheart's place on that tower. How could anyone be so cowardly as to think only of themselves and not attempt to rescue him?

Subaru: "Beako and I…"

—Will go together, Subaru hesitated to declare.

Beatrice: "What is it, Subaru?"

Turning to face Subaru, Beatrice voiced a serious question.

Now that he knew a critical situation was imminent, bringing Beatrice with him was the obvious option to choose in terms of combat effectiveness. If she were absent, Subaru's combat strength would be cut in half.

Even so, Subaru hesitated. It was not for a sentimental reason like not wanting Beatrice to fight.

Of course, saying that reason had not flashed through his mind at all wouldn't be true, but that was not Subaru's key reason.

—That would be Emilia. Or rather, leaving Emilia here.

Subaru: "…"

The Witch Cult was in this very city.

Those fanatics—although he had yet to know whether or not that phrase should be plural, at least the Sin Archbishop of Wrath was present. He had no clue if she was working with any other cultists, because their status was completely unknown.

However, in a city where the Witch Cult was active, the notion of leaving Emilia alone, with no one to protect her, left lingering anxiety in Subaru.

Leaving someone important in a place beyond his reach was far too dangerous.

Leaving someone out of his sight, where the Witch Cult's devilish hands would be able to reach for was far too dangerous.

Deep in his heart, turbid fear plagued Subaru.

Then, would he take Emilia to where Wrath was? That was out of the question. Having Emilia encounter the Witch Cult would undoubtedly lead to tragedy. Only that was certain. Just recalling Petelgeuse made that clear. Subaru could not let Emilia near the Witch Cult. The reasons could not even be questioned. It just had to be like that.

Subaru: "Beatrice and I…"

Beatrice: "And what, Subaru?"

Subaru: "We'll eat the same sweets, is that fine?"

Beatrice: "…?"

Beatrice frowned as she heard Subaru. She probably suspected that he had been thinking something else entirely. Subaru nodded at Liliana, who seemed completely lost, and turned to Emilia.

Subaru: “I’ll go on a short trip to buy some sweet snacks, then I’ll be right back. Emilia-tan, just wait here, while elegantly and steadily listening to Liliana’s song.”

Emilia: “Got it. But is it okay if I don’t go with you?”

Subaru: “That’s fine, just believe in me. I’ll protect you.”

At his words, Emilia blinked her wide eyes and nodded with a blush. Then, Subaru quietly beckoned Beatrice, who treated him with a suspicious gaze. He put his lips to her ear.

Subaru: “Protect Emilia for me. If I need your strength, I’ll call you immediately.”

Beatrice: “…What did you encounter that you can’t even tell Betty about?”

Subaru: “Just be prepared. If I call you, then you can assume it’s a pretty bad situation.”

Subaru gently pinched the slightly displeased Beatrice’s nose, then waved and took off. He sprinted without looking back, even feeling the eyes of the four people who saw him off on his back.

Running down the road, he reached the square in less than five minutes.

However, he had departed a little late. In this strained situation, with very little time, the slightest difference in timing could be a matter of life and death.

Subaru: “Although this is the case, without shopping, I’ll have nearly ten minutes…”

Subaru slowed into a walk, and surveyed the square where he had arrived. Before, he had focused on the tower without a chance to observe the surrounding area, but, at least for the moment, no conspicuous, black-clad strangers were anywhere to be seen.

Then, was it alright to think that Sin Archbishop was most probably acting alone?

Subaru: “The question is what to do next. Once that speech begins, I could very well be forced into that hazy state of mind again.”

Since the origin of that anomalous area was unclear, once it captured him again, he had no idea if he could retain his sanity. Thus, Subaru assumed that it would become impossible to recognize the anomaly as anomalous, due to the frightening power within that brainwashing space.

Subaru: “Should I tell everyone to take refuge somewhere away from here…? It’ll be like the situation with Petelgeuse… No, there’s not enough manpower, and if it causes too much of a ruckus, Sirius may act preemptively.”

He could ask the victims who should not be involved in the situation to take refuge. But how would he accomplish that? After all, if Sirius’s speech did not have any particular target, then the location would not be limited to this square.

If there were no audience here, she would just go elsewhere. As a result, the incident would only unfold to a different set of victims.

Subaru: “In that case, the only way is to eliminate the culprit…!”

His primary advantage was knowing that Sirius was planning to appear here.

It was very similar to the battle to subjugate Petelgeuse. No matter what, the Witch Cult could not be allowed to run free. To prevent the evil cult from carrying out their crimes meant that the fundamental causes needed to be eliminated. Otherwise, tragedies would only repeat themselves until the root cause was eliminated.

He had realized that far too late.

Had he reached that conclusion quicker, Subaru would not even have come to this place alone. No, returning to this square had been the wrong choice, in the first place. Had he at least returned to the inn, he could have turned to Wilhelm or Julius for help.

Subaru: “Wasting time on these thoughts is useless. I’m the only one here now. As soon as the speech starts, I have to be ready to act… No, the solution is actually much simpler!”

Finding an answer, Subaru glanced at the bottom of the clocktower—the white-colored tower from which that abominable speech had been professed. He noticed a small window at the bottom of the tower, presumably where Sirius had entered to give her speech from above.

In that case, she should already be in the tower, preparing for her speech that would be happening shortly. Even if she had yet to enter, Lusbel himself might be bound in there, awaiting rescue.

So, Subaru glanced cautiously to his left and right and approached the bottom of the clocktower. He quietly moved the inconspicuous iron gate in the alley to the side, opened it, and slipped inside.

The inside of the clocktower was dark beyond compare, its frigid air filled with dust.

The entire tower was entirely silent. Unlike clocktowers from his world, this one had no gears. The passage of time was tracked using the glow of a magic crystal. Its color would change naturally, reflecting the slight changes of atmospheric Mana over time.

—Therefore, the only sound that would ever be heard inside the tower had to be made by someone else.

???: “…Mmgrr!”

???: “No need to cry so noisily. Are you a good boy? You must be a strong child. Daddy Muslan and Mommy Ina, and your younger sibling too, they must be so proud of what a strong boy you are. You are such a good kid.”

An unpleasant voice echoed. Terrified childish whimpers of fear echoed.

Sobbing sounds came echoing from the top of the spiral staircase. It sounded like a grudge, a blessing, a hate, and a love.

It was distorted. It was twisted. It could never be said to be normal.

Subaru: "…"

Subaru became convinced that it was indeed Sirius, inhaled deeply, then held his breath.

His heartbeat began to accelerate, his chest thudding as he ascended the steps. Fortunately, the stairs had been crafted from stone. With care, he could silence his steps, especially since the enemy should be focused on the child in her arms.

Subaru steeled himself to call for Beatrice at a moment's notice as he slowly climbed the stairs. The tension escalated as the sound coming from above grew louder and closer.

Although the tower itself was high enough that Subaru needed to crane his head to see the top, there was nothing of note on the journey up. A large pillar sat in the center of the tower, and the spiral staircase encircled it, along the wall of the building.

The voice of a demon and the voice of a hero came from the end of those stairs. One single window faced the outside of the tower—presumably to give people access to adjust and check the spellstones installed on the clocktower. The sound came from the space just before that window.

It gave off a comparable feeling to an attic.

Subaru stealthily peered out from under the stairs, and saw that there were indeed two stray figures exchanging words that interrupted that silent darkness.

There was no one else. It was safe to say that horror stories with Witch Cultists lurking in the shadows had been avoided.

—Then, all that was left was for Subaru to look for an opening, and strike the first blow.

Subaru: "…"

Capturing her alive would not be a possibility.

Although that was what he wanted to do, the degree of difficulty would be too high. Not to mention that as long as she was alive, who knew what kind of tricks she could pull?

Subaru crouched down and put his hand on a handle. He grabbed hold of what was held by his waist, and yanked it loose.

In his two-handed grip was a weapon with an elongated, curved end, woven from special fibers.

The weapon was commonly known as a bullwhip, and some archeologists in some of his world's most famous movies had been known to carry them while exploring ruins. This one in particular had a longer range and was more difficult to manipulate than the one held by that archeologist from the movies. But in the past year, under Clind's tutelage, Subaru's skill had vastly improved.

Among all kinds of weapons, Subaru had chosen the whip as his main weapon.

Unlike swords, hammers, spears, and bows, the whip was incredibly versatile. More importantly, with weapons like the sword, Subaru's potential improvement in just a few short years was incredibly limited. Subaru already had a little familiarity with swordplay in kendo, and knew exactly how difficult it would be for him to reach any heights using that weapon.

Therefore, Subaru chose neither the spear nor the sword, but the whip. Originally, he had always relied on his smarts, creativity, and trickery to win.

In that case, a weapon that played to his strengths would allow him to better exert his power. Whips would also allow him to attack from mid-range.

Subaru: "…"

The distance from the end of the stairs to the creepy figure was about four meters. That was also the limit of Subaru’s range. To make sure his strike would connect, he must take one step. No, it should be okay to take only half a step before stepping in and swinging the whip.

In any case, the ability to kill in one-shot was not to be expected of a whip. To try and do just that, other factors needed to be relied upon.

In this situation devoid of factors other than natural ones, one could only use height.

—In that case, there was no choice but to strike from a distance.

Subaru: “…”

Subaru inhaled gently and exhaled slowly. Then he held his breath again.

He stood up and continued to climb the stairs, clutching the whip with his right hand. The figure hidden in the shadows did not detect him lurking behind. That gave him the upper hand.

Subaru took a half-step forward and flung his arm upward. With a sharp whistle, the tail of the whip flew toward its target. This preemptive sideways attack, which sought to prioritize its curved, angled speed over power, seemed to mirror a move in badminton.

The head of the snake cleaved through that air, biting toward its target’s unprotected back, trying to entangle that wicked figure’s neck and pull it down into the abyss.

However—

Sirius: “Why are you so angry?”

The silhouette whose back was facing him replied in a distracted voice.

Immediately thereafter, the shadow swung her right hand at lightning speed to deflect the blow from Subaru’s whip, using the chains that hung around her arm.

It was as if a silver snake had soared through the sky to intercept a flying snake.

For a second, Subaru was stunned by that sight, but recovered and moved his arm diagonally, determining that the front of the whip had indeed made contact with its prey.

Sirius: “Oh my.”

With a little giggle, the collapsed figure—Sirius regained her balance and climbed to her feet.

Although the chain dangling from her right arm had deflected Subaru’s blow, the whip bit into part of the chain’s locks, dragging Sirius to the ground as Subaru yanked on it.

Subaru: “H-Ha!”

Facing the struggling Sirius, Subaru further tightened his grip as he rushed toward that bandaged freak in a semicircle, ramming into her with a shoulder. Her body, which was lighter than expected, easily flew forward because of his body mass.

Sirius: “Gah!”

Sirius gave a soft cry, and, after thudding onto ground, tumbled through the window, just as Subaru had planned. Much more than ten meters spanned their location to the ground floor—there was at least one child that would be crushed like fruit, had it fallen from this height.

Subaru: “Are you okay, Lusbel?!”

Subaru did not confirm Sirius’s impact, instead running to the other figure on the floor. That small body belonged to Lusbel, who held the ends of a chain in both hands, gazing up at Subaru with fear.

The chain in his hand was connected to the chain wrapping around his entire lower body, another expression of Sirius’s bad taste.

Subaru: “That guy…! Forcing you to tie yourself up…!”

Little by little, he realized the extent of the horror Lusbel must have tasted, being forced to hold that chain against his neck, quite literally strangling himself. Even now, traces of terror were still engraved in his face.

Once aware of that maliciousness, Subaru felt uncontrollable anger. He immediately grabbed the boy's shoulders, taking the chain from him.

Subaru: "Enough! You'll be fine. You'll never have to do such a thing again. Come with me!"

Lusbel: "But, if… I, I don't follow, the terms of our agreement, then Tina… Tina will…!"

Lusbel replied, eyes watering and lips quivering.

Seeing him, Subaru's throat became choked with emotion. That child had, in an attempt to protect his childhood friend, agreed to a deal with the devil. And, even experiencing what he had, Lusbel was more worried about his friend than about himself.

Even though his legs were trembling, even though his teeth were chattering, even though his vision was being blurred by tears, even though he was no longer capable of forming coherent sentences.

Subaru: "It's okay. In this city, there are… many… reliable people."

His hoarse voice was unable to convey say what he wanted to say.

In order for the youth to feel at ease, he needed to speak comforting, authoritative words. The Sword Saint was in the city right now. As was the Finest of Knights. The Kingdom's leading healer, and various other people that could destroy a small city.

Therefore, there was no need for any fear. No evil forces could run rampant. Yeah. Exactly. Fear was completely unnecessary. There was no need for it at all. And, so,

Subaru: "So… My legs, stop, shaking!!"

In front of Lusbel, whose eyes had become unfocused with fear, Subaru desperately beat his unresponsive legs and yelled.

His voice, laced with grief, unexpectedly echoed, compounding the fear residing in his chest. Subaru felt as if there were a sense of disgust, with an unidentified origin, entangling his entire body.

Lusbel: "—Guu…"

Lusbel vomited yellow, with a sound like the bursting of a bubble. His body started to cramp up as he exhaled, collapsing in a pool of his own vomit. Subaru wanted to help him up, but then he too felt as if his own organs were being twisted inside him. Subaru also succumbed to the discomfort of his internal organs, and he spewed out the contents in the stomach, feeling as if he had been thrown into flight.

The daisukiyaki he had eaten in the morning had become unrecognizable, and the acrid, visceral smell of his gastric acids were overwhelming. Gulping, Subaru continued to retch vigorously, tasting only pain as his vomit threatened to drown him.

While he vomited and vomited, dizzily, tinnitus ringing in his ears, eyes turning in their sockets, his body was still shivering non-stop. Not from cold. An invisible hand was twisting his stomach, his internal organs being shuffled around. Subaru was aware of its origin.

They were, undoubtedly,

Sirius: "—Your fear is but proof of your gentleness."

Hearing the gentle voice coming from behind him, Subaru vomited again.

Almost drowning in the fluid overflowing from his stomach, Subaru collapsed onto the dirtied ground. He felt a touch of slimy liquid on his cheek. He was so close to the accumulation of filth on the ground that every repeated shallow breath led to the bursting of a yellow bubble.

Most people would not be able to bear such a terrible sight, yet she gazed it at with a soft smile.

While Subaru and Lusbel looked at each other, desperately struggling to breathe in their own vomit, wracked by invisible tremors—

Sirius: “People are able to understand each other. People can become one. Gentleness does not exist for oneself. It exists for others. Gentleness only shines because it exists for the sake of others. Only being gentle to yourself, that is selfishness! So, your gentleness, existing for the sake of others, is worthy of reverence! Ah, ah, this is Love!”

Subaru: “Guh, ah, hk…”

Sirius: “Please feel it as your heart desires. Let me witness your heart’s contents. Feel, and let me witness your Love. Your endless tenderness. Your virtue that bid you to save Lusbel-kun!”

As she spoke, Sirius broke into a dance as she gazed at the two, both lying in a pool of vomit. She crossed her arms with one hand pointing to Subaru and the other to Lusbel, shaking her waist. As if dancing. As if offering a tribute.

Sirius: “You two gentle souls will feel together Lusbel-kun’s fear. You shall feel Lusbel-kun’s fear, and, through that, Lusbel-kun’s feelings will pass to you. Lusbel-kun, through your fear, feels what you shall feel again from him. Your fears once again felt, and Lusbel-kun’s own fear is compounded. Your compounded fears, felt by Lusbel-kun, shall in turn compound your own fear. That fear, mixed with Lusbel-kun’s fear, will become a brand-new, fresh fear, and the freshness of Lusbel-kun’s fear shall again be passed to your true fear. The true fear that you feel, and a second and a third fear born through Lusbel-kun, will lead to his fear, and the next level of fear generated by Lusbel-kun’s heart will be added to your own new greatest level of fear…”

Something was whispering into his ear. That overwhelming momentum approached non-sense. Subaru had no time to try to comprehend those words. Why? Because for Subaru, everything passing through his hearing and his vision were terrifying. If breathing were terrifying, then blinking was terrifying. But not blinking was very painful and unbearable. Even that pain existed only to be presented as a symbol of terror for Subaru, today. Feeling one pain means feeling the pain that he would feel the next time. That would make Subaru feel continuous, endless, infinite fear. So refusing to blink would not do. But, if he blinked, the world would fall into darkness for an instant. In that dark moment where nothing could be seen, he would not know what was happening. Although there might be nothing at all happening, he had no way of knowing for certain. Being unable to confirm anything was terrifying. If the unknown instinctively aroused fear, then to live was but an endless attempt to overcome the fear. In the end, that so-called fear had always been the feeling of weakness that began to plague a creature upon feeling a threat to its life. Being able to have this emotion was synonymous with being a lifeform. The function of this horror was similar to pain. After all, creatures who left their instincts of danger behind could not survive. To numb your fear was to condemn yourself.

Sirius: “Oh my? You two look to be losing your minds. Loving and emotionally enriching people can sometimes be very fragile. Ah, that is because Love is just painful. However, it is precisely because love exists that we can survive. This is really very difficult. Then, I shall fetch Tina-chan to help me. Lusbel-kun has worked hard.”

Being numb to the value of life meant violating an inherent ability to survive. In other words, fear was necessary. Therefore, there was absolutely nothing to be ashamed about even praising the performance of feeling so frightened, like right now. Of course, that kind of thing was just an assumption devoid any meaning. But, conducting such thought experiments was the best method to resist an overwhelming, dominating fear in the hope of finding a victorious breakthrough, was it not? Subaru certainly thought so. Lusbel, in front of him, began to convulse as his eyes rolled back in his head. The light of that young boy’s life was about to be extinguished.

That was sad and regrettable. However, Subaru could not be discouraged. He would struggle and fight to the end, wasn’t that what he had vowed? Even in that terrible, toilsome, damaging Trial last year. If not, why exactly did Subaru find it so sad and painful to survive, even so? Scary.

Very very scary. Terrifying. Everything was terrifying. Alive. Terrifying. Blinking. Terrifying. Breathing. Terrifying. Rancid. Terrifying. Disgusting. Terrifying. Scary. Scary. Scary. Scary. Scaryscaryscaryscaryscaryscaryscaryscaryscaryscaryscaryscary—

2

Liliana: “After the song ends and they chat again, shouldn’t we prepare food and drinks for them, Natsuki-sama? Indulging in sweet snacks will certainly create a mood that will close the distance between them, don’t you think so?”

Immediately after blinking, the world flipped upside down, and Subaru collapsed as soon as he heard the fresh sound. A girl’s awkward face approached, and caught his fall as he collided fiercely with her forehead.

Liliana: “Gah?!”

Subaru: “Huh?”

A sharp voice cried out.

Subaru stumbled several steps backward from the sudden, piercing pain. Somewhere in front of him, a sound of something falling into the grass was made. Subaru did not respond immediately, as he was too busy rubbing his forehead.

Subaru: “Wh-What just…?”

Emilia: “What’s wrong, Subaru? You suddenly headbutted Liliana. That’s no good. If you don’t like the other person, you should resolve your differences by talking it out.”

Beatrice: “That’s right, in fact. Before resorting to violence, we should give that uncouth-looking girl ample warning that we want to send her flying, I suppose.”

Liliana: “Am I really so ugly?!”

Liliana leapt to her feet with an unexpected cry.

Upon hearing her words, Emilia and Beatrice exchanged glances without speaking. Liliana suffered another metaphorical blow, and collapsed again.

Priscilla: “What a ridiculous farce. Commoners are not allowed to treat my songbird in such a manner. This shall not happen again.”

Perhaps refusing to condone the violence being imposed on Liliana, Priscilla issued a complaint about Subaru’s behavior.

Subaru gave her a vague nod, confirmed his location, once again, and—

Subaru: “…Disgusting.”

A second reset had not changed his evaluation of that monster at all.

Chapter 21:
Optimal Solution

1

—Subaru's second Return by Death hit him with an unprecedented sense of fatigue. Falling under the spell of madness twice had placed a tremendous burden on his mind.

Especially the second one. That overwhelming fear had been imprinted deeply into him, and he had been fully aware of himself at the time of death.

The shivering that came from deep within his being, the fear that would never cease, the individual named Natsuki Subaru breaking, his fragile spirit crumbling into powder. This death had probably occurred due to a mad, fear-induced heart attack. Sirius had been delighted to see Subaru so terrified, having been reduced to a machine whose purpose was to excrete fluid.

He had wanted to rescue Lusbel and challenge her on his own, and that futile attempt had come at an incredibly heavy price.

However, although Subaru had died twice in as little as thirty minutes, and had yet to produce material results, his time had not been completely wasted. Sirius, perhaps wishing to give Subaru some small comfort before his death, had, in her sincere and respectful manner, explained exactly what had been happening to both him and Lusbel. That was,

Subaru: "Our fear, compounding as we felt each other's feelings… The same principle as resonance?"

Subaru had felt Lusbel's fear, and Lusbel felt that augmented fear from Subaru, which then transferred to Subaru. The never-ending cycle of fear would override any previous state of fear and eventually grew to the extreme, becoming fatal.

There was no doubt that had been the cause of death. For both the first, and this second death.

The flow that had led to these events, the statements from Sirius, and her status as Wrath. Those clues led Subaru to a conclusion.

A scene that should have made people feel disgusted or angry, had instead drawn smiles and laughs from them. Fear that had belonged to Subaru being transferred to a child, frightening him even further, before returning twofold to Subaru.

—Sirius's Wrath could viciously manipulate the feelings of others for her own enjoyment.

That was most likely a special form of magic that did not belong to any of the natural forms of magic belonging in this world, just like Petelgeuse's Unseen Hand. It was an ability belonging to the Sin Archbishops of the Witch Cult. This Wrath was a power closely related to emotions.

It was an ability befitting the Sin Archbishops.

However, although Subaru had finally pieced it together after two deaths, that was the only intelligence he was certain of. Now, the question was the conditions for the Authority to be activated—in other words, the method to break out of this deadlock.

Once the trick behind Petelgeuse's Sloth was found out, he became fairly easy to defeat. His Authority had two sides to it, the Unseen Hand and Slothful Cancellation of Others' Actions, and Subaru had been able to resist both.

It was still unknown to Subaru what was the root cause of both those resistances. Although he now had his own version of Unseen Hand, his Invisible Providence, Subaru was still confused about all that.

In fact, considering the Witch's Scent's relationship with his Return by Death, as well as his immunity to the effect of the White Whale's Fog of Oblivion, Subaru had optimistically thought, "Am I actually immune to the Witch Cult's foul techniques?!" However, his recent murders at the hands of the Authority of Wrath seemed to disprove that theory.

Given his two encounters with Wrath, in the worst case, the triggering condition for the Authority might even be “contact with Sirius”.

As soon as he heard her speak, as soon as he saw her figure, Subaru had probably fallen under her spell. Taking that into consideration, finding a way to capture her would be difficult indeed. The most straightforward and reliable solution would also be the most extreme—to destroy the tower from a distance with magic.

No contact would be made with Sirius, and he would not need to lay eyes on her. Knowing where she would appear, he could take the opportunity to launch a pre-emptive strike, and he would be able to ensure that Return by Death would not be triggered again.

Only, he would need to disregard the sacrifice of a courageous child, and so Subaru could never seriously consider such an option.

“Sacrifices were necessary”, who would be self-righteous enough to say such a thing?

To decide on a utilitarian “greater good” at the price of other lives would mean, form the perspective of those that were sacrificed, that the entire world would be lost. Subaru could not tolerate the loss of his own life, so how could he arrogantly place a price tag on the lives of others?

His goals were as he had just determined. He needed to rescue Lusbel and prevent any unnecessary sacrifice. What troubled Subaru most, however, was achieving both at the same time.

Subaru: “Then, to rescue Lusbel… the only viable way is defeating Sirius.”

Should he try to rescue Lusbel by himself, the situation would end up the same as last time. No matter how much he struggled, trying to fight Sirius alone was tantamount to suicide.

Sirius’s combat skills were evidently nothing to scoff at. Although she wielded a chain, just deflecting Subaru’s surprise attack was impressive in itself.

Even considering Subaru's lack of experience in combat, the strike of a whip was too fast to be followed by the untrained eye. To have been able to react so quickly to a surprise attack, and to deflect it with her chains, how skilled must she be?

Subaru could not even begin to imagine.

In other words, what Subaru needed was someone with the power to overwhelm Sirius with pure combat skills, who trusted Subaru enough to help him, and who could resist the power of Sirius's Wrath.

Subaru: "What kind of a miracle would it be if I just found a guy who coincidentally satisfied all those requirements…?"

Subaru sighed to himself as he considered this opportunistic line of thought.

However, the notion that there would be someone who could remain unaffected by Sirius's power was not a baseless one. The presence of someone who was immune to Sirius's Wrath, much like Subaru could see through Sloth's power, was not that inconceivable.

After all, Subaru's accreditation as Petelgeuse's killer had only come around from his unique resistance to Petelgeuse's powers.

Since everyone in the square had been taken in by Sirius's speech, he could assume that no one there had any such resistance to Sirius's Authority, and therefore there was no Sirius Killer present.

At the square, four people, including Subaru, had been prepared to fight Sirius, but she had taken special care to point them all out. And then, Subaru finally realized it.

Rachins had been at the square.

Subaru: "—Reinhard!"

Although Subaru, extreme opportunist as he was, had tried to resist engaging in commonplace thinking, he finally remembered the man whose presence was the very peak of opportunism.

2

Although Subaru was not attempting to justify his delayed reaction, the reason it had taken so much time to connect Rachins with Reinhard was arguably the short interval between his deaths.

A death followed by a death, madness followed by madness, all happening in the span of a mere fifteen minutes.

In that state, being able to calmly identify the crisis and calmly explore countermeasures before choosing the best solution was nigh-impossible. If anyone tried to belittle him, Subaru would have liked to respond with a sharp complaint about Return by Death.

Subaru did not want to trigger Return by Death. If circumstances would permit, he would rather share a tranquil, peaceful life with Emilia, Rem, and Beatrice. However, this world would never permit Subaru such a happy life. He was destined to live through every day while struggling desperately.

So, at this moment, Subaru was desperately making an argument.

Subaru: “I finally found you, I’m not letting you go so easily! Please, call Reinhard here right now! This is an emergency!”

Rachins: “So annoying! Why should I take the risk of being lectured by that red-haired bastard? You must be kidding!”

A lively crowd had gathered around the two, who were angrily roaring at each other. The crowd seemed to relish the tense atmosphere, eagerly expecting a fight to break out at any given moment.

Upon resurrection Subaru had an epiphany, and acted on it immediately.

Like last time, he left Beatrice as Emilia’s guard, and used his errand as an excuse to leave the park. After arriving at the square, he had searched desperately for Rachins. Now, he had finally entered the negotiation stage.

His search for Rachins had really been quite time-consuming, so upon seeing him, Subaru had roughly grabbed his shoulder, which had led to their current quarrel.

However, Rachins had only agitated Subaru further by shouldering him in retaliation.

In any case, an argument was now inevitable. Subaru spoke rapidly and anxiously under Rachins's harsh glare.

Subaru: "Can you listen? Calm down and listen to me. I'm not playing around. If you don't want to die, hurry up and call Reinhard here right now."

Rachins: "Huh? You devilish brat, are you looking down on me? You think you could actually kill me? Forget that bastard Reinhard, see if I don't kill you right here."

Subaru: "Ah, that isn't what I meant…!"

Rachins regarded Subaru's words as a provocation, and his anger started growing out of control.

After all, Subaru and Rachins had never been on good terms. In addition, it seemed that Rachins had a poor impression of Reinhard, who should be his comrade. Someone he would already be reluctant to call had been requested by someone disliked by him, and so Rachins stubbornly refused Subaru's request.

Subaru: "You stubborn, inconsiderate idiot…!"

Subaru gritted his teeth looking at Rachins and grabbed his head in his hands.

Needless to say, Subaru, who had failed to speak clearly and calmly, was also to blame. However, seeing his negotiations being refused to such an extent, he could not help wanting to make a complaint.

Although, to Rachins, Subaru must have looked to be a raving madman. Subaru's hands were tied due to his inability to reveal any of his foreknowledge.

—However, the situation being what it was, Subaru had no other way.

Subaru placed a hand on his chest, attempting to suppress his fear.

Subaru: “Rachins. This is not a joke. The reason why I want you to call Reinhard is because there’s a strong enemy I cannot handle.”

Rachins: “Someone you can’t handle? Don’t think so highly of yourself.”

Rachins snorted derisively.

Seeing that expression, Subaru lowered his gaze, took a deep breath, and opened his mouth.

Don’t come, don’t come—while making such a wish, Subaru spoke,

Subaru: “—The Witch Cult will show up here.”

Rachins: “…”

Subaru opened his eyes as Rachins’s face froze at his disturbing words.

Finished, Subaru immediately looked down to his chest, but the pain he had been expecting did not arrive. The punishment for disclosing information that could potentially reveal his Return by Death had not taken place.

First of all, he was decidedly relieved about this, and dropped his shoulders.

—Although Subaru had not triggered Return by Death for a year now, the penalties associated with it remained.

In particular, when he had attempted to spill everything to Beatrice, Subaru had been wracked by the infernal pain he had come to associate with Return by Death. It was as if the Witch of Envy, who was probably the one responsible for that black magic hand, had forgotten his commendable farewell gift to her at the Witches’ Tea Party in Sanctuary. How rude.

Therefore, Subaru was still unable to discuss anything related to Return by Death with Beatrice or anyone else. Needless to say, he would share still his knowledge with his partner, Beatrice, as long as he did not have to face punishment.

But that was a long story. One that he did not have time to consider right now.

At any rate, right now, the important thing was that Subaru had successfully told Rachins his legitimate reason for needing Reinhard, without being punished by those black hands.

In fact, hearing the name “Witch Cult”, Rachins seemed to reconsider his stance, dropping his gaze and narrowing his eyes in contemplation.

Rachins: “Hey, brat.”

Subaru: “It’s Natsuki Subaru. Stop always calling me “brat”, Rachins.”

Rachins: “That’s Rachins-san to you, Shitty Subaru. How much credibility does that statement have? Using the Witch Cult as a bluff isn’t something to do lightly, you know.”

Rachins spoke with a low voice, casting a hostile gaze at Subaru.

In this world, the name of the Witch of Envy and the Witch Cult were incredibly weighty, no matter where they appeared. This stemmed from the fact that the idea of the Witch being the embodiment of absolute evil was deeply rooted in the world’s history.

Even Rachins was wearing a serious expression, one that he would normally never reveal. He was finally taking this seriously, so now Subaru could only respond with equal seriousness to him.

Subaru: “I’m not kidding around, nor lying. The Witch Cult will come here. Many people will be in danger.”

Rachins: “Where did you hear this… Ah, damn it. That’s right. Your faction did kill the Witch Cult’s Sloth. Fuck, that shit’s actually got some credibility…”

Before Subaru could come up with a response, Rachins found his own conclusion. Although that was in fact mere speculation, that merit seemed effective in having Rachins believe him.

Rachins: “Are they targeting the city? Or this specific square?”

Subaru: “So you’re going to believe me?”

